

enigropædia

7^m

(20.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

INSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF CHICAGO

BY J. H. COOPER

CHICAGO: THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

A HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

FROM 1837 TO 1900

BY J. H. COOPER

CHICAGO

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

VOLUME XX

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

CHICAGO

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

ENCYCLOPÆDIA METROPOLITANA;

OR,

UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY OF KNOWLEDGE,

On an Original Plan:

COMPRISING THE TWOFOLD ADVANTAGE OF

A PHILOSOPHICAL AND AN ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT,

WITH APPROPRIATE ENGRAVINGS.

EDITED BY

THE REV. EDWARD SMEDLEY, M.A.,

LATE FELLOW OF SIDNEY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE;

THE REV. HUGH JAMES ROSE, B.D.,

PRINCIPAL OF KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON;

AND

THE REV. HENRY JOHN ROSE, B.D.,

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

VOLUME XX.

[MISCELLANEOUS AND LEXICOGRAPHICAL, VOL. 7.]

LONDON:

R. FELLOWES; F. AND J. RIVINGTON; DUNCAN AND MALCOLM; SUTTABY AND CO.; E. HODGSON; J. DOWDING;
G. LAWFORD; J. M. RICHARDSON; J. BOHN; T. ALLMAN; J. BAIN; S. HODGSON; F. C. WESTLEY; L. A. LEWIS;
T. HODGES; AND H. WASHBOURNE; ALSO J. H. PARKER, AND T. LAYCOCK, OXFORD; AND J. AND J. J. DEIGHTON, CAMBRIDGE.

1845.

ENCYCLOPEDIA METROPOLITANA

UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY OF KNOWLEDGE

On an Original Plan:

COMBINING THE TWOOLD ADVANTAGE OF

A PHILOSOPHICAL AND AN ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT

WITH APPROPRIATE ENGRAVINGS

EDITED BY

THE REV. EDWARD SMEDLEY, M.A.

LAST DEAN OF WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL

THE REV. HUGH JAMES ROSE, B.D.

PROFESSOR OF KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON

AND

THE REV. HENRY JOHN ROSE, B.D.

LAST DEAN OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

VOLUME XX.

[Miscellaneous and Lexicographical, Vol. 1.]

LONDON:

H. MILLER, 2, AND A. HAYDON, DUNCAN AND MASON, STATIONERS AND CO. LONDON, A. DOWDING,
G. LAWSON, J. M. RICHARDS, J. HORN, T. KILMAN, J. GAIN, E. HODGSON, R. C. WENTLEY, J. A. LEWIS,
J. HODGSON, AND H. WASHBURN, ALSO J. H. BARRELL AND T. LAYTON, GUY'S

LONDON: PRINTED BY WILLIAM CLOWES AND SONS, STAMFORD STREET.

1845

CONTENTS TO VOL. XX.

THE LEXICON. Dr. RICHARDSON.

ORIENTAL GEOGRAPHY, MYTHOLOGY, AND STATISTICS. AFRICAN GEOGRAPHY. ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY. GYMNOSOPHIST. GYPSY. HAREM. HIEROGLYPHICS. HOOKAH. JANIZARY. The Rev. GEORGE CECIL RENOARD, M.A., F.L.S., late Fellow of Sidney-Sussex College, Cambridge.

EUROPEAN GEOGRAPHY. BRITISH COUNTIES. WILLIAM DESBOROUGH COOLEY, Esq., M.A., Trinity College, Dublin.

BOTANY. THOMAS EDWARDS, Esq., F.L.S.

ZOOLOGY. VERTEBRALS. J. F. SOUTH, Esq., F.L.S., Lecturer on Anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital.

ZOOLOGY. INVERTEBRALS. J. E. GRAY, Esq., F.L.S.

LAW, from INFANCY. HASSARD HUME DODGSON, Esq., M.A., late Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

GUIANA. Captain BONNYCASTLE, Royal Engineers.

INDEX. INDULGENCE. The Rev. THOMAS HARTWELL HORNE, B.D., St. John's College, Cambridge.

GUIDON. GUILD. GYMNASIUM. HABEAS CORPUS. HADES. HARE. HARLEQUIN. HARPIES. HARVEST. HELMET. HERMIT. HESPERIDES. HIERARCHY. HIGHWAYS. HIPPOCRAS. HIPPODROME. HIPPOMANES. HOBBY-HORSE. HOBGOBLIN. HOKEDAY. HOMAGE. HOMICIDE. HOMILY. HONOUR. HOPS. HOROSCOPE. HORSEMANSHIP. HOTCHPOT. HUE AND CRY. HUGUENOT. HULKS. HUNDRED. HUNGARY WATER. HUNTING. HURDY-GURDY. HUSTINGS. HYADES. HYDROMANCY. HYDROMEL. HYPERBOREANS. JACINTH. JACK KETCH. JACK, ETC. JANUARY. JANUS. JASPER. JAUNDICE. IBIS, excepting the Zoological portion. ICHNEUMON, ditto. I-COLUMB-KILL. JENNET. JET. JEW'S HARP, ETC. ILLUMINATION. IMPALATION. IMPEACHMENT. IMPRIMATUR. IMPROPRIATIONS. IMPROVVISATORE. INCUBUS. INDENTURE. INDIAN RUBBER. INDICTION. INDICTMENT. INDIGO. INSTITUTION. INK. INN. INNS OF COURT. INQUISITION, ETC., and the BRITISH TOPOGRAPHY. The EDITOR.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA METROPOLITANA;

OR,

UNIVERSAL DICTIONARY OF KNOWLEDGE.

Fourth Division.

MISCELLANEOUS AND LEXICOGRAPHICAL.

GUESS. GUESS, v. } Also written Gess. Skinner and GUESS, n. } Junius from the D. ghissen; Sw.
GUESSER, } gissa; and this (the former adds)
GUESSING, } perhaps from the Ger. weissen, mon- GUESSINGLY. } strare, ostendere, to show, i. e. he might have further added, the A. S. wissian, ge-wissian, (whence the English wise,) to wit, or wite, to think, to conjecture, to suppose, to suspect. And see gissa in Ihre.

To conjecture, to suppose, to suspect; to foretell.

In that hour the disciples camen to Jhesus and seiden, who gessith thou is gretter in the kyngdom of hevenes?

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xviii.

I pray let me be all still
For ye may well, if that ye will
Your words wast in idlenesse
For utterly, withouten gesse
All that ye saine is but in vain.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 131

Jesus myndyng to sharpen the desyre of his disciples with a lytle chydyng, whiche should have been nowe more cunnyng in vnderstand-ing of parables, and by the exauple of one to haue diuined and geassed an other, sayed. Udall. Matthew, ch. xv.

Not mortall like, ne like mankinde thy voice doth sound, I gesse
Some goddesse thou art, and Phebus bright thy brother is doubtless.
Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book i.

Therefore shall ye saye out no more vanite, nor prophecie your own ges synges. Bible, Anno 1551. Ezechiel, ch. xiii.

For sure he weend that this his present guest
Was Artegall, by many tokens plaine;
But chiefly by that yron page he ghest,
Which still was wont with Artegall remaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 6.

Not farre offe also is a place called Colchester, whereby Leland gemeth that the name of the brooke should rather be Cole than Corue, and in my iudgement his conjecture is verie likelie.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, ch. xiv.

VOL. XXIII.

SHY. I am debating of my present store,
And by the neere gesse of my memorie
I cannot instantly raise vp the grosse
Of full three thousand ducats.

Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice, fol. 166.

It is not so with him that all thinges knowes
As 'tis with vs, that square oure guesse by showes.

Id. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 236.

The best prophet is naturally the best guesser, and the best guesser, he that is best versed and studied in the matters he guesses at; for he hath most signs to guess by.

Hobbes. Leviathan, part i. ch. iii.

The forehead, eye, and lip, poor humble parts,
Too shallow for resemblance, show the arts
Of private guessings: action still hath been
The royall mark.

Cartwright. On the Birth of the Duke of York.

GLOU. I haue a letter guessingly set downe
Which came from one that's of a newtrall heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 300.

You go on arguing and reasoning, what necessity of nature must signify: which is only talking without book, and guessing what words anciently meant, without consulting the ancients to know the fact.

Waterland. Second Defence of some Queries, qu. 8.

These are my guesses concerning the means whereby the understanding comes to have and retain simple ideas, and the modes of them, with some other operations about them.

Locke. On Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xii. sec. 17.

There's but a true and a false in any telling of Fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design, and be notably skilful at lighting on the wrong.

Bentley. Confutation of Atheism. Sermon 3.

The illimited, undistinguishable irony, which affords no insight into the author's meaning, or so much room as to guess what he would be at, is our first note.

Warburton. Divine Legation. Dedication to the Free Thinkers.

In contingent circumstances, probabilities may be nearly equal, and a presumptive guess may be fortunate; and this a credulous mind will magnify into a prediction accomplished.

Cogan. On the Passions. On the Jewish Dispensation, ch. ii. sec. 5.

GUESS.

GUESS.
—
GUIANA.

A good guesser (who, an ancient writer says, is the best prophet) might reasonably conjecture the monarchy, after the subverter of it, Cromwell, was taken off, would be restored.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History. Appendix 1.

GUEST, v. } Goth. gast, peregrinus; A. S. gest; D. gast; Ger. gast; Sw. gaest. Wachter is inclined to derive (because guests were anciently held in such honour) from Goth. ga-aistan, honorare, revereri, to honour, to revere. More probably from the A. S. ge-wist-an, cibum, victum dare, præbere,—epulari; to give or supply food, or victuals. The Low Lat. gistum (Du Cange) was applied to cænaticum, comestio, pastus, prandium, all denoting food or victuals.

Any one fed or feasted, supplied with food or victuals; any one received and provided with food and lodging; the correlative to host.

To guest, the verb, used by Chapman, to lodge, to dwell as a guest.

Herodes þe daffe
zaf hus douhter for daunsýng in a dissh þe hefde
Of þe blessedde Baptiste. by fore alle hus gustes.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 175.

But ouer brought he him in geastwise, & as a straüger, geuing him none inheritaunce here, insomuch as he possessed, no not the breadth of a foote, except it wer purchased.

Udall. The Actes, ch. vii.

So well and wisely did that good old knight
Temper his grieffe, and turned it to cheare,
To cheare his guests whom he had stayd that night
And make their welcome to them well appeare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 3.

In Oxford this solemnitie is called an Act, but in Cambridge they vse the French word Commencement; and such resort is made yearelie vnto the same from all parts of the land, by the fréends of those which doo proceed, that all the towne is hardlie able to receiue and lodge those gests.

Holinshed. Description of England, book ii. ch. iii.

He sends Peter and John into the city, telling them that there should meet them a man carrying a pitcher of water, by following of whom, they should find a guest-chamber ready furnished by the good man of the house.

Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 4036.

I entering guest-wise on a time
The frolicke Thæbane court,
Mine eye presented to mine heart
A nymph of louely port.

Warner. Albion's England, book vi. ch. xxxi.

My hope was now
To guest with him, and see his hand bestow
Rights of our friendship.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xxiv.

Besides, if I go home,
My mother is with two doubts ouercome:
If she shall stay with me, and take fit care
For all such guests, as there seeke questiue fare.

Id. Ib. book xvi.

Go, soul, the body's guest,
Upon a thankless errand!
Fear not to touch the best,
The Truth shall be thy warrant.

Joshua Sylvester. The Soul's Errand.

Vlysses, who, so deare
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not beare
In his black fleete, that guest-rite to the war.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xxi.

O sight, he cry'd, dishonest and unjust!
A guest, a stranger, seated in the dust!
To raise the lowly suppliant from the ground
Befits a monarch. Lo! the peers around
But wait thy word, the gentle guest to grace,
And seat him fair in some distinguish'd place.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book viii.

Taking notice of their behaviour at a feast, he first gives general advice therein both to the master and his guests, and from thence brings them to the consideration of a better entertainment, to which they were all invited, but of which few amongst them would render themselves worthy.

Jortin. Discourse on the Christian Religion, dis. 6.

GUETTARDA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rubiaceæ. Generic character: calyx entire, obsolete toothed, or crenated; corolla tubular, border five to nine cleft; stigma capitate; seed vessel a drupe; nut five-furrowed, two-celled, number of stamens varying from four to nine.

Fourteen species, mostly natives of the West Indies.

GUEVINA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia, calyx none; corolla, petals four, concave at the apex, revolute; stamens situated in a cavity of the petals; drupe one-seeded.

One species, G. avellana, native of Chili; the nut is eatable.

GUIACUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rutaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-cleft, unequal; corolla, petals five, inserted into the calyx; capsule angular, three and five celled.

Of this genus four species are known, one native of the Island of Tongataboo, and three of the West Indies; the most remarkable is G. officinale.

The wood of Guaiacum (Lignum vitæ) is extremely hard, solid, and heavy, somewhat resinous, of a pale yellowish colour without, of a greenish black, deep brown, or marbled, within. When heated it is slightly aromatic, and somewhat pungent if chewed. It is imported from South America in logs of 500 or 600 pounds weight, and both the wood and the bark, which is of weaker quality, are employed in medicine. On its first introduction, early in the XVIth century, great virtues were attributed to it as an antisiphilitic; its qualities are stimulant, especially to the exhalant vessels, sudorific, diuretic, and gently purgative. It is plainly, therefore, of use in obstructions, cachectic disorders, female debility, gout, rheumatism, and other chronic complaints. It is exhibited in decoction, extract, and resin. The latter when obtained naturally, by wounding the tree, is never pure. It is of a brown colour, partly reddish or greenish, brittle, glassy when broken, and pungent to the taste. That which occurs in the form of drops is best, but it is rarely so found. It is soluble in alcohol.

GUEST.
—
GUIANA.

G U I A N A.

Boundaries. GUIANA, a Country of South America, is bounded on the North by the Orinoco, on the East by the Atlantic Ocean, on the West by the Orinoco, the Cassiguare, and the Rio Negro, and on the South by the Amazons. It embraces the parallels of 8° 20' North, and 3° of South latitude, and those from 50° to 70° 20' West longitude, or above 3000 miles in circumference.

Guiana is divided amongst a greater number of European nations than any other portion of the New Continent. The Spaniards, the Portuguese, the English, the French, and the Dutch, have all had Colonies within its shores, and, excepting the latter people, still retain them.

SPANISH GUIANA, or as it is now styled, Guiana of the Republic of Colombia, is bounded on the North by the Orinoco, on the West by the Orinoco, to the 4° of North latitude, where an imaginary line, running due South, commences at the rapids, near San Fernando de Atabapo, and where the confluence of the Guaviare and the Atabapo with the Orinoco forms a remarkable point; the Orinoco bearing here North and South above the junction, and East and West below it, so that with the Atabapo from the South, and the Guaviare from the West, the figure of an immense cross is formed by these three magnificent streams.

This imaginary line then runs due South, in the parallel of about 68° 20', till it touches the very undefined bounds of Portuguese Guiana, in about 1° 30' North latitude.

On the South, Guiana of Colombia is bounded by a line which denotes the frontier of the Portuguese territory, and runs over the coasts of the Pacaraimo Cordillera, till it touches the River Essequibo. This river separates Colombia from the British Colonies, to very near its junction with the sea, the remaining bounds between British and Colombian Guiana being imaginary lines of uncertain authority, leaving Colombia in possession of about 30 leagues of the Atlantic coast, from Cape Nassau to the mouth of the Orinoco.

PORTUGUESE, or rather, BRAZILIAN GUIANA, is of much greater extent than the Colombian portion, being separated from it on the North by the lines we have already mentioned; from British Guiana on the East by the Essequibo; and the Serras do Acaray and Tumucuraque, and from French Guiana on the North, by imaginary and uncertain lines and by the river Capara, whilst the great Amazons constitutes its Southern limits. On the North-West an imaginary line continues to separate this vast region from Colombia, from the 68th degree of West longitude to near the 73d, where it meets the Yapura, or Caqueta, which then becomes a new line of separation to about the 69th degree, where another line crosses the Country to near the 68th, or the confluence of the Ica with the Amazons.

FRENCH GUIANA, or CAYENNE, is a large tract of Country on the Atlantic coast, bounding Portuguese Guiana by a small river, which flows into that ocean in 0° 20' North latitude, below Fort Macapa. This limit continues to the source of the river, and then runs across the mountains of the interior to the 55th degree of West longitude, and between the 2nd and 3rd degrees of North latitude; on the North the river Maroni separates Cayenne from British Guiana, and on the West the Colombian frontier above-mentioned completes its limits.

BRITISH GUIANA is a much more extensive Country than Cayenne, and embraces the Colonies called SURINAM, Essequibo, Demerara, and BERBICE, or from Cape Nassau, in 7° 40' North latitude, and 59° 30' West longitude, along the Atlantic to the mouth of the Maroni, in 5° 52' North latitude, and 55° 14' West longitude. An imaginary bounding line divides it from Colombian Guiana on the West, till the Essequibo constitutes its limit, and on the South other lines divide it with the Cordilleras of Acaray and Tumucuraque from Brazilian Guiana. The Maroni river also separates it on the South-East from Cayenne. British Guiana, in its greatest extent, reaches, therefore, from beyond the 61st degree of West longitude, at the sources of the Pomaroun, to the mouth of the Maroni in 55° 14', and from the latitude of 7° 40' North to that of 2° North, or the mean latitude of the Cordilleras, which divide it from the Empire of Brazil.

Guiana was discovered, as it is said, in 1504, by the Spanish Commander Vasco Nunez, who landed on various points of the Atlantic coast after the discovery of the Orinoco and of Paria by Columbus in 1498. Great doubt and obscurity prevails, however, concerning this discovery. Vicente Yanez Pinzon might have claimed the honour, as, in 1499, he first saw the mouth of the Amazons, and traded with the natives of its Islands. In 1568, Martin Silva obtained a patent to conquer some Tribes to the Westward of the present limits, but after penetrating through Venezuela, his men deserted him, and he was obliged to return to Spain to collect new followers. Silva then attempted to cross the Country between the Orinoco and the Amazons, but perished with his people in the most horrid manner, having, as it is asserted, been devoured by the Caribs. In our account of EL DORADO, which was the name by which this Country was known at first, we have given a succinct relation of the other attempts to penetrate Guiana.

In the Spanish, or Colombian portion of this vast region, as well as in the Brazilian division, the white population never has obtained any considerable extent of settlements; for, excepting at distant intervals, along the banks of the Orinoco and the Maranon, these nations have few towns, villages, or missions, and may be said to occupy rather than to possess the seignorage of a land, to which they have laid claim without consulting the wishes or the interests of the aborigines. It is only in the British Colonies in Guiana that the absolute dominion of the European is supported by physical force; and even here, as well as in the thinly settled regions belonging to the French, the whites and their descendants frequently dread dispossession from the slaves, who have escaped to the thick forests and inhospitable mountains of the interior, where they have formed alliances with the Caribs, a widely spreading Tribe, whose natural restlessness and unconquerable ferocity has been deplored and felt from the time of Columbus, alike by the mild and suffering native of the West Indies, as by the armed and determined white invader.

It is remarkable, that Guiana contains, in its original people, whose division into Tribes or Nations is as great and various as in any other part of the New World, an exception to that listlessness and want of courage evinced by most of the other Indians of the hot regions. Unconquerable as the Araucanians, these warlike people retain their ancient languages and habits, as well as the dominion of their natal soil; and wherever they can be safely observed at the points of contact between their Country and the Settlements, they may be advantageously studied, by the traveller desirous to assist in developing the character of a race whose origin remains as yet so very doubtful.

It would be useless to enumerate the uncouth nomades whose distinct Tribes are inserted in books of travels and on maps with a profusion and facility savouring of invention, and particularly in the interior of a Country where no European has as yet set his foot. How much better it would be to leave a blank throughout Central Guiana, than to follow the absurd custom of the early Spanish Writers and Geographers, whose

GUIANA.

History.

Various Tribes.

GUIANA.

marvellous tales gave rise to the belief that there "were such men whose heads stood in their breasts," which a man of Sir Walter Raleigh's gifted mind condescended in his Travels to be at much pains to establish,* and which probably even Shakspeare, who on several occasions defends the hero by complimentary passages, did not entirely discredit.

The Spaniards, as well as the Portuguese, have obtained some acquaintance with several of the Tribes of Guiana, and the reader may consult Gumilla's History of the Orinoco with great satisfaction, for a detail of many races known to that indefatigable Missionary, whose desire, however, to establish the possibility of El Dorado and of the present existence of the Peruvian Inca, somewhat diminishes our belief in him as a very faithful narrator of the strange scenes and customs he so ably describes. The Spaniards are, it is true, for the most part, grave and credible Historians; but their bigotry, and consequent love of the marvellous, occasionally lead to false impressions. It is better, therefore, to compare their accounts with those of one whose statements have since been fully corroborated. Bancroft tells us plainly, that the Caribs, the Accawas, the Worrows, and the Arrowauhs are the only nations with whom the Europeans of the coast have any intercourse; and even among these the latter Tribe is the only one with which a friendly and constant intercourse is kept up.

Caribs.

The Caribs are the most numerous, warlike, and industrious of the known Tribes inhabiting Guiana, their nations occupying the sea-coast between the Essequibo and the Orinoco, and almost all the interior as far as the supposed sources of that great river. They are of the middle size, actively and well formed, with regular and agreeable features, their complexion being the whitest of all the known Tribes excepting the Arrowauhs. Their language is very articulate and sonorous, but is pronounced with a degree of sharpness and vivacity corresponding to their natural disposition. They are polygamists, and are less inclined to wander than the other natives, as though they have no fixed form of Government, yielding an uncertain obedience, except during their battles, to their war-captains or leaders, they till the ground, and make bread from the plantain and cassava, in their little towns or villages, which are in general close enough to each other to enable each Chief to assemble his force by the sounding of the war-shell. Wars, hunting, and fishing are the employment of the men, who leave the drudgery of agriculture and their domestic concerns to their females and children. Their arms are bows and arrows, poisoned darts, which are blown through a hollow cane, and heavy clubs of the iron wood, large at one end and with very sharp edges.

With the Spanish Whites these people have ever been at variance, but they did not molest their brethren of late years, until the Dutch stimulated them to pursue the abominable traffic of red slave dealing. The insurrection of the negroes at Berbice, some years ago, would have been fatal to the Colonists, if the Governor of Essequibo had not obtained the alliance of the Caribs, who, as Bancroft believes, devoured the bodies of the blacks whom they slew in numbers. These people maintain some commerce with the white settlers, in selling their large and well made canoes, cotton, hammocks, wax, balsam capoiba, and many kinds of curious woods and drugs.

* See his description of the Ewaiponamaws, a nation without heads, in his Voyage to Guiana, wherein he defends Mandeville's account of a similar people. Voyage to Guiana, 1595.

GUIANA.

The Worrows inhabit the sea-coast of the British Colonies, and are neither so handsome nor so industrious a race as the Caribs, living chiefly on shell-fish, and in their slovenly way passing contentedly, peaceably, and happily through life, with few of its luxuries to trouble their repose; the bark of the cocoa tree affording them a covering, whilst a thin silver plate hanging to the nose is their greatest ornament. Their language is indistinct and harsh in its articulation. It is from this Tribe that the Sorcerers or Physicians who command the Evil One are derived.

Worrows.

The Accawas are almost the remotest Tribe of the interior who are well known to the settlers, and are distinguished, as the Botucudos of Brazil, by the ridiculous and disagreeable custom of slitting the under lip, and distending it to a great size by a circular piece of wood. This race is grave and solemn, both in language and manners, and, though few in numbers, they are dreaded by the other Tribes from possessing the fatal secret of the arrow poison, the nature of which has occupied the science of Europe from the time of Condamine to the present day. With it the Indians of Guiana kill their enemies and the objects of the chase, and eat the latter without suffering any bad effects from the animal having met a sudden death from its influence.

Accawas.

The Arrowauhs live about 20 or 30 leagues from the sea, and are of the middle size, well made, and fairer than other Indians, possessing a harmonious language, and living a very happy and peaceable life.

Arrowauhs.

Gumilla's description of these several Tribes coincides in all the most important points with those of Bancroft and Stedman; and from his account it appears that the Caribs of Interior Guiana are the most formidable race of Indians of the New World, and continually keep the Missions in alarm. He gives a very minute relation of their manners and customs, and also enters at much length into the history of the Tribes which inhabit the banks of the Great Orinoco, and principally of the Otomacos, Guarounos, Guamos, Salivas, Caverres, and Saruros. Of all the numerous races who thinly people the vast forests of this extensive region, he asserts the Otomacos to be the only Tribe which appears to differ very widely in its customs from its neighbours. These singular people do not practise polygamy, and in their marriages persist in the strange custom of causing the young men, as soon as they have arrived at a proper age, to take wives from amongst the oldest widows in the community, and when they become widowers remarrying them to young girls.

The story of this and other Tribes on the Orinoco eating a peculiar argillaceous earth during their seasons of scarcity, to which Humboldt gives credence, is denied by Gumilla, who points out the manner in which they make and preserve their bread in little holes lined with this earth, and covered by it till it ferments and forms a fine paste of the farinaceous portions of the maize and fruits which had been thus interred. It goes through many curious processes, and appears to form an article of great luxury, as they press the Missionaries to partake of it. Il faut pour les obliger en manger quelque peu, mais il est si rempli de terre, qu'il craque sous les dents. It is, he observes, from this circumstance, and from the brick-like look of the bread, that strangers have fancied these savages fed on earth.

GUIANA. The other Indian nations of the forests near the British and Spanish settlements, who have been occasionally observed, are said to be of peaceable demeanour, and very indolent.

Fugitive Negroes. A new race of Colonists has sprung up in these regions from the negroes who revolted against the avicious sway of their Dutch enslavers, and betook themselves to the woods and fastnesses of the interior. In 1728 the depredations committed by the sallies of these negroes increased to an alarming degree, and such was the terror they continued to inspire, that, in 1749, the Whites were reduced to the unpleasant alternative of acknowledging their independence by a formal Treaty of Peace. This treaty was, however, ill observed by the Blacks until after 1761. In 1772, the danger had become so imminent that the last resource, of supplying the place of the European troops who generally fell victims to the climate and the arts of their opponents, by raising large corps of manumitted Blacks, was had recourse to, and Surinam was saved by causing negroes to oppose negroes in forest warfare.

Population. Of the total numbers of the aborigines we can form no idea, we know not even the names of their various Tribes and Countries; but it is possible that the Indian race is more numerous in Guiana than in any other part of the Southern Continent, as the Whites have obtained no footing in the interior, which is as little known to them as the central parts of the great Island of Newfoundland is to the English settlers on its dreary coasts. The population of those portions of the banks of the Orinoco, which are occupied by Spaniards or their descendants, and the Mission Indians, has been computed at 34,000, being almost entirely confined to the very borders of the river; 19,400 Indians out of this number are under the care of the Missionaries in villages at from about 50 leagues from the Atlantic to about 130 up the river. In these villages 8000 Creoles, Mulattos, &c. also dwell, the remainder of the 34,000 is in the Capital. Of the Portuguese part of Guiana we have no adequate account; it chiefly consists of Missions, which appear to be established principally to discover the Country and to encroach on the Spanish part of it.

Climate. The Spaniards have peopled this Country as far South as $1^{\circ} 53'$ North latitude, where they built the fort of San Carlos. They divide Spanish Guiana into the Upper and Lower Provinces; and from their writers, as well as from recent travellers, we find that the climate of Upper Guiana, or that of all the Country West of the Caroni river, is extremely hot, but not in general unhealthy; few plantations are observed on it, though the soil is rich beyond imagination. Lower Guiana, or the space East of the Caroni, bounded by the Atlantic, the Orinoco, the Essequibo, and the Caroni, is still more fertile, and is, perhaps, the richest soil in the world, watered by numerous rivers, whose periodic overflowings deposit a slime as prolific as that of the Nile; but this fine Country is nearly a waste, harbouring huge serpents, beasts and birds of prey, reptiles, and, more dreaded by the settler than any of these, the anthropophagical Tribes, of whom the Caribs are the most sanguinary and ferocious.

From what may be gathered from the authorities above mentioned, and particularly from Humboldt's daring voyage along the Orinoco, and the accounts of those who have written on Surinam, we find that the climate of Guiana is, on the whole, the mildest of any tropical Country hitherto inhabited by Europeans. GUIANA. Though situated in the torrid zone, the heats on the Eastern side are tempered by the breezes which regularly blow from the sea. A perpetual cool stream of air refreshes the atmosphere, and on the West the vast and rapid rivers are so many sources by which heat is tempered and subdued. As in all similarly placed regions, the nights are damp and unwholesome, a fog caused by the vapours of the humid forests and morasses succeeding the breezes of the day.

The year in Guiana is divided into four seasons, the two dry and the two rainy periods; and these are distinguished from each other by their greater and less duration. The long rainy season commences about the middle of April, and increases till the middle of June, and then such floods fall from the sky, that nothing called rain in Europe can be compared to this deluge of waters. These torrents decrease in the commencement of July, and the long dry season begins in August, continuing until November. About the middle of that month the second wet period returns, and the Country is again inundated until the end of January, when the short dry season succeeds. During these heavy periodic rains, which are ushered in and accompanied by terrific storms of the loudest thunder and most vivid lightning, the brightest sunshine rapidly succeeds the discharge from the cloudiest sky. During the dry season frequent showers fall to refresh the earth; and it is impossible to give an adequate idea of the fecundity of the soil, and the unequalled splendour of the vegetable kingdom which accompanies this period.

On the sea-coast the range of the thermometer during the hottest or dry seasons varies from 84° to 90° ; its average in general throughout the year is not, however, more than from 73° to 84° . In the interior it seldom rises above 80° , and during the night frequently falls as low as 50° or 60° ; at this time not a zephyr blows, the air being cooled by the humid evaporations alone. From eight or ten in the morning to six in the evening is the pleasantest part of the 24 hours, as during this interval the sea breeze constantly prevails. On the low and parched-up plains near the Orinoco, Humboldt, of course, found the range of the thermometer much greater than that given above; but the height of the Cordilleras of the interior, and other causes, probably, tend to render that little known portion of Guiana as mild as the part inhabited by the British.

Guiana, so insulated by the Maranon and the Orinoco, Mountains may be said to be a vast Island, whose mountains afford scenes in which Nature seems to have surpassed her exertions on the Western limits of the New World, and to have compensated for the dreary and endless savannahs by which this portion of the Eastern barrier to the Atlantic is separated from the Cordilleras of the Andes.

The mountain of Duida is the highest point of Guiana observed by Humboldt, who, though unable to explore it, ascertained its elevation to be no less than 8465 feet above the ocean. He remarked that the Cordillera of the Cataracts which is broken through by the Orinoco, and forms the tremendous falls of Maypara and Atures, appears to acquire immense elevation in the interior, occupying a vast space, and stretches Southward to the Portuguese frontier, where it is lost in vast and nearly impenetrable tracts of forest country, over which no European ever trod.

This chain has been supposed to issue again to the

GUIANA

Eastward, where, though not so elevated or broad, it is highly magnificent, and near the supposed sources of the river is called Sierra de Guineropaca and de Pacaraimo. It bends Southward again along the banks of the Mao, where the mountain of Neucumo, or El Dorado, formed of yellow and glittering mica, highly resplendent at sunrise, deceived those venturous travellers, who fancied they had found a hill of solid gold. A branch from this chain enters French Guiana, where its form is little known, as the runaway Negroes and Caribs prevent the researches of the settlers. The rivers of Berbice, Surinam, Maroni, and Essequibo rise in this part of the chain. The Cordillera of the Cataracts is remarkable for the abrupt descent of its Southern flank, and is said to exhibit no rock of secondary formation, or any organic remains, consisting, for 600 miles, or from the Rio Negro to the frontiers of Grand Para, of primitive rocks of granite, gneiss, mica slate, and hornblende.

It is, indeed, probable, that most of the chains of Guiana are either of primitive or transition formation; on the Eastern flank of which an immense alluvial deposit has been continually accumulating; for the whole Atlantic side, for many leagues inland, is an uniform plain of unequalled fertility, covered by thick forests to the very edge of the ocean. The coast is so low and flat that nothing is seen on approaching Surinam but trees growing as it seems out of the water; and the whole shore is rendered inaccessible from its being covered with dangerous banks, quicksands, bogs, rocks, and such an immense growth of underwood, that it is nearly impenetrable. On reaching it by the rivers, these appearances gradually alter, and a constant verdant landscape presents itself. Mangrove forests, interspersed with flourishing plantations, meet the eye; and it is not until the traveller has proceeded many leagues into the Country, that it rises into rocky mountains equally covered by forests, and interspersed with rich valleys, where the savannahs are one continued and luxuriant herbage. The rains of the wet season cover the soil on this deposit along the coast sometimes two feet in depth; and this, together with fallen leaves and decay of the herbage and plants, creates such a deep soil, that the surface for twelve feet is said to be a stratum of perfect manure, which has been shipped at times to the West Indies, to improve the lands of the plantations.

Rivers.

The Maranon separates Guiana from Brazil, and between it and the Orinoco a singular connection has been verified by Humboldt through the Cassiquiare and the Rio Negro. The principal rivers flowing into the Atlantic, are the Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, Cayuni, Courantine, Surinam, Comewina, Cottica, Copename, Seramica, Maroni, or Marawina, Cayenne; and all of these are large and very long, but in general navigable only for a short distance into the interior, excepting the first four and the Surinam, which with the Cayenne have their shores lined by plantations of sugar, cocoa, cotton, and indigo, and present very superb views to the traveller. The Caroni, the Aruy, the Caura, and the Cuchivero empty themselves into the mighty Orinoco on the North, but are little known, the Caroni being the only one on which many settlements have been founded. On the West the Suapure, the Sipapu, and the Ventuari emerge from the interior to swell the same great river, which also receives on the South many others whose names are scarcely known. Portuguese Guiana is intersected in every direction by vast streams which flow into the Amazons, or the Negro; of these the Parima, or Rio Branco, is the most important, as it affords a direct communication across the whole Country from the Cordillera of Pacaraimo to the Rio Negro and the Maranon. The Siaba also joins the Rio Negro, and the Amazons receives, amongst many others, the Yapura and the Uapes.

The Lakes of Guiana are not so numerous as might be expected. It is said that a large inland sea called Parima exists in the interior, whence the Orinoco derives its source; but modern maps do not give much support to this supposition.

Guiana may be said to be the garden of the New World; on its fertile soil the most beautiful, the most useful, and the grandest plants are spread out in profusion. Of the mahogany-tree many superior kinds have been discovered in its forests. But surpassing its fellows in magnitude, and forming the great feature of the woodland, is the gigantic Cabbage palm, 120 feet in altitude, with an erect, tapering trunk uncumbered by branches for above 100 feet from the ground. The Eta, a smaller kind of this palm, furnishes nuts as well as the cabbage; and the Cokarito, a still less species, yields a delicate food in the long, thin, tender flakes which are enclosed in a husky tegument on its summit. The Manicole, another species, affords along the whole coast, for 50 miles from the sea, a similar cabbage.

Next in height to the Cabbage palm, is the Silk Cotton tree, 100 feet in altitude and 12 in circumference, without branches for 70 or 80 feet; from this vast stem the Indians hollow out canoes 70 feet in length. The Locust tree affords the Indian food from a peculiar farinaceous, or manna-like powder, which covers its pods, and yields from between its greatest roots a clear transparent gum, which, reduced by alcohol, is converted into an excellent lacker or varnish. The timber of the Green Hart, or Sipiera tree, is very valuable, and it yields a globular farinaceous fruit, from which the natives occasionally make bread. The Purple Hart tree has equally good timber. The Bullet tree is used for the manufacture of the arms and shafts of windmills, or for any purpose where a solid durable wood is required. From the Wasceba, the Indians fabricate their bows, and the Iron-wood tree forms their clubs. The Guaiacum tree grows in Guiana to the height of 40 feet, and the wild cinnamon is abundant. The Mawna tree produces a fruit exactly resembling oriental nutmegs, but without their fragrance or taste, and yields a valuable gum; the Launa has a fruit resembling a lemon externally and an apple internally, from whose juice a singular blue fugitive dye, or natural sympathetic ink, is formed. The red Mangrove covers the low wet soil of the coast and rivers, and affords a capital timber, and its bark is used in tanning leather. The white Mangrove is an upland plant, and shuns the water: it is therefore destitute of the long depending fibrous shoots which form the characteristic feature of the other, and which, taking root in the loose swampy soil, soon support and extend their parent tree. The Cassia fistula is natural to Guiana. Of the Tetermer, the settlers form the panels of ceilings and wainscots, and furniture. The Caraba, or Crabtree, is noted for its nuts, which yield, by expression, a copious thick oil, used by the Indians to grease and rub their skin with, in order to defend them from the piercing rays of the sun, and the bites of mosquitoes and flies. An

GUIANA.

Lakes.

Vegetable kingdom.

GUIANA. Indian will not appear in public unless he is thus anointed, which he calls being dressed. The Savory tree is famed for its immense fruit, which contains in its kernels a substance of a more agreeable taste than any nut hitherto discovered. A superior wood to mahogany is obtained from the Ducottabolla, and for elegant cabinet work the Bourracourra, or Letter wood, is yet unequalled. From the bark of the Simaraba, a plant indigenous to the soil, a valuable specific for the dysentery is made. The Wallabah is used to form the staves of sugar hogsheads, and its bitter bark is a good emetic. The nutmeg of the New World is brought only from the interior by the natives. It is as large as an ordinary apple, and is a remedy for diarrhœas. Its taste is warm and spicy. Gum anime, Balsam capivi, and an infinite number of plants affording gums, balsams, and drugs, are everywhere met with; but the balsam most prized by the natives is that called Arrecocerra, which is found only in the interior, and is their grand vulnerary for wounds, &c. A species of Camphor tree has been discovered, which also affords the Canella alba, or Winter's bush. The Xiarree is a sort of Upas, whose poisonous atmosphere prevents other plants from thriving in its neighbourhood. The Cuppy tree is used for fences, and takes a fine polish. The Canavatepy also polishes well, and gives out the odour of a carnation in working. The Berklac is of a pink colour, and adapted for all domestic uses. The fruits of Guiana are numerous beyond conception. The ducolla apple has the flavour of marmalade of quinces, guavas, avigato pears, shaddocks, avoira plums, pine-apples, musk and water melons, every variety of delicious nuts, mammees apples, plantains, bananas, coffee and cocoa nuts, the sugar-cane, poppans, yams, cassava, forbidden fruit, oranges, lemons, citrons, limes, bergamot, sappadilla, custard apple, and cashew nuts, everywhere adorn the landscape, as do the beautiful tamarind tree, the Arabian jessamy, water lemon, and granadilla vine. Flowers and shrubs are in infinite variety; and here the trooly furnishes leaves not less than from 20 to 30 feet in length, and two or three in breadth, which are used to thatch the houses, and last for years; whilst the nibbees, or llianas, which throw their fantastic arms round the tallest trees of the forest, and resemble from their leafless nature the cordage of a vessel, are actually used for that purpose, as, on being split into small ligaments, they are formed into a sort of ropes.

Animal Kingdom. Among the animals the jaguar or tiger of the New World is very formidable. The cougar, or maneless lion, is less in size, but very destructive; the tiger-cat and wild-cat are exceedingly fierce, and destroy poultry and small quadrupeds. The coatimondi, or weasel, is equally voracious. But the ant-bear is the most singular animal of this Country. The others are chiefly the great porcupine, armadillo, sloth, opossum, deer, hog of the New World, (peccary,) agouti, or Indian rabbit, cavy, &c. The tapir of Guiana has not been well described; we have little doubt it is the hippopotamus of Bancroft, though the large tusks he mentions separate it somewhat from the other species of tapirs. The laubba is a nondescript, which Bancroft informs us is of the size of a young pig, with a short, round, thick body, a head resembling a Dutch mastiff's, no tail, and short legs, and is covered with fine short hair of a chestnut colour, on the back diversified by white circular spots, three inches in circumference, and white under the belly. It feeds on grain, herbage, and fruit, and is amphibious. Its flesh is eaten, even in preference to that of deer. Apes, from the great ourang outang to the little saccawinhee, fill the forests of the interior; and here the dreaded vampire bat may be seen, of such an enormous size as to measure 32½ inches between the tips of its wings. Nothing can exceed the variety and splendour of the feathered race in this clime. The crested eagle, the vulture, Surinam falcon, an owl no larger than a thrush, the butcher bird, the toucan, pelican, tiger bird, herons, flamingo, spur-winged water hen, trumpeter or agame, are a few of those best known, which, with countless multitudes of splendid macaws and parrots, humming birds and paroquets, enliven the otherwise dreary woods and forests. The grass sparrow is an elegant little creature, resembling a parroquet, perfectly green, with a white bill and red eyes; the mocking bird is black, with crimson edges to the wings and a crimson crown. The kishee-kishee, a small bird from the interior, surpasses all in the variety and splendour of its brilliant colours.

Guiana affords most remarkable insects. Stedman mentions a butterfly which measured from wing to wing about seven inches, and of such a vivid blue colour that no ultramarine could equal it. Centipedes and scorpions abound, but their bite is not mortal. Of all the hideous monsters which this division of Nature's works affords, the great bush or wood spider is the most terrifying. One of them was placed by Stedman in a case-bottle eight inches high and filled it. It has five pair of thick legs, and is of a black colour, covered with long thick hair, whilst each leg is armed with a crooked yellow nail, and the pincers from its head, with which it seizes its prey, resemble those of a crab. The walking leaf, and an animal mounted on six legs, each six inches long, and like those of a spider, are curiosities peculiar to the Country. The fire-fly of Guiana is a most splendid insect, above an inch in length, and so luminous that, by the help of two of them, a person may read at night; ants of various species are a source of great torment to the settlers, as are mosquitoes, woodlice, the chigoe, &c. "In truth," observes Pinckard, "the annoyance from this source is more severe than the exhausting heat of the climate; for the general buzzing, the biting, stinging, creeping, and crawling of these tormenting objects, distress me far more than the temperature, or any apprehension of disease. We are bitten, stung, or overrun by day and by night, and exposed to incessant pain and discomfort, unless constantly upon the watch, or carefully protected by some defensive covering, being perpetually beset with myriads of flies, ants, mosquitoes, cock-roaches, lizards, jack-spaniards, a large species of wasp, fire-flies, centipedes, &c. which, in addition to their bites and stings, fly in our faces, crawl about our persons, and make an intolerable buzzing in our ears. In an evening, and particularly after rain, the confused noise of these humming hosts is peculiarly disagreeable. It conveys the idea of breathing in an atmosphere of sounds, or amidst a great and animated hive, where every created insect joins in full chorus, the enormous frog of the country croaking the bass, in a voice which resembles the loud bellowings of an ox."

If Guiana is cited as being so prolific in birds and insects, it may with more reason be called the country of serpents and reptiles. The boa constrictor here reaches 30 feet in length, and three or four in circumference. The rattle snake is eight or nine feet in length, and, together with the orococo or labarra,

GUIANA.

Birds.

Insects

Reptiles.

GUIANA
GUIDE

and whip snake, carries death in its fangs. To these may be added, the scarlet snake, the fire snake, the dreaded woods-master the macouracoura, the caruna, the ibonana or cobra de coral, &c. It is a common opinion in this Country, that the more lively and various the colours of the snakes are, the more fatal is their poison. Accidents are very frequent, as the houses are open, and the rains often drive these reptiles to take shelter in them.

"Sitting on my chair one evening," says Dr. Bancroft, "and putting my hand behind me, I perceived something unusually cold, which I took to be the back of the chair, but soon after felt it move; when starting up, I perceived I had laid my hand on one of these snakes, (Earunas, a very poisonous one,) who was coiled in a heap, with the head uppermost; and as the pressure of my hand had been light, and the warmth agreeable, he probably intended no injury; had it been otherwise, the consequence might have been fatal."

The labarra appears to be the worst of all the Guianian reptiles. Bancroft cites the case of a negro carpenter, who, in turning over a piece of timber, was bitten by one on the forefinger of his right hand. The effects were instantaneous; for the man had but just time to kill the reptile when his limbs failed to support him, and he fell to the ground, and expired in less than five minutes from the time he received the wound; hemorrhages ensued from the nose, ears, lungs, &c., and the blood exuded, so as to occasion the appearance of purple spots on every part of the surface of the body. Stedman mentions a similar fate which befell one of his slaves, from inadvertently treading on a snake of the same species.

Amphibia.

The waters are as prolific as the land in Guiana, its rivers swarming with alligators, lizards, water snakes, with the paca or cavy, the tapir, &c. Three kinds of frogs, and a venomous toad, the Pipa, whose young lodge in cells on the parent's back, &c. may be cited amongst the amphibious tribe, whilst the same rivers and the coasts abound with every variety of tropical fish. That huge monster the manati, or sea cow, frequents most of them. The frog fish, a sort of large tadpole, and the torporific eel, or torpedo, are common to every stream. Edible shell-fish of every variety, particularly crabs, are found upon all the coasts, and land crabs are in great abundance.

Fish.

Fossils and Minerals.

Above the cataracts of the Demarara, there are great quantities of fine red and white agates, which are not touched by the natives, who have dedicated them to their Deities. There are likewise a variety of stones, which appear to contain valuable ores, and there are undoubtedly mines of gold and silver. The genius and policy of the Dutch, Bancroft truly observes, forbid the search for the precious metals. They were sensible that the wealth of the New World had impoverished and depopulated the once powerful monarchy of Spain. Whenever the British settlements shall extend into the interior of Guiana, no doubt these deposits of mineral wealth will be laid open, and the El Dorado of visionaries will be found to exist only in the caverns of the earth.

For further particulars concerning this highly interesting region, the reader may consult Herrera, Acosta, Garcilasso de la Vega, and the other Spanish Historians of the New World generally, but the following works will afford him the greatest pleasure and profit.

Portel, Tres merveilles Victoires des Femmes du Nouveau Monde, 1553; Historia da Provincia de Santa Cruz, Gandaso, 1579; Johanna Lario, Historia Navigationis in Brasiliam quæ et America dicitur, &c. 1586; Hackluyt's Collection of Voyages, 1589; The Discoverie of the Large, Riche, and Bewtiful Empire of Guiana, with a relation of the Great and Golden Citie of Manoa, &c. by Sir Walter Raleigh, 1596; De Bry, Indiæ Occidentalis, 1624; Purchas, Pilgrims, 1626, in which is Sparrey's account of his adventures after Sir Walter Raleigh left him in Guiana; and Leigh, Wilson, and Harcourt's voyages to Guiana. Laet, Orbis Novus, 1633; Nuevo Descubrimiento del gran Rio de las Amazonas, per Cristoforo de Acuña, 4to. Madrid, 1641. This work is very rare, and a somewhat scarce English translation was printed in 1698, which also gives the travels of Fathers Grillet and Bechamel from Cayenne into Guiana in search of Lake Parima and El Dorado. Barlaeus, Res gestæ in Brasiliâ, &c. 1660; Pagan's Amazons, 1662; An Impartial Description of Surinam upon the Continent of Guiana from the Experience of George Warren, 1667, 4to. a curious work. Rodriguez, El Maragnon y Amazonas, 1684; Rocha Pitta, Historia da America Portouguesa desde 1500 ate 1724, Lisboa, 1730; Récueil des Voyages dans l'Amérique, 1738; Histoire Naturelle &c. de l'Oronoque par Gumilla, 1758; Bancroft's Guiana, 1769; Stedman's Surinam, 1806; Pinckard's Notes on the West Indies, 1806; Condamine, Voyage dans l'Intérieure de l'Amérique, 1778; Rudge, Plantarum Guianæ Rariorum, &c. 1805; Depons, Voyage à la Terre Firme, 1806; Alcedo's Geographical Dictionary by Thomson, 1810; Corografia Brazilica, M. A. de Casal, 1817; Humboldt's Personal Narrative; Merian's Insectes et Plantes de Surinam, in folio, and Merian, De Generatione et Metamorphosis Insectorum Surinamensium, Latinè et Gallicè, Hagæ com. 1726, folio.

GUIANA
GUIDE

GUIDE, v.

GUIDE, n.

GUI'DABLE,

GUI'DANCE,

GUI'DER,

GUI'DERESS,

GUI'DING,

GUI'DELESS,

GUIDE-POST.

Fr. guider; It. guidare; Sp. guiar. Skinner;—from A. S. wit-an, to know, or cause to know, or the Ger. weiss-en, to show. Lye, from weiss-en.

To teach, to show, to point out, sc. the way; to direct, to rule, or regulate; to manage or control.

þe barons zede to conseel, & teld it siþen on hie,
Ine kyng of Westsex was a knight worþie,
Forto gje vs alle, þat now er comen hire.

R. Brunne, p. 2.

Adelard of Westsex was kyng of þe empire,
Of Noreis & Surreis, gujour of ilk schire.

Id. p. 6.

Ac þe weý ys so wyckede, bote ho hadde a gyde.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 127.

GUIDE.

But certainly, a yong thing men may gie,
Right as men may warm wax with handes plie.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9303.

I haue my selfe seine a blind man go
There as he fell that could loken wide,
A foole may eke a wise man oft gide.
Id. The first Booke of Troilus, fol. 155.

And for to maken you the more mery,
I wol myselven gladly with you ride,
Right at min owen cost, and be your gide.
Id. The Prologue, v. 705.

I shall fixe fethers in thy thought, by which it may arisen in height, so that all tribulation ydone away thou by my giding and by my pathe, & by my sledes, (meis vehiculis) shalt mower returne hole and sound into thy country.

Id. The fourth Booke of Boecius, fol. 230.

O (qd. I) thou that art guideress of every light.

Id. Ib.

And be his guide vpon the weie
In helpe to ben his herbegeour,
Hath axed, who was senatour,
That he his name might kenne.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 35.

And with that word Androgeus crested helme,
And the rich armes of his shield did he on :
A Grekish sword he guided (accommodate) by his side :
Like gladly Dimas, and Ripheus did.
Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

Alas (my Poyns) how men do seke the best,
And finde the worse, by error as they straye :
And no maruell, when sight is so opprest,
And blindes the guide ; anone out of the way
Goeth guide and all in sekyng quiet lyfe.
Wyat. Of the meane and sure Estate.

So heere I hired two Indians to be my guides.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 485. Miles Philips.

Whan themselves be twise blind, yet they professe themselves teachers of the people, that is, guiders of the blynde.
Udall. John, ch. ix.

Syr Marrocke he hyght that dyde me wo,
And my knyght Sir Roger he dyde slo,
That my gyder sholde haue bene.
Early Popular Poetry. Syr Tryamour, vol. i. p. 69. l. 1530.

Still he him guided over dale and hill,
And with his steedy staffe did point his way ;
His race with reason, and with words his will,
From fowle intemperance he oft did stay,
And suffered not in wrath his hasty steps to stray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. I.

Thus then Sir Guyon with his faithful gyde,
Had with dew rites and dolorous lanient
The end of their sad tragedie uptyde,
The little babe up in his armes he hent.
Id. Ib. book ii. can. 2.

Here are they [eyes] guides, which do the body lead,
Which else would stumble in eternal night :
Here in this world they do much knowledge read,
And are the casements which admit most light.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, sec. 14.

So forth she rode, without repose or rest,
Searching all lands and each remotest part,
Following the gydance of her blinded guest,
Till that to the sea-coast at length she her addrest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 4.

Some launces, according to the metal they met, and skill of the guider, did stain themselves in blood.

Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

There is a peremptory, and even forcible, execution of an All-comprehensive and Eternal Counsel, for the ordering and the guid- ing of the Motion of the Matter in the Universe to what is for the best.

H. More. Antidote against Atheism, book ii ch. ii.

VOL. XXIII.

In which haste and confusion, the greatest of their galliasses fell foule vpon another ship, and lost her rudder, so that guideless she droue with the tyde vpon a shelue in the shoare of Callis, where she was assaulted by the English.

Speed. Queen Elizabeth, book ix. ch. 24. Anno 1588.

And as on high
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here ; so Reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a hetter day.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

A king is sought to guide the growing State,
One able to support the public weight,
And fill the throne where Romulus had sate.
Id. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xv.

He, for my sake, the raging ocean try'd
And wrath of Heaven, my still auspicious guide,
And bore beyond the strength decrepit age supply'd.
Id. Virgil. Æneis, book vi.

A submissive and guidable spirit, a disposition easy to all.
Sprat. Sermon before the King, (1676) p. 11.

Since Wisdom's sacred guidance he pursues,
Give to the stranger guest a stranger's dues.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book viii.

Here we have three sorts of men, 1. Carnal, i. e. such as are sway'd by fleshly passions and interests : 2. Animal, i. e. such as seek wisdom, or a way to happiness only by the strength and guidance of their own natural parts, without any supernatural light coming from the spirit of God, i. e. by reason without Revelation, by philosophy without Scripture : 3. Spiritual.

Locke. Paraphrase on 1 Corinthians, ch. iii. note on v. 1.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
On this hand gaining what on that he lost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

His guideless youth, if thy experienc'd age
Mislead fallacious into idle rage,
Vengeance reserv'd thy malice shall repress,
And but augment the wrongs thou wouldst redress.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book ii.

But now nine hundred chariots roll along,
Expert their guiders, and their horses strong.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

Whereby he and the said bishop constituted one Simon Warner, to be guider and keeper of the house, or hospital, of our blessed Lady and St. Clement, without St. Austin's gate, in Norwich.

Strype. Life of Archbishop Parker, book iii. ch. xx.

I will take, therefore, a middle course, and confine myself to short observations on those crimes only, of which the prisoners are specifically accused, so as to assist your recollection, and guide your judgment in finding or rejecting the several Bills, that will, I know, be presented to you.

Sir W. Jones. Charge to the Grand Jury at Calcutta, Dec. 4. 1788.

Women are very sensible of this ; for which reason, they learn to lisp, to totter in their walk, to counterfeit weakness, and even sickness. In all this they are guided by nature. Beauty in distress, is the most affecting beauty.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, part iii. sec. 9.

Common sense, or that share and species of understanding which Nature has bestowed on the greater part of men, is, when competently improved by education, and assisted by Divine grace, the safest guide to certainty and happiness.

V. Knox. Essays, No. 61.

I have not thought of it slightly ; I at least understand enough of it to enable me to form for my own guidance, (and that is all I aim at) not an obscure, not an hesitating, but a clear and determined judgment.

Anecdotes of the Life of Bishop Watson, vol. ii. p. 70.

Great men are the guide-posts and landmarks in the state.

Burke. On American Taxation.

GUIDON, GUIDO, says Du Cange, Vexillum or Vexillifer, from the mediæval Guida, a Guide, either from Gué, vadum, whence Guider, is to lead any one through a difficult path, or, as Menage more profoundly thinks, Viæ dux Viædus, Guidus. "A Guidon, or Cor-

GUIDE.

GUIDON

GUIDON. net of Horsemen Argolaters, (Light Horsemen,) that serve on horseback with Petronels, (Poitrial, a firearm between a Harquebus and a Pistol, rested against the chest of the person who discharged it,) quia pertinet ad Vexillarium conducere (guidare) cohortem, Minshew, adv.

Francis Markham has left a very full description of this officer, and of the standard which he bears.

"The Cornet, or Guydon, is (in Cavalry) the same that the Ensign in Foot is, and he ought ever to have two or three faithful and valiant friends in his range, which in all charges will have an extraordinary care of his Colours, which is the Captaine's honour and the Companies safetie. Now to speake a little of the Guydon, or Colours themselves, howsoever, in our latter times, either by pride or ignorance, they have been infinitely abused, (every one taking upon him to carry what he pleaseth, and in what forme he pleaseth,) yet it is most certain that no man under the degree of a Banneret may carry the square, but they must bee of Damaske, either with Devise or without, three foot deep at the top, and so narrower to the nether end, which must be with two corners, or peakes, which, whensoever he is made a Baron or Knight Banneret, these corners are cut away, and the Guydon is made square. These colours are carried upon a lance, and are in length full two yards or better; this Gentleman which carrieth this Cornet, hath all the priviledges which an Ensign of Foot hath, and in his Captaine and Lieutenant's absence, commandeth the Company, and by either of their deaths, ought by right to bee advaunced into their places. In the quarter hee is lodged as well as his Captain, and in all marches hath the leading of the middle File, and followeth next after his Captaine." (Five Decades of Epistles of Warre, 1622. Dec. iii. ad fin.)

Grose refers to this account, and adds, on the same authority, though Markham certainly does not say so, that the Guidon is inferior to the standard, being the first colour any commander of horse can let fly in the field. It was originally borne by the Dragoons, and might be charged with the owner's armorial bearings. (Mil. Ant. ii. 53.) Thus, in the College of Arms, is still preserved the docquet of a grant of a Guidon to Hugh Vaughan, Esq. in 1491, which bears his crest, a man habited and holding a sword. This is placed in the Guidon longitudinally.

Guidones are also mentioned by Du Cange (ad v.) as an Ecclesiastical fraternity, instituted by Charlemagne, to show strangers who visited Rome the sacred places of the City, a kind of Ciceroni; and also to take charge of their Funerals, in case they died within its precincts. One of the gates of the Vatican, Porta Guidonea, has been supposed to be so named from the residence of this fraternity. Du Cange gives from Mabillon (Itin. Ital. 51.) a different reason, the force of which we do not comprehend, quod per eam peregrini Guidones seu vexilla gestantes intrarent.

GUIENNE, a Province of France under the old régime, coincided in limits nearly with the Aquitania of the Romans. It was the largest government of the Kingdom, having 90 leagues in length, with about 80 in breadth, and being watered by the Garonne, Dordogne, Adour, Yarn, Aveyron, and Lot. Guienne was divided into the upper and lower Provinces, the former comprehending the Bordelais, Perigord, Agenois, Condomois, Bazadois, Landes, Gascony, properly so called, and the Countries of Soule and Labour. Lower Guienne comprised the Countries of Quercy, Rouergue, Armagnac, Comminges, Couserans, and Bigorre. The upper Province lay within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Toulouse, and the lower within that of Bordeaux. From the dominion of the Romans this Country passed under that of the Visigoths, and finally under that of the Franks. It had for Sovereigns its native Princes, with the title of Duke of Aquitaine. The Gascons or Basques, descending from the Pyrenees about the year 600, made themselves masters of the Southern part of it, and their Dukes governed independently, until compelled by Charlemagne to render him homage. This monarch erected Aquitaine into a Kingdom, in favour of his son Louis le Debonnaire. But the new-made Kingdom soon fell to pieces, and Guienne was ruled by the Counts of Poitou, who, in the middle of the IXth century, took the title of Dukes of Guienne. This Province was united to the Crown of England by the marriage of Eleanor, the heiress of the last Duke, with Henry II., and continued so for several centuries, until the English were finally driven from France by Charles VII.

Guienne, properly so called, is but a small part of the Aquitanian Province. It is situated to the North of Gascony, comprising the Countries of the Bordelais, Medoc, Buch, and the Pais entre deux Mers. This extensive tract is at present divided into the following five departments, viz. the GIRONDE, the LOT and GARONNE, the DORDOGNE, the LOT, and the AVEYRON.

GUIERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Onagrace. Generic character: calyx oblong, slender, four-toothed; corolla, petals five; stamens exserted, capsule long, narrow, hairy, one-celled, mostly five-seeded.

One species, G. Senegalensis, native of Senegal.

GUILANDINA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx one-leaved, salver-shaped; petals inserted into the neck of the calyx; pod somewhat rhomboidal, one-seeded; seeds hard.

Five species, natives of the East Indies.

GUILD, } A. S. gild; D. gilde, gulde;
GUILDABLE, } Ger. gilde, a society; from A. S.
GUILD-HALL, } gild-an, to yield or pay; and so GUILD-MASTER. } called, says Skinner quia collegæ pecuniam pro communi sumtu contribuant. See in Spelman, Gloss. Arch. And see the Quotations from Pennant and Blackstone. Guild then is

A payment or contribution, a tax, and consequently, those who pay or contribute; a society, a fraternity. Guild is also applied to the place where the society met.

Paying to them that have saved and kept the same couenable for their trauaile, that is to say, by the discretion of the shirifes & bailifes, or other our ministers in the places guildable.

Rastal. Collection of Statutes. Marchants and Marchandises, fol. 279

———— The roome was large and wide

As it some gyeld or solemne temple were.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 7

Cupid hath ta'ne offence of late

At all the Gods, that of the state,

And in their councill, he was so deserted,

Not to be call'd into their guild

But slightly pass'd by, as a child.

Ben Jonson. Masques. Chloridia.

Every town hath not a guild-hall, a sessions-house, a cock-pit, or a play-house fit for such a multitude.

Spelman. Apology for a Treatise De Non Temerandis Ecclesiis.

GUIENNE.

GUILD.

GUILD.

If the worst of 'hem be not worth your iourney, draw your bill of charges, as unconscionable as any guild-hall verdict will give it you, and you shall be allowed your viaticum.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act ii. sc. 2.

Commissions were next given to examine the state of the chantries and guildable lands.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1548.

After this she went into Guildhall, and there gave an account of her message to Wiat, and his answer. Id. Ib. Anno 1554.

It was originally governed by a guild and guild-master; which were the origin of corporations, and took rise before the time of the conquest; the name being Saxon, signifying a fraternity, which unites and flings its effects into a common stock, and is derived from gildan, to pay. A guild was a public feast, to commemorate the time of the institution; and the guild-hall the place in which the fraternity assembled.

Pennant. Journey from Chester. Lichfield.

Gild signified among the Saxons a fraternity, derived from the verb gildan, to pay, because every man paid his share towards the expenses of the community. And hence their place of meeting is frequently called the gild or guildhall.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. p. 473.

The Anglo-Saxon GUILDS or Clubs were framed for various purposes. Mr. Turner (Hist. of Ang. Sax. viii. 10.) mentions one at Exeter, the agreement of which has been printed by Hickes. (Diss. Ep. p. 18.) It consisted of 18 members, among whom were the Bishops and Canons. Every hearth or family was to pay one penny* at Easter, and one penny also on the death of every member of the Guild, whether man or woman, for the soul's scot. This was to be the perquisite of the Canons, who performed the necessary rites. Another Guild in the same City, made "for God's love and their souls' need," met thrice a year, at Michaelmas, at Mary's mass over Winter, and at the holydays after Easter. Every member was to bring a certain portion of malt, and every Cniht was to add a less quantity, and some honey. The mass-priest was to sing a mass for their living friends, another for their dead friends, and every brother two psalms. At the death of every member, six psalms were to be chanted, and every man at the rub-pone was to pay five pennies, and at a house-burning one penny. If any man neglected the appointed days, he was to be fined the first time in three masses, the second in five, and the third time no man was to share with him, unless sickness, or the compulsion of the Lord, occasioned his absence. If one neglected his payments at the appointed time, he was to pay double; and if any member misgreeted (inciviliter tractavit seu allocutus est) another, he was to forfeit thirty pence. (Hickes, ib. p. 21.)

A much fuller agreement is given by the same writer, (Ib. p. 20.) on the establishment of a Guild of Thegas at Cambridge. Each Member took an oath of fidelity to the others. If any Member died, all the others were to carry him wherever he desired, and the fine for non-attendance on such occasions was a syster of honey. The Guild furnished half the provisions at the interment, and each Member paid two-pence for alms, and what was suitable was to be taken for St. Etheldrytha. If any of the Guild needed assistance, and the Gerefa (Reeve) nearest the Guild having been informed of his situation neglected him, unless the Guild itself was near, he was to pay one pound. If the Lord committed similar neglect he forfeited a like sum, unless he could establish a reasonable excuse from sickness or superior claims. Eight pounds was the compensation to be paid for killing a Member; and if not paid, all the Guildship was bound to avenge his death, and jointly to bear the consequence. If any Member killed another person, and was in distress, and had to pay for the wrong, and the slain was a twelfhinde person, (a man of the highest class,) each Member was bound to help him with half a mark; if a ceorl (infimi gradus homo) two ora, if a Welshman one. But if a Member killed another person wilfully and foolishly, he took the consequences on his own head, and if the person slain were another Member of the Guild, the homicide must pay the fine of eight pounds, or lose its society. In that case, if any Member eat or drank with the expelled Member, unless before the King, the Lord Bishop, or the Ealdorman, he was fined a pound, unless with two persons sitting he could prove that he did not know it. If any of the Guild misgreeted another, unless he could clear himself with two friends, he was fined a syster of honey. If a Cniht drew a weapon he was to pay his Lord a pound, and the Guild was to help him in getting it. If a Cniht wounded another man, the Lord was to avenge it. "If the Cniht sits within the path, let him pay a syster of honey, and if he has a footseat let him do the same." If any Member died or fell sick out of the district, he was to be fetched by the others wherever he wished, dead or alive; if he died at home, and the Guild neglected to seek his body and his morgen spæca, (the assembly held the day after the funeral,) they forfeited a syster of honey.

Madox, in his Firma Burgi, (ch. i. sec. 9.) says the most ancient Guild occurring to his memory, is the English Cnihtengild of London. He cannot ascertain the date of its institution, but it certainly existed before the Conquest. The men of this Guild afterwards granted their lands and privileges to the Canons of the Holy Trinity of London, so that it was dissolved. Whether it was Secular or Religious is doubtful. Stow (Survey, Ed. 1633) says that the men of this Guild used to perform feats of arms, but he might think so because they were styled Cnihts. Madox believes that it was Secular, because if it had been Religious they would scarcely have made their grant to a similar institution. The devotional Guilds mentioned by Madox "for example sake," are one at Norwich, in honour of St. George the Martyr, consisting of an Alderman, Master, Brothers, and Sisters, temp. Richard II., and one established by Letters Patent of Henry V. in Bristol, in the honour of the Holy Trinity and St. George. These were commonly called Brotherheads and Fraternities, and were abolished at the Reformation. No Guild, Religious or Secular, could be set up without a Royal Warrant; the attempt to do otherwise was punished as a Trespass, and in the 26th Henry II. several Guilds were thus amerced to the Crown as adulterine. The Guilds of Tradesmen appear to have been styled Companies in the reign of Henry VIII. In an Action of Trespass in the 10th Henry IV., it is pleaded that the Weavers of London, time beyond memory of man, were a Corporated Craft, called Weverscraft, having their Guild, for which every Michaelmas they paid 20 marks to the Crown; (Id. c. x. sec. 21.) further the existence of this Guild is shown in the reigns of Henry I. and Stephen. This Guild of Telarii, Teliers, or Weavers, and that of Bolengarii, Boulangiers, or Bakers, were the most ancient in London. (Id. c. x. sec. 20.)

GUILD.

* On the value of this and other denominations of Anglo-Saxon money see Henry's Hist. of Brit. book i. ch. vi. He estimates the pound at £2. 6s. 3d., the ora at 4s. 8½d., the penny at 2½d. of our present money.

GUILD.
—
GUILDER.

Dugdale has written largely on the Guilds of Coventry, the most ancient of which, in honour of John the Baptist, dates from 14th Edward III. He has printed from a MS. the ordinances and statutes of St. Katherine's Guild, founded three years afterwards, and subsequently united with those of St. John, of the Trinity, and of our Lady. Their Hall, St. Mary's Hall, was "a fair and stately structure," "nay so great a reputation had this fraternity far and near, that K. Henry IV. and K. Henry VI., with divers of the principal Nobility, Bishops, and other eminent persons, thought it no dishonour to be admitted thereof." (Ant. of Warwickshire, 123.)

Free Guilds are spoken of as existing in London in Anglo-Saxon times; (Wilkin, Leg. Sax. 41.) and in a Charter of those days belonging to the late Mr. Astle, (No. 28.) three Guilds are mentioned within the walls of Canterbury and some without. In Domesday Book, (fol. 3.) a Guild of the Clergy of the same City is noticed. Mr. Turner compares these Guilds to modern Benefit Societies and Convivial Clubs. Domesday Book (fol. 1.) mentions also the Gihalla (Guildhall) Burgensium at Dover.

Du Cange has given some specimens of very disreputable Guilds. One Tanchelinus is said to have established Fraternitatem quandam, quam Gilda vulgo appellant, in qua 12 viros in figura 12 Apostolorum et unam tantum feminam in figuram B. Mariæ constituerunt. St. Anselm, also, in one of his Letters, (lib. ii. epist. 7.) speaks of one Henry who had been a Chamberlain, (Camerarius), who in multis sese inordinatè gerit, et maximè in bibendo; ita ut in Gildis cum ebriosis bibat et cum eis inebrietur, of which offences he very solemnly forbids a repetition. Ex Dei et Sanctorum ejus et nostræ auctoritate prohibeo, ne, postquam hanc nostram prohibitionem cognoverit, amplius in Gildâ, aut in conventu eorum qui ad inebriandum solum conveniunt, bibere audeat.

In the Royal Boroughs of Scotland, the Company of Merchants, who are Freemen, is still called a Guild. The Bailie is the Chief Magistrate of the Borough, and next to him is the Dean of Guild, who decides commercial disputes, arbitrates concerning buildings, lighting, watercourses, local nuisances, &c. summons meetings, and manages the finances of the Guild.

GUILDER, or } A coin, q. d. nummus aureus
GILDER. } seu deauratus, unless perhaps from Geldria; nummus Geldricus.

The Guilder of Holland was worth 2s. 4d. English.

Who gave to me bycause I was so prest
At such a pinche, and on a dismall day,
Three hundreth gilderns good aboue my pay.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

After thys answer made, the Heraulte was highly feasted, and had a cuppe and a hundred golden gyldens, to hym deliuered for a rewarde, and so returned to Calais.

Hall. Henry VI. The fourteenth Yere.

Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage:
Therefore make present satisfaction
Or Ile attach you by this officer.

Shakspeare. Comedy of Errors, fol. 92.

Bob. A Fleming, by heaven. Ile buy them for a guilder a piece, an' I would have a thousand of them.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act iii. sc. 1.

The salary of a Burgomaster of Amsterdam is but five hundred guilders a year, though there are offices worth five thousand in their disposal. Sir W. Temple. On the United Provinces, ch. ii.

The adjacent shores are formed into districts, and farmed out to companies of fishermen, some of which are rented for six thousand guilders, or near three hundred pounds per annum.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Sturgeon.

GUILDER.
—
GUILDFORD

GUILDFORD, as Gale thinks quasi Gavelford, a little heap of sand forming an Island which divides the river,—a Borough and the County-Town of Surrey, is pleasantly situated on the side of a chalk hill on the Eastern bank of the river Wey, which is navigable for barges beyond its bridge. The Town consists, for the most part, of a single good street, nearly half a mile in length, and is well built and clean. It is a Corporation of such antiquity as to claim by prescription, and has returned two Members to Parliament since 23 Edward I. The Assizes for the County are held in this Town, Croydon, and Kingston by turns; but the election for Knights of the Shire always takes place at Guildford. As early as the reign of Alfred it was a Royal demesne, and is mentioned as such in Domesday Book, and it is believed that the ancient Town was then situated on the Western bank of the river. The Royalty was imparked by Henry II., who frequently kept his Court there, and it was the occasional residence of many subsequent Kings, till Charles I. granted it to Murray, Earl of Annandale, with permission to dispark it. From that nobleman's family it passed, in the beginning of the last century, to the family of Onslow. The Castle is situated about 300 yards Southward from the High Street, and the Keep still remains, forming a quadrangle 47 feet by 45½, and 70 in height. The walls are of very solid construction, being 10 feet in thickness, on a foundation for the first 8 or 9 feet of chalk. It is roofless, but the divisions of several apartments may be traced in the shell. The remains of the outer gate of the Castle may be seen on the West side of the Keep, and the walls at present can be traced over above five acres, although they were once probably of a much larger extent. In some cellars belonging to an Inn (the Angel) in the High Street, and those of a private house opposite, are vaults corresponding in style and dimensions with those within the known precincts of the Castle, and which, therefore, probably belonged to them. Both the date and founder are unknown; but King, in his Munimenta, has attributed it to the Heptarchy. One of the enormities committed by Godwin, Earl of Kent, is stated by Simeon of Durham to have occurred at Guildford, and probably in this Castle. In the year 1036, in the reign of Harold, he seized Alfred and Edward, sons of Ethelred, the former King of England, who had landed from Normandy on a visit to their mother at Winchester. Alfred was summoned to London under the false pretence of attending the King, and Godwin on the way seized him, and threw him into close confinement. Sociorum vero illius quosdam disturbavit, quosdam catenavit, et postea cecavit, nonnullos, cute capitis abstractâ, cruciavit, et manibus ac pedibus amputatis multavit; multos etiam vendere jussit, et mortibus variis ac miserabilibus apud Gildfordum sexcentos viros occidit. (Decem Script. 179.) The Castle is mentioned also in the Waverly Annals as one of those captured during the brief invasion of Louis the Dauphin of France, in the reign of Henry III. A. D. 1216. In the IIIrd Volume of the Antiquarian Repertory, (253.) is given a plate of some rude figures, plainly of very ancient date, scratched on the wall of the second story of this Castle, and attributed by tradition to some prisoner of rank confined in it.

GUILD-
FORD.

A Friary of Dominicans was founded here by Eleanor, Queen of Henry III., on the East bank of the river, a little to the North of the High Street. It was pulled down in James I.'s time, and a mansion was erected upon it either by or in the manner of Inigo Jones when the Earl of Annandale obtained his grant. Not many years since it was occupied as barracks. Guildford has three Churches. Trinity Church stands on the top of the hill on the North of the High Street. In consequence of some injudicious repairs of the old Church, the steeple fell in and destroyed the body in 1740, when it was rebuilt in its present form. Within it is a monument to George Abbot, a native of this Town, of low origin, but successively Dean of Winchester, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, of London, and in 1610 Archbishop of Canterbury. His latter days were embittered by his accidentally having occasioned the death of a Gamekeeper at Bramshill Park, the seat of Lord Zouch, whom he mortally wounded with an arrow aimed at a deer. His enemies endeavoured, in consequence, to suspend him from his Ecclesiastical functions; but a Commission appointed by the King decided in his favour. After 12 years of great self-mortification and deep regret for this unwitting homicide, he died in 1633, and was buried in this Church. His elder brother, Robert, was Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford and Bishop of Salisbury; his younger, Maurice, a Knight, a Director of the East India Company, Lord Mayor and one of the Representatives for the City of London. A particular account of the Archbishop may be found in the 1st Book of Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion. In this Church is also a Cenotaph to Mr. Speaker Onslow, who filled the Chair of the House of Commons during 33 years, and died in 1768. The Rectory of Trinity Church is united with the adjoining Rectory of St. Mary's, a Church of great antiquity on the declivity of the hill on the South of the High Street. It consists of a nave with two aisles, and a chancel with a Chapel on each side of it, not extending the whole length of the chancel, and circular at their Eastern end; a particularity attributed by Stukely to Churches of the earliest Saxon, if not of the latest Roman time. St. Nicholas's Church stands on the West of the Wey; a Chapel, belonging to the Manor of Losely, adjoins the South aisle. The Church is of ancient date, and contains some brasses of the XIIIth century. On the North of the High Street, nearly opposite to Trinity Church, is an Hospital, founded and endowed in 1619 by the above-named Archbishop Abbot, for the maintenance of a Master, 12 Brethren, and eight Sisters. It was incorporated by James I. In a room in one of the turrets of this Hospital the Duke of Monmouth was confined while being carried to London after his defeat and capture. The windows of the dining-room are blazoned with scrolls containing a pun allusive to the Founder, which modern taste would consider irreverent. Clamamus Abba Pater. Guildford has also a Free Grammar School, a Town Hall, and a Gaol. About two miles Eastward from the Town is a Race-course. Lothesly House is two miles South-West, Clandor House (the seat of Earl Onslow) three miles from Guildford. Population, in 1821, 3357. Distant from London 30 miles South-West. The Town gives the title of Earl to the North family.

Aubrey, Nat. Hist. and Antiq. of Surry, 111; Description of the Hospital, &c. 1801; History of Guildford, 8vo. 1801.

GUILE, v.
GUILE, n.
GUI'LED, GUI'LEFUL, GUI'LEFULLY, GUI'LELESS, GUI'LERY, GUILT, GUI'LTLESS, GUI'LTLESSNESS, GUI'LTY, GUI'LTILY, GUI'LTINESS, GUILE-MAN, GUILT-SICK,
GUI'LTY-LIKE.

A. S. wiglian. "Hariolari, augurari, divinare, conjecturare, to conjecture, to gesse, to divine, item fascinare, incantare, præstringere, to bewitch, to enchant, to juggle, to use sorcery, to cast a mist before. Belgis, wiechelen, wiichelen." Somner. From wiglian we have to wile; the usual prefix ge forms ge-wiglian, whence we have guile. "In the A. S. wiglian, be-wiglian, ge-wiglian, means to conjure, to divine, and, consequently, to practise cheat, imposture, and enchantment." Tooke.

GUILE.

To guile, to cheat, to impose upon, to deceive, to delude; to practise delusion, give a false colour or appearance to.

"Guilt is ge-wig-led, guiled, guil'd, guilt; the past part. of ge-wiglian: and to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been guiled, or, as we now say, be-guiled; as wicked means witched or be-witched. To pronounce guilt is to pronounce wicked." Guilt, in our legal proceedings, is ascribed to the instigation of the Devil. A guilty man, then, is

One who has been beguiled—to do wrong, to do evil, commit injustice or iniquity, wickedness; a crime, a sin: one who has done so; without reference to the guile or deception.

So that at Quedesle, withoute the town to mile,
He let some ni an hundred, & ther he hente an gile.

R. Gloucester, p. 538.

And slou þe byssop and alle ys men, þat gult nadde non.

Id. p. 273.

Awey! sely gultelese men, lute adde hii mys do.

Id. p. 327.

Holdeþ him gulty of þe dede, & lateþ hem also
Al her lyf, as wyckemen, in strong prison be ydo.

Id. p. 336.

In alle manere cause he sought þe righte in skille,
To gile no to fraude wild he neuer tille.

R. Brunne, p. 128.

For it was a gilerij, þou knew not þer tresoun.

Id. p. 215.

With wrong alle it cam, with gile salle gyuen be,
Dilexit Sir Adam gilerie & falste

Id. p. 247.

For neuer mot þou fynde Inglis kýng giloure.

Id. p. 117.

& if a clerke men founde in his lond þat reft, þorgh slaughter or wounde, or þorgh oþer theft,
Men suld schewe his guille in þe courte of lay,
& þer be saued or splite, bot Thomas seid him nay.

Id. p. 129.

Which Edburge sturied her lorde a yenst giltlese men, notwithstanding that him self was meoke and benýnge.

Id. p. 12, note.

& who þat was giltij þorgh þe foresters sawe
Mercied was fulle hi.

Id. p. 112.

And seide to here a chartre
That gyle hath gyve to falsnesse.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 27.

þe olde lawe techeth
þat gylours beþ bý gylid. and in here gyle falle.

Id. Ib. p. 359.

gut ich for gyue þe þis gult.

Id. Ib. p. 45.

Ich gulty in gost to god ich me shryve.

Id. Ib. p. 96.

GUILLE

Jhesus sigh Nathanael comynge to him, and seide to him, lo verili a man of Israel, in whom is no gile.
Wiclif. Jon, ch. i.

Jesus saw Nathanaell comminge to hym, and sayde of him, Beholde a ryght Israelyte, in whom is no gyle.
Bible, Anno 1551.

The throte of hem is an open sepulchre, with her tungis thei diden gilefulli the venym of snakis is undir her lippis.
Wiclif. Romaynes, ch. iii.

In the laste tymes there schulen come gilours wandringe aftir hir owne desires, not in pitee.
Id. Judas, ch. ii.

And God was in Crist recounceilinge to him the world, not rettyng to hem her giltis, and puttide in us the word of recounceilyng.
Id. 2 Corinthians, ch. v.

And Pylate seyng that he profytide nothing, but that the more noyse was maad toke water and waschide his hondis bfore the puple & seide I am giltles of the blood of this rightful man, by see you.
Id. Matthew, ch. xxvii.

What semith to you? and thei answerden and seiden he is gilty of deth.
Id. Ib. ch. xxvi.

For what worde that hem pricketh or biteth
In that worde none of hem deliteth
All were it Gospell the Euangile
That would reproue hem of her gile.
Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 144.

A gilour shal hirself begiled bee.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4319.

Her speech right guilefull is full oft, wherfore without good assay, it is not worth on many on you to trust.
Id. The Testament of Loue, fol. 297.

Penance, with certain circumstances, is veray repentance of man, that holdeth himself in sorwe and other peine for his giltles.
Id. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 282.

Thou merciful mayde,
Mary I mene, doughter to seint Anne,
Beforn whose child angels singen Osanne,
If I be giltles of this felonie,
My socour be, or elles shal I die.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5063.

Sir priest, in shrift I tel it the
That he to whom that I am shriuen
Hath me assoiled, and me yeuen
Penaunce sothely for my sin,
Which that I found me gilty in.
Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 146.

For often he that will begile
Is guiled with the same guile,
And thus the guiler is beguiled.
Gower. Conf. Am. book vi. fol. 135.

She longeth sore after the daie
That she hir sweuen tell maie
To this gylour in priuitee,
Whiche knew it also well as she.
Id. Ib. book vi. fol. 138.

That him was leuer for to chese
His oune bodie for to lese,
Than see so great a mourdre wrought
Upon the bloud, whiche gilteth nought.
Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 46.

She taketh vpon her self the gille,
And is all redie to the peine,
Whiche any man hir wolde ordeine.
Id. Ib. book iv. fol. 83.

Nowe asketh forther of my life,
For herof am I not giltife.
Id. Ib. book i. fol. 22.

And turne myne eyes that they no more beholde,
Such guylefull markes as seeme more than they be.
Gascoigne. Hearbes. Woodmanship.

And in the mean time, contrary to the mind of God, ye deale guilefully w^e your neighbour, & relieue not the nedie, but enuie & grutch at the, which haue more wealth then youreselues, & the weake ye oppresse.
Udall. Luke, ch. xi.

If geniall brands and bed me lothed not,
To this one gilt perchaunce yet might I yeld.
Surrey. Virgil. Aeneis, book iv.

Or els are they in ieopardy to perishe at euery pit, and the eye gillie of their destruction for withdrawing her office from them.
Frith. Workes, fol. 86. A Mirrour to know thyself.

But swearing, lying, manslaughter, thefte, and advoutrye haue gotten the ouerhande, and one bloude gyltnesse foloweth another.
Bible, Anno 1551. Oseas, ch. iv.

Wyll is our justice well you wot,
Appointed to discusse our lawes:
If you wyll giltlesse seem to goe,
God and your countrey quitte you so.
Gascoigne. Flowers. The Arraignment of a Louer.

The raging crueltie of them, which hated the name of Christe, hathe giltlesly driuen them out of the places where their fathers dwelt before them.
Udall. 1 Peter, ch. i.

In vaine he feares that which he cannot shonne:
For, who wotes not, that woman's subtilties
Can guilen Argus, when she list mis-donne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 9.

Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea.
Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice, fol. 174.

This gracelesse man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmayd of my lady deare,
Who, glad t' embosome his affection vile,
Did all she might more pleasing to appeare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 4.

That shortly shee Malbecco has forgot,
And eke Sir Paridell all were he deare;
Who from her went to seeke another lot,
And now (by fortune) was arriued heere,
Where those two guilers with Malbecco were.
Id. Ib. book iii. can. 10.

So cunningly she wrought her crafts assay,
That both her lady, and her selfe withall,
And eke the knight at once she did betray:
But most the knight, whom she with guilefull call
Did cast for to allure, into her trap to fall.
Id. Ib. book v. can. 5.

O, who may not with gifts and words be tempted!
Sith which she bath me ever since abhord,
And to my foe hath guilefully consented:
Ay me, that ever guyle in women was invented!
Id. Ib. can. 11.

Thus wretchedly (lo!) this guile-man dyde,
And Jonathas with jewels three,
No longer there thought to abide,
But home to the empresse his mother hasteth he.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, eclogue i

Yet that his guilt the greater may appeare,
And more my gracious mercy by this wize,
I will awhile with his first folly beare,
Till thou have tride againe, and tempted him more neare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 5.

Whose manly hands imbrued in guilty blood
Had never beene, ne ever by his might
Had throwne to ground the unregarded right.
Id. Ib. book i. can. 7.

The satire should be like the porcupine,
That shoots sharp quils out in each angry line,
And wounds the blushing cheek, and fiery eye,
Of him that hears, and readeth guiltily.
Hall. Satire 3. book v

The serpent teaches us where to strike him, by his so warily and guiltily defending his head.
Taylor. On Original Sin, fol. 910.

The cause whereof was secret feare, which tooke heart and courage from them, and the cause of their feare, an inward guiltynesse that they all had offered God such apparant wrongs as were not pardonable.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book v. sec. 76

GUILLE

But all the floore (too filthy to be told)
With blood of guiltlesse babes, and innocents trew,
Which there were slaine, as sheepe out of the fold, Defiled was.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 8.

She, not with an unshaken magnanimity, wherewith Pyrocles weighed, and despised death, but, with an innocent guiltlessness, not knowing why she should fear to deliver her unstained soul to God.

Sidney. Arcadia, book iv.

DOCT. Then we live indeed,
When we can goe to rest without alarm
Given every minute to a guilt-sick conscience
To keep us waking, and rise in the morning
Secure in being innocent.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Custom of the Countrey, act iv.

IAGO. Cassio, my lord? No sure, I cannot thinke it
That he would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing your comming.

Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 323.

Britain, by thee we fell, ungrateful isle!
Not by thy valour, but superior guile.

Swift. On the drying up of St. Patrick's Well.

Both hosts perceiv'd her, and thro' horse and man
The dewy sweat of sudden horror ran:
Though her stern face relax'd into a smile,
Halys she shows, to carry on the guile.

Lewis. Thebaid of Statius, book ix.

But sure it is, was ne'er a subtler band
Than these same guileful angel-seeming sprights,
Who thus in dreams, voluptuous, soft, and bland,
Pour'd all th' Arabian heaven upon her nights,
And bless'd them oft besides with more refin'd delights.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, can. 1.

——— And the plain ox,
That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
In what has he offended?

Id. Spring.

They lov'd: but such their guileless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth.

Id. Summer.

Is some brave friend, who, men but little known,
Deems ev'ry heart as honest as his own,
And, free himself, in others fears no guile,
To be ensnar'd and ruin'd with a smile?

Churchill. The Candidate.

But he whose cheeks with youth immortal shone,
The God whose wondrous birth two mothers own,
Whose rage had still the wandering fleet annoy'd,
Now in the town his guileful rage employ'd.

Mickle. The Lusiad, book ii.

First, never in any case to act contrary to the perswasion and conviction of our conscience. For that certainly is a great sin, and that which properly offends the conscience and renders us guilty; guilt being nothing else but trouble arising in our minds, from a consciousness of having done contrary to what we are verily perswaded was our duty: and though perhaps this perswasion is not always well grounded, yet the guilt is the same so long as the perswasion continues; because every man's conscience is a kind of God to him, and accuseth or absolves him according to the present perswasion of it.

Tillotson. Sermon 38.

Of those let him the guilty roll commence,
Who has betray'd a master and a prince.

Dryden. Suum Cuique.

For my part, when I consider the apostle's command, "Be ye angry, and sin not," I cannot but apprehend, that when our passions swell into excess, they are indeed contaminated by the guiltiness of their productions, but confer not on them a meritoriousness, which themselves want.

Boyle. Against Customary Swearing.

Arguments against Christianity, be they serious or ludicrous, are indifferently (not always in the same degree, or with the same guiltiness) attempts to subvert Christianity, and are consequently to be punished, according to the degree of their malignity, one as well as the other.

Waterland. Defence of the Bishop of St. David's.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfal in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

An involuntary act, as it has no claim to merit, so neither can it induce any guilt: the concurrence of the will, when it has its choice either to do or to avoid the fact in question, being the only thing that renders human actions either praiseworthy or culpable.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. ii.

They invented a considerable number of methods of purgation or trial, to preserve innocence from the danger of false witnesses, and in consequence of a notion that God would always interpose miraculously to vindicate the guiltless.

Id. Ib. ch. xxvii.

One cannot but be astonished at the folly and impiety of pronouncing a man guilty, unless he was cleared by a miracle; and of expecting that all the powers of Nature should be suspended, by an immediate interposition of Providence to save the innocent, whenever it was presumptuously required.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. ii.

GUILLOTINE, an instrument for the infliction of capital punishment, proposed to the National Assembly of France by a physician of Lyons, from whom it received its name. M. Guillotine was rewarded with a donation of 2000 livres, and his project was adopted by a decree of the 20th of March, 1792. It appears to be very similar in construction to the Maiden formerly used at Halifax, in Yorkshire. Evelyn (Memoirs, vol. i. p.
170) states that he saw an instrument of destruction in use at Naples, which he calls "a frame, like ours at Halifax." Guillotine, as a verb, is of common use, in spoken language especially.

GUI'NEA,

GUI'NEA-DROPPER,

GUI'NEA-HEN,

GUI'NEA-PIG.

introduced from Guinea.

Guinea-pig. The Cavia Cobaya in Zoology.

Th' Ionian god-wit, nor the Ginny-hen
Could not goe downe my belly then
More sweet than olives, that newgather'd be
From fattest branches of the tree.

Ben Jonson. The Vnder-wood. The Praises of a Countrey Life.

And he now swore, upon his own knowledge, that both Coleman and Wakeman were in the plot; that Coleman had given eighty guineas to four ruffians, that went to Windsor last summer, to stab the king

Burnet. Own Times. Anno 1678.

Who can the various city frauds recite,
With all the petty rapines of the night?
Who now the guinea-dropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards?

Gay. Trivia, book iii.

The natives of those islands call (them) Gallena Pintada, or the painted hen; but in Jamaica, where I have seen also those birds in the dry Savannahs and woods, (for they love to run about in such places,) they are called Guinea hens.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1699.

These were driven off at last by a lap-dog, who was succeeded by a Guinea pig, a squirrel, and a monkey.

Guardian. No. 106.

In the market, however, one-and-twenty shillings of this degraded silver coin are still considered as worth a guinea of this excellent gold coin.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. v.

The English GUINEA was first coined in 1663 from the gold imported by the new Company established to trade with the Country, which gave rise to its name.
(Anderson, Hist. of Commerce, ii. 526.) Fifty thousand were coined at the first issue. The Royal African Company had the privilege of coining; and such money as they issued bore an elephant, (Stow, Survey of London, book v. p. 269, Ed. 1720,) some with a castle and some without, and this continued till the reign of George I. The pieces are rare. (Snelly, View of the

GUINEA.

Gold Coin, 29.) It was at first valued at 20s., but by tacit consent it never went for less than 21s.; in 1696 it rose to 30s.; but, in the year 1717, in consequence of the scarcity of silver, it was rated at 21s. 6d. Sir Isaac Newton, on being consulted by the Lords of the Treasury, advised its reduction to 21s. This was done by an Address of the Commons to the Crown, and such has continued to be its standard value ever since, although so late as the year 1810, Guineas were clandestinely transmitted to France at a price of 27s. each. In the reign of George I., and afterwards in 1761, Quarter Guineas, or gold pieces at 5s. 3d., were coined; but, from the smallness of their size, they were found inconvenient, and discontinued after a few years. Charles II. also issued Half Guineas, Double Guineas, and Five Guinea pieces, which, though the last two are not in common circulation, have been struck in every reign since. (Pinkerton, Essay on Medals, sect. 19.)

GUINEA.

GUINEA.

Name and extent.

GUINEA, (Giné,) a name borrowed, as De Barros* supposes with a great appearance of truth, from Jenná, or Jenní, on the Niger, was given by the Portuguese in the 15th Century to the newly discovered Countries on the Western Coast of Africa; and, being added to the other titles of their King, was soon known throughout Europe as the name of that wealthy tract where gold was found in the greatest abundance. The term was subsequently restricted to the Maritime Countries lying between Cape Mount (Cabo Monte) and the River Gaboon (Rio de Gabon.) By some writers, the little Rio da Lagóa, separating the Slave Coast from Benin, or the Rio da Volta, at the Eastern extremity of the Gold Coast, is made the boundary of Guinea. Others again comprehend under that name all the Countries discovered by the Portuguese on the Western coast of Africa; whence they speak of North, Middle, and South Guinea. In its present acceptation it is usually confined to the coast between Cape Mount and the Volta; the Countries therefore contained within those limits, are the tracts which will be here described.

Cape Mount.

Cape Mount, (from the Portuguese name Cabo de Monte,) in 7° 40' North, is called Wakh-kingo by the natives, and is described by Wadström as a lovely spot, abundantly supplied with springs and brooks, and presenting all the luxuriance of vegetation which a fertile and well watered soil never fails to produce under a tropical sun. At a distance it has the appearance of an island, being an insulated mountain, which forms a Peninsula, stretching from East South-East to West North-West, and has two fine bays on its Western side. About 60 geographical miles further South, in 6° 18' 16" North, and 10° 34' 13" West, is Cape Mesurado, (Moderate Cape,) presenting a perpendicular face of some height to the sea, and a fruitful declivity towards the interior. At its foot, a river, said to come from a great distance in the interior, flows into the sea. The natives of this part of the coast are described as poor, but brave, honest, and industrious. Ponta das Baxás, (Bashá Point,) near the Rio Sestos, in 5° 40' North, is the only headland between Mesurado and Cape Palmas, (Cabo das Palmas,) the Southernmost point in this part of the coast.

In the latter half of the XVIIth century this coast was visited by a Dutch navigator, named Samuel Blomert; from whose papers, communicated to him by the celebrated Isaac Vossius, that laborious compiler, Dapper extracted the most complete account of the Country between Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast yet published. It supplied materials to Barbot and most of Dapper's successors, and is still applicable to the present state of the Country; for the habits of the natives are little altered, and the Kroomen, so well known at Sierra Leone, are manifestly the Karous of Dapper, (Afrika, ii. 14.) who were then, as now, one of the most active and powerful Tribes on that shore. The tract between Cabo de Monte and the River Maváhh, or Mafahh, was called Vaĩ or Veĩ berkoma, (i. e. the Land of Vaĩ or Veĩ;) what lies between that cape, which is about a mile South-West of the Maváhh, and the Magwibba, or Rio Novo, (New River,) was called Dauwala; and from the Magwibba to the Rio de San Paulo was Kwoyà, or Koyà-berkoma, (the land of Koyà.) Beyond the latter river was Gebba, inhabited by the Gebba-monù, or monaù, i. e. the people of Gebba. (Dapper, ii. 56.) This district extended as far as Cabo Mesurado, and about 48 miles East of Cape Mount. About six or eight miles West of the former, the River of St. Paul runs into the sea; it is a small and shallow stream navigable only by boats.* Thirty-six or 40 miles to the East of Cape Mesurado is the Rio Junco, (Rush River,) called also Rio da Ponta, (Point River,) which has only eight feet of water at its mouth, and cannot easily be navigated in large boats, (met sloepen,) on account of the strong surf (berning.) To the East of Cape Mesurado the land, though little elevated, is higher than to the West, and is covered with brushwood: it becomes

* The whole passage is so curious, that we venture to transcribe it. After having mentioned Tungubutú, (Tombuktú,) "three leagues distant from the River Canagá," (the Senegal, long supposed to be one of the arms of the Niger,) as the principal City on that river, and the great mart for gold from the Province of Mandinga, De Barros (Asia I. iii. 8. tom. i. p. 220) adds, E assi concorriam à outra Cidade, que está nas correntes deste rio chamada Genná, a qual em outro tempo era mais celebre que Tungubutu; e ou que ella desse nome ao Reyno, ou que o Reyno o desse a ella, daqui se chama acerca de nós toda aquella região de Canagá por diante Guiné, posto que entre os Negros huns lhe chamam Genná, outros Janny, e outros Genny. E como está mais occidental que Tungubutu, geralmente concorriam a ella os povos, que lhe são mais vizinhos: assi com os Caragolees, Fullos, Jalofos, Azaneges, Brabaxys, Tigurarys, Luddayas, da mão dos quaes per via do Castello de Arguim, e de toda aquella costa vinha o ouro a nossas mãos, e outros povos do interior de Mandinga acudiam ao resgate de Cantor, a que vam os nossos navios per o Rio Gambea. "The (traders) resorted also to another City on the course of this River, which was called Jenná, and was, in former times, more frequented than Tombuktú; and whether it gave its name to the Kingdom, or the Kingdom gave its name to it, from thence all that country, from the Senegal forwards, is called by us Guinea, (Guiné,) although some among the Negroes call it Jenná, some Januí, and others Jenní. And, as it is more to the West than Tombuktú, the nearest nations generally resort thither: as, for example, the Sarahwoles, (Serrawoolies,) Fúlas, Jalofs, Sanhájahs, Berábish, Tigoráris, and Luddayàs, through whose hands gold came to us by the way of the castle of Arguim, and from all that coast: and other nations from the interior of Mandinga repaired to the mart of Cantór, to which our ships go, by the River Gambea."

* Yet it appears under the name of "Mesurado River" in some of our modern maps, as one of the largest streams in that part of Africa.

GUINEA. hilly and is well wooded, at a small distance from the sea, especially on the South-East side of the Rio Junco. The Rio de San João runs into the sea about 24 miles beyond the Junco, near a low point, marked by some high trees. Half way between the Junco and Sestos is a village, called Tabo-kané, and 12 miles beyond the Rio Junco is Tabo-da-grù, called Petit Dieppe by the French, on a small stream bearing the same name.

The Rio Sestos, 24 miles to the South-East of Petit Dieppe, and 36 from the Junco, is the boundary of the Grain Coast, which extends eight miles beyond Cabo das Palmas, and derives its name from a kind of spice, called Malaguetta pepper, or Granum Paradisi. It is the seed of a plant of the scitamineous tribe, perhaps the Amomum Granum Paradisi, though the plant producing this spice does not appear to have been yet described. Some writers (Prevost, Hist. Gén. des Voyages, v. 9. 2.) have doubted whether the coast really derives its name from this seed; but a passage in De Barros seems to remove all hesitation on the subject. "Conquests and discoveries," he says, (I. ii. 2. tom. i. p. 145,) "were continually made by the Infante Don Henry; as, for example, that of the coast from whence the first malagueta came, of which, before this discovery, there had been some in Italy brought from those parts of Guinea (Guiné) by the Moors, who used to cross the great region of Mandinga and the Deserts of Libya, which they call Çahará, (Ssahrà,) and carry it to a port on the Mediterranean Sea, called by them Mundi Barca, and corruptly Monte da Barca. And the Italians, not knowing the place of its birth, as it is so precious a spice, called it Grana Paradisi, which is the name it bears among them."* Malaguetta pepper seems also to have been confounded by the old writers with the Piper Æthiopicum of the Pharmacopœias, which is the Hhabbez-zelem, or Negro-pepper, (fulful-el-sudán), of the Arabs, and the Uvaria Aromatica of Lamark. Between Petit Dieppe and the Rio Sestos the shore is full of rocks and shoals, but to the West well wooded; and the stream of that river is so powerful as to render it difficult to row into it with a small boat. The King's village, where the lighters lie at anchor to trade, is about 12 miles up the river; and six miles to the East of it is the village of Little Sestos, near a rock standing out of the water. Ponta das Baxas, (Bashá Point,) from which a small reef runs out into the sea, is 20 miles from the River Sestos. Near the mouth of the Zanwaïn, 12 miles further, there is a village with some very high trees. Bofú, five miles from Zanwaïn, Little Setra, two miles East from Bofú, Tessa 12 miles from Setra, and Bottauwa, are all on the ascent of a high land, terminating in a cliff near the sea, called Cabo Sinó by the Portuguese, with a small river so named, five miles South of Bottauwa; and 16 miles to the East of Sino is Sauwerobú, 18 miles to the West of Krau, or Krú, near a rocky point. The coast here runs to the East South-East, and South-East by East, and is flat and shoaly. Sixteen miles from Krau is Wappú, or Wabbo, where fresh water can be got. It is covered by an island, near which there is the largest rock on all the Grain Coast, but it is not very high above water. Wappú is followed by Drowin, Great Setra, called Paris by the French, 12 miles from which is Goyawu and Garwaï, on the side of Cape Palmas. There are several small streams near these places, especially one close to the cape, where a ship can easily complete her water. That headland which lies in 4° 26' North is of a considerable height, and distinguished by three round eminences, and a grove of palms on its outermost point. Behind it there is a convenient roadstead; and at Gruwa, eight miles to the East of it, the Grain coast terminates. The whole of it is full of shoals, and of dangerous navigation. Clear and calm weather, with Westerly winds, prevails in February, March, and April. (Sprokkel, Lente, en Gras-maand.) For one half of May, (Bloei-maand), and sometimes in the beginning of that month, South and South-Easterly winds spring up, accompanied by the severest travados (tornadoes) of wind, thunder, lightning, and heavy rain. This weather continues through the whole summer and autumn, viz. in June, July, August, September, October, November, December, to the end of January, (en Zomer, Hooi, Oogst, Herfst, Wyn, Slagt, en Winter-maanden tot in 'tlaatst of uitgaan van Louwmaand.) The worst weather is when the sun is in the zenith, and the sky is more settled in the latter part of the good season than at the beginning, but no certain rule can be laid down. The natives have the reputation of being very treacherous, great thieves, and, in some places, cannibals. The staple commodity is Malaguetta pepper, called Weizinzag at Sestos, and emanegêta, whence the Malagueta of the Portuguese, at Cape Palmas. (Barbot, p. 122.) Grey rice, ivory, and Granum Paradisi are the principal articles of trade; and the chief marts for the latter were Krau, Grauwaï, Wappú, Great Setra, and Goyawu. The trade in the old grain continued from the middle of November to the beginning of March, but the new was first gathered in January. The common rate in Blomert's time was from 150 to 200 pounds of grain for one bar of iron, (staaf-yzer), two or three and thirty of which may weigh a dozen pounds. The rivers of St. Paul, Junco, and St. John were much frequented for red-wood and teeth (ivory) by the English: the other places by the French and Dutch. The natives on their banks seemed to be all subject to one King, named Tabo Saïl, (Tabo Seyle,) and differed little in their form of worship from those near Cape Mount, but made more offerings to the Devil, prayed to the dead to make intercession for them, and celebrated the new moon with sports and dances.

From Gruwa, near Cape Palmas, to Cape Lohú or Tooth Coast Lahú, the Ivory or Tooth Coast, also called the Red Land, from some red rocks near it, extends for about 200 miles. About 12 miles from the cape is the river Kavalli, with a high cliff on its East side; about 80 miles further is Tabó-duno, a low point running obliquely into the sea; 10 or 12 miles to the East of which a line of cliffs rising abruptly from the sea, commences, near which is the village of Tabó or Tabú, and a roadstead with anchorage in 14 fathoms. Petiero, before which there is a rock in the sea, is about four miles Eastward; and 10 or 11 miles beyond it is Tahú, 12 miles West of Berbi, 6 or 7 miles beyond which is the Rio de Sant'André, the mouth of which is in 5° 2' North,

GUINEA.
Wappen, or Wappou.

Droywn, or Drou.
Great Sesters.
Goïau.
Garraway,
Groai, or Grouway
Cape
Palmas.
Grova.

Seasons.

National character

Trade.

Religion.

* Sempre houve conquistas e descubrimentos, assi como da costa donde veio a primeira Malagueta, que se fez por o Infante D. Henrique, da qual alguma que em Italia se havia, antes deste descubrimento, era pos mãos dos Mouros destas partes de Guiné, que atravessavam a grande região de Mandinga, e os desertos da Libya, a que elles chamam Çahara, té aportarem em o mar Mediterraneo em hum porto por elles chamado Mundi barca, e corruptamente Monte da Barca. E de lhe os Italianos nao saberem o lugar de seu nascimento, por ser especiaria tao preciosa, lhe chamáram Grana Paradisi, que he nome, que tem entrelles. Da Asia, l. ii. 2.

GUINEA. and has a fathom and a half, or 11 feet of water, at half-flood. On a bight just beyond it are the villages Dromera. Tabattera and Domera. Beyond the Red Cliffs is CapeLahou. Cape Lahú, the Eastern extremity of the Tooth Coast.

The Western end of the Adú or Kwakwa Coast, which lies between Cape Lahú and Asiné, is flat and covered with wood; Kutrú, or Katrú, in a bare ravine 6 miles Westward, is the first village. Nearly 20 miles beyond the cape is the village of Jakk Lahú, and Jakk in Jack Lahou. Jakko is 20 miles from the other; 24 miles beyond Jaque Jaque. which is a place near the shore called by sailors the Bottomless Pit, (de put zonder grond;) and 12 miles, or thereabouts, beyond it, a small river, from the East, runs into the sea. Korbi Lahú, where there is very deep water near the shore, is about 64 miles East of the cape, and 52 miles West of Assin, or Assinée, at Assinee. which place the Gold Coast begins.

On comparing the modern maps of Africa with that of D'Anville, many discrepancies appear, some of which are difficult to reconcile. This has been, probably, occasioned by undue reliance on the authority of the masters of trading vessels, who seldom have leisure, and are frequently ill qualified, to ascertain with accuracy the Geography of the coasts they visit. The principal differences are these: the Mavah (Mavali by error of the engraver) is called Cape Mount River; St. Paul's River is named Mesurada, while the Mesurado River of the American Colonists is a small stream joining it, near its mouth; Pequeno and Grande Basá, with rivers adjoining, occur between the Junco and Sestos; Barbára comes just above Setra Krú; Rio de San Pedro, near Tabú, is not found in D'Anville; and Druwin, near St. Andrew's River, is omitted in the English maps. Beyond that river, the Rio Fresco (Cool River) and Rio Negro (Black River) occur, while D'Anville has only the Rio de Lagos, (Lake River;) and, according to him, the Costa and Assinée of the English map are merely arms of the Soeïro da Costa; to the West of which Pequeno and Grande Bassam and Gamú were not known to him. These differences are sufficient to show how imperfectly that great Geographer was informed with regard to this coast, and how much yet remains to be explored, even on the outline of this part of Africa.

The Country near Cape Mount was anciently inhabited by the Vaï, or Faï, and Pwi Tribes, who were nearly rooted out by the Karús or Karaus, and Folgias or Folhias.* (Fúlas?) The latter having suffered very greatly from the persevering hostility of the former, consulted a renowned conjuror named Yakémo, who advised them to throw boiled and scaly fishes into a brook held sacred by the Karús, who never eat fish which have scales. The pollution of the sacred brook, as the soothsayer foretold, set the Karús by the ears together, and produced such a schism among them, that the Folhias ventured to attack, and succeeded in subduing them; so that Floni-kerri, son of their Chief Sokwalla, submitted, with the remainder of his people, to the victors. Flansír, King of the Folhia, also married Mawalla, Floni-kerri's sister; and, having made his brother-in-law commander of his army, sent against the Kwáb nation on the Rio Sestos, whom he speedily vanquished. In the mean time Mendimo, King of Manú, to whom the Folhias were subjected, died; and Manimassah, or Manimassakh, brother of the deceased, being suspected of having poisoned him, was obliged to clear himself by drinking Kwoni water, i. e. an infusion of Kwoni bark. Having drunk the water without injury, and thus cleared himself, yet finding that he was still suspected, he withdrew to the Galas, who lived a little to the North of the Folhias, and was chosen their Chief; but they soon turned refractory; he therefore obtained assistance from his brother-in-law Flansír, and, by the aid of his General Floni-kerri, reduced them to obedience. Soon afterwards Flansír gave the Vaï-monú, or land of the Vaï, near Cape Mount, as a feudal territory to the victorious General. The Vaï, or Veï, were not reduced without difficulty; and it was at Kwolu, or Kolu, or the Plizókh, near Gúri-killi, a little to the East of Tombi, that Floni-kerri made a treaty with them, on their submission. Fowls were killed, the parties sprinkled with their blood, their flesh eaten, and their bones kept as a memorial of the covenant. After the death of Floni-kerri, with whom six Gala prisoners were buried at his strong hold Kwolu, his brother and successor Zillimangwa subdued the Pwis and Kwoyás, or Koyás, on the Magwibba, or Rio Novo, and the Killigas, or Kwilligas, on the Makwalbari, or Rio das Galinhas, (Poultry River.) His son Flansír II. conquered Sierra Leone (Serra Lioa) and the rest of Bólamberra, and from one of his Chieftains the Rio da Palma received the name of Selbula, or Serbura, (Sherbro,) by which it is best known. Falmáhh, or Falmá of Dogó, a district of the Kingdom of Hondó, who had been made head man of Sierra Leone, conquered by his master, was also driven out by Flambúr, son of Flansír II., who was thence called Dogó Falmáhh Yondó Mó, i. e. the Expeller of Dogó Falmáhh. Flansír, the father of Flambúr, almost extirpated the Gebba-monú, near Cape Mesurado, in consequence of their rebelling against him, and took up his abode in Massákh, an island in a lake formed by the River Plizókh. Both father and son were living in the middle of the XVIIth century.

At that period there were four Negro Towns on the Rio Novo, or Magwibba, (called Cape Mount* in modern maps.) Yegwonga, six miles from its mouth on the East side. Fakhó, or Fashó, (i. e. I expect death,) near its mouth on the West side. Figgia, (Fihia, or Figja,) the residence of Figgi, a brother of Flambúr, six miles up on that side; four miles further on the West side was Kammagúreya, and a mile and a half further Yerbúf-faya, occupied by the remains of the Kwóyás, and one of the largest villages on the river. On the East side was a new village built by Flambúr, Yera-ballisa, belonging to the King's eldest son, and Davarauga nearer to the sea. On the shore, between the Magwibba and Maváhh, there were some villages inhabited by salt-makers. Tom-veï, or Tomveï, (Tombi in D'Anville's map,) was watered by the Plizógh, or Plizókh, and lay to the North-East of the cape. To the West of it was the Menókh, or Menosh, (Monos in D'Anville,) also called Rio Aguado, on a branch of which were Falyhammaya and Flomi-Seggayá.

The Tribes established near the sources of the Native Tribes.

* The orthography of Blomert is, probably, Dutch; but in some words he seems to have adopted the Portuguese system, according to which, the name of this people will be Folja; according to the Dutch, it must be Folghia or Folhia.

* On the relative position and nomenclature of these rivers, there is a great discordance in the best maps. D'Anville has reversed the order assigned to them by Dapper, on the authority of Blomert, who is followed by Barbot.

GUINEA. Maváhh, about 100 miles from the coast, were the Gala-vaí, a mixture of Galas and Vaí; the former having been driven from their Country by the Hondós, and taken refuge among the Vaí. Beyond a large forest, eight or ten days' journey across, were the Gala, subjects to the King of Manau, or Manú. To the North-East of the Gala-Veí, on the other side of an uninhabited tract, was Hondó, a district of which was called Dogó. Near the Hondó-monau, or people of Hondó, was a Tribe of Kwoyás, called the Kónda-Kwoyás, i. e. the High Kwoyás, whose tongue differed from that of the maritime Kwoyás, as the Low does from the High Dutch. The Kingdoms of Folghia (Folhia, or Folja) and Manau, which last exercised a sovereign authority over almost all the rest, lay on two small rivers, the Rio Junco and Arvoredó, (Grove River;) Folhia to the North-East of the former of those rivers. Both flow into the sea 40 miles South of Cape Mesurado; and they are the common boundary of these two States, as the River St. Paul* separates Vaí and Kwoyá from Gebba. The Karus, or Karaus, also lived near the same river, 40 or 50 miles inland, before they were conquered by the Folhias, and established as their vassals, in the territory of the Kwoyás. The Sovereign of Manau was supreme; and the Kwoyás were vassals of his vassals the Folhias. (Dapper, p. 42.) Hondó appears to have been a federal State, like those near the Senegal.

Character and customs. The Kwoyás were entirely devoted to husbandry, and very observant of the rights of the cultivator; but all the field-work was done by the women, while hunting, fishing, and building were the employments of the men. Rice and millet (Sorghum) were the common grain, and the King had a claim to a part of all the produce. The best of every thing was also set apart as an offering to Belli, their Divinity, and supposed to be consumed by the Yannánen, or departed Spirits. Their houses and villages were circular, surrounded by trees well fortified by a strong fence of Bangúla, i. e. branches of the Tombú Wine-tree, (Palm?) closely bound together by rattans, (rottingen.) The four gates, each at the end of a bastion, (koberé), were guarded by movable huts raised on posts 15 or 16 feet high; and sharp-shooters (wisse schieters) were stationed in them. There was an open place in the middle of the Town; cross streets from gate to gate, and a circular road out and inside of the enclosure. A place thus fortified was called Sansháhh; an open, unprotected village Fonfé-ráhh. Beef, and fish furnished with scales, were strictly forbidden food to the Karús, and carefully avoided by them. Incontinence, drunkenness, and revenge, their principal vices, were compensated by hospitality, kind-heartedness, and generosity; and, though addicted to thieving among strangers, they were strictly honest among themselves. By the term Sawáhh, or Sááhh, which signified "evil," they expressed "the Evil Spirit," or "melancholy," and "melancholy madness," a disease apparently common among them; persons afflicted with it were called Súáhh-monú, and considered as witches or sorcerers. Other kinds of conjurors, who did injury by the evil eye, were called Senearats, and their craft was termed Pilli, or Belli. A cobweb, stuck through the eye of a needle and blown towards the place where their enemy dwelt, was supposed to inflict on him a deadly injury, unless he were protected by some potent herbs. As woods and solitary places were believed to be the abode of the Evil Spirit, they were carefully avoided, unless they could be traversed in company.

Their wives were earned either by labour or gifts; if poor, the lover worked three or four years for the woman whom he was courting, building a house for her, tapping her wine-palms, or taking charge of her rice-fields; if rich, the girl was brought to his house by her friends, and all sorts of good eatables and drinkables set before her, which, if she had any regard for her character, she refused for the first three nights. The espousals were then considered as concluded, and 10 or 12 days afterwards she demanded her bridal present or dowry; viz. 1. Kola, or Toglaú, i. e. something at hand; 2. Yafing, something foreign and rare; and 3. Lefing, a vessel to keep them in: she then returned to her friends, and remained with them till the fruit of her intercourse with her lover appeared. It was taken care of by the father, if a boy; by the mother, if a girl; and, if the man were still disposed to marry her, he sent presents to her parents, who, if she consented, received them, and thus concluded the marriage. The first wife was called Makilmáhh, and was considered as superior to all the rest, for every man was allowed as many wives as he could maintain.

The naming of a boy was accompanied by a mock-fight, and an harangue addressed to the infant, laid on a shield in the market-place of the village, exhorting him to be valiant, industrious, and hospitable, not to run after other men's wives, nor let himself be deceived by night or darkness. A feast concluded the ceremony. Usages somewhat similar, but less ceremonious, accompanied the naming of a girl, and women were the officiators. As long as the women were suckling their children, that is about a year and a half, they abstained from all intercourse with their husbands. A funeral was attended by the whole family and neighbourhood, and every one made a speech in honour of the deceased in his own tongue; for besides the Kwoyá language they could all speak the Timni, (Timaní,) Hondó, Mendí, or Folhia, Gala, and Gebba. (Dapper, ii. 36.) As soon as these harangues were finished, the body of the deceased was washed, dressed in his best clothes, and set upright, supported by crutches, with a bow and arrows in his hand; and his nearest of kin made a sham-fight with their bows and arrows before him, and kneeling down with their backs turned towards him, bent their bows with all their might, exclaiming that thus would they have avenged his death had he died in battle, but that now they would do all they could for his honour by giving him a handsome burial. One of the attendants preceded the corpse to drive away the flies; and the friends and relations of the widow went into her hut, to comfort her, calling out Bkun é, bkun é, i. e. "Cease weeping, cease weeping." The corpse was carried on a sort of ladder, or bier, to the grave, in some Tombauroi, or deserted village, of which there were many to the South of the Plizókh. It was there buried beside its forefathers, in a hole about knee-deep. If the deceased were rich, many of his valuables were rolled up in a net, and buried with him. Earth was heaped up over the grave, and an ornamented mat spread upon it; an iron post having been erected over it with a cross-bar, on which the arms of the deceased were hung. On a woman's grave pots and pans were pinned down to the ground. Soon

Marriages

Naming children.

Funer. ls.

* Probably the river Mezurado of our modern maps; not the small stream so named in them.

GUINEA. after the time of interment, the grave was protected from the weather by a shed. One or two slaves, male and female, were strangled and buried with a great man, to supply him with a wife and servant in the other world; this custom, which was losing ground in Blomert's time, (Dapper, ii. 33, 34.) has not yet been abandoned. (Miss. Reg. 1822, p. 413.) The Isle of Masakh, in which Flansir resided, was the burial-place of the Royal family. Such relations as were absent at the time of the funeral, made their lamentations on their return, though two or three months afterwards. Acquaintances, when they first met any of the family, embraced them, saying, Klau é, klau é, i. e. "Cease bewailing, cease bewailing;" before they made the ordinary salutations, or spoke on indifferent subjects. Old friends and near relations fasted also, and abstained from all indulgences, for ten days or a month after the funeral. If there were no sons, the inheritance went to the nephews, but the Kings were always succeeded by their eldest brothers.

Religion.

Their ordeal by an infusion of kwóni bark was the red water of the Bullams, described by Dr. Winterbottom, (p. 129, 130,) and bearing the same name (kwon and okwon) in the Bullam and Timmaní languages. Their boys were circumcised when half a year old. They believed in a Supreme Being, (Kanno), who rewards and punishes men in a future world according to their actions in this, but directed the greatest part of their devotions to the departed Spirits of their ancestors, (Yannánen, in the singular Yannáhh), whom they believed to be endued with almost divine knowledge and power, and to act as their guardian angels. These Yannánen were supposed to inhabit the nearest grove or forest. Every village, therefore, had its consecrated grove, in which, from time to time, offerings were made to the Yannánen, and into which no women nor uninitiated persons were allowed to enter. Belli-páro was then celebrated, that is, the initiated, who carried the offerings of food, &c. into the wood, died as they affirmed, were then born again, and received into the assembly of the departed Spirits. Every 20 or 25 years the King ordered a space 8 or 10 miles in circumference, to be cleared in the middle of the wood, and all the young men not bearing the marks of Belli-páro (i. e. cuts or scratches from the neck downwards across each shoulder-blade) were carried there by force, for they all dreaded the ordeal which they were to go through. A peculiar dance called Killing, and an indecent song named the Belli-dong, or "Praise of Belli," were the first things they learnt from a few old experienced Saggonús, i. e. hierophants, who not only instructed them, but received provisions for them at the edge of the wood. This course of initiation lasted four or five years. At the close of it they came out of the wood all covered with feathers, and wearing caps made of bark hanging over their faces;* but after remaining for a few days in separate cabins, under the instruction of the Saggonús, they appeared richly decorated in the open place in the midst of the village, and closed their noviciate by dancing the Belli dance, which they had learnt in the wood. Each was then called by a new name, as a sign of his new birth, and presented by the Saggonú to his Chief and family. Initiated persons could lay an embargo on any thing by consecrating it to Belli-páro, GUINEA. which was done by setting a stick in the ground, with a tuft of flags or rushes tied like a besom to the top of it; over which the words hukwo, hukwonono, were repeated thrice by two or three persons. These words were supposed to be addressed to Belli, but nobody knew what they meant. Any one who dared to disregard this prohibition, was laid in a basket filled with thorns, and dragged backwards and forwards through the village, while water well peppered was poured into his mouth, eyes, and ears, and over his whole body.

* This description nearly agrees with the figure in Major Gray's Travels, copied in the Missionary Register, (1826, p. 446,) where it is observed, that "these figures have a close connection with the dreaded institution of Purrah."

The women had a similar initiation, derived from a Country called Góla, or Gúla, whence a woman called the Sokhwilli was brought in order to kill the Garnúr, or Vala Zandila. She gave the young women assembled with her in the wood fowls to eat, and those fowls were called Zandilaté, "fowls of the Covenant," because they established the covenant made by the women with her. The girls were then stripped stark naked, and continued so for the three or four months during which they remained in the wood. Their heads were next shorn, excision was performed, and they learnt to sing the Zandi, a song similar to that learnt by the men. They returned from the wood much in the same attire, and with the same ceremonies as the men, and ended by dancing as Simo-díunós, or Zandi-simo-díunós,* i. e. children of the Zandi, in the market-place. Their initiation was complete, and they were qualified to swear by Nú-zoggo, i. e. "the Covenant."

The Timní, Hondó, Folhia, Gala, and Gebba languages were all dialects of the same tongue; of which, the Folhia was the most polished, and, therefore, called Mendi-ko, i. e. Lord's speech. The natives had no idea of hours or months, but distinguished summer and winter, midnight and after midnight by five stars, near the Pleiades in the head of Taurus, which they compared to a body, and called Manya-ding, i. e. "the Lord's child."

The History and customs of these Tribes have been given here at some length, as the work in which they are found has been overlooked by modern compilers, and the part of Africa to which they belong has acquired a fresh interest from the Colony lately established there by the Americans of the United States. The antipathies and prejudices by which the improvement of the free Negroes in that Country is so cruelly checked, have long been a subject of reproach among those to whom the Americans are odious, and of regret to all the more respectable part of its people. In order, therefore, to release the American Negroes from the disabilities under which they labour, a Society was formed in the latter end of 1816, for the benevolent purpose of providing them with an abode wherein no invidious distinctions could prevail, by colonizing in Africa, or elsewhere, such of the Free People of Colour "resident in the United States, as might be willing and adapted to form such Colonies." In February, 1820, the first vessel was despatched with 82 Negroes, and arrived at Sierra Leone on the 9th of March. The Colonists were established in a small Island in the Sherbro (Serbura) River, but in less than four months 11 out of 12 white men who accompanied them had died. In the following year the emigrants were removed further down the coast; an agreement having been made with the Chief of the Bassá Tribe on St. John's River, near Cape Mount, for the purchase of the requisite land. It was, however, afterwards thought expedient to abandon this site, and the Colonists were removed from Sierra Leone, where they had been received for a time, to the neighbourhood of Cape Mesurado, in the beginning of 1822; possession of the settlement having been finally taken on the 25th of April in that year. The number of the settlers was 50 on the 4th of the following June, and on the 8th of August 50 more arrived under the direction of Mr. Ashmun, agent for the South American Government. To his firmness and prudence, this infant Colony in some measure may be said to owe its existence; for in less than three months (November, 1822) the natives, instigated by cupidity and bad faith, attacked the settlers, and, after a first repulse, returning in greater numbers, (December, 1822,) would probably have succeeded in massacring them all, for their force consisted of only 28 men and boys, but for the providential arrival of the Sierra Leone Colonial schooner, Prince Regent, by the intervention of whose officers peace was restored. In 1823, the Colonization Society gave the names of Liberia to the Colony, and Monrovia* to its Capital; and it was again rescued, by the timely arrival of an American ship, from an attack meditated by the Savages, in the spring of the same year. The number of Colonists was only 140 in 1823, but in May, 1824, they amounted to 237, 78 of whom were capable of bearing arms. Early in that year the Colonists themselves betrayed a refractory spirit, but it soon subsided; the laws were more strictly enforced, and a voluntary engagement by several of the Colonists to pay a conscientious attention to their Religious duties, had a most beneficial effect. In the first half of the following year, (1825,) much progress had been made in building and clearing land, and the number of settlers then amounted to nearly 400: new settlements were even formed in the neighbourhood of the Colony. In 1826, the health of the Colonists, their industry, trade, and security, had greatly improved. Two churches, five day-schools, a vessel of 10 tons, a fort, and some outworks, had all been completed, and "two well-disciplined companies, one of infantry, the other of artillery, were ready for any service at a moment's warning." (Miss. Reg. 1826, p. 517.) On the native Chiefs in the neighbourhood, such had been the moral influence of the Colony, that "between Cape Mount and Trade Town, comprehending a line of 140 miles, not a slave-trader," says Mr. Ashmun, "dared to attempt his guilty traffic." The rivers of St. Paul, Sestos, (Young Sestos,) and St. John, might now be almost considered as a part of the colonial territory. In 1827, the number of the settlers was about 1000; there were six schools well managed and attended, four trading factories on the coast, and the influence of the Colony extended from the Rio das Gallinhas (Fowls' River) to Setra Karú, the Country of the Kroo-men. The coast to the North-West of Cape Mount was found to be occupied by "the Dey Tribe;" between that cape and the Gallinhas River are the Fy, or Vey, whose numbers are estimated at 12,000. Mohammedanism now prevails among them; many of the customs, therefore, observed by Blomert have doubtless been abandoned. The Bassás (Baxás, i. e. Bashás of the Portuguese navigators) to the South-East, extending to Setra Krú, are connected by language, manners, and faith, with all the intervening Tribes; and in the present year (1828) a journey through the forest, which everywhere forms a belt between the coast and the interior, has given birth to an intercourse with the Gurrahs (Gúlas?) and Kondós, (Kondé-kwóyás?) occupying a tract only 12 miles from the sea; by whom it is stated, that at the distance of about 140 miles from Cape Mesurado, there are territories, where agriculture prevails, horses are common, trade and manufactures flourish, Arabic is generally understood, markets and fairs are regularly held, and the Arts of civilized life have made a greater progress than could have been expected in the interior of Africa. Making every allowance for accidental, or even intentional exaggeration, this intelligence must be allowed to open a fair prospect; and, unless some untoward events should arise, the Colony of Liberia can hardly fail to be the commencement of a new era in the history of African civilization.

* Is not this the "Semo" of the Susús? v. Winterbottom, p. 137.

Having already followed the coast as far as the land of the Adús, or Kwa-kwas, the only part of Guinea which remains to be described is the Gold Coast, which, properly so termed, begins at the Rio de Soeiro da Costa, near Issinyi, or further East at the mouth of the Rio d'Oro, about 20 Geographical miles West from Cape Apollonia, (Ponta de Sta. Apollonia,) and ends at Akrá, comprehending $34^{\circ} 44'$ of longitude, (248 Geographical miles,) and lying between $4^{\circ} 40'$ and $5^{\circ} 40'$ North latitude. When first observed from the sea, the whole appears like one vast plain, covered by an unbroken forest, and backed by hills, also covered with wood; but on a nearer approach, breaks between the hills are discovered, and valleys well planted and cultivated bespeak a fertile soil, and industrious inhabitants. The part best known to Europeans is the beach and adjoining plain. It is sandy, flinty, and barren, but the soil improves at the distance of a few miles inland, where there are well-watered valleys as productive, according to Mr. Meredith, (Account, p. 18,) "as the Delta of the Nile." The abundance of moisture supplied by the streams and marshes, and the elevation of the soil, which is greater than it usually is further North, contribute to temper the heat, so that notwithstanding its latitude, even at Cape Coast Castle, the hottest place in Guinea, the thermometer seldom rises above 93° , (Fahrenheit's scale,) and further East rarely above 87° , while it often sinks below 74° . The seasons are, properly speaking, only two, the wet and dry; but there are usually six periodical variations of weather. 1. The Harmattan, or Harmantan, from December to the end of January, and the Sinkesn in July, August, and September, when the sky is hazy, and peculiarly dry hot winds prevail. 2. The clear season, in February, March, and November, when there is neither haze nor clouds; and 3. the rains which fall, accompanied by thunder and lightning, in April, May, and June, and again in October, (Isert, Vorrede, vii.) Though more temperate than many places in the interior further North; it must not be supposed that this tract of Country is less fatal to Europeans than other tropical regions; the two leading causes of its having a lower temperature, umbrage and moisture, are alone sufficient to render the atmosphere unhealthy; for it must always be borne in mind that it is the combination of humidity with heat which is so deleterious to the human frame. Till the Country is well cleared, no European Colony can exist in it without a frightful waste of life, and the liberated Negroes in Gold Coast.

* To our taste, Freeland, or Freeman's Land, and Monroe's Town, would have been more agreeable than the unclassical terms Liberia and Monrovia.

GUINEA. our old settlements have not been fitted by their former habits for the task of civilizing their countrymen in Africa. The benevolent plans, therefore, suggested by Mr. Meredith and other Europeans, whose constitutions were proof against the effects of the climate, are not, for a long time to come, likely to be realized.

Scarcely any thing beyond the coast is known to Europeans in this part of Africa. The barbarism and jealousy of the natives, fomented, if not occasioned, by the slave-trade, their favourite and almost only branch of commerce, and the insalubrity of the climate, have hitherto presented an insuperable bar to discovery in that Country, and one or two places, not 200 miles distant from the sea, are the only spots yet visited in the interior. The whole tract is divided into a number of petty States, which have been, except for a few short intervals, constantly at war with each other; being agreed only on one point, the policy of preventing the inhabitants of the interior from any communication with the sea; an object easily effected, as a chain of mountains parallel with the coast forms a natural barrier between the Northern and Southern Negroes; while the rapids or cataracts in the Niger, the only river in central Africa, North of the Zaïré, which makes its way to the ocean, cuts off all intercourse by water. Of the separate Principalities on the coast, Bosman (Letter, i. p. 5,) enumerates 11; Axim, Anté, Adóm, Yabí, Commani, Fetù, Sabù, Fanté, Akròn, Agonà or Winnebà, and Akwambú; to which may be added Akrá, as the Gold Coast, according to that writer, extends to Ponni and Ladingkúr, between that river and the Volta. Most of these States have been in later times subject to Ashantí, as those to the East were in the beginning of the last century to Akwambú; but permanent dominion depends, among Savages, so much on the personal character of the reigning Prince, that it is rarely possessed for more than half a century by the same family or nation.

Languages. The Tribes on the coast from Cabo de Tres Pontas (Cape Three Points) to the Rio da Volta, (River Volta,) are all members of the same family, as their languages show; though, as in Europe, many of them cannot understand each other without an interpreter. Beyond that river, languages are found belonging to a different stock, but it is probable that all used in this part of Africa may be traced to one or two parent stems, the Fanté, or Amina, and Foi, or Dahomé. Of the former all the languages spoken between Axim and the Volta, a distance of 240 Geographical miles, are dialects, for "it," says Protten, (as quoted by Adelung, Mithrid. III. i. 188.) "is properly the mother-tongue of the following States or nations: Denkirà, Awwin Aminà, Wàsà, Ahanté, Yabi, Akkúmani, Fanté, comprehending Agwatò, the district round De la Mina; Afutù, to which Cabo Corso (Cape Coast) belongs, Annomabò, Coromanté, Ajà, Akròn, Dagò, Ymbá, (Winnebà, or Agunà,) Brekù, &c.: on the shore, and further from the coast, Asin, Akím, Kwahú, Burúm, Ntá, Ashantí, and Akwapim. The Akrà, or Inkrà, and Adámpi, are difficult and remote dialects of the same parent tongue.

To the North and North-East of Ashantí, in Dagomba, Ng-wà, Mosi, and Kamsalahú, languages are spoken which seem to bear a remote affinity to the widely extended dialects of Fanté and Akrá; but in the mountains of Kong, on the North-West, the Mandingo appears, and it extends, as may be conjectured, from thence to the Western coast. Beyond those mountains, on the East, we find the Country of the Máláwá, or Márawá, probably the Melli of Leo Africanus, in which the language of Háúsá, or Cashnà, is spoken. But nothing more than the numerals of the latter Tribes have yet been collected; so that no well-grounded inferences can be drawn respecting their affinities; and conjectures, which appear plausible now, may prove groundless hereafter.

The wants of Savages in warm climates are so few, Trade and their industry has so little stimulus, that indifference or indolence will withhold them from foreign commerce, unless it can be carried on without much skill or labour. Hence the trade of this part of Africa, which was never very considerable, has dwindled away almost to nothing since the abolition of the slave-trade. An undaunted courage is one of the most prominent features in the Negro character: therefore the African is always inclined to war; and a traffic, maintained by incessant warfare, is entirely congenial with the views of restless and hardy Chiefs, in whose estimation the lives and sufferings of their inferiors go for nothing. The traffic in slaves therefore was the most agreeable to the African Chiefs, as well as the most profitable to the European traders; but as it required the protection of an armed force, the merchants engaged in it were obliged to apply to their respective Governments for such aid as was indispensable. Forts were erected and garrisoned by different European Powers, and political, rather than commercial views perpetuated these expensive establishments; but many of them have long been abandoned; and our own Government has lately formed a settlement in the Island of Fernao (Fernan) do Po, with a view, as is understood, to the gradual relinquishment of all our other stations, two or three only excepted.

The principal fortresses on the coast are, Da Mina,* Del Mina, belonging to the Dutch; Cape Coast Castle, to the English; and Christiansburg to the Danes. The Castle of San Jorge da Mina, begun in 1482, by order of John II., King of Portugal, with the consent of Caramansa, King of the Country, (Barros, I. iii. 2. tom. i. p. 169,) was long the Capital of the Portuguese settlements in Africa. It was surrendered to the Dutch after a siege of four days, in August, 1637. (Dapper, Africa, ii. 70.) and finally ceded to them by treaty in 1641. As the whole tract between Capes Palmas and Lopo Gonsalvez thus fell into the hands of the Dutch, they claimed, and for a time maintained, a monopoly of all the trade on the Ivory, Gold, and Slave Coasts. In latter times, a garrison of 150 soldiers and about 900 slaves has been maintained in the Castle of La Mina. The adjoining Town, called Danà, or Addinà, had, before the war with the Ashantis, who threatened to attack it in 1807, 5000 inhabitants. Its immediate neighbourhood is flat and sandy: but at a small distance in the interior, there is much wood and stagnant water, in that latitude sure signs of an unhealthy atmosphere. Commendo, 2½ geographical miles West of La Mina, Commenda was a Dutch and English port, but has long been abandoned. The Negro village near it, is called Akatéki. Chama. Shamà, or Assemà, is an Island at the mouth Bossempra of the Bósempra, with a station for canoes. Three days' journey (50 or 60 miles) from the shore, the navi-

* Called by the Spaniards De la Mina; whence the vulgar corruption, Delmina, adopted by the Dutch, and from them by the other Northern Europeans.

GUINEA. gation is interrupted by a cataract, considered as sacred (a fetish) by the natives. Near it is the Portuguese, and subsequently Dutch fort of St. Sebastian. The two last are in Axim (Ashing.) Zakondé is the first place in the territory of Achanté, the most fertile and luxuriant part of the coast, compared by Focquenbrog to the country round Cleves. (Bosman, 2de Lettre, p. 18.) Between it and Cape Three Points the soil is highly productive, and the natives are well-disposed, peaceful, and laborious; it has, therefore, been pointed out by Meredith (p. 74) as well calculated for colonization. Its gold mines are considered as sacred, and are, therefore, not worked; but Wasà and Denkirà, the adjoining States to the North, possess the most productive mines and purest ore on the whole coast. The English fort was destroyed in the American war. Oranje, the Dutch fort, is still kept up. It is only a musket-shot distant from the other; stands on a cliff overhanging the sea, commands a secure landing-place for small craft, and is, next to Bautri, the most healthy place on the coast. Achanté was completely desolated by the people of Adóm in the last years of the XVIIth century. Tokorári, or Tacorádo, three or four miles to the West of Zakondé, is near a dangerous reef, almost dry at low water. The English were driven from it by Admiral De Ruyter in 1665, and it was abandoned about the close of the XVIIth century. (Bosman, 23.) Bautri, commonly called Bautrù, nine miles further Westward, is a small Dutch fort, on a very lofty eminence, just above a Negro village, the inhabitants of which are more honest and sober than most of their countrymen. It is three or four miles to the East of Dixcove, (Dikieschooft,) or Nfúma, the strongest fort possessed by the English in Achanté, in a rich Country, on a bay where there is anchorage for small craft. Búswà, the Capital of the Country, is only about three miles to the East of it. Bosman (p. 16) represents the surrounding Negroes as some of the most treacherous and daring on the coast. Acodá, six miles West of Búswà, and about eight miles East of Cabo das Tres Pontas, is a small Dutch fort, ceded to the Prussians about 1690. Friedericksburg, a Prussian settlement, about eight miles further West, was purchased by the Dutch, and named Fort Hollandia in 1720, but afterwards suffered to fall into ruins. At Axim, (Axem, Asheng,) about seven miles West of Fort Hollandia, was Fort St. Anthony, overlooking a low flat country, on the banks of the Ancober, (Snake River,) very productive of rice, but not fit for millet, (Sorghum,) sweet potatoes, yams, or palms, on account of its liability to inundation. The facility which it afforded for landing, and its security of position, rendered this a post of considerable importance. The Rio da Cobra, or Snake River, corruptly called Ancober, by the natives Sína, is obstructed, as is commonly the case with African rivers, by a bar at its mouth, where it is wide, but too shallow even for a boat to pass. Its banks are skirted by lofty and beautiful trees, affording a refreshing shade, and inhabited by birds of splendid plumage, with crowds of monkeys leaping from bough to bough. Populous villages on the upper part of the river frequently vary the scene; but falls and rapids interrupt its navigation at about 50 miles above its mouth. Between the Rio da Cobra and Asiné, there is a slightly projecting cape called Ponta de Santa Apollonia, (Point of St. Apollonia.) It marks the Country of the Aminas, or Amanahés, otherwise called Fantés, whose Tribes and language extend as far as the Volta. About three miles inland there is a fresh-water lake, nearly a mile long, the banks of which are inhabited by a Colony from Shemá. The territory of Apollonia extends about 20 Geographical miles along shore, and four or five inland; but a total want of harbours and a heavy surf, which renders landing extremely difficult, are an almost insuperable bar to its maritime commerce, while the endless feuds in which its King is engaged with his neighbours, equally prevent commercial intercourse by land. This Country has therefore been little frequented, and the forts in it possessed by the English and Dutch were very inconsiderable. Next to La Mina, the principal place on the Gold Coast, is the English settlement at Cabo Corso, commonly called Cape Coast Castle, in 5° 6' North, and 1° 51' West. Igwá, or Ugwá, is its native name; and Afetú, or Fetú, that of the Country to which it belongs. It is about seven miles from La Mina. Its inhabitants maintain themselves by fishing, by which they supply many of their neighbours with provisions. The fort was built by the Portuguese, who ceded it, with the rest of the coast, to the Dutch, from whom it was taken by the English in 1664. It has been since much strengthened; and was, till within the last year, the strongest place possessed by Great Britain on that coast. Though inferior in strength and resources to La Mina, it is easily defended against an attack by sea, being on a cliff washed by deep water, but it is commanded by the neighbouring heights. A garrison of 40 men, with 80 or 100 labourers, is sufficient to secure it from any ordinary attacks by the natives; but it was once closely invested by the Ashantis, and, being ill supplied with water, could not sustain a protracted siege. The Town of Igwá, behind the castle, is said to have 8000 inhabitants. The neighbouring country has been left almost entirely uncultivated, as this tract between La Mina and Akrá was the emporium of the gold and slave trade; its inhabitants could, therefore, enrich themselves by a less laborious employment than husbandry. About six miles to the East of Cabo Corso is Mauré, or Muré, at which is Nassau, the first fortress built by the Dutch on this coast; and, next to La Mina, their strongest post. The territory of Sabú, in which it stands, extends six miles along the shore, and about as much inland. (Bosman, iv. p. 60.) A mile and a half to the East of Mauré is the Iron Mountain, about $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of a mile long, covered with trees, and forming the boundary between Sabú and the Fantés, whose territory (Fantain or Fanté) stretches along shore about 30 miles, and 10 or 12 inland. Four miles from its foot is Anemabó, the strongest fort possessed by the English, but commanded by the neighbouring heights. The coast is here rocky and dangerous; the country almost entirely covered with wood. It was formerly very populous, and its inhabitants were the most turbulent in this part of Africa; a spirit strongly fomented by the slave-trade, of which this place was the great emporium. Coromantain, or Fort Amsterdam, five miles further East, was taken by De Ruyter, in 1665, from the English, whose first and chief fort it then was. The Ashantis stormed and almost destroyed it a few years ago. Near Tuam is the small English fort of Tantom-querry, which was begun at the close of the XVIIth, or in the beginning of the XVIIIth century. The shore is here high and rocky, and the landing-place dangerous. A few miles beyond this fort is Ruige

GUINEA.

Cape Coast. Oegwa. Igwa.

Mouree, Moree. Saboe.

Fantyn, or Fantee. Anamaboe.

Coromantyn

Tantum-querry.

GUINEA. Hoek, or Rough Corner, a rocky cape which forms the Eastern boundary of Fantyn or Fanté; and about as far on the other side of that cape is Apam, or Apang, a small Dutch post, called Fort Patience, which was plundered by the Ashantis in 1811. Eight miles beyond it is Winnebáh, or Simpà, on a high ground near a freshwater river, in a beautiful and healthy Country. It had a small English fort; but the violent and treacherous character of the natives rendered it an unpleasant and hazardous station. The adjoining Town has 3000 or 4000 inhabitants, and was once the most populous place in the Kingdom of Agunà, or Agwanà, which formerly extended from Ruige Hoek to a few miles beyond Barakú, and of which Akron, between that cape and Mount Mango, or the Devil's Hill, formed a part, its King acknowledging the supremacy of the Fantés. Berakú, or Berkú, nine miles further East, has a fort belonging to the Dutch on a high ground, and a Town called Seniah by the natives. Just beyond it is the boundary of Akará, or Akrá, the second State in extent on this coast. Its Capital, bearing the same name, in 5° 20' North,* and 10' West, is 27 miles from Berakú, in a healthy and very agreeable position, but on a barren, unproductive soil. Much trade is carried on at this place with the interior, as well as with the Europeans, who have three forts there; James Castle belonging to the English, Crevecœur to the Dutch, and Christiansburg to the Danes. The last was built by the Portuguese, from whom it was purchased by Denmark in 1660. Akrá, or Inkràn, was protected in 1811 by the Ashantis from an attack by the Fantés, and much has been done by the Danes to turn the attention of the natives to agriculture, and to sow the seeds of civilization. Pram-Pram, named after a favourite Idol, the sanctuary of which is there, had a small English fort; the Fèticéro, or Priest of this Temple, has a sort of authority over all his brethren, and his oracular decisions are much venerated. Ningó, near which the second Danish castle, Friedensburg, is placed, is 43 miles from Akrá. In Krobó, or Krepé, a large Negro State behind it, there is a very high mountain about 20 or 25 miles distant from the sea, and apparently capped with snow. Adà, on an island in the Rio da Volta, is the last Danish fort on this coast, and that river, as before mentioned, separates the Gold from the

Ruyge
Hoek.
Hairy Cape.
Apam.
Fort Patience.
Winnebáh.

Agonna.
Berrakoo.

Akkra or Inkràn.

Prampram.

Ningó, or Nimgo.
Friedens-burg.
Kerrapay.

Adda.
River Volta.

* Ritter gives 5° 31' as the latitude of Akrá. According to Bowdich, the Commissioner's observations carry it 11 miles further to the South. Isert gives 5° 44' North, as the latitude of Christiansburg. (p. 15.)

Slave Coast. The name of Volta, or "whirl," shows the impetuosity of the stream, which is so great in the rainy season, as to make it unnavigable for small boats. A bar at its mouth at all times prevents the passage of large vessels, but beyond that, it is navigable for 10 or 11 days, and is called Adirri; it rises in one of the lofty mountains of Kong. (Bowdich, p. 171.)

The languages spoken on the Gold Coast are, as before observed, all more or less distantly related to each other, and may be referred to the Fanti, Afutú, and Akrá; the second being an intermediate dialect spoken at Winnebáh, and the connecting link between the two others.

In manners, habits, Religion, and national character, the various Tribes of Negroes, as far as they have been yet observed, have a surprising resemblance to each other: much, therefore, of what has been already said respecting the natives of Ashanti, (xviii. 7.) and the Kwoyás, is applicable to their neighbours on the coast; and as it is probable that our scanty materials on this subject will, ere long, receive considerable additions, the reader will not be displeased at being referred for a more ample discussion of these topics to the account of NIGRITIA, which will embrace every known part of the Belád-essúdán (Land of the Blacks) not previously noticed.

The principal authorities for Guinea are, De Barros' Da Asia, Lisboa, 1778, 15 vols. 12mo.; Dapper's Naukeurige Beschryvinge der Afrikaansche Gewesten, t'Amsterdam, tweed. dr. 1676; Ritter's Erdkunde, th. i. 2te. Auss. Berlin, 1822, 8vo.; Astley's Collection of Voyages, vol. ii.; Bosman's Voyage de Guinée, Utrecht, 1705, 12mo.; Müller's Fetu, Hamburg, 1673; Rømer's Nachrichten von der Küste Guinea, Kopenhag. 1769; Isert's Reise nach Guinea, Berlin, 1790, 8vo.; a very amusing and instructive book. Bowdich's Mission to Ashantee, Lond. 1819, 4to.; Dupin's Residence at Ashantee, Lond. 1824, 4to.; Meredith's Account of the Gold Coast, Lond. 1812, 8vo. For the languages, Isert, Bowdich's Appendix, and Barbot in Churchill's Collection; but the best information is to be found in Protten's Nyttig grammaticalsk Indledning til Fanteisk og Acraisk sprog, (an useful Grammatical introduction to the Fante and Acra languages,) Kiøbenhavn, 1764, 8vo., and Schonning's De ti bud, det Apostoliske Symbolum og Fader Vor, oversatte i det Acraiske Sprog, Kiøbenh. 1815. Many curious vocabularies are also to be found in Oldendorf's Geschichte der Mission der Evangelischen Brüder in die Caraibischen Inseln Barly, 1777, th. ii.

GUISE, A. S. wise; Fr. guise; It. and Sp. guisa, D. ghise, wiise. See WISE, and DISGUISE.

"A. S. wise. A manner, mode, fashion, condition, custom, reason, way, wise, or (with the French, and changing the w into gu) guise." Somner.

þe Normans did it alle in þe guise of theft, þe godes þerof stal, no þing þei ne leif.

R. Brunne, p. 77.

Ther n'is no newe guise, that it n'as old.

Chaucer. The Knights Tale, v. 2102.

More ioylife than the byrde in Maie:
He maketh him euer fresshe and gaie,
And doth all his araie disguise
So that of hym the newe guise
Of lusty folke all other take.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 23.

But it is not their guise to looke on the order of any text, but as they find it in their doctours so alledge they it, and so vnderstei it. Tyndall. Workes, fol. 168. The Obedience of a Christian Man.

Yet had nature taught hir after gise
To know her fo and dread him evermore.

Wyat. Of the mean and sure Estate.

GUISE.

GULE.

Suddeine they see from midst of all the maine
The surging waters like a mountaine rise,
And the great sea puft up with proud disdaine
To swell above the measure of his guise,
As threatning to deuoure all that his powre despise.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 12.

But being bred under base shepherd's wings,
Had ever learnt to love the lowly things;
Did little whit regard his courteous guize,
But cared more for Colin's carolings
Then all that he could doe, or e'er devize.

Id. Ib. book vi. can. 9.

Not so (quoth he) pardy it's not the guise
Of Christian knights, though false, so soone to yeeld:
I can my fall excuse in better wise,
And will reuenge this shame, or die in field.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, book vi. st. 33.

In easy notes, and guise of lowly swain,
'Twas thus he charm'd and taught the listening train.

Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

Bashful she bends, her well-taught look aside
Turns in enchanting guise, where dubious mix
Vain conscious beauty, a dissembled sense
Of modest shame, and slippery looks of love.

Thomson. Liberty, part iv.

GUIITAR, Fr. guitare, cistre; It. ghitara, citara, cetra; Sp. guitarra; Lat. cithara; Gr. κίθάρα. See CITHERN.

I have by sundry persons who have seen him, been told of a baboon, that would play certain lessons upon a gittar.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvii.

Their enemies, coming against them with guitars and harpsichords, set them so upon their round o's and minuets, that the form of the battle was broken, and three hundred thousand of them slain.

King. Art of Cookery, let. 9.

Mr. Thornhill seemed highly delighted with their performance and choice, and then took up the guitar himself.

Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, ch. v.

They imitated the chants of the church upon guitars, playing forte, and then piano, to represent the priests, sometimes speaking softly, and then aloud.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. iii. p. 209.

The GUIITAR and the Cittern, according to Sir John Hawkins, are the same instrument; and the name of the former is taken from the hard pronunciation of Ci
as Ghi by the Spaniards.

GULCH. Gulch, says Whalley, is a stupid fat-headed fellow. The word occurs in the old Comedy of Lingua; "You muddy gulch, darest look me in the face." act v. sc. 16. Skinner calls gulchin, parvus gulo, and derives it from the Ger. geck, foolish.

You'll see us then; you will, gulch, you will?

Jonson. Poetaster, act iii. sc. 4.

GULE of August, Gula Augusti, a Feast mentioned in some old statutes, as that of West. 2. c. 30. It is the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, which happens on the 1st of August, and which received its name from the following Legend of the Romish Church, as related by Durand from Bede. The Feast itself was first instituted by Theodosia, the Empress of Theodosius II., who, while on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, was infinitely scandalized by observing a Festival celebrated at Alexandria on the Calends of August, in honour of the triumph of Augustus over Antony and Cleopatra,
unde vehementer doluit quod Gentili et damnato tantus honor exhiberetur. Accordingly, having obtained at Jerusalem the Chains with which St. Peter had been bound by Herod, she carried them back to Rome, where they were no sooner produced before the other Chains

VOL. XXIII.

which had been used for the same purpose by Nero, than they became agglutinated into one mass by some holy attraction; quæ se tangentes usque adeo sunt miraculosè conjunctæ, ac si semper fuissent eodem. Theodosius, therefore, built a Church in honour of the Apostle, which was consecrated on the Calends of August, and in which he deposited the Chains; ut solennitas Piscatoris obfunderet solennitatem Imperatoris, et catena Petri extingueret torquem Augusti. The particular miracle worked by these Chains, which gave the name of Gula to the Festival, is related as follows.
Cum Quirinus Tribunus filiam haberet gutturosam (affected with a goitre) illa ad mandatum Sti. Alexan-dri Papæ, qui sextus fuit a Beato Petro, quæsivit bogas
sive vincula, quibus Beatus Petrus fuit vinculatus Romæ sub Nerone, quibus osculatis liberata est, et Quirinus cum suâ familiâ baptizatus est. Tunc dictus Alexander Papa hoc Festum in Calendas Augusti celebrandum instituit, et in honorem Sti. Petri Ecclesiam in urbe fabricavit, ubi vincula ipsa reposuit, et Ad Vincula nominavit et Calendas Augusti dedicavit, in quâ festi-vitate populus illic ipsa vincula hodie osculatur.* (Rationale, vii. 19.)

GULES, } Fr. gueule; Low Lat. gula. A word, GU'LED. } says Du Cange, which our Heralds frequently use to denote a red colour in arms or ensigns;
Skinner thinks it may be so called from the redness of a cock's throat, (gutturis Galli.) Mr. Stevens, who produces the verb from Heywood, calls it a term in the barbarous jargon peculiar to HERALDRY, (q. v.) signifying red.

And after him the kynrede of the Burghes, that bere the armes of goules with a white croys. R. Gloucester, p. 484. note.

And if ye passe the batayles thre,
Than are ye worthy a knight to be,
And to bere armes than are ye able
Of gold and goules sete with sable.

The Squire of Low Degree, l. 204. in Ritson, Met. Rom. i. p. 153.

But he hadd made one of his capitaynes, a gentle prince, and a valyant in armes, called the Earl of Morrell, beryng in his armes syluer three creyllles goules.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. xviii.

Old Hecuba's reverend locks
Be gul'd in slaughter.

Heywood. The Iron Age, part ii.

His sev'n-fold targe a field of gules did stain
In which two swords he bore; his word, "Divide and reign."

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 8.

Ferguse, the son of Ferquhard, a man right skilfull in blasoning of armorie, himself bare a lion gules in a field of gold.

Holinshed. The First Inhabitation of Ireland.

The showery arch,
With listed colours gay, ore, azure, gules,
Delights and puzzles the beholder's eye.

J. Philips. Cider, book ii.

GULF, or } Fr. golfe, gouffre; Sp. and It. golfo;
GULPH, } D. golpe, gorges, vorago; Golpen, GU'LPHING, } ingurgitare, avidè haurire, haustim bi- GU'LPHY. } bere. The Fr. and Dutch are said by Skinner to be either from the Lat. gula, the Gr. κόλπος, or from the sound; and the last, he thinks, the more probable. Menage decides for the Gr. κόλπος; the Italian and French, however, do not take immediately from the Greek, but through the Latin. The Fr.
gouffre, is derived by Wachter from Ger. gaffen; A. S.

* Bogas, compes aut torques victorum.—Ducange, Nov. Gloss.

GULE.

GULF.

GULF.

GULL.

ge-apan, to gape, (q. v.) to open. In Norfolk, a bay-full of a barn is called a gulph, and a bay or division of a barn, a gulph-stead, goaf-stead, or go-stead. Grose. Gulf, or Gulph, is used as equivalent to the Latin words sinus and gurgis.

A bay; a whirlpool, or "depth that swallows up whatsoever approaches or comes into it."

Hast thou not read in bookes of fell Charybdis goulfe,
And Scylla's dogs, whom ships do dread
as lambes doe feare the woulfe?

Turberville. Pyndara's Answer to Tymetes.

Among which high and low lands there is a gulf or breach in some places about 55 fadome deepe, and 15 leagues in bredth.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 206. Jaques Cartier, l.

Then do the Ætnean Cyclops him affray,
And deep Charybdis gulphing in and out.

Spenser. Virgil's Gnat.

Or as the Grecian's finger dipp'd in wine,
Drawing a river in a little line,
And with a drop, a gulf to figure out,
To model Venice moated round about.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. The Lady Geraldine to the Earl of Surrey.

Seba, and Sheba, with tne rest that planted Arabia Felix, had Tigris to convey them to the Persian Gulf, which washeth the banks of Arabia Felix on the East side.

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. viii. sec. 6.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulphy Don.

Milton. Vacation Exercise, l. 92.

To this low world he bids the light repair,
Down through the gulfs of undulating air.

Pitt. Job, ch. xxv.

And gulphy Simois, rolling to the main
Helmets, and shields, and godlike heroes slain.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xii.

"Relate," Antinous cries, "devoid of guile,
When spread the Prince his sail for distant Pyle
Did chosen chiefs across the gulfy main Attend his voyage, or domestic train?"

Id. Homer. Odyssey, book iv.

The earth shall shake him out of all his holds,
Or make his house his grave, nor so content,
Shall counterfeit the motions of the flood,
And drown him in her dry and dusty gulfs.

Cowper. The Task, book ii.

GULL, *v.*GULL, n.

GU'LLERY,

GU'LLISH,

GULL-CATCHER.

See GUILLE. Gull, the noun, is the past tense of the A. S. ge-wiglian, to guile or beguile, and means any one guiled or beguiled. And upon this past tense the verb is formed.

To guile, to cheat, to impose upon, to deceive, to delude.

Tell them, what parts yo' have ta'en, whence run away,
What states yo' have gull'd, and which yet keeps yo' in pay.
Jonson. Epigram 107. To Captaine Hungry.

Oft in my laughing rimes I name a gull,
But this new terme will many questions breede,
Wherefore at first I will expresse at full,
Who is a true and perfect gull indeed.

Sir J. Davis. Epigram 2.

But leaving these sanguine-inspired seers to the sweet deception and gullery of their own corrupted fancy, let us listen and keep close to him, that can neither deceive, nor be deceived, I mean Christ and his holy Apostles.

More. Conj. Cabbal. fol. 171.

And, for your green wound, your balsamum and your St. John's-woort are all meer gulleries, and trash to it.

Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act iii. sc. 5.

Besides this inbred neglect of liberall sciences, and all arts, which should excolere mentem, polish the minde, they have most part some gullish humour or other, by which they are led.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy. To the Reader.

FAB. Heere comes my noble gull-catcher.

Shakspeare. Twelfth Night, fol. 264.

Religion wheedled us to Civil war,
Drew English blood, and Dutchmen's now would spare.
Be gull'd no longer, for you'll find it true,
They have no more Religion, faith! than you.

Dryden. Satire on the Dutch.

So that the manly exercises that used to be among Englishmen, without doors and abroad, began to be laid aside, and turned into glosing, gulling, and whoring, within doors.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

Say, should I make a patriot of Sir Bill,
Or swear that G——'s duke has wit at will,
From the gull'd knight could I expect a place,
Or hope to lie a dinner from his Grace?

P. Whitehead. Manners.

GULL, n.

GULL-KIND.

The bird so called, Skinner thinks, ab aviditate, q. d. gulo, gulosus.

And there they byd, and fyll as dooth a gull,
And whan that they have theyr heades full,
Than they fall out, and make reuylyng,
And in this wyse make the dronken rekenyng.

The hye way to the Spytell House, l. 163. in Early Popular Poetry, vol. ii. p. 15.

As touching the guls or sea-cobs, they build in rockes: and the cormorants both in them, and also in trees. They usually lay foure egges apeece. The guls in summer time, but the cormorants in the beginning of the spring.

Holland. Plinie, book x. ch. xxxii.

For I do feare
When euery feather stickes in his owne wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix.

Shakspeare. Timon of Athens, fol. 83.

Gulls are found in great plenty in every place; but it is chiefly round our boldest rockiest shores that they are seen in the greatest abundance. It is to such shores as these that the whole tribe of the gull-kind resort, as the rocks offer them a retreat for their young, and the sea a sufficient supply.

Goldsmith. History of Animated Nature, part iii. book vii. ch. vi.

GULL, *v.*GULL, n.

GU'LLET,

GU'LLY.

Fr. gueule, goulet; It. and Sp. gola; D. gulle; Lat. gula. The gullet, throat, or swallow. To gull, To swallow; Gull, the noun, and Gullet; that through which any thing is swallowed; any thing flows or runs. The passage for food.

Out of the harde bones knocken they
The mary, for they casten nought away,
That may go thurgh the gullet soft and sote.

Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12477.

Thus wyth cruell warres and great bloud shed the church was torne in peeces, foulye mangled with sciesmes, & choaked with errors, while vnder the colour of wine it gulled in poyson.

Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 76.

Theyre passage sodeynely stopped by a greate gul (ingens vorago) made with the violence of the streames y^t ranne downe the mountaines, by wearing awaye of the earthe.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book v. fol. 115.

For by fetching of a little compasse about they passed the hollowe gulle (eluvies) and euery man began to be a guyde.

Id. Ib. book v. fol. 116.

It riseth in Word Forrest, and going by Burstow, it meeteth afterward with another gullet, containing a small course from two seuerall heads.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, ch. xi.

I have been assured the like of the whole pile of a high castle, standing in a gullet in the course of the winde, (namely the castle of Wardour) [by those] who have often seen it shake notably in a fierce wind.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xv.

For after they have swallowed one morsel, if you look stedfastly upon their throat, you will soon see another ascend, and run pretty swiftly all along the throat up to the mouth, which it could not do unless it were impell'd by the successive contraction or peristaltick motion of the gullet, continually following it.

Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

GULL.

GULL
—
GULO

There are parts of the shore interrupted by small vallies and gullies.
Cook. Third Voyage, book iv. ch. iv.

The gullet (the passage for food) opens into the mouth like the cone or upper part of a funnel, the capacity of which forms indeed the bottom of the mouth.
Paley. Natural Theology, ch. x.

GULO, Storr, Cuv.; Glutton, Shaw; in Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the tribe Plantigrada, family Carnivora, order Sarcophaga, class Mammalia.

Generic character. Incisive teeth, above, six; the outer one, on each side, longer than the intermediate, somewhat resembling the cuspid, but more nearly resembling the incisive: below, six, the second outer thicker and larger than those in the middle: cuspid teeth long and conical; molar, above, in some five, in others four, the two or three anterior having but one point, the last but one the largest, sectorial, with two points on its outer, and one tubercle on its inner edge; below, six or five molars, the first small, deciduous, the three next single-pointed, the last but one the largest, sectorial, two-pointed, and the last small, tuberculated, and grinding; snout pointed; nose rather prominent and obtuse; ears rounded and short; body hairy; tail of moderate length, or short; anal pouch little more than a fold of skin: feet five-toed, plantigrade, soles bare; claws sharp and crooked.

The individuals of this genus were included by Linnaeus under his Viverra and Ursus, but from the former they differ in being plantigrade, and from the latter in the form of their teeth; they appear, therefore, to form a link between the Plantigrade and Digitigrade tribes. In disposition they are bloodthirsty and cruel, and most of them are Northern animals.

G. Septentrionalis, Cuv.; Ursus Gulo, Lin.; le Glouton du Nord, Buff.; Glutton, Shaw. Is about the size of our Badger, the limbs large, back straight, and marked through its whole length with a tawny line, the rest of the body either black or a deep chestnut; tail short and very hairy. Native of Lapland, Eastern Siberia, and Kamtschatka, in which latter country it often varies in colour to white and yellowish; such skins are more valued by the natives, who have a notion that the heavenly beings are clad with them. It is more voracious and bold than the Bear, and does not sleep during the winter; it is, however, a cowardly animal, not taking its prey openly, but lurking among the boughs of trees, from which it drops on its victims, which are chiefly Deer, as they pass beneath it. The old story of its feeding till surfeited, and then squeezing itself between two trees in order to relieve itself that it may gorge again, is now exploded.

G. Americanus, Cuv.; Ursus Luscus, Lin.; Woolverene, Ellis and Pen. Is considered by Pallas to be a variety of the last species: it usually walks with the back arched; white spot on the throat and chest, the latter crescent-shaped; a yellowish brown band on the sides passing over the back above the tail. Found at Hudson's Bay and in Canada, where it is called the Beaver Eater, in consequence of preying on those animals. Is very fierce and powerful, but slow footed, and has a very musky smell, which causes its preservation from other predaceous animals.

The two preceding species have one more molar tooth on each side and in each jaw than those which follow; the latter are more purely carnivorous and resemble the Martens, amongst which they are arranged by Pennant, except in being plantigrade and having the toes webbed, in which they resemble our Otter.

G. Vittatus, Cuv.; Viverra Vittata, Lin.; le Grison, Buff.; Grison, Pen. About the size of our Stoat; the head and eyes large; upper parts deep brown, but each hair tipped with white; a white band extends from over each eye as far as the shoulders; nose and under parts black. Native of Surinam and America; scarce.

G. Barbarus, Cuv.; Mustela Barbara, Lin.; le Taïra, Buff.; Guiana Glutton. About the size of our Marten; colour black, with an ash-coloured spot between the eyes, and another three-lobed on the lower part of the neck. Native of Brazil and Guiana.

G. Mellivorus, Cuv.; Viverra Ratel, Sparman; le Ratel Ratel, Pen. About the size of the Badger, with short legs, and long straight claws; the upper part of the head and back ashy grey; the cheek's space round the ears, which are very small, underparts, and legs black; the two colours separated by a whitish line. Found at the Cape of Good Hope, where it inhabits the deserted holes of other predaceous animals; it feeds on Bees, to whose nests it is directed by the Honey-guide Cuckoo, but fails of disturbing them when lodged in the trees, as it cannot climb. It is courageous, and will often not only face, but resist, a pack of Dogs which would destroy a Lion. It is, probably, the animal known as the Stink-bingsem, or Blaireau puant, from the horrible stench which it emits.

See Ston, Prodromus Methodi Mammalium; Illiger, Prodromus Systematis Mammalium et Piscium; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Pennant's History of Quadrupeds.

GULOSITY, Lat. gulosus, from gula, the gullet, gluttony.

They are very temperate; seldom offending in ebriety or excess of drink, nor erring in gulosity or superfluity of meats.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iv. ch. ix.

GULP, v. } D. golpen; Fr. en-gouffrer. See
GULP, n. } GULF, ante.

To swallow largely; to swallow eagerly, greedily; to take down (sc. the throat) at one swallow.

LANCE. Has he devour'd you too?

FRAN. H' as gulp'd me down, Lance.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Wit without Money, act i.

I have presented the Usurer with a richer draught than ever Cleopatra swallowed; he hath suckt in ten thousand pounds worth of my land more than he paid for at a gulp.

Id. The Scornful Lady, act i.

I thirsty stand,

And see the double flaggon charge their hand,
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain.

Gay. Trivia, book ii.

And oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair,
And, ev'n when plung'd beneath, on her he raves,
Murm'ring Alcione below the waves.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book x.

Such jokes as these the old man not only took in good part, but glibly gulped down the whole narrative of his nephew.

Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

Inflated and astrut with self-conceit,
He gulps the windy diet; and ere long,
Adopting their mistake, profoundly thinks
The world was made in vain, if not for him.

Cowper. The Task, book v.

GUM, v. } A. S. goma; Fr. gomme, gommer;
GUM, n. } It. gomma; Sp. goma; D. gumme;
GUMMOUS, } Ger. gomme; Lat. gummi; Gr.
GUMMY, } κόμμι. Of unknown origin.
GUMMINESS, } See the first Quotation from Hol-GUM-WATER. } laud's Plinie.

GULO
—
GUM.

GUM.

A man would haue pity
To see how she is gumbed
Fingured and thumbed.

Skelton. Elinour Ruming.

They burn sweet gums and spices or perfumes, and pleasant smells, and sprinkle about sweet ointments and waters, yea, they haue nothing undone that maketh for the cherishing of the company.

More. Utopia, book ii. chap. v.

Her lewde lyppes twayne
They slauer men sayne
Lyke a ropye rayne
A gummy glayre.

Skelton. Elinour Ruming.

Or bleaching their hands at midnight, gumming, and bridling their beards, or making their waste small, &c.

Ben Jonson. Discoveries, fol. 110.

The best gum in all men's judgment, is that which commeth of the Ægyptian thorne Acacia, having veines within of checker worke, or trailed like wormes, of colour greenish, and cleare withall: without any peeces of barke intermingled among, and sticking to the teeth as a man cheweth it.

Holland. Plinie, book iii. ch. xi.

Man did not know
Of gummy blood, which doth in holly grow,
How to make bird-lime.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

— The slant lightning, whose thwart flame driv'n down
Kindles the gummie bark of firr or pine,
And sends a comfortable heat from farr,
Which might supplie the sun.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x.

MACI. Which indeed a true fear of your mistris should doe, rather than gumme-water, or whites of egges: is't not so, sir?

Ben Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, act iii. sc. 3.

Of this gummie and glutinous substance they frame also their dores and entries which are wide and large.

Holland. Plinie, book xi. ch. vi.

Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane,
In state attended by her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and odorous gums, and cover'd fire.

Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

One of about twenty years of age came to me with a gumminess on the tendons reaching to his fingers, insomuch as he could not bend one of them.

Wiseman. On Surgery, book viii.

Of this we have an instance in the magisteries (as many chemists are pleas'd to call them) of jalap, benzoin, and of divers other resinous or gummous bodies dissolved in spirit of wine.

Boyle. On the Mechanical Causes of Chemical Precipitation, ch. vi.

How each a rising alder now appears:
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears.

Dryden. Virgil. Pastoral 6.

— With curious eye observe,
In what variety the tribe of salts,
Gums, ores, and liquors, eye-delighting hues
Produce, abstersive or restringent.

Dyer. The Fleece, book iii.

Choose leaner viands, ye whose jovial make
Too fast the gummy nutriment imbibes.

Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, book ii.

GUM, A. S. goma; D. gumme; Ger. gaum; Sw. gom.
Perhaps, says Wachter, from γεύ-ειν, gustare, γεύεσθαι, gustus. Junius from γόμενοι, clavi, because the teeth are fixed like nails in the gums.

To come now unto the gums of children, and their breeding of teeth: the ashes of dolphins' teeth, mixed with honey, is a sovereign medicine: yea if you doe but touch their gums with a dolphin's tooth all whole as it is, the effect thereof is admirable.

Holland. Plinie, book xxxii. ch. x.

These, by receiving the appulse of the two incisors or chizels in the nether jaw, do thereby secure both the gooms of the upper from being contused, and the mus-cules of the nether from being strained by over-shooting.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. v.

Out crept a sparrow, this soul's moving inn,
On whose raw arms stiff feathers now begin,
As children's teeth through gums, to break with pain.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

Let us next take a short view of the teeth. In which their peculiar hardness is remarkable, their growth also, their firm insertions and bandage in the gums and jaws, and their various shape and strength suited to their various occasion and use.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xi.

I find upon enquiry, that the person whose tooth had been placed in my gums, was labouring under a complication of the filthiest of diseases, and that the tooth inoculated them all on me.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 58.

GUN, v.

GUN, n.

GU'NNER,

GU'NNERY,

GU'NNING,

GUN-FLINT,

GUN-MAKER,

GUN-METAL,

GUN-POWDER,

GUN-ROOM,

GUN-SHIP,

GUN-SHOT,

GUN-STONE,

GU'NNAL, or

GU'NWALE.

Gun, the noun, formerly written gon, is the past participle of gynian, hicare, (to yawn.) Tooke. Minshew derives from the Lat. canna, (whence cannon in Eng. Fr. and It.) Junius from κόναβος, strepi-
tus. It is undoubtedly, as Selden observes, an old word with a new application; and receiving this application from what Drummond in his Madrigal, The Cannon, calls her gaping throat. Milton uses expressions equally characteristic, “their mouths gaping with hideous orifice,” and “those deep throated engines.” It is literally a yawning engine: and distinguished by Chaucer from other gyns or engines, in the passage quoted by Tooke.

They dradde non assault

Of gynne, gonne, nor skaffaut.

Romant of the Rose, fol. 140. p. 1. col. 1.

Throughout euery regioun

Went this foule trumpes soun

As swift as a pellet out of a gonne

When fire is in the powder ronne.

Chaucer. The third Booke of Fame, fol. 282.

With grisly sounne out goeth the great gonne.

Id. Of Cleopatra Queen of Egypt, fol. 200.

And as with gonnes we kill the crowe

For spoiling our releefe,

The deuill so must we ouerthrowe,

With gonshote of beleefe.

Gascoigne. Flowers. Praise of his Mistress.

Than out brast the ordinaunce on both sydes with fyre flamme and hideous noyse, and the master gonner of the Englishe parte slewe the master gonner of Scotlande, and bet all his men from theyr ordinaunce.

Hall. Henry VIII. The fifth Yere.

Hick, Hobbe, and Dick, with clouts vpon their knee

Haue many times more goonhole grotes in store,

And change of crownes more quicke at call than he,

Which let their lease and take their rent before.

Gascoigne. Flowers. Memories.

ALON. There is less danger in 't than gunning, Sanchio,
Though we be shot sometimes, the shot's not mortal,
Besides, it breaks no limbs.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Rule a Wife and have a Wife, act i.

To Riehard Fawken^r, gon^r, by ii warraunts, cole powdre, M, viii^e, gone powdr, i barrell, gone stones of iron v, gone stones of stone v, saltpetre in flowr vii^m ccc, brem stone in flowr, MM, ccc.

Lodge. Illustrations of British History. Orden'nce and Artilery, &c.

Sometimes we put a new signification to an old word, as when we call a piece a gun. The word gun was in use in England for an engine, to cast a thing from a man, long before there was any gun- powder found out.

Selden. Table Talk. Language.

There was found aboard the same ships, a maister gunner, that sometime had serued the Englishmen at Calis, when Sir Hugh Ca-luerlie was lieutenant there; also diuerse great guns and engins to beat downe wals were found and taken in the same ships, with a great quantitie of powder that was more worth than all the rest.

Holinshed. Chronicle of England. Richard II. Anno 1386.

Archery is now dispossessed by gunnery, how iustly, let others iudge.

Camden. Remains. Artillarie, p. 242.

GUN. They differed concerning the ward ships; some insisting, that thereby was meant also rigging and gunning.

Marvell. Letters to the Corporation of Hull, lett. 172.

Ninion Saunders, master to the sayd Gilbert Pot, and John Owen, a gunmaker, both gunners of the Tower, comming from the Tower of London by water in a whirrie, and shooting London Bridge towards the Blacke Fryers, were drowned at S. Mary Lock.

Stow. Edward VI. Anno 1553.

They made a long lane on both sides like a gallerie, couered all ouer head, to shield as well their horssemen as their footmen from gunshot.

Holinshed. Chronicle of Ireland, Anno 1534.

It [the wall-nut] is of singular account with the joyner, for the best grained and coloured wainscot; with the gun-smith for stocks.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. vii. sec. 4.

And tell the pleasant Prince, this mocke of his Hath turn'd his balles to gun-stones, and his soule
Shall stand sore charged, for the wastefull vengeance
That shall flye with them.

Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 72.

And they tell me, that the Leghorne guns are often heard 60 miles off, at Porto Ferraio; that when the French bombarded Genoa, they heard it near Leghorne 90 miles distant: and in the Messina insurrection, the guns were heard from thence as far as Augusta and Syracuse, about 100 Italian miles.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. iii. note 27.

It was two days before I went ashoar, and then I was importuned by the governour to stay there, to be gunner of this fort; because the gunner was lately dead.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1690.

I must in the first place observe, that the words gunner and gunster are not to be used promiscuously; for a gunner, properly speaking, is not a gunster; nor is a gunster, vice versa, a gunner; they both, indeed, are derived from the word gun, and so far they agree.

Taller, No. 88.

The Parliament had done very wisely, in the entrance into the war, to engage many members of their own in the most dangerous part of it, that the nation might see that they did not intend to embark them in perils of war, whilst themselves sate securely at home out of gun-shot, but would march with them where the danger most threatened.

Clarendon. History of the Civil Wars, vol. ii. p. 567.

Great hath been the contention amongst the learned about fire and venom in gun-shot wounds; some maintaining the one to be in them, some the other; and others holding that there is neither.

Wiseman. On Surgery, book vi.

But in general, the employment of a poet is like that of a curious gunsmith or watchmaker: the iron or silver is not his own, but they are the least part of that which gives the value; the price lies wholly in the workmanship.

Dryden. Preface to the Mock Astrologer.

On the 12th of July, by night, came three carts to the Tower, and carried thence all manner of ordinance, as great guns and small, bows, bills, spears, morice-pikes, arms, arrows, gun-powder, victuals, many tents, gun-stones, &c.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1553.

The first rope going athwart from gunnal to gunnal, which, when the rowers' benches are laid, bind the boats so hard against the end of the benches, that they cannot easily fall asunder.

Dampier. Voyage. Anno 1699.

From the earliest dawnings of policy to this day, the invention of men has been sharpening and improving the mystery of murder, from the first rude essays of clubs and stones, to the present perfection of gunnery, cannoning, bombarding, mining, &c.

Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

Those things we brought away, leaving in the room of them medals, gun-flints, a few nails, and an old empty barrel with the iron hoops on it. They seem to be quite ignorant of every sort of metal.

Cook. Second Voyage, book i. ch. vii.

J. Christopher Tanuer, of Saxe Gotha, came to England about 1733, and had practised carving and graving for snuff-boxes, gunlocks, and in mother of pearl.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, &c. vol. iv. p. 219.

The exportation of unmanufactured brass, of what is called gun-metal, bell-metal, and shroff-metal, still continues to be prohibited.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book iv. ch. viii.

The unavoidable effects of the natural progress of improvement have, in this respect, been a good deal enhanced by a great revolution in the art of war, to which a mere accident, the invention of gunpowder, seems to have given occasion.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book v. ch. i.

As soon as I could get quit of them, they were conducted into the gun-room, where I left them, and set out with two boats to examine the head of the bay.

Cook. Second Voyage, book i. ch. iv.

They [pelicans] were so shy that we could not get within gun-shot of them.

Cook. First Voyage, book iii. ch. ii.

Many of these trees are from six to eight and ten feet in girth, and from sixty to eighty, or one hundred feet in length, large enough to make a mainmast for a fifty gun-ship.

Id. Second Voyage, book i. ch. v.

The gun-wale boards were also frequently carved in a grotesque taste, and adorned with tufts of white feathers placed upon a black ground.

Id. First Voyage, book ii. ch. x.

GUN-POWDER is a composition of nitre, sulphur, and saltpetre, mixed together in certain proportions and granulated. The proportions vary in different manufactures. Their average appears nearly to be, sulphur 76 parts, charcoal 14, saltpetre 10. The details respecting its History and fabrication belong to our division on MANUFACTURES.

The Wales in a Ship are the outermost timbers on the side, on which the sailors set their feet in climbing up; these are reckoned from the water, and called the first, second, or third Wale, or bend. The GUNWALE (or as it is pronounced Gunnel) is the last and uppermost of these. In Nautical language it is strictly defined, that piece of timber which reaches on either side of the ship from the half deck to the fore-castle, being the uppermost bend which finishes the upper works of the hull in that part, and wherein they put the stanchions which support the waste-trees. This is called the Gunwale, whether there be Guns in the ship or not. The lower part of any port in which are any ordnance is also called the Gunwale.

To sail Gunwale to, is to carry such a press of sail as brings the Gunwale down to, or below, the water's edge.

GUNDELIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Syn-genesia, order Segregata. Generic character: calyx none; receptacle hollow, five-flowered; corolla tubular, some florets with stamens only; receptacle chaffy, down none.

One species, G. Tournefortii, native of the East Indies.

GUNNERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dian-dria, order Digynia, natural order Urticæ. Generic character: catkin ovate; calyx superior, two-toothed; corolla none; style two-parted, drupe one-seeded, crowned.

Three species, natives of Africa and South America.

GURGE, Lat. gurgēs, a gulf, or whirlpool.

In gurgling gulfe of these such surging seas,

My poorer soule who drown'd doth death request,

I wretched wight haue sought mine owne disease,

By mine owne meanes my state it was distrest.

Mirroure for Magistrates. Sigebert, fol. 227.

Hee with a crew, whom like Ambition joyns

With him under him to tyrannize,

Marching from Eden towards the West, shall finde

The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge

Boiles out from under ground, the mouth of hell.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xii.

GURGLE, v. } See GARGLE, ante. Gurgle, the GURGLE, n. } noun, (Skinner,)

GUN.

GURGLE.

GURGLE.
GUSSET.

The sound made by a liquid flowing from the narrow mouth of a vessel. To gurgle,
To emit such or a similar sound.

Help me to tune my dolefull notes to gurgling sound
Of Liffies tumbling streams: come, let salt teares of oures,
Mix with his waters fresh.

Spenser. The Mourning Muse of Thestylis.

The nightingale no longer swell'd her throat
With love-lorn plainings tremulous and slow,
And on the wings of silence ceas'd to float
The gurgling notes of her melodious woe.

Cooper. The Tomb of Shakspeare.

— Louder then will be the song:
For she will plain, and gurgle, as she goes,
As does the widow'd ring-dove.

Mason. The English Garden, book iii.

Flow, flow, thou crystall-rill,
With tinkling gurgles fill
The mazes of the grove.

Thompson. The Bower.

GU'RNARD, or } Fr. gournauld, gourneau; GU'RNET. } which Skinner thinks may be derived from the Lat. cornulum, corniculum, cornu, horn.
And it is a fish remarkable for its bony head. The trivial name of the Genus TRIGLA.

The west part of the land was high browed, much like the head of a gurnard.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. part ii. M. J. Welsh.

FALST. If I be not asham'd of my souldiers, I am a sowc'tgurnet. Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 67.

We likewise got a few soles and flounders; two sorts of gurnards, one of them a new species.

Cook. Third Voyage, book ii. ch. vi.

GUSH, v. } Goth. giutan; A. S. geot-an; D.
GUSH, n. } gosselen, ghiet-en; Ger. giessen, fluere, to flow. A. S. gyte; Ger. guss, inundatio, an inundation.

To flow, pour, or rush forth; suddenly, copiously.

Loe in my dreame before mine eies, methought,
With ruefull chere I sawe where Hector stood:
Out of whoes eies there gushed streames of teares.

Surrey. Virgil. Aeneis, book ii.

He lives, but takes small ioy of his renowne;
For of that cruel wound he bled so sore,
That from his steed he fell in deadly swowne;
Yet still the blood forth gusht in so great store,
That he lay wallow'd all in his owne gore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 5.

Long press'd, he heav'd beneath the weighty wave,
Clogg'd by the cumbrous vest Calypso gave;
At length, emerging from his nostrils wide
And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book v.

Beneath the brain the point a passage tore,
Crash'd the thin bones, and drown'd the teeth in gore;
His mouth, his eyes, his nostrils pour a flood;
He sobs his soul out in the gush of blood.

Id. Ib. Iliad, book xvi.

Else vainly sweet yon woodbine shade
With clouds of fragrance fill the glade;
Vainly, the cygnet spread her downy plume,
The vine gush nectar, and the virgin bloom.

Mason. Ode to Memory.

And soon an arrowy and a flinty shower
Thick o'er our heads the fierce barbarians pour:
Nor pour'd in vain; a feather'd arrow stood
Fix'd in my leg, and drank the gushing blood.

Mickle. Lusiad, book v.

GUSSET, Fr. gousset, which the Academicians explain un bourson qu'on met en dedans de la ceinture de la culotte; also, cette pièce de toile qu'on met à la manche d'une chemise à l'endroit de l'aisselle. Neither of these explanations at all clearly express the shape of the piece of cloth commonly known as a Gusset in English needlework.

"A Gusset in Heraldry is," as Guillim teaches us, "one of the whimsical abatements of honour for a person either lascivious, effeminate, or a sot, or all; being formed by a line drawn from the dexter or sinister chief points, and falling down perpendicularly to the extreme base." (Dictionary appended to his Heraldry.) "In abating," saith Leigh, (as the same writer cites him, p. 459,) "there is but one Gusset; and he that is too much devoted to the smock shall wear the Gusset on the right side, but he that committeth idolatry to Bacchus, the Gusset on the left side shall be his reward. If he be faulty in both, then he shall bear both." This passage may be found, though not precisely in the same words, in The Accedens of Armourie, fol. 72. b.

GUST, n. } A stronger or more violent wind or GU'STY. } blast, Skinner, who derives from the Ger. giessen. It is perhaps gushed, gusht, gust. See GUSH.

A strong and sudden rush or blast (of wind); met.
of passion.

From which Cape of Comori vnto the aforesayd ilands we ranne in sixe dayes with a very large wind, though the weather were foule with extreme raine and gustes of windes.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. part ii. fol. 105. M. James Lancaster.

In which time wee had store of snowe with some gustie weather, the wind continuing still at West North-West against us.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. fol. 845. The Last Voyage of M. Th. Candish.

When suddenly doth rise a rougher gale,
With that (methinks) the troubled waves look pale.
And sighing with that little gust that blows,
With this remembrance seem to knit their brows.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. Queen Isabel to Mortimer.

Of which discord grew,
And in the barons' breasts so rough combustions rais'd,
With much expense of blood as long was not appeas'd,
By strong and tedious gusts held up on either side,
Betwixt the prince and peers with equal power and pride.

Id. Poly-olbion, song 17.

For once, vpon a rawe and gustie day,
The troubled Tyber, chafing with his shores,
Cæsar saide to me, Dar'st thou Cassius now
Leape in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?

Shakspeare. Julius Cæsar, fol. 110.

Perpetual showers, and stormy gusts confine
The willing ploughman, and December warns
To annual jollities.

J. Philips. Cider, book ii.

A fresher gale
Begins to wave the wood, and stir the stream,
Sweeping with shadowy gust the fields of corn.

Thomson. Autumn.

Fair was the blossom, soft the vernal sky;
Elate with hope we deem'd no tempest nigh:
When lo, a whirlwind's instantaneous gust
Left all its beauties withering in the dust.

Beattie. An Elegy.

GUST, v. } Lat. gustus; Fr. gout; It. and GUST, n. or } Sp. gusto; Lat. gustare; Fr. gouter; GUSTO, } It. gustare; Sp. gustar. From the GU'STABLE, } Gr. γεύεσθαι. Quod cum genera-
GUSTA'TION, } tim propriè significet quasi capio
GU'STFUL, } mihi, vel in usus meos, eximiè nota
GU'STFULNESS. } gustare.—Lennep.

To taste: the noun is applied to tastes of high relish, or savour; of exquisite vivacity.

GUSSET.
GUST.

GUST.

GUT.

The palate of this gusts nothing high.
Roger L'Estrange. On Beaumont and Fletcher's Plays.
 Sicilia is a so-forth; 'tis farre gone,
 When I shall gust it last.
Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 279.

Were they as dear, they (sprats) would be as toothsome (being altogether as wholesome) as anehovies; for then their price would give a high gust unto them in the judgment of pallat-men.

Fuller. Worthies. Essex.

They placed themselves in the order of beasts and birds, and esteemed their bodies nothing but receptacles of flesh and wine, larders and pantries; and their soul the fine instrument of pleasure and brisk perception of relishes and gusts, reflexions and duplications of delight; and therefore they treated themselves accordingly.

Taylor. Sermon 15. fol. 141.

The touch acknowledgeth no gustables
 The taste no fragrant smell.

More. On the Soul, part ii. book ii. can. 2.

And if any have been so happy as truly to understand Christian annihilation, extasis, exolution, liquefaction, transformation, the kisse of the spouse, gustation of God, and ingression into the divine shadow, they have already an handsome anticipation of heaven; the glory of the world is surely over; and the earth in ashes unto them.

Sir T. Browne. Urne-Burial, ch. v.

The said season being passed, there is no danger or difficulty to keep it gustful all the year long.

Digby. Of the Power of Sympathy.

No gustless or unsatisfying offal.

Sir T. Browne. Miscellanies, p. 13.

By cares depress'd in pensive hyppish mood,
 With slowest pace the tedious minutes roll,
 Thy charming sight, but much more charming gust,
 New life incites, and warms our chilly blood.

Gay. Wine.

A gustable thing seen or smelt, excites the appetite, and affects the glands and parts of the mouth.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book v. ch. viii.

Then his food doth taste savourily, then his diversements and recreations have a lively gustfulness, then his sleep is very sound and pleasant; according to that of the preacher, the sleep of the labouring man is sweet.

Barrow. Sermon 19. vol. iii.

His cook contrived some sort of meat, which, put into a frame, so resembled a herring, that it was extremely satisfactory both to this prince's eyes and gusto.

King. Art of Cookery, let. ix.

He is not at all the better for them, because he is out of the capacity of enjoying them; he feels no relish or gusto in them.

Sharpe. Sermon 3. vol. vi.

GUSTAVIA in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphica, order Polyandria, natural order Myrti. Generic character: calyx four or six cleft; corolla, petals four or six; berry dry, four or five-celled.

Two species; trees with large white flowers; natives of Guiana and Surinam.

GUT, v. } Goth. giutan; A. S. geot-an; D. ghie-

GUT, n. } ten; Ger. giessen; to flow, to pour forth.

D. gote canalis, Junius derives from the A. S. geot-an, effundere. Minshew, the Eng. gut, from the D. ghieten, quia recrementa corporis per intestina effunduntur.

That through which any thing flows or pours forth; the guts of an animal; the Gut of Gibraltar.

To gut; to draw out the guts, the bowels; generally, to empty.

And þoru ys wombe smot a knyf, and ys gottes to drog.

R. Gloucester, p. 289.

He bet hem so bope. he barst neih hure guttas.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 137.

God for his manace him so sore smote,

With invisible wound, ay incurable,

That in his guttas carfe it so and bote, (bit,)

Till thatte his peines weren importable.

Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14519.

GUT

GUTTER.

Against full fatted bulls
 As forceth kyndled yre the Lyons keen;
 Whose greedy guts the gnawing hunger pricks:
 So Macedons against the Persians fare.

Vncertain Auctors. The Death of Zoras.

Their numbers [pilchards] are incredible, imploying a power of poor people in polling, (that is beheading,) gutting, splitting, powdering, and drying them; and then (by the name of Fumadoes) with oyle and a lemon, they are meat for the mightiest Don in Spain.

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Next to the bag of the stomacke, men and sheepe have the small guts, called lactes, through which the meat passeth: in others it is named ile. Next unto which are the greater guts that reach into the paunch: and in man they are full of windings and turnings.

Holland. Plinie, book xi. ch. xxv.

Now the rotten diseases of the South, guts-gripping, ruptures, catarres, &c.

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 100.

What then was our writer's soul? was it brains or guts, or rather nothing at all, when he thus maim'd and murder'd the sense of his author?

Bentley. Remarks on Free Thinking, p. 240.

They make good slaves when bought young; but are, in general, foul feeders, many of them greedily devouring the raw guts of fowls.

Grainger. The Sugar-Cane, book ii. v. 75. note.

GUTTER, v. } Fr. gouttiere; from the verb Es-
GU'TTER, n. } gouter, guttatim transfluere, to flow
GU'TTER-TILE. } drop by drop. Skinner. More probably from Gut, ante, q. v.

That through which any thing flows or passes; now usually applied to a passage for water.

Now stont it thus, that sith I fro you went

This Troilus, right platly for to seine

Is through a gutter by a priuy went

Into my chambre come in all this rein.

Chaucer. The third Booke of Troilus, fol. 171.

Be as be may, for earnest or for game

He shall awake, and rise and go his waie

Out of this gutter, er that it be daie.

Id. Of Hypermetre, fol. 210.

Thou Asie shalt be the sepulchre of Rome; and thou Rome shalt be the sinke and gutter of the filthinesse of Asie.

Golden Boke. Letter 2. sig. A. a.

He digged out a gutter to receiue the wine when it wer pressed, and he sette furthermore a wyne presse in it.

Udall. Luke, ch. xx.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds

The gutter'd rockes, and congregated sands,

Traitors ensteep'd, to enlogge the guiltlesse keele,

As hauing sence of beautie, do omit

Their mortall natures, letting go safely by

The diuine Desdemona.

Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 316.

Which with a blow, the cleeves in sunder crackt,

As with an earthquake violently rent,

Whence came so strong and rough a cataract,

That in the stones wore gutters as it went.

Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, book iii.

The 28. day of Aprill, being her funerall day, at which time the cittie of Westminster was surcharged with multitudes of all sorts of people in their streetes, houses, windows, leads, and gutters, that came to see the obsequie.

Stow. Queene Elizabeth. Anno 1603.

Stow'd bibulous above I see the sands,

The pebbly gravel next, the layers then

Of mingled moulds, of more retentive earths,

The gutter'd rocks, and mazy-running clefts.

Thomson. Autumn.

And 'tis the village-mason's daily calling,

To keep the world's metropolis from falling,

To cleanse the gutters, and the chinks to close.

Dryden. Juvenal. Satire 5.

A promontory wen, with grisly grace,

Stood high, upon the handle of his face:

His blear eyes ran in gutters to his chin.

Id. Ib. Satire 6.

GUTTER.
—
GUZE-
RAT.

When puss, wrapt warm in his own native furs,
Dreamt soundly of as soft and warm amours;
Of making gallantry in gutter-tiles,
And sporting on delightful faggot-piles.

Butler. Dialogue between Cat and Puss.

It [a toad] eat blowing flies and humble-bees that come from the rat-tailed maggot in gutters, or, in short, any insect that moved.
Pennant. British Zoology, vol. iii. appen. 1. On the Toad.

GUTTLE. Diminutive of gut.

To fill or cram the gut: to eat greedily or gluttonously.

With Methos, Gluttony, his guttling broth'r,
Twin parallels, drawn from the self-same line;
So foully like was either to the oth'r,
And both most like a monstrous paunched swine.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 8.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expense,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence.

Dryden. Persius, Satire 6.

GUTTULOUS, from the Lat. gutta, a drop.

In form or shape of a drop; after the manner of drops.

So it [ice] is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hayl, (which is also a glaciation,) and figured in its guttulous descent from the ayr. Sir T. Brown. Vulgar Errors, book ii. ch. i.

To conclude from hence, that air and water have both one common passage, were to state the question upon the weaker side of the distinction, and upon a partial or guttulous irrigation, to conclude a total descension. Id. Ib. book iv. ch. viii.

GU'TTURAL, n. } Lat. guttur; Fr. guttural.

GU'TTURAL, adj. } Perhaps, says Vossius, from gula, quasi guluttur; or rather from the sound, which the food makes in most animals when passing through the throat.

Of, or pertaining, or belonging to the throat.

That tongue [the Welch] (like the Hebrew) employs much the guttural letters. Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxviii.

A skilful critic justly blames

Hard, tough, crank, guttural, harsh, stiff names.

Swift. Directions for making a Birth-day Song.

Mute as a fish, all he could strain,

Were some horse gutturals forc'd with pain.

Somerville. A Padlock for the Mouth.

Many words, which are soft and musical in the mouth of a Persian, may appear very harsh to our eyes, with a number of consonants and gutturals. Sir W. Jones. On Eastern Poetry, ess. 1.

GUTTU-LOUS.
—
GUZE-
RAT.

G U Z E R A T.

Names.

GUZERAT, softened down from the original Indian names Gurjjara and Gujjara, is a large Province of Ancient and Modern Hindúst'hán, lying between the 21st and 24th parallels of North latitude, and bounded by Ajmír, Málwah, Khándésh, the Sea, Kach'h, and a small portion of Multán. It may be estimated at 320 miles in length and 180 in breadth. Its name was formerly restricted to the Peninsula between the Gulfs of Kach'h and Kambáyah. In the time of Akbar, however, the Súbah, or Province, had nearly the same extent as at present. (Ayín Akbarí, ii. 61.) It was then divided into nine Serkárs (Districts) and 198 Per-ganahs, (Townships.) Its present subdivisions are these:

Divisions.

- | | |
|----------------|---------------------|
| 1. Patanwárah. | 8. B'haróch. |
| 2. Jetwár. | 9. Nándód. |
| 3. Chowal. | 10. Atavísí. |
| 4. I'derwárah. | 11. Súrat. |
| 5. Wágar. | 12. Cherúter. |
| 6. Champánír. | 13. Ahmed-ábád. |
| 7. Baródah. | 14. Gujarát Proper. |

In some of the central districts, and towards the Eastern boundary, it is hilly, rocky, and in many places covered with forests: but on the North-West it is either flat and barren, or swampy. The coasts are full of creeks and inlets, peculiarly favourable to piracy. This Province was, therefore, long, both by land and sea, the favourite resort of banditti. Though traversed by several considerable rivers, as the Taptí, Nerbadá, the Mahí, Mahéndrí, and Sábermatí, the Country is in many places, from its abundance of rock and sand, ill supplied with water. It is also continually broken by deep ravines, which, in the rainy season, form deep torrents. The soil in the more level tracts is often deep, requires no manure except cow-dung and refuse cocoa-nuts, and affords pasturage to large herds of cattle and many horses. Besides indigo, opium, and saltpetre, hemp is raised, and coarse cloths are manufactured in this Province; but the cultivation of the poppy has been prohibited since 1803, for the double purpose of protecting the monopoly established in Bengal, and checking the use of opium among the natives, who are much addicted to it. The inequality of its surface and extent of its forests make the establishment of any thing like order in this Province peculiarly difficult; the more so, as several Tribes of marauders have for Ages made it their abode. It had also, from the same causes, always escaped complete subjugation, and had been constantly a place of refuge to fugitives from other quarters. A greater variety of Tribes, Castes, and Sects, is therefore to be found here than, perhaps, in any other part of India.

Tribes.

1. The Grásiás, or Girásiyás, are a class of proprietors who claim a portion of the lands in every village, on a tenure, the title to which, as well as its origin, is very doubtful. Their name is probably derived from grás, a mouthful; and their lands were, as it is supposed, first granted in the earlier part of the XVIIth century, as a douceur, to induce them to leave the rest of the Country unmolested; for it must be understood, that these worthies were B'híls and other robbers by profession. The lands thus granted were exempted from duties, and called vántá, or tódá girás,
i. e. a ready-money-mouthful, in consequence of a trifling sum paid in lieu of a quit-rent. These claims are saleable like other property; and have, in the course of time, become so intricate, as to defy the patience of the most laborious investigator. The Grásiás, however, have long been in the habit of adopting a more expeditious method of settling disputed claims, by raising an armed force, and desolating the lands of their opponent till he comes to terms. The Government, by undertaking, in 1814, to settle these claims by its own authority, seemed to have adopted the only method by which the ruin and anarchy, inherent in the former system, could be prevented.

Grassias.

2. In the neighbourhood of the great morasses, called Ran, and the River Mahí, as well as in some other parts of the Province, there is a most daring race of marauders, called Kúlís, by whom cleanliness is con-

Coolies.

GUZERAT. sidered as a mark of cowardice, or perhaps as a sort of heresy; for their chárans (vates, bards or priests) make it a rule to be dirtier than any of the laity. Powdered charcoal mixed up with oil is the compound with which they colour their garments. Their Chiefs are Náródás, or outcast Ráj-púts; and it is probable that the whole Tribe had a similar origin. Their name is said to be a Persian word, (kulí), derived from a Turkish one, (kúl), which signifies "slave."

Bhatts, or Bharotts.

3. The B'háts, B'hatts, or Bhárats, are another class of people, whose habits and character present many singularities. They were, in all probability, originally itinerant bards or minstrels, and recorders of genealogies, such as are common in India. These persons act as beggars or hawkers, when other trades fail; but their most lucrative and usual occupation is that of brokers between the Grásíás, Kulís, or B'híls, and the Collectors of the Revenue, on receiving a small percentage. They become security for the sums due to Government from landholders of those classes. Their obstinacy and regard for their engagements is proverbial; and when compelled to break their word, they often avenge themselves either by committing suicide, or by killing some old or infant member of their family, in the presence of the person who has caused them to depart from their promise. The Méwásís, or landholders of the above classes, have, however, gradually acquired such a confidence in the justice of the British Government, that the intervention of B'háts, as agents, has ceased since 1817.

Charons.

4. The Charans, another class of itinerant bards, are the carriers of Gujarát, and being held sacred by the banditti who infest its forests, they protect themselves and the travellers committed to their care, by swearing to destroy themselves, if the persons whom they escort are plundered.

Ungreas.

5. The Angríás are money-carriers, who conceal the money intrusted to them in their quilted jackets. They are divided into companies, each of which has a Mard'há, or head, who is responsible for the fidelity of his clan.

Puggees.

6. The Pagés are thief-takers, who trace delinquents early in the morning by their footsteps.

Oberas.

7. The D'hérás are outcasts, like the Paríárs on the Malabar coast, and are employed as bearers of burdens on the high roads, and removers of filth from towns and villages. They delight in carrion and the flesh of beasts which have died of disease, are fond of intoxication, and much addicted to petty thieving; resembling in many respects the Gypsies, who are probably descendants of Hindú outcasts. The D'hérás pretend to cure diseases by charms, but it does not appear that they tell fortunes. They have priests of their own, styled garudas, who like carrion as well as their lay brethren.

Koonbees, or Koom-
bees.

8. The Kunbí is a pure Súdra, and, in Gujarát, generally a husbandman. He cautiously avoids killing any animal, and eats neither flesh nor fish. The Kunbís are said to have emigrated from Ajmír, often hold grants of land under Government, are then called Patél, and are subdivided into three inferior Tribes, called Liwá, Kajjá, and Arjáná.

Lawa.
Kutja.
Ajaana.
Nyul.

9. There are 84 Nayát, or families of Bráhmans, variously subdivided, and not allowed to intermarry.

Vaseya.

10. The Vaniyá, or Banyans, (i. e. traders,) are numerous, and many of them repair to foreign Countries, where they remain for several years, while others are continually moving from place to place in Hindúst'hán: hence the Gujarátí dialect, which is closely allied to the Hindí, but written in a peculiar modification of the Déva-nágarí, may be called the commercial language of India. It is worthy of remark, that some of the Banyás are Awaks, or seceders from the Brahmanical faith.

GUZERAT
Awaks, or Seceders.

11. The Jains are very numerous, and have handsome Temples; and, excepting at Bombay, there is no part of the world where

Jynes, or Jines.

12. The Pársís, or Gebrs, are found in such numbers as in this Province.

Parsees, or Guebres.

13. The *Bóhrah*s, that singular race, who are Jews in feature, habit, and character, but Mohammedans in faith, are found in all the larger Towns. Their parsimony, love of lucre, and skill in striking a bargain, are as remarkable as their total ignorance of their origin. (See Asiat. Res. vii. 338.)

Boras.

Cotton manufactures are the staple branch of commerce in Gujarát, and the looms of Surat have long been celebrated for the cheapness and excellence of their cloths; the art of weaving is almost universally practised. The animal and vegetable productions of this Province are similar to those of its neighbours; but the abundance and frequent use of the bábul (Mimosa Farnesiana) in the North-Western Districts may be noticed. The gum of that tree furnishes the poorer natives with food, and its thorns make it a sufficient fence against all intruders but lions, of which there are many in the woods. The settled and more civilized natives are remarkable for their love of opium, which is always presented at visits; for their intimating despair by dressing themselves in yellow; for their belief that the loss of the nose is a protection against the evil eye; and for the frequency of the sati, (self-immolation,) even when no affection could exist between the deceased and the wife who mounts the pile with him. Another peculiarity is the custom of leaving a lighted lamp in a shop, to show that its owner is insolvent, and has therefore decamped; and still more extraordinary is the persuasion, that the doing this will ensure success to him afterwards. A proceeding, called j'hánsá, was formerly common in this Province; it bore some analogy to the roads, to which the border feuds anciently gave birth among our countrymen, and consisted in threats, either made or executed, of destroying plantations, burning stacks, or inflicting other personal injuries, for the purpose of enforcing the payment of debts, or compelling a compliance with some unjust demand. This outrageous mode of seeking for redress, or forcing compliance, is now seldom practised. The feudal and predatory habits of so large a portion of the inhabitants rendered most parts of Gujarát, till of late, a very insecure abode; so that single farm-houses are rarely found. The population is everywhere collected in villages; but in many parts it is very thinly scattered. The neighbourhood of Surat is closely peopled, but the Northern and Western Districts are almost in a state of desolation; and, considering the number and strength of the bands of robbers by which they have been so long infested, it is wonderful that they should have any inhabitants at all.

Manufactures.

Customs.

The principal rivers are as follows: 1. the Nerbada Rivers. (Narmadà, the softener) rises nearly in the centre of Nerbudda. Amar-kantak, the highest land in Hindúst'hán, near the source of the Són, in $22^{\circ} 54'$ North, and $82^{\circ} 10'$ East. Just above Mandala, it descends from the highlands by a fall, described by the natives as very considerable, and makes its way to the sea, with few windings, in a course nearly due West. Its whole length may be estimated at 700 miles. It is everywhere considered as GUZERAT. sacred, but more so in some places than others, especially at its source, where there is a Temple much frequented by pilgrims. Near Ankár Mándáttá its bed contains sál-gráms, or sacred pebbles, the supposed emblems of Siva. It forms the line of separation between Hindús'thán and the Dekkan, (Dakshin, i. e. South,) and also between the Countries where the two great Indian Eras are used; that of Vikramáditya, beginning B. C. 56, being used to the North, while the Era of Saka, or Sáli-váhan, (A. D. 78,) is followed to the South of the Nerbadá. 2. The Tapatí, or Tapti, flows into the sea 20 miles below Surat, having run with a Westerly course about 460 miles from the Injárdí hills in the Province of Góndwána. There are shoals near the mouths of both these rivers. 3. The Mahéndrí, Mahí, or Maíhi, rises not far from Mandó (or Mandúgar'h) in the Málwah hills, near the source of the Chambal, and running first in a direction West of North, suddenly winds round to the South-West, and discharges itself into the Gulf of Cambáyah, near the site of that City, after having travelled nearly 380 miles. 4. The Sábermatí, rising in the hills nearly due South of Uday-púr, and to the South-West of the Lake D'háber, or Déber, soon takes a direction nearly due South, and falls into the gulf a little to the West of the Mahí. These may be termed the Southern Rivers in the Province. 5. The Banás, its principal Northern River, rises in the Province of Ajmír, and has, for a considerable part of its course, a large body of water, but when approaching the Gulf of Kach'h, it gradually loses itself in the Ran, or great morass.

I. The District of Patanvád, or Patanwár, is the North-Western boundary of the Province. It is contiguous to the great morass called Ran, and is crossed by the Banás and Sereswatí Rivers. Patan, (i. e. the City,) in 23° 48' North, 72° 2' East, anciently called Neherwára, is its Capital. Anhalvád (i. e. the field of Anhal) is the original and proper form of that name. It stands on the Southern side of the Sarawatí, but is now in a state of decay little indicative of its having been once at the head of an independent State. The seat of Government was first removed to Champánír, and then to Ahmed-ábád. In the time of Akbar, the Town had been reduced from 360 to 84 púrahs, or quarters, (Ayín Akb. ii. 63.) though it had then two forts and contained 1000 Mosques. Its Serkár (District) contained 16 Mahalls, (Townships,) and yielded a revenue of 600,535,426 dáms. (£1,766,574.) Néyer is a small, almost unexplored tract to the North and West of Patan-wád, sandy and ill-supplied with water, bounded on the West by the Great Ran, and inhabited principally by Kúlís, who are all thieves and robbers. Their weapons, the tír-kámtá and a hard curved stick, are powerfully wielded, and their horses are the best in the Province. Wáu, or Wáv, their Capital, in 24° 11' North, and 71° 23' East, is only a few miles from the edge of the morass which separates them from Kach'h. T'harád, the chief Town of another small District, is in 24° 15' North, and 71° 32' East, and 12 miles to the East of Wáu, 40 miles to the West of the confines of Dísá. This miserable tract, which has not water enough for the cultivation of potherbs, and is obliged to import even onions, maintains 33 villages, and used to pay a revenue of 20,000 rupees (£2000) to its Chiefs, who spent three times that sum, and raised the deficiency by plunder. Good horses and camels are bred in it, and the Town of T'harád contains 2700 houses, one-ninth of which are inhabited by banyans, or foreign traders. Its dilapidated fortifications are sufficient to protect it against its predatory neighbours, but its territory is liable to perpetual irruptions from Sind'h, and its inhabitants never pay the sums due to their Sovereign, the Rájá of Jaúd'h-púr, unless compelled by an armed force. D'handar is a small District North-East of T'harád, said to be surprisingly fertile, and to contain 180 Townships. Pálhan-púr, in 24° 11' North and 72° 20' East, is the head of a large Perganah in the Serkár of Patan, containing 130 villages. It has a brick fort, built by Bahádur Khán in the year of Vikramáditya 1306, (A. D. 1362,) and gates defended by ravelines mounting some small guns. Its population amounted, in 1813, to upwards of 30,000 persons. It pays 50,000 rupees (£5000) yearly to the Gáikwár, and from its vicinity to Sind'h and Ajmír, or Rájputánah, is a post of some importance. The happy and judicious arrangement by which this territory was saved, in 1813, from anarchy, and the Town from the horrors of a bombardment, is one of the many occurrences, in the modern History of India, which shows how greatly that Country stood in need of a vigorous as well as beneficent Government, and what inestimable advantages have already accrued to the peaceful and industrious classes of its inhabitants from the supremacy of the British Power. Dísá, in 24° 9' North, and 72° 8' East, is the residence of another petty Chieftain, having many villages inhabited by B'híls and Méwásís in his territory. It is now united under the same Chief with Pálhanpúr. The tract included between Rád'hanpúr, Pátrí, the Ran, and Bíchárjí, is called Wadyár, or Waryár, (i. e. the Herdsman,) on account of its excellent pasturage. It is much infested by Kúlís and other marauders. Rád'hanpúr, in the Serkár of Patan, and in 23° 40' North, and 71° 31' East, is surrounded by an old brick wall flanked with towers, but much decayed. It is supposed to contain 30,000 inhabitants, and is a sort of emporium for the trade of Márwár and Kach'h. G'hí, (clarified butter,) wheat, and hides, are its staple productions. Its manufactures are trifling, as most of its inhabitants are farmers, in consequence of which the plain in which it stands is highly cultivated. Its Sovereign, who is the descendant of a self-appointed Súbahdár of Gujarát, though not tributary to the Gáikwár, acknowledges him as his feudal superior, and engages to defend the passes between Gujarát, Ajmír, and Sind'h, (all of which are in his territory,) on condition of being released from all tribute. His annual revenue amounts to about 150,000 rupees, (£15,000,) and his force to three or four baírahs (companies) of infantry and 350 horse. Samí, the place of this Nuwáb's residence, in 23° 32' North, and 71° 43' East, is a wretched Town surrounded by a swamp, and in the midst of a naked Country. Kákréz (Kákréjí, in the Ayín Akberi) is the name of another District adjoining to the last on the East. Tarah, or T'harah, its Capital, in 23° 52' North, and 71° 41' East, is an unfortified Town, containing about 12,500 inhabitants, and placed in a barren Country ill-supplied with water. Mórwará, in 23° 48' North, and 71° 15' East, which has a large tank, is one of the most flourishing places in the District.

II. To the North-West of Kákréz is the District of Jatwár, on the edge of the Ran, and intersected by the Banás, Saraswatí, and Rúpaín, or Rúpeín. Its name is derived from that of an Indian Tribe, widely diffused Tuptee.

Mhye, Mahy, or Mylie.Saubur-muttee.Bannass, or Bunnass.I. Patten, or Puttunwar.

Runn.

Neherwara.

Neyer.

Waw.

Therraud.

Deesa.

Dunder.

Pal :anj :oor.

Deesa.

Bheels.

Mewassies.

Rahdunpoo.

Worrear.

Sommees.

Kakreze.

Tarah, or Therah.

Morewara.

II. Jutwar.

Roopeyne.

GUZERAT. through Northern and Western Hindúst'hán, and even to the East of the Indus. The Játs, Jats, or J'hats, ^{Jatts, Jatto, Jats, or J'hats.} form a large part of the population in the Penj-áb and Countries immediately to the North of it, and are also found in Multán, Sind'h, and Bálúchistán, and Makelwád, or Makelwár, where they bear the name of Jagdál, Jókhná, and Númrí, but from their features, habits, manners, and customs, there can be little doubt that they have all a common origin, such of them as are Musulmans having been converted soon after the Mohammedan invasion. The Játs inhabiting Jatwár, Sind'h, and Kach'h are Mohammedans by Religion, marauders by profession, more perhaps from a bold and restless spirit, than from want of industry, for many parts of their Country are well cultivated. Much, however, of the most laborious work is done by slaves, the Samehjá, an inferior Tribe, formerly numerous in Sind'h, and reduced to slavery by their more ferocious neighbours. The women among the Játs, though ugly, and no way improved in appearance by their coarse black clothes, have a singular influence over the men; and a wife, when discontented, bullies her husband into a divorce by breaking his furniture, turning his house upside down, and making open war upon him, till he gives his consent to her wishes. Pátrí, in 23° 7' North, and 71° 51' East, is one of the largest and best fortified Towns in this District. It has three walls, now very ruinous, a ditch never dry, and a fine tank on its North side. The inhabitants are principally Rájpúts and Kúmbís, (husbandmen,) and its Chief, or Desáí, of that caste, has the authority of a Thákur, or independent Prince. He does not, however, assume this title, nor was he acknowledged as such by the Peshwás, from whom his family received their fief.

III. To the East of the Patan-wár (District, or Circle of Patan) is Chowál, the chief Towns of which are Masáná, Bija-púr, and Mánásá, all of which are still in the hands of its native rulers. Bija-púr, of which the chief Town, bearing the same name, is in 23° 37' North, 72° 46' East, was ceded to Great Britain, and attached to the Collectorship of Keirá.* In no part of our Indian dominions were oppression and misrule more prevalent. The wealthiest of the inhabitants were rájpúts, kúlis, and other sacred Tribes, who claimed exemption from all contributions to the support of Government, and exercised, in many instances, an unlimited sovereignty over the cultivators and traders, the only industrious part of the community. This Perganah was also entirely surrounded by the Gáikwár's territory; and the apparent impossibility of restoring order in a district so circumstanced, wherein an asylum was easily obtained by every offender, made it expedient to exchange Bija-púr for a Perganah adjoining to the other British territories; and, in 1817, after a tedious negotiation, Kaparwanj, with a part of Neryád, in the neighbourhood of Keirá, and Karód, South of the Taptí, were given up by the Gáikwár as an equivalent for Bija-púr, which was restored to him.

IV. I'der-wár, separated from Chowál by the Sábar-matí, forms a part of the North-Eastern frontier of this Province. I'der, Ahmad-nagar, and Mál-púr, are its chief Towns. It is subject to the Gáikwár, but produces little revenue on account of the turbulent and unsettled character of its population. Its Capital, I'dar, is in 23° 53' North, and 73° 2' East.

V. Wágar, to the East of I'derwár, is a large District in the same parts of the Province on the Mahí River. Its chief Towns are Bānswará and Dúngar-púr. The first in 23° 38' North, and 74° 35' East, was formerly subject to Uday-púr, but had become independent, before it fell under the notice of the British Government. The second, in 23° 54' North, 73° 50' East, also Capital of a small Principality, formerly belonged to Uday-púr, and was received under the British protection in 1817.

VI. Chánpánír, or Chanpánír, the Eastern frontier of the Province of Gujarát, is bounded by the Mahí, and the Nerbadá, and separated from Málwah by smaller streams. In Akbar's time it contained nine Mahalls, produced a revenue of 10,283,614 dāms, (£30,246,) and maintained a force of 1600 infantry and 550 cavalry. The citadel of its ancient Capital, also called Pavángar'h, in 22° 31' North, and 73° 41' East, placed on a rock rising in the midst of a nearly level Country, and towering alone over the neighbouring hills, seems formed to command the South-Eastern angle of the Province. Its height is about 2500 feet above the level of the plain, and on some sides it is almost perpendicular. It is visible from the Jámí Mesjid of Ahmed-ábád, 70 miles distant. The City was placed at the foot of this lofty rock, and the wrecks of its ancient magnificence extend for several miles to the North, but are now covered with thick wood. They are almost all of Hindú origin, but Halól, one of its suburbs, now four miles distant, has the remains of many Mohammedan structures. The present Town is of an oblong figure, about three-fourths of a mile long, and half a mile broad. It is surrounded by a stone wall, flanked with towers, and built by Sultán Mahmúd Gujarátí, but not more than one half of it is now inhabited, the rest being overgrown with wood. The inhabitants are silk-weavers, and the water of the place is believed to give strength and durability to the colours of their silks. There is an ancient Hindú Temple of Kálí in one of the forts on the summit of a mountain, which is therefore considered as sacred, and being very difficult of ascent, is also deemed impregnable by the natives; a detachment, however, of the Bombay army took it in 1803. In 1812, the Town contained 400 houses, not above half of them inhabited, so that its population, probably, did not then exceed 1000 persons. Lúnawará, in 23° 8' North, and 73° 43' East, is the Capital of a petty State in some degree dependant on the Chief of Chánpánír. The soil is comparatively level and very fertile, bounded by the Mahí on one side, and separated from Málwah on the other by a chain of hills, the narrow defiles of which, afford the only passage into Gujarát in that direction. The whole territory, not more than 35 miles long, and 17 or 18 broad, is one of the most beautiful in this Province, presenting a great variety of rich and picturesque scenery. The Town is well fortified in the Indian fashion, and about three miles in circumference. Its secluded situation, vicinity to strong posts, and position with respect to the neighbouring States, are advantageous both to its security and commerce. Its inhabitants are industrious and skilful workmen, especially in arms and military accoutrements. From some negligence, or misunderstanding, between the different Indian Presidencies, a Treaty made with this little State, in 1803, was annulled

V. Waugur.
Banswara.
Doongur-poor.

VI. Cham-panir, or Chum-paneer.

Powanghur

Lunawara.

* Perhaps this name should be spelt Kairá, or Káirá. The true spelling of many names in this Province is yet undetermined, as documents in the native languages are not easily, if at all, to be procured in England, and no fixed system of orthography is followed by the authorities cited.

GUZERAT, in 1806; and the wretched inhabitants were thereby abandoned to "the tender mercies" of Sindhya. Soonth. Sūnt'h, in 23° 13' North, 73° 55' East, is contiguous to Lūnawārā, and though seated in an open and fertile country, as well as strong by position, the Town with its fort occupying the side and foot of a rocky hill, is a miserable place, of importance only as commanding some difficult defiles. This part of the Province is the native Country of the B'hils, or B'hills, who, mixing little with Hindūs of any other race, speak the Gujarātī dialect with peculiar purity. Barreah. Barīyā, another Principality in this part of the Province, is remarkable as one of the few petty Indian States still existing in a state of entire independence. The Town, in 22° 44' North, and 74° East, fills the whole of a narrow valley between the River Pannā and the adjoining hills. Pannah. It is neat, and has several brick houses, but its territory is entirely covered with wood, through which only one path leads. The Rājā, according to the old system of Hindū government, levies a Chaūt'h, or contribution of one-fourth, on the produce of the neighbouring Districts. Dohud. Dōhad, or Dwāhad, in 23° 6' North, 74° 26' East, is a fortified Town on the borders of Mālwah, surrounded by hills. Many of its inhabitants are Bōbrahs.

VII. Baroda. VII. Barōdah, or Barōd'h, the Capital of the Gāīkwār, (Gāīkvād, vulgarly called Guicowar,) the Mahrattah Sovereign of this part of India, is in 22° 21' North, 73° 23' East, and was, in the time of Aurēngzēb, a large and wealthy place; nor has it ceased to be so, notwithstanding the wars and desolation occasioned by the rise and dissensions of the Mahrattah Powers. Its bankers advanced, at different periods, between 1803 and 1806, no less than a crore (karōr) and a half of rupees, (£1,500,000,) in ready money, for the service of the British troops. Slightly fortified, and not adorned, by its modern rulers, with any handsome buildings, this Town is remarkable on account of the breadth of its principal streets, the ruins of some fine Mohammedan edifices, and a stone bridge over the River Viswa-mitra, almost the only one in the whole Province. Some fine and spacious wells in the neighbourhood are also deserving of notice. It was said to have, in 1818, a population of 100,000 persons. Brodera. The District of Barōd'h is well cultivated, and generally enclosed with hedges of mango and tamarind trees. Dubboi. Its soil is red and light. Dab'hōi, in 22° 9' North, and 73° 25' East, once a large and magnificent City, still containing 40,000 inhabitants, in 1780, and commanding a District which had 84 villages, is remarkable on account of its sculptured buildings, especially the Diamond Gate.

VIII. Broach. VIII. B'harōch, or Behrōch, was, in Akbar's reign, a Serkār, containing 14 Mahalls, or Townships, and yielding a revenue of 21,987,483 dāms, (£64,669.) (Ayīn Akberī, ii. 240.) It is one of the best cultivated and most populous tracts on the Western side of India, and came into the possession of Great Britain in 1803. Three-fourths of this District have a rich soil called kānem land, that of the remainder, nearer to the sea, is termed bāra, and is of an inferior quality. Twelve rupees (24s.) per acre is the annual assessment on the former, if cultivated every year, but twice that sum, if the land has lain fallow. The average assessment on the latter is three rupees per bīg'hā, or one guinea per acre. Rice and cotton are the staple products. In 1804-1805, the revenue of B'harōch was estimated at 1,150,609 rupees, (£115,061,) but in 1813-1814, it amounted to 1,608,172 rupees, (£160,817,) and GUZERAT it had a population of 157,983 souls; being about 173 to the square mile. Many lands, called vāntā, (p. 32,) are held by Grāsīās, and others exempted from contribution. To the District of B'harōch, the Perganah of Aklasīr, or Oklasīr, and Hānsūt, on the opposite side of the Nerbadā, are appended: and, in this District, from the continuity of the lands immediately subject to the British Government, a more efficient police can be maintained, than in those where the territory is mixed. The high prices of land, and increased industry of the inhabitants, are satisfactory evidences of the advantages derived from the substitution of personal or corporeal punishments for fines often inadequate; the only penalties exacted for murder, arson, and other outrages, before this change in the mode of administering justice was established. So lately as 1815, it suffered much from inroads by parties of armed B'hils from Rāj-pīplā. The Serkār of B'harōch, in Akbar's reign, had 14 Mahalls, (Perganahs, or Townships,) measured 349,771 bīg'hās, and yielded a revenue of 21,987,483 dāms, (£64,670.) (Ayīn Akberī, ii. 240.) The Capital, bearing the same name, is on the banks of the Nerbadā, or Rivā, in 21° 46' North, and 73° 14' East. According to the Hindū legends it was called B'hrīgu-kshētra, (changed by the Greeks into Barygaza,) i. e. the field of B'hrīgu, a celebrated Saint. Its high walls, flanked with towers, enclose an area about two miles and a half in circumference, and its streets, like those of all old Asiatic cities, are narrow, dirty, and crowded. It is abundantly supplied with provisions, particularly game and fish; and its trade is still considerable. Cotton, raw and manufactured, muslins and chintzes, inferior to those of Bengāl and the Carnatic, grain, nuts, seeds, and dye-woods, are its chief exports. Labour is dearer than in Bengāl; an able-bodied man can earn 7 paīsās (4d.) per diem; a woman 5; a child from 1 to 3. The most ordinary kind of food (rice?) costs about a halfpenny a pound; but a labourer can only afford milk or fish on feast days. In 1804 the population of the Town and suburbs amounted to 22,468 persons, and in 1812 to 32,716, about seventenths Hindūs, one-fifth Musulmāns, and one-tenth Pārsīs. A severe famine in 1791 carried off 25,295 individuals, or nearly one-third of the whole population, and 2351 houses were abandoned. Contributions, or rather a sort of tax, levied upon the Hindūs by the Brāhmins, to the amount of £1000 per annum, are assigned to the maintenance of the Pinjarā pōl, or hospital "for beasts," where bulls, cows, and monkeys are now the principal inmates. B'harōch was taken by the British forces in 1772, and again in 1782, after which it was ceded to Great Britain by the Mahrattahs, but it was soon afterwards made over to Mahādājī Sindhya. His successor, Daūlet Rāo Sindhya, having joined the Mahrattah confederacy, which was happily defeated by Lord Wellesley's Government, this place was again taken in 1803, since which time it has formed a part of the British dominions. Jambosier. Jambūsīr, in 22° 6' North, and 73° 3' East, is a Township in this District, on a river of the same name. The soil is everywhere fertile, the country enclosed, and the produce abundant. The Town, about two miles in circumference, is in no way remarkable; but the banks of the adjoining lake are covered with Hindū Temples, embosomed in clumps of mango and banyan trees, (Ficus Indicus and Mangifera Indica,) and the surface of the water almost concealed by the leaves and flowers of the sacred lotus.

GUZERAT. Ahmúd, or Amód, in $22^{\circ} 3'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 6'$ East, is a Perganah which produces the best cotton in the Province. This and the preceding Township belonged to the Peshwá, but were liable to a chaut'h, or tax, nominally of one-fourth, to the British Government, as possessor of B'haróch. It was fixed by Mahádájí Sínd'híá, in 1782, at 12,000 rupees (£1200) for Jam-búsir, and 6600 (£660) for Ahmúd, little more than one-third of the sums paid to the Nuwwábs of B'haróch.

Ahmood. Sinnúr, or Zinnór, on the steep bank of the Nerbadá, to the edge of which there is a flight of 100 steps, is in $21^{\circ} 56'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 35'$ East. It is a place of great sanctity, and has some fine Hindú Temples. Its District contains 50 villages, and is very productive of cotton, in the cultivation and manufacture of which its inhabitants are principally employed. Chándód, in $22^{\circ} 1'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 40'$ East, on the banks of the same river, and nearly opposite to Nándód, is much frequented by pilgrims and devotees, two-thirds of its inhabitants being Jógís, or Bráhmans. Its numerous and splendid Temples, though inferior to some others, are no unfavourable specimens of Hindú skill in sculpture and architecture.

IX. Naundode. IX. Nándód, in $21^{\circ} 55'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 43'$ East, on the South side of the Nerbadá, though the Capital of a District still held by Malrattah Chieftains, is itself comprehended within the jurisdiction of B'haróch.

Raj-peepia. Ráj-píplá, in $21^{\circ} 46'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 45'$ East, gives its name to an extensive tract, supposed to be 100 miles square, formerly supporting 500 Towns and villages, but now reduced by war and anarchy to 15 villages. It is tributary to the Gáikwár, but exposed to plundering irruptions from the B'híls lurking within its own boundaries and the neighbouring Provinces. In 1815, the Gáikwár interfered, and reduced these marauders to submission, but no less than 35 villages and more than 5000 houses had been reduced to ashes by them, in about six weeks in the Spring of the preceding year.

Neemoodra. At Nímúdrá, seven miles from Ratna-púr, South-West of Nándód, there are some considerable beds of cornelians. The pits, of which the deepest is about 50 feet, are worked perpendicularly downward, and extend horizontally for a short distance at the bottom; but the periodical rains cause their sides to fall in, and fresh pits are required every season. Quartzose, ferruginous gravel slightly imbedded in clay, is the soil in which the nodules, varying in weight from a few ounces to three pounds, are found. The stones have usually a blackish olive hue, sometimes a slight milky tinge, but their colour cannot be ascertained till they have been burnt; and they are then carried to Cambáyah, where they are polished and worked into an infinite variety of ornaments.

X. Atavee. X. At'hávisí, (i. e. the 28 Townships,) at the Southern extremity of this Province, lies between the Western G'háts, the Sea, and the District of Súrat. It is well watered, but has not any large streams. Its revenues, amounting to six lak'hs of rupees and a half (£65,000) per annum, were mortgaged to the East India Company, in 1802, by Anand Ráo Gáikwár, in payment of the sums expended on his behalf, in the war against his rival Malhár Ráo. Daman,* in $20^{\circ} 21'$ North, $72^{\circ} 58'$ East, is one of the few Indian posts still possessed by Portugal. Though much decayed, it has still some commerce; and its vicinity to the forests makes it convenient for ship-building. Its river affords a secure harbour for such ships as can cross the bar, and its white churches and houses make it conspicuous from the sea. Unái, a village 50 miles South-East of Súrat, has a warm spring, believed by the Hindús to have been miraculously formed by Ráma Chandra.

XI. Surat. XI. Surat (Súrat, or rather Surát, from Suráshtra, i. e. the excellent children of kings, As. Res. ix. 241.) is properly the South-Western boundary of this Province, At'hávisí being only held as a mortgage from the Gáikwár. The Serkár formerly contained 31 Mahalls, and yielded a revenue of 20,217,547 dáms, (£59,463.) Many parts of this District were possessed either by the Peshwá or the Gáikwár long after the rest was ceded to the British Government, and it was extremely difficult to determine the exact proportion belonging to each. The soil is considered as the property of Government, but is not resumable as long as it continues to be cultivated. The amount of the assessment is annually ascertained while the crops are on the ground; and the whole revenue in 1812 was 1,563,813 rupees, (£156,381,) and in 1813-1814, 1,597,648, (£159,764,) much waste land having in the interim been brought into cultivation. The intermixture of territory and the passage of armed bodies under pretence of enforcing the payment of Grásiá dues, have proved great impediments in the way of justice. It was, if possible, still more difficult to check piracy and highway robbery, both of which were covertly encouraged by the native Chiefs and officers, who participated in the plunder. The City of Súrat, long one of the largest and most populous in India, is on the Southern bank of the Taptí, in $21^{\circ} 11'$ North, and $73^{\circ} 7'$ East, and is likewise the Capital of the British territory in this Province. Its outer walls are flanked with towers, have 12 gates, and form a circuit of seven miles. Its inner walls are built in the same manner, but both are very ruinous. This latter enclosure, which alone forms the City, is filled with lofty crowded houses, and narrow dirty streets. The public buildings are contemptible, and the best of them in ruins. The Hospital (pinjará-pól) for sick and disabled animals was, fifty years ago, the most remarkable institution in Súrat; and its wards for rats, mice, bugs, fleas, &c. were visited, it may be conjectured, with only a cautious and distant curiosity by all but Hindús. The outer enclosure contains the suburbs, diversified by country-houses and corn-fields. The harbour is secure only during the prevalence of Northerly winds, and ships cannot come higher up the river than about 20 miles below Súrat. The weights in use there are reckoned thus: 40 sérs = 1 man = 1 quarter 9 lbs. 20 mans = 1 candí = 6 cwt., 2 quarters, 21 lbs = 749 lbs. In 1802-1803 the imports amounted to 5,332,677 rupees, (£533,267,) the exports to 5,360,024 rupees, (£536,002;) and in 1815-1816 to 6,371,900 rupees, (£637,190,) and 6,159,214 (£615,921) respectively. This city is supposed to be mentioned in the Rámáyana, one of the ancient Hindú Poems; and was, at a very early period, much frequented by the Indian Musulmans, being the port whereat they embark for Mekkah. The English factory was established in 1612; the Dutch in 1617. The French, in the early part of the last century, decamped without paying their debts, and their ships were seized as security for payment; but these vessels belonged to

* The Portuguese mode of spelling the name, Damão for Damaon, has given rise to the English corruption of it, Damaun, by which a long vowel is introduced before the last consonant.

GUZERAT. a second East India Company, which had no connection with the first. Súrat was attacked and taken by the Mahrattahs, as early as 1664; but the factory of the English East India Company, and a considerable part of the Town, were preserved from destruction by the courage and perseverance of Sir George Oxenden, the Chief, who, with the aid of the ships' crews, maintained his post, notwithstanding the numbers of the enemy. An adventurer named Mo'ayyenu'd-dén got possession of the castle in 1748, and constituted himself Nuwwáb of Súrat; his successors, Kutbu'd-dín, in 1763, Nizámu'ddín, in 1792, and Násir'u'd-dín, in 1800, were all invested by the East India Company. In the Spring of the last-named year, the administration, civil and military, was transferred, by Treaty, to the servants of the East India Company, on condition of an annual allowance to the Nuwwáb of one lak of rupees, (£10,000,) and one-fifth of the surplus revenue; and in 1803 the Mahrattahs were compelled to abandon their claims on this City, which had long been a continual source of intrigue and extortion. The population of Súrat seems never to have been accurately ascertained; nor, till of late years, have internal regulations been as regularly enforced, under the Bombay, as under the Madras and Bengal Presidencies. The returns, consequently, respecting the population of Súrat, were very vague and unsatisfactory so lately as 1816; but the number of inhabitants appears to have been then estimated at about 325,000. Individual security has been greatly promoted by an effectual police; but drunkenness and other gross immoralities are extremely prevalent, and murders by poison are apprehended to be very frequent, especially among the Hindús. Sáčín, or Sátra-gám, (i. e. the 17 villages,) in the Perganah of Chaurási, and in 21° 4' North, and 73° 5' East, is an independent Barony belonging to the Abyssinian family of Siddí, and given by the Peshwá, in 1791, to the Nuwwáb, Siddí 'Abdu'l karím Khán, in exchange for certain forts in the Kónkan. It produces an annual revenue of 75,000 rupees. (£7500.) The want of a proper police and an upright administration of justice in this petty domain, are often the occasion of much mischief in the Company's territories.

Sacheen.
Chourassee.

XII. Cherutter.

Cambay.

XII. Cherutter, on the Western bank of the Mahí, is a District belonging almost entirely to the Gáikwár; but a small portion of it, attached to the British territory, is comprehended in the Collectorship of Keírah. Cambay, (Kambáyah, or Kámbója,) in 22° 21' North, and 72° 48' East, near the gulf bearing the same name, stands on the estuary formed by the Mahí, in which the tides rise and fall 40 feet, so that ships cannot anchor near the shore, without being aground at low water. The City is three miles in circumference, surrounded by a brick wall, and full of splendid ruins, the materials for which must have been brought from very distant quarries. The Nuwwáb's Palace, which occupies much ground, the Jámi' Mesjid, or principal Mosque, a fine Hindú Temple, several Mohammedan sepulchral monuments in the suburbs, and some subterranean pagodas, especially that of the Jáins with its massive statues of Parswa-nát'ha, one of which is dated A. D. 1602, are all objects deserving of examination. Grain, esculent vegetables, oleiferous plants, and cotton are raised in considerable quantities in the neighbouring plains, but the husbandry is slovenly and negligent. Most of the 50,000 wells and tanks have been filled up; the manufactures of silks, chintzes, and gold cloth have greatly decayed; only inferior indigo is now produced; and GUZERAT even ivory and cornelians no longer form a considerable export; cotton and grain from Bombay being the products exported to the largest amount. "In the Vth century," says Major Wilford, (As. Res. ix. 194.) "Tamra-nagara, or Cambát, was the metropolis of the Balaráyás, and, perhaps, of the [Hindú] Emperors of the West also, when those two dignities happened to be united in the same person." Tamra-nagara (i. e. the Copper City) is believed to have been swallowed up by the sea. The same writer supposes this place to be the Asta and Trapera of the Periplus of Arrian, and the Astacampra of Ptolemy, but on grounds which require a more careful investigation. The Portuguese, in the beginning of the XVIth century, saw splendid ruins near Cambáyah; some remains of which are, probably, still to be found at Kavi, or Kavi gáong, (Kapila grám,) near Káná, to the South-West of the city, where there were lately temples and statues half buried in the sand. Kambáyah was conquered by the Moslims in A. D. 1297, and long flourished as the port of Ahmed-ábád. Mihmán khán, the Nuwwáb of Cambay in 1780, was son of the last Nuwwáb of that Principality, who fled to Kambáyah when the Mahrattahs conquered his territory, and was allowed to retain this port and the adjoining district as their tributary. His revenue did not then exceed two laks, (£20,000,) and his force consisted of 2000 Sind'hian and Arab foot and 500 horse. The extraordinary height of the tide in the gulf has been already mentioned; its rise is as sudden and irresistible as that of the Bore in the Ganges; and there are strong grounds for supposing that its bed has been gradually filling up for the two last centuries.

The District of Keírah, which may be considered as a part of the Mahrattah District of Cherutter, affords a satisfactory instance of the happy effects of a benevolent and well-directed system of government. Few, if any, parts of this Province, had suffered more from the demoralizing effects of the misrule which prevailed throughout Hindúst'hán on the decline of the Moghul Empire; and the religious and other feuds prevailing among the various Tribes of which its population consists, united, with its impervious rocks and forests, to give its inhabitants a hardy and untractable character, as favourable to predatory habits as it was hostile to peaceable and industrious pursuits. It required some time, therefore, and great judgment and perseverance, to repress the refractory spirit which had long been cherished; but by firm, yet mild and conciliatory measures, regularity and order were gradually introduced, and the rapidly increasing prosperity of the Country continued to afford an unquestionable evidence of the improved condition of its inhabitants. For the first ten years after Keírah became a part of the British territory, there was only one instance on record of an act of traga, or judicial assassination, by B'hát, (p. 33;) a more striking proof of the effect of good government, in repressing a deeply rooted superstition, could not easily be adduced. In 1811 and 1812, murder had become very rare; burglaries and petty larcenies were the common offences. Coining and, in many places, robbery in gangs were still practised. In the Perganah of D'hólká, a most singular kind of knight-errantry was not unusual, in 1812; it is termed B'háratái, or B'hárwatái, and consists in abandoning house and home, and living by indiscriminate plunder, till a debt is cancelled or an unwarrantable claim allowed. In such cases, the creditor deems nugget.

Tummet

Kairah.

GUZERAT. himself responsible for the mischief done, and, appalled by the thought of such responsibility, yields to the demand, however conscious of its injustice. The retrospect in 1813 was very encouraging. Murder had not become more frequent, gang-robbery had greatly decreased, even the Kúlis were much improved. In the Western Districts lately ceded, Civil feuds had been repressed, the incursions of the Kát'híes effectually checked, and the authority of the Gáikwár more firmly established. In 1805-1806, at the period of the cession, the annual revenue of Keirá amounted to 1,300,155 rupees, (£130,015, 10s. 3d.) in 1814, the amount was 1,638,365 rupees, (£163,836. 10s. 3d.) and in 1815-1816, 1,821,868 rupees (£182,186. 16s. 3d.) was the gross revenue; an increase of upwards of £50,000 per annum in ten years.

City of Keirá, the residence of the Judge and Magistrate, in 22° 47' North, and 72° 48' East, is a large Town at the confluence of the Wátrak* and the Seirí, two small rivers, surrounded by a brick wall, with many trees overshadowing the houses. Neryád, in 22° 44' North, and 73° East, is a walled Town three miles in circumference, still populous in 1780, and a place of great trade a century and a half ago. Its inhabitants are chiefly cotton manufacturers, and the revenue of the Township amounted to 17,000 rupees (£1,700) per annum, when it was ceded by the Gáikwár in 1803. Till 1817, the villagers were continually harassed by the exaction of free quarters, and by the damage which their crops sustained from the Gáikwár's troops sent to levy his revenue on the Perganah of Bálíj, lying in the centre of Neryád, in 22° 40' North, and 73° 10' East. It was, however, in that year valued at 40,000 rupees (£4000) per annum, and exchanged for Bija-púr.

XIII. Ahmed-ábád, (i. e. the abode of Ahmed,) on the banks of the Sábermatí, in 23° 1' North, and 72° 42' East, is the Mohammedan Capital of the Kingdom of Gujarát. Its high wall, with towers at intervals of 50 yards, and 12 gates, form a circumference of five miles and three quarters, and, in 1780, enclosed all that remained of this once populous City; while a fine tank, called Kukáriyá, about a mile in circuit, and the remains of mosques, palaces, aqueducts, and caravanserais, surrounding the City on every side, and occupying an area 30 miles in circumference, bear ample testimony to its former splendour. In the reigns of Sháh Jehán and Auréng-zéb, it was the seat of Asiatic magnificence and luxury, and one of the first commercial Cities in Asia. Its rich gold and silver-flowered damasks, its chintzes and calicoes, excellent indigo, fancyworks in gold, steel, enamel, ivory, and mother of pearl; its paper and japanned ware, exported from Cambay to the ports of Europe and Asia; its painters, poets, and news writers, celebrated by the travellers and historians of the XVIIth century, at that period attracted crowds of strangers from almost every part of the world; but now a few kimkh-ábs, (brocades,) lathered ware, and palanquins, are all the manufactures which Ahmed-ábád possesses. It still sends forth a number of players, minstrels, and conjurers, (b'háwí, or rázdári,) wrestlers, and jugglers, who are the delight of the villagers in Gujarát.† This City was built by Sultán Ahmed Sháh in A. D. 1426, and adorned, in the reign of Sháh Jehán, with the Sháh-bágh, or Royal Garden, planted by his son, the Súbahdár Karím, about two miles from the City. When the Moghuls ceased to have any power over the remoter Provinces, the Nuwwábs of Ahmed-ábád rendered themselves independent, and retained the sovereign authority till Raghu-Nát'h Ráo drove out Mihmán Khán, who was allowed to retain Kambáyah as a vassal of the Mahrattahs. In 1779, Ahmed-ábád was taken by the British troops, but was restored to the Peshwá in 1783, and retained by him till the final dissolution of his power in 1818; an event most fortunate for its oppressed and suffering population, who, to the ordinary miseries of a military despotism, had the disadvantage of being so far from the residence of their Sovereign, as to cut off all hope of redress by application to the Peshwá himself.

XIV. The Peninsula of Gujarát, bounded on the North by the Ran and the Gulf of Kach'h, on the West by the Indian Ocean, on the South and East by the Gulf of Cambay, (Kambáyah,) and on the North-East by the District of Ahmed-ábád, formed the Serkár, or District of Sórat'h, in the time of Akbar, (Ayín Akbarí, ii. 66. 242.) and is called Kát'hí-wár (Field of the Kát'híes) by the Mahrattahs. From East to West its diameter is about 190 miles, and 110 from North to South. According to Abú'l Fazl, it was formed into nine divisions; at present the subdivisions are nine, and are as follows:

- | | | |
|----------------|---------------|---------------|
| 1. J'háláwár. | 4. Baradá. | 7. Góhilwár. |
| 2. Hallár. | 5. Sóret'h. | 8. A'ratam. |
| 3. O'kamandal. | 6. Bábríáwár. | 9. Kát'híwár. |

The principal rivers in this Peninsula are, 1. the B'hádar, rising from Mount Mándawá near Jesden, and following a Southerly direction to the sea near Naví-bender. Its course is about 100 miles, but it is only navigable by small boats for about 18 miles from the sea. Another river, rising on the opposite side of the same hill, and running in an opposite direction, bears the same name. 2. The Machú, rising in the Sard'hár hills, and discharging its waters, by many streams, into the smaller Ran, at the head of the Gulf of Kach'h, near Málíá. It has a rocky bed, and a course of about 60 miles. 3. The Ají, in the bed of which gold-dust is found, rises from the same hills, and, taking a Westerly course, falls into the same gulf near Bálambá. 4. The Satrinj, springing from the Western side of the central group of hills, flows into the Gulf of Cambay near Tel-lájá. They are all increased by smaller streams, and each of its valleys, many of which are picturesque, is watered by clear brooks and springs. The hills are of no great height, but Cholulá is as wild as its barbarous inhabitants, and Pallitáná is remarkable for its Sráwak (Jáin) Temples; Réwatáchil, the highest peak in the Junágar'h hills, for its peculiar form and sanctity, according to the Hindú legends, and the Baradá chain extends from Gómatí quite across the Peninsula. The climate is generally dry and healthy, but hot winds prevail in May and June, and the North-Easterly winds, in December and January, bring thick fogs at night, which the sun disperses in the day-time. The (1) Rájpúts are subdivided into Jáhrejáhs,* J'hálá, Góhil, and Jétwá; (2) the Kát'híes, of which the principal families are the Wálá, K'há-char, and K'húman; (3) the Kúlis, Kats, and Sind'híes,

GUZERAT

XIV. Guze-
rat Proper.Rivers.
Bhadur.

Muchoo.

Ajee.

Sutrinje.

* The Batarak of the Ayín Akbarí, ii. 62.

† It may not be useless to remark that a beautiful species of Indian Grossbeak, the Fringilla Amandava, (Latham, Ornithol. xxxviii. 92.) takes its name from this City; its common appellation, Amadavat, being a slighter deviation from the original word, than the trivial name adopted by Latham and other Naturalists, which should have been Achmadabadensis, or Achmadica.

* Probably Járéjús, the Cháranjahs of the Ayín Akbarí, ii. 71.

GUZERAT. or Bâwârs; (4) the Kumbîs, Mérs, Ahîrs, and Reh-bâris. The first were, probably, emigrants from Sind'h. They are not rigid Hindûs, and the principal objects of their adoration are Sûrya (the sun) and Mat'ha Assapuri, (the female energy of Nature,) otherwise called Hingulâj Bhavânî. Among them the practice of infanticide prevailed, during many centuries, to an incredible degree. Pride and avarice, the fear of disgrace, or the difficulty of procuring a husband suitable to their rank, had established among the Râjpûts, in general, but especially among the Jahrejâhs, the odious custom of stifling their female children at their birth; a jar of milk was always placed beside the mother while in labour, ready to receive her infant, should it prove to be a female. The number of children thus destroyed in the Peninsula, in 1807, was estimated at upwards of 17,000. In that year, by the very meritorious exertions of Col. Walker, under the sanction of the late Mr. Duncan, the Governor of Bombay, the Chiefs were prevailed upon to sign an engagement to abolish this barbarous custom, and in some instances, at least, they have since fulfilled their engagements.

A sort of feudal system, peculiar to these Tribes, is prevalent throughout the Peninsula. To each of the younger sons of a Râj-pût Chief one or two villages are assigned as a maintenance; and he is expected, in return, to perform military service, and pay his quota to any general contribution levied on the whole Country. All the lands held on this tenure, by different members of the same family, are called the B'hâyâd, or Brotherhood, of that Chief; and if any members of this Brotherhood die without heirs, his lands revert to the Head of the family. The evils arising from this continual subdivision of landed property, and augmentation of the number of petty Sovereigns, (for each has unlimited authority over his own territory,) together with the idle and dissipated habits occasioned by their contempt for any occupation except a military life, are often augmented by a difficulty of maintaining their families, and a jealousy of their more prosperous relations. The law of retaliation is as firmly established among these Râjpûts as among the Arabs of the Desert, so that the Country is liable to be perpetually desolated by private feuds. In addition to this, the Mahrattah Chieftains, who, after the ruin of the Moghul Empire, made themselves masters of its dismembered fragments, were more solicitous for plunder than dominion, and contented themselves with the tribute, compulsorily raised by an annual invasion, most ruinous in its consequences, instead of taking formal possession of the territory, or entering into terms with its natural proprietors. The turbulence and confusion occasioned by such a system, had, in 1807, risen to a pitch which baffled all the Gâikwâr's endeavours to reestablish order in this part of his dominions. He, therefore, solicited the intervention of the British Government, and Col. Walker, the meritorious officer already mentioned, was despatched into Kât'hiwâr with a detachment from the Bombay army, in order to root out two bands of robbers established at Mâliâ and K'handadâr, suppress the pirates who infested the coasts, and advance the progress of the negotiations pending with Kach'h. These objects he satisfactorily effected, and also prevailed on the different Chieftains to enter into engagements for the future payment of their tribute to the Gâikwâr, without the intervention of a military force. On the extinction of the Pêshwâ's power in 1818, the revenue of Ahmedâbâd was accepted by the Gâikwâr, in exchange for half the Kât'hiwâr tribute, and the sovereignty of the Peninsula was, by that act, transferred to the British Government.

1. J'hâlâwâr, or Ch'hâlâwârah, as it is called by 1. Jhalawar. Abû'l Fazl, (Ayîn Akbarî, ii. 71.) is on the Northern side of the Peninsula, and has a level surface, bare of trees, except near villages employed in the cultivation of wheat and cotton. All the J'hâlâs are Râj-pûts, but they are subdivided, according to their circumstances, into the Jînâmâs, Karârîâ, and Nârôdâ: the first retain their rank as belonging to the military class, and are addressed by the title of jî, (Sir,) the second perform menial offices, and the third are considered as no better than kûnbîs (husbandmen.) Being much exposed to predatory incursions from its neighbours, who find a ready sale for their spoils in Wâgar and Kach'h, a great part of this Division is ill cultivated and thinly inhabited. Darângdrâ, in 22° 54' North, and 71° 35' East, pays Durraung-an annual tribute of 74,000 rupees (£7400) to the dra. Gâikwâr, and its Râjâ, who resides at Helwed, about 15 miles Westward, has the privilege of sitting on a cot, while the heads of his Tribe are on the ground. Limrî, Limree. in 22° 36' North, and 71° 54' East, is one of the richest trading Towns, and has many wealthy sarrâfs, or bankers; its tribute, in 1807, was 51,931 rupees (£5193.) Eleven miles North North-West of it is Wedwân, Wudwaun. a populous Town, possessing a strong fort, and a courageous population. In 1807, its tribute was fixed at 28,831 rupees (£2883.) It has a considerable transit trade in g'hî, hemp, and leather, from the North-Eastern to the South-Eastern shores of the Peninsula. Wankanîr, at the confluence of the Machû and Pâtâlîâ, Wankaneer in 22° 27' North, and 70° 58' East, is a fortified Town, containing about 25,000 inhabitants, and possessing a good bázâr; it is at the foot of a range of lofty hills, and, in the winter time, liable to inundation. Its annual tribute to the Gâikwâr is 18,000 rupees (£1800.) Móravî, in 29° 39' North, and 70° 58' East, chief Town Moravee. of the Machû kântâ, or banks of the Machû, has been Machoo. possessed by the family of its present Râjâ ever since the time of Akbar. Kuwâr Dôsâjî, who was reigning in 1809, not only renounced female infanticide, but, in 1816, continued to preserve and educate his daughters. Mâliâ on the Machû, two miles and a half above the Mallia. point where it is lost in the Ran, is a fortress in 22° 56' North, and 70° 55' East. In 1809, it had long been occupied by the Tribe of Miyânâs from Sind'h, a most Meeannas desperate gang of banditti, the scourge and terror of the neighbouring Country. Their strong hold was, however, carried by assault early on the second day of attack, every inch having been resolutely defended on the first. At Wawâmîâ, in 22° 50' North, and 70° 47' East, there Wawaumea. is a ferry across to the shore of Kach'h, and, on a hill Cutch. near Sângar'h, 25 miles North-West of Wankanîr, there is an ancient Temple of Sûrya, adorned with sculptures in a style much superior to that of the present Hindû artists.

2. Hâlâr, or Hâlâwâr, is named from Hâlâ, the 2. Hallaur. Jahrejâh Chief, to whose family this Division belongs, and lies on the Gulf of Kach'h, between J'hâlâwâr, O'ka-mandal, and Kât'hî-wâr. Excepting towards the East, where it is hilly and rocky, the soil is light, and in many places well suited for grain and cotton; and considerable quantities of bájârî, juwârî, (Holcus spicatus, and Sorghum vulgare,) and cotton are exported thence, through Kach'h to Bombay. A bare country, horses unshod, and shrubs covered with rags, thence GUZERAT. called chintra-pir, (ragged Saints,) in memory, no doubt, of prayers heard and cures granted,* are among the peculiarities observed in this tract of country. According to the traditions of the natives, the four principal Tribes of Ráj-púts, established in the Peninsula and adjoining parts of Hindúst'hán, are descended from four Yadus, who escaped from the general massacre of their brethren, by taking refuge in Sind'h, where the Goddess B'havání Hing-láj concealed in her mouth the first Jahrejahs; under her anklets, the Chúrásimà; under her seat, the Charkatà; and in the chimney, the B'hattí. The first was established by her in Sind'h; the second in Sóret'h, (Sauráshtra;) the third in Hastiná-púr, (near Dihlí;) and the fourth in Jeselmír. Some of the present Hálá Chiefs trace their genealogies to Ráwal, youngest son of Ráj Hammír, King of Kach'h, a pedigree not inconsistent with the above tradition, as Kach'h is contiguous to Sind'h. Hálár now forms a sort of federal State, consisting of the independent Baronies of Nawá-nagar, D'hárol, Ráj-kót, Góndal, Kótrá, and Drápá; the administration of which is wholly intrusted to the Náginí Bráhmans, who are as mercenary, artful, and servile as most of their brethren elsewhere. Nawá-nagar (New-town) in 22° 55' North, 70° 14' East, is the Capital of the largest of the Lordships. Though rocky, its soil is productive. The Town, which is walled and said to be six miles in circuit, has many weavers, some of them very skilful workmen; and the water of the Náginí is supposed to be peculiarly useful in dyeing. One-third of the produce, &c. tax on men and beasts, are paid to the Jám, or Chief, who, as well as the Ráo of the Mahrattahs, strikes a silver coin called kórl, worth one-fourth of a rupee, (about 7d.) Jám, the title of the Chief, is of doubtful origin, and is not borne by any other of these Chieftains; but whenever any of them ascends the throne, a Mat'hini, or priest of a low caste, called D'hér, steps forward and marks the Prince's forehead with his blood. (See Trans. Roy. As. Soc. i. 69.) The annual tribute due to the Gáikwár was fixed in 1808 at 95,000 rupees. (£9500.) Ráj-kót, in 22° 12' North, 10° 57' East, pays 20,500 rupees. (£2050.) Góndal, in 21° 54' North, 70° 58' East, near the centre of the Peninsula, formerly belonged to the Division of Sóret'h. Its territory is tolerably well cultivated, and assessed at 115,000 rupees (£11,500) annually.

3. O'ka-mandal (the bad Country) has a rocky and uneven surface, and was till lately almost uninhabited, in consequence of the unceasing depredations of the people of Positrá, one of its forts, who were expelled by a detachment from Bombay in 1809. It occupies the Western extremity of the Gujarát Proper, and the name is now confined to the sort of Island or Peninsula separated from the main land by a Ran, or swamp, stretching in a South-Easterly direction from Pintárák to Mad'hí. This swampy belt, which has only 18 inches of water at the highest tides, and is separated from the sea by a low bank at its Southern extremity, will soon form a narrow and shallow strait, and probably was nothing more than a valley a century ago; as within that period the Division of O'ka-mandal extended far beyond it, and occupied much of what is now assigned to Hálá-wár.† The forts in O'ka-mandal are Bét, Positrá, B'harwálá, Dwáráká, and D'henjí. The number of GUZERAT. houses in the whole Division did not, in 1809, exceed 4000, which gives about 20,000 souls for the population. In consequence of an abundance of waste land covered with brushwood, this tract abounds in game; and, as it is generally low and sandy, it is suitable for breeding camels. Iron ore is found in the rocky tracts, and salt is made near the sea. The natives are chiefly Wágérs, from Kach'h, a barbarous and, probably, spurious race, of dubious Faith, living distinct from the Ráj-púts, and maintaining themselves principally by fishing and piracy. The true History of O'ka-mandal begins in the middle of the XIth century. It was then divided between the Hiról and Chawára Ráj-púts; the first at Gómatí, the others at Vasí, near Arámrá. The Chawára family had before possessed the Sovereignty of Gujarát. These two rival Tribes were victims of the treachery and fraud of two Rát'hór Ráj-púts, who, having been driven out of Marwar, or Ajamír, by domestic feuds, came into O'ka-mandal under pretence of performing a pilgrimage to Dwáráká. When they had accomplished their purpose, and slain the Chiefs of both parties, they assumed the name of Wádél, from Wádá, 'slaughter.' Arámrá was made their Capital, and they conquered Southward as far as Patan Sóm-nát'h. In the following century, Sangan, a great pirate, was Chief of O'ka-mandal, and extended his territory over Háláwár to the Eastward; but in the reign of his son, Mahmúd, Sultán of Gujarát, conquered the Isle of Bét, destroyed the Temples, and drove out the Rájá: as soon, however, as the Musulmán armies had withdrawn, he returned, and the families of the Wáddéls and Mániks maintained their Sovereignty till the last century, when they were reduced to the Peninsula beyond the Ran. The improvement of such a Country must necessarily be tardy. Its unproductive soil furnishes scarcely any thing for commerce except g'hi and til, (seed of Sesamum orientale;) even the number and wealth of the pilgrims to its sacred places have diminished. After a trial of three years, and a great apparent improvement in habits, the people of this little Peninsula were, in 1812, admitted to a commercial intercourse with the British ports; but their love of piracy proved too inveterate, and nothing but the occupation of their territory could effectually check it; that measure was therefore adopted and carried, with little bloodshed, in 1816; and in the following year (1817) the possession of that holy land was transferred to Fateh Sing'h, the Gáikwár. Bét Island, at the Northern extremity of O'ka-mandal, in 22° 27' North, and 69° 19' East, is properly named Sank'ha-dwár; and has a sheltered harbour, and an inconsiderable fort. The Town contains 2000 houses, chiefly inhabited by Bráhmans, who attend in the Temples and other sacred places. The whole revenue does not, probably, amount to two laks of rupees. (£20,000.) This sacred isle, now under British protection, derives its name from Vishnu, who, in the character of Sank'ha Náráyan, opened the shell (sank'ha) in which an Asura (demon) had concealed the Védas, and restored them to the world. It is supposed that the worship of Ranchor from Dwáráká has now superseded that of Sank'ha Náráyan. Dwáráká, in 22° 15' North, and 60° 7' East, is one of the most holy places in India, and an inviolable asylum. The population of the Town and District is upwards of 10,000 souls. The principal Temple formerly possessed a highly revered image of Waghers.

Bate, or Bait Island.

Dwarka

* This practice is, more or less, common throughout Eastern and Central Asia.

† This is very distinctly marked in Major Rennell's Map of India, VOL. XXIII.

GUZERAT. Ranchor, (a form of Krishna,) but it was clandestinely removed to Dákúr, in Gujarát, in the XIIIth century. Its successor, obtained with great difficulty, was in like manner transferred to Sank'hadwár about 1680, since which time another image has been substituted for it. The pilgrim first bathes in the Gómatí, or Gúmtí, makes his offerings, feeds Bráhmans, and, finally, goes to Arámrá to have the mark of his devotion to Krishna (a shell, ring, and lotos) stamped with a hot iron on some part of his body. Liberal offerings are again made at Bét, and a tax of five rupees is paid to the Chief of the Island, a Bráhman, who receives the offerings and sells them again to the next comer, that they may be offered up another time. The average number of pilgrims has been estimated at 15,000, and the revenue of the Temples at a lak of rupees. (£10,000.) The Dwáráká, however, visited by the God, was swallowed up by the sea, say the Legends, a few days after his decease; and from the spot where it stood, about 30 miles South of Púr-bandar, and twice as far from the Gúmtí, a bird rises once every year from the foam of the sea, and by the colour of its plumage enables the sages to predict the ensuing season. The chalk also of this Island is holy, and is exported, for sacred uses, to every part of Hindúst'hán. Near Pintárák, two miles from the Western shore, there is a sacred spring of pink water, believed to be the spot where the Pándus obtained pardon for having killed a cow.

4. Burudda, or Jaitwar.

Poorbunder.

4. Baradá, or Jétwár, is separated from Háláwár by the rivers Sortiyání and Miyání, and stretches along the South-Western shore of the Peninsula. Its name is said to signify "the spine," and appears evidently to refer to the mountains which line the coast; according to the Hindús, it is derived from a feat of Krishna's in the famous Aswamed'ha of the Pándus. The soil is generally flat and bare, and the water indifferent; the annual assessment paid to the Gáikwár is 30,000 rupees. (£3000.) Púr-bandar, in 21° 39' North, and 69° 45' East, a populous Town, half way between Jagat and Dúí, the North-West and South-West extremities of Gujarát, is head of a small District containing about 75,000 inhabitants. This Town is the great emporium of this and the neighbouring coasts, being accessible for shipping at a later period than the ports more to the East. The Mhérs and Róbáris, in this State, form a national militia of 3000 or 4000 men, a singular institution in India; and the Jétwárs, to whom the Royal family belongs, boast of being descended from the divine Orang-útang, Hanumán, and on that account, perhaps, are believed to have tails. The affairs of the Ráná of Púr-bandar were involved in the greatest embarrassment, and he had long been the sport of his encroaching neighbours, when he was taken, in 1809, under the protection of the British Government, on condition of paying 19,000 rupees (£1900) per annum, as a compensation for the extinction of his debt to the Gáikwár. Gúmtí, the ancient Capital of this Division, was on the summit of a high mountain, visible from the coast.

5. Soreth.

5. Sóreth, a Division lying to the East of Baradá, comprehended, in the time of Akbar, almost the whole Peninsula. It is tolerably wooded, and, probably, the most fertile tract in the whole Country. It is represented as highly flourishing under its ancient Rájás of the Chúrásimá Tribe, whose Capital was Rantelá, afterwards exchanged for Júná-gar'h, which surrendered, in 1472, to Mahmúd, Sultán of Gujarát. In 1735, GUZERAT Shírk'hán Bábí, a soldier of fortune, seized on Júná-gar'h, and established himself as an independent Chief, exercising a precarious authority over his weaker neighbours. Intrigues, assassinations, and revolutions, have succeeded each other in this petty State for the last half century with a rapidity scarcely conceivable to Europeans. Júnágar'h, or Chúnahgar'h, (Ayín Akbarí, ii. 65.) in 21° 29' North, and 70° 38' East, is the residence of a Chief of the same family as the Nuwwáb of R'há-danpúr, Bahádur Khán, who, in 1811, succeeded his father Ahmed Khán Bábí, and was so harassed by the insolence and insubordination of his Arab troops, that he entreated the British Government to assist him in expelling them from his dominions, offering as a compensation to give up, in perpetuity, his mulk-gíri collections, (tribute levied as a compensation for abstaining from plunder,) valued at 170,000 rupees (£17,000) per annum. The proposition was accepted, and the Arabs, though much disposed to resist, surrendered without striking a blow, on the assurance that their just claims would be admitted, and the sums due to them from the Nuwwáb speedily liquidated. Jét-púr, in 20° 42' North, 70° 49' East, is a territory occupied by Kát'hís, whose annual tribute to the Gáikwár was fixed at 38,000 rupees. (£3800.) Patan Sóm-nát'h, in 20° 53' North, and 70° 35' East, at the confluence of the Hariná, Ká-palá, and Sereswatí, was, at the time of the Moham-medan invasion by Mahmúd of Ghaznah, one of the most celebrated and splendid places of pilgrimage in India. The image of Soma-nát'ha, (the Lord Moon,) a form of Siva, was destroyed by that conqueror, but the Temple was not rased to the ground till the time of his namesake the Sultán of Gujarát, in A. H. 877. (A. D. 1472.) In latter times Hindú perseverance has triumphed over Musulmán zeal, and the widow of a Mahrattah Chief has again raised an idolatrous Temple on the ruins of the Mosque built by Mahmúd; and by the intervention of the English Government in 1816, the pilgrims have recovered that freedom of access to this holy ground, which the Musulmans had previously refused to grant. The Hindús can now, therefore, visit, without molestation, the field where the Yadus fought, and revere the solitary pípa (Ficus religiosa) which marks the spot where the God Krishna received his mortal wound. Díú, (probably from Díú, Dwípa, island,) in 20° 41' North, and 71° 7' East, is a small Island at the Southern extremity of the Peninsula, once containing a rich and splendid Hindú Temple, and since celebrated as one of the strongest posts possessed by the Portuguese in India. It was taken by the Arabs of Maskat, in 1670, and has since dwindled away to almost nothing. It had lately no garrison, and only the ruins of Churches and Convents. Its population is about 4000.

Junaghur, or Choonah-
gur.

Jaitpoor.

Putten-Somenauth.

Díú.

6. Bábríawár is a mountainous, pastoral tract, occupying the South-Eastern side of the South-Western angle of the Peninsula, and having Sóreth on the West, and Kát'híwár on the North. It derives its name from the Bábríá Kúlls, driven thither from the Northern Districts by the Kát'hís.

6. Bahreea war.

7. Góhílwár, or Góhélwár, lying between Kát'híwár and the Gulf of Cambay, is a Division on the Eastern side of the Peninsula. It is crossed by many rivers, and has two good harbours. The Góhils, whence the Division takes its name, were existing as a distinct Tribe in the time of Sáliváhan, (A. D. 78.) Their

7. Goelwa

GUZERAT
—
GUZ-
MANNIA.
Bhavnagar.

Country is generally flat, but has several hills of considerable height. Its tribute to the Gáikwár is fixed at 111,700 rupees. (£11,170.) B'háo-nagar, in 21° 48' North, and 72° 16' East, was founded by the grandfather of the present Ráwal, B'háo Sing'h, in 1742. That Chief and his two successors had the good sense to root out piracy, and encourage lawful commerce. This Town, therefore, soon rose in wealth and importance, but a coinage of base money, connived at by the Rájá, as is suspected, makes it in one respect a mischievous neighbour. In 1807, the tribute of 74,500 rupees, (£7450,) due to the Gáikwár, was transferred to the British Government. It is situate in the Perganah of G'hógah, and, as such, is now tributary to the British Government. The Rájá's principal Towns are Sihór and B'háo-nagar, both fortified: the trade of the latter has lately declined. G'hógá, in 21° 40', and 72° 23' East, has a secure roadstead during the South-West monsoon, and can furnish a supply of stores and provisions, as well as the means of repairing a ship when damaged. The inhabitants are principally Mohammedans, and many of them ship-builders. The seamen are termed Siddís, and are the best on the Western coast of India.

Ararat.

Danduka.
Rampur.

8. Aratam is a small Division at the North-East extremity of the Peninsula, adjoining to Góhilwár, which it closely resembles. Dandúka, its chief Town, in 22° 25' North, and 72° 6' East, and Ránpúr, about 10 miles to the West, suffered greatly, in 1813, from want of rain and flights of locusts. The continual changes of masters to which these petty Baronies were liable, till within a very few years, render it difficult to ascertain the limits of their jurisdictions; great discordance therefore prevails in our Maps, and some even in our best authorities; a defect the more difficult to avoid, as at a former period almost all the Peninsula was comprehended within the next Division.

Calby-
ar.

Panchal.

Bansawar.

Alag.

Thuman.

Calby-
ar.

9. K'hátiwár, which is still the largest and most central, lying between J'háláwár, Góhilwár, Bábríawár, and Sórát'h. It is subdivided into 1. Panchál; 2. Bánsawár; 3. Alag; and 4. K'húmán. The two first are rugged, uneven, and bare; the others woody. Sand and rocky ferruginous hills are the most prevalent soil and features in the landscape; coarse grain, and a good breed of horses, the chief products. The Kát'hís ascribe their origin to the power of Karna's magic rod, which, when it struck the ground, caused a man to issue forth, who springing, as was supposed, from wood, (Kát'h, in Sanskrít, Kásh'tha,) was called a Kát'hí. As, however, these "earth-born" men were designed to attack the Pándus, whom Karna and his master, Duryódhan, wished to entrap and annihilate, the fable itself proves an ancient enmity between the K'háties and the Ráj-púts. Karna's scheme was to have the Pándus' cattle stolen, in order to entice them out of their hiding places, and in that occupation his new-born auxiliaries were employed. Stealing in general, therefore, and stealing cattle in particular, are believed by this "wooden" race to be their proper vocation, and Karna their mystic forefather, with Súrya, (the Sun,) his reputed parent, are almost the exclusive objects of their adoration. The Ahírs (herdsmen) and Bábríás are supposed to have been the original inhabitants of the Country, and it is generally believed that the Kát'hís were migratory till the latter half of the XVIth century: nor did they greatly extend their limits till the decline of the Moghul power, a century and a half later. Their predatory, unsettled habits, and internal feuds, productive of the greatest rancour and atrocity, are as unfavourable to the increase of their numbers, as to the improvement of their Country. For fire-arms, happily, they have a great dislike, and of their use they are nearly ignorant: they rely therefore for success in engagements on their horsemanship and the fleetness of their horses. They are not scrupulous about caste, but distinguish the pure Kát'hís, or U'rtíás, from the Shákárjat, or descendants of Rájpúts and Kát'híes. They rarely marry more than two wives, and their daughters are excluded from inheriting any part of the paternal estate, which is equally divided among the sons. The men are athletic, the women remarkably beautiful and humane; often exercising their influence over the men to save their captives from being tortured. The younger brother always marries the widow of the elder brother, unless she refuse to marry again: and, on the death of their mother, her children are brought up by her relations, apart from their father. Fond of intoxication, thieves by descent, and rigid observers of a false principle of honour, the people of this Tribe are always ready to afford an asylum to fugitive criminals, and on that account are dangerous neighbours. They have only one Temple, dedicated to Súrya, near Thán, and use no settled form of prayer. Their Priests marry, and perform a service in honour of the manes of their ancestors. On great festivals, food is thrown to lapwings; and though irreligious the Kát'hís are excessively superstitious, placing much reliance on omens, and endeavouring to bribe the aid of the Sun by promising to give him a large share of their spoils. The sums thus dedicated as propitiatory offerings are spent in a public feast. By securing their ports, and the outlets to their trade in stolen goods, Colonel Walker succeeded in repressing their depredations: but, it need hardly be added, that nothing except extreme and persevering vigilance can produce any radical change in the character of such a people.

See Hamilton's Hindustan, i. 604-725; Rennell's Memoir of a Map of Hindostan, cxxiv. 37. 209. 224; Thieffenthaler's Beschreibung von Hindustan, i. 265-297; Asiatic Researches, ix. 127-182, &c.; Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society, i. 65; Ayeen Akbery, ii. 61-80. 238-243.

GUZERAT.
—
GUZ-
MANNIA.

GUZMANNIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx inferior, three-parted, segments convolute; corolla, petals three, folded in a tubular form; anthers coalescing cylindrically; capsule three-celled, three-valved; seeds numerous, oblong, naked.

One species, G. tricolor, growing on the branches of trees in Peru.

GUZZLE.
—
GYMNA
SIUM.

GUZZLE, the Fr. gosier; It. gozzo; is the throat, gozzoviglia, comessatio, compotatio, convivium. See Menage. Mr. Thomson derives from the It. gozzovigliar; and this from the Fr. gosier. Perhaps a frequentative of gust, to taste; gust, gustle, guzzle, to taste often. Guzzle in Marston, q. guzzler. As commonly applied, To guzzle is

To drink often, to drink much, to be constantly drinking.

That senseless, sensual epicure,
That sink of filth, that guzzle most impure.

Marston. Scourge of Villainy, ii. 7.

'Tis the hungry man's bread which we hoard up in our barns, his meat that we glut, and his drink that we guzzle.

Scott. The Christian Life, part iii. ch. i.

Jack bow'd, and was oblig'd—confess'd 'twas strange,
That so retir'd he should not wish a change,
But knew no medium between guzzling beer,
And his old stint—three thousand pounds a year.

Cowper. Retirement.

GYBE, see GIBE, ante,

To mock, to flout, to sneer at, to deride; to throw out sneers, scoffs, or taunts.

Deale thou as courtiers dayly doe,
in words be frank and free, Speake fayre and make the weather cleere to him that gybes with thee.

Turberville. To Browne of light believe.

GYMNADENIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Gynandria, order Monandria, natural order Orchideæ. Generic character: corolla ringent, lip with a spur at the base; masses of pollen on foot stalks, approximating.

One species, G. conopsea, the Orchis conopsea of English Botany, native of England.

GYMNA'SIUM, } Gr. γυμνάσιον, from γυμνάζειν, exercere, ac proprie nudum
GYMNA'STICK, n. } me exercere, est enim a γυμνός, GYMNA'STICK, adj. } nudus. To exercise, and properly
GYMNA'STICALLY, } to exercise naked; as it is de-GYMNICK, } rived from γυμνός, naked. And GYMNICAL. } see the Quotation from Grew.

And therefore, as gymnasium properly signifies the place where people exercise themselves being stript: so upon this foundation, which Athothus or the first Egyptian Mercury laid, was afterward built the gymnastick art.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. viii.

As Galen reporteth, and Mercurialis in his gymnasticks representeth, he [Milo] was able to persist erect upon an oiled plank, and not to be removed by the force or protrusion of three men.

Sir Thomas Browne. Vulgar Errors, book vii. ch. xviii.

Some are αμεισιστοι, as Galen hath expressed: that is, ambilevous or left-handed on both sides; such as with agility and vigour have not the use of either: who are not gymnastically composed: nor actively use those parts.

Id. Ib. book iv. ch. v.

SAM. Have they not sword-players, and ev'ry sort
Of gymnick artists, wrestlers, riders, runners,
Juglers and dancers, antics, mummers, mimics,
But they must pick me out with shackles tir'd,
And over-labour'd at their publick mills,
To make them sport with blind activity.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1334.

He [Alexander] offered sacrifices, and made games of musick, and gymnick sports, and exercises in honour of his gods.

Usher. Annals, Anno Mundi, 3680.

Πιτανάτων ἰσπρὴ, gymnical exercises at Pitana.

Potter. Antiquities of Greece, book ii. ch. xx.

As if any one should come into an house, the gymnasium, or forum; when he should see the order, manner, and management of every thing; he could never judge these things to be done without an efficient, but must imagine there was some being presiding over them, and whose orders they obeyed.

Derham. Astro-Theology, book v. ch. vi.

It [Moorfields] was likewise the great gymnasium of our Capital, the resort of wrestlers, boxers, runners, and foot-ball players, and the scene of every manly recreation.

Pennant. London, p. 346.

But you must not think to discredit these gymnastics by a little raillery, which has its foundation only in modern prejudices.

Hurd. Dialogue 3. On the Age of Queen Elizabeth.

A certain person left by his will, a fund for the establishment of the gymnastic games at Vienna.

Melmoth. Pliny, book iv. let. 22. To Rufus.

In Carian steel
Now Melibæus from the gymnic school,
Where he was daily exercis'd in arms,
Approach'd.

Glover. Athenaid, book viii.

The GYMNASTIC, or naked exercises of the Greeks, were, for the most part, performed, during the intervals between the public Games, in buildings erected especially for the purpose, and thence called GYMNASIA. In a hot climate, the convenience of divestiture would naturally suggest either the total absence of clothing, or the adoption of a very light garb under great bodily exertion; but the fondness for tracing inventions to some precise point of origin, and thus giving the mind, as it were, a goal from which it may start, has led many to believe that the Lacedæmonians were the first professed Gymnasiasts. Athenæus (xii. 12. Ed. Cas.) refers to Agatharctides (Europiaca, xxvii.) for a statement that the Lacedæmonians were so averse to any bodily deformity, and so anxious to repress any tendency to obesity, τὸ ὄγκος τῆ σώματος, that they required their youth to exhibit themselves naked on every 10th day; and on the authority of Hippasus, he calls them the inventors of Gymnastics. (i. 14.) Hence Gymnasia were soon adopted by the Athenians, and we read of three principal edifices of the kind belonging to their city. The Lyceum, (Gymnasium superius, Cic. de Div. i. 5.) the Cynosarges, and the Academy, which Cicero, when he obtained permission to burn in it the corpse of his murdered friend and colleague, M. Marcellus, (over whom the Athenians also in the same place erected a marble monument,) pronounced to be nobilissimum orbis terrarum Gymnasium. (ad Fam. iv. 12.) These were built without the walls, at the public expense, and the second was set apart for illegitimate children, i. e. for those of Athenian half blood only. (Plut. in Them.) We are told by Xenophon, (Athen. ii. 10.) that besides these there were numerous private structures of the same kind belonging to rich individuals.

The use of these edifices became so general in Greece that scarcely any town of note remained without one. The Romans appear to have been tardy in their adoption of them. Though described by Vitruvius, as we shall have occasion to show presently, it is as Grecian buildings, which are not Italicæ consuetudinis, nor do they seem to have been raised in Italy till the days of Nero. (Tac. Ann. xv.) From the occurrence of the word in Plautus, (Bacchides, iii. 3. 21.) Hoffman (ad v.) has argued that they existed much earlier in Rome; but he appears to have forgotten that the scene of this Play is laid in Greece. The Gymnasium of Nero was considered by Philostratus the most wonderful work in Rome, of Nero. θανμασιώτατον τῶν ἐκεῖ, (Vita Apoll. iv.) and the

GYMNA
SIUM.

Origin.

Lacedæmonians.

Athenians.

Romans.

Gymnasium
of Nero.

GYMNASIUM.

Neronia celebrated in it, were, as Suetonius tells us, the first imitations of the Greek Games which had been exhibited in Rome. (Nero, 12.) Tacitus, who has recorded the dedication of this Theatre, (Ann. xiv. 47.) mentions also its destruction by lightning. The same bolt which set it on fire, melted a bronze statue of its detestable founder. (Id. Ib. xv. 22.) The Historian conveys, under the guise of popular expression, the deep indignation which, in all probability, was felt by himself, at the adoption of this licentious foreign custom; but he admits that the first exhibition was unattended by any notable disgrace, sanè nullo insigni dehonestamento spectaculum transiit. (Ib. xiv. 20, 21.)

Gymnasia afterwards became common, and from the copious use of the Bath after the exercises in them, the terms Thermæ and Gymnasia were, in the end, used synonymously. The Latin writers abound with allusions to the great resort of citizens to these assembly rooms; not by any means solely either for exercise or cleanliness, but Poets came there to recite, Philosophers to dispute, idlers to gossip news, and men of all classes because it was the fashion.

Officers of the Gymnasium.

The chief attendants on the Gymnasium, who appear to have been as closely borrowed as most of their other customs, by the Latins, from the great masters whom they had vanquished, were first the Gymnasiarchus, who presided over and regulated the whole establishment, and was invested with somewhat of sacerdotal dignity. In Athens his office was annual. (Demosth. in Lept.) He provided oil, prescribed the hours of exercise, and attended to its discipline. The Xystarcha, the Præfectus Luctæ, the Agonistarcha, and the Gymnastes, all had peculiar offices, the nice shades of distinction in which cannot, perhaps, at present, even if it were worth while to follow up such an inquiry minutely, be very accurately distributed. The Pædotriba seems to have been the drill sergeant for the different exercises. The Sphæristicus especially taught the ball (pila.) To these may be added slaves of various denominations belonging to the Baths; as Fricatores to champoo, Reunctores, Aliptæ, and Iatraliptæ, to anoint, Alipili to depilate, Mediastini to sweep and cleanse the apartments, and a train of surgeons and apothecaries to look to the broken limbs, bruises, and luxations, which were the hourly consequence of these rough and boisterous amusements; atque ut homo non interimeretur, sic tamen sæpe mulcabatur, ut post pugnam adeo cruentatus non posset dignosci, dentes etiam ossaque luxabant, aut frangebant. (Vossius, de IV. Art. Pop. Gymn.)

Lucian's Dialogue.

That their rudeness was conceived to need some apology is plain from the Dialogue which Lucian has framed between Anacharsis and Solon on the subject. To this Dialogue the amateurs of Pugilism in our own days might, in part, resort for arguments in support of their more than Scythian pastime; unless, indeed, that the Greeks and Romans had this advantage over the modern Patrons of the Boxing Ring, that, without sophistry, the Ancients might venture to lay claim to the cultivation of strength, agility, courage, and fortitude, by the hazards which they personally encountered: those, on the other hand, who now are no more than calm spectators of the pain and peril of two fellow beings,* matched against each other on a gambling speculation, can plead little in behalf of the encouragement of manliness, at least, in themselves; and must submit to be considered as actuated by a brutal love of excitement, and an avarice careless of the sources from which its foul cravings is supplied.

* Ictibus infelix facies locatur ut infelicio venter saginetur. Cyprian de Spect.

"What," asks Anacharsis on visiting the Lyceum, "is it that your youths are doing? some twining every limb together endeavour to trip each other up, others are throttling and striking, or rolling and wallowing in the mud like hogs; yet, just now, while they were stripping, I saw them all in a very grave, peaceable, and good-natured manner, scraping and oiling each other's limbs, but, of a sudden, upon I know not what quarrel, they started up, took their distance, and began to butt like rams. See there how one has pitched his fellow off his legs by a cross-buttock, and then throwing himself upon him, prevents him from getting up, and drives him deeper into the dirt, till grasping him with both his legs tightly, he digs his elbow into his throat to choak him, while the poor wretch below, with all his might, is thumping his opponent's shoulders. One might suppose, if it were but for the sake of the oil with which they are glistening, that they would avoid the mud; but instead of that, caked over with a mixture of dirt, grease, and sweat, they look like so many eels slipping out of a fishmonger's hands. Two are standing upright at that corner covered with dust, and beating and kicking each other; there now that one has got a blow on the jaw which has shattered all his teeth, and filled his mouth with sand and blood, while the man in authority, (for such his purple robe betokens him to be,) who stands by, instead of checking the fray, does his utmost to encourage it, and praises the striker for his dexterity. There they are again jumping and capering on the same spot, and taking flying leaps, somersaulting and kicking out their heels in the air. What can be the good of it all, I cannot possibly divine; to me it appears sheer madness, nor do I think that any one will easily persuade me to believe otherwise."

Solon, in return, reasons in a manner which may be readily anticipated. The place, as he tells his friend, is not a Madhouse but a Gymnasium, dedicated to Apollo Lyceus, to whose statue he points, holding a bow in his left hand, and bending his right above his head as if overpowered by fatigue. He then enumerates the various exercises. That in the mud and on the sand is Wrestling, (πάλη;) those who stand upright and box, are amusing themselves with the Pancration, (παγκρατιάσεις;) besides these there is simple pugilism, (πύγμη;) and the coit, (δίσκος;) and jumping, (τὸ υπεράλλεσθαι;) and racing, (δρόμος;) and throwing the spear, (ἀκοντίου βόλη.) Anacharsis laughs heartily when he learns that excellence in these attainments is sometimes rewarded with an apple, an olive, or a sprig of parsley; and, in spite of Solon's assurances that these pleasing toils, this πράγμα ἐκ ἀτερπῆς, generates patriotism, bravery, love of glory, and honourable pride, even at the close of a long discussion he by no means dissembles his lack of conviction, and looks, as Solon tells him, a little incredulous as to these great effects, σὺ δὲ ἢ παννύρεσκόμενος ἐν τοῦτοις εἰκας.

The Games practised in the Gymnasium have been Exercises, catalogued and described by many writers. Hoffmann has compiled a formidable list of no less than 55. But they may be comprised more briefly, as racing, leaping, coiting, hurling, and wrestling, under some one of which general heads all the varieties may be classed; thus

GYMNASIUM.

GYMNASIUM.

the σφαίρομαχία, or pilæ ludus, is referred to one of the first two divisions; and it seems to have been a very favourite diversion among the higher classes at Rome, even before the establishment of Gymnasia. The courtly Horace, though his weakness of sight prevented him from playing immediately after dinner, informs us that Mæcenas so amused himself; and the allusions to the sport are of constant occurrence. The pila was called trigonalis, when three persons played catchball; foliis was an inflated ball like our foot-ball; paganica was of intermediate size between the two; so called, as is said, because it was first used in country places; (pagi;) harpasta is believed to have been the smallest sized ball, and with an etymological propriety equal to that which names the paganica, has been deduced ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρπάζειν, because the players snatched it from one another, which, in point of fact, we have no authority for avouching was their method of play. All that we know about it is derived from Athenæus, who was himself very fond of this laborious exercise, and who says briefly that the Game of old was called φαίνινδα, (ἐφετίνδα, Cas.) ἀπὸ τῆς ἀφέσεως τῶν σφαιριζόντων, because the players threw it to a distance. Phænestius, he adds, invented it, and Timocrates, a Lacedæmonian, wrote a Book concerning it. (i. 12.) But upon these points it may be safest to adopt the sentiments of Vossius, who, with an abstinence very unusual in a professed commentator, after touching on the subject, remarks, sed de hoc lusûs genere non multum audeo polliceri. Quanto enim veteribus notius erat, tanto minus de eo sibi dicendum putârunt. Hinc tenebræ nobis. (de IV. Art. Pop. Gymn.)

Gymnasium as described by Vitruvius.

Vitruvius (v. 11.) has left a description of a Gymnasium, which we cite below from Mr. Gwilt's translation. We offer it, not because it by any means satisfactorily explains the construction of this kind of building, but because there is nothing more satisfactory to be obtained elsewhere. Various plates illustrative of this place have been given; there are two by Hieronymus Mercurialis; that of Mr. Wilkins, in his version of the Roman Architect, (p. ix. sec. 3.) differs from all his predecessors.

"Though not used by the people of Italy, it seems proper that I should explain the form of the Palæstra, and describe the mode in which it was constructed by the Greeks. The square, or oblong peristylia of Palæstræ have a walk round them which the Greeks call δίαιλος, two stadia in circuit: three of the sides are single porticos; the fourth, which is that on the South side, is to be double, so that when showers fall in windy weather, the drops may not drive into the inner part of it. In the three porticos are large recesses, (exedrae), with seats therein, whereon the Philosophers, Rhetoricians, and others who delight to study, may sit and dispute. In the double portico the following provision is to be made: the Ephebeum (in this chamber the matches were made) is to be in the middle, which is, in truth, nothing more than a large exedra with seats, and longer by one-third than its width. On the right is the Coriceum, (the stripping-room,) immediately adjoining which is the Conisterium, near which, in the angle of the portico, is the cold bath, which the Greeks call λουτήριον. On the left of the Ephebeum is the Elæothesium; adjoining them is the Frigidarium, whence a passage leads to the Propigneum, (the hypocaust, or furnace,) in the angle of the portico. Near, but more inward, on the side of the Frigidarium, is placed the vaulted Sudatory, whose length is double its width; on one side of this is the Laconicum, constructed as before described.* The peristylia of the Palæstra are to be carefully set out as above mentioned. Exteriorly three porticos are constructed, one through which those who come out of the Palæstra pass; and stadia ones on the right and left, of which that towards the North is double, and of considerable width. The other is single, and so formed that as well on the side next the wall, as on that where the columns stand, there are margins for paths of not less than 10 feet; the centre part is sunk one foot and a half from the path, to which there is an ascent of two steps; the sunken part is not to be less than 12 feet in width. Thus those who in their clothes walk round the paths will not be annoyed by the anointed wrestlers who are practising. This species of portico is called Xystus (ξυστός) by the Greeks; for the wrestlers exercise in covered stadia in the winter time. Xysti ought, between the two porticos, to have groves or plantations with walks between the trees and seats of cemented work, (signinas.) On the sides of the Xystus and double portico are open walks, which the Greeks call περιδρόμιδες, but with us they are termed Xysti, on which the Athletæ exercise themselves, when the weather is fine in winter. Behind the Xystus the stadium is set out, of such dimensions that a great number of people may commodiously behold the contending wrestlers."

The other chief particulars which are handed down to us are that Gymnasia were decorated with statues, (Cic. ad Fam. vii. 23.) generally of Mercury, Hercules, and Theseus, whom both Greeks and Barbarians esteemed the tutelary Deities of athletic exercises. (Pausanias, iv. 23.) Cicero says, that Minerva singulare est insigne ejus Gymnasii. (Academiae.) (ad Att. i. 4.) Lactantius (i. 20.) has cited a passage from some lost work of the same writer, which proves that Cupids also were common ornaments of these buildings, magnum audaxque consilium suscepisse Græciam, quod Cupidinum et amorum simulacra in Gymnasiis consecrasset. Quinctilian alludes to a law by which an exception was made against the general rule of not placing the statue of a woman in a Gymnasium, namely, if she should have been a Tyrannicide; (viii. 7. 7.) and Pliny mentions a statue with a gilt tongue erected at the public expense by the Athenians in a Gymnasium, in honour of the divine predictions of the Astrologer Berosus. (vii. 37.)

Gymnastics have afforded a large subject of controversy to Medical writers, and Galen may be cited among the chief opposers of them. He gives but an evil name to the Art, which he styles, κακοτεχνίαν ὑποδουσαν ὀνόματι σεμνῇ. (ad Thras.) But it should be remembered that he was not an unprejudiced writer, for at no less discreet an age than 35, he slipped his shoulder while amusing himself by wrestling.

Among the authors who have treated most largely on this subject are Hieronymus Mercurialis, de Arte Gymnasticâ; Cagnatus, de Sanitate tuendâ; Pars XI. Gymnastica; Vossius, de Quatuor Artibus Populâribus; Van Dalen, Diss. viii.; P. F. Faber, Agonisticon; and M. l'Abbé Burette, in the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. i.

GYMNETRUS, from the Greek γυμνός, naked, Bloch, Cuv. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging

* In the preceding chapter "On Baths."

GYMNASIUM.
—
GYMNETRUS.Statues in Gymnasia.Writers on Gymnastics.

GYMNE- to the family Tenioides, order Acanthopterygii, class
TRUS. Pisces.

GYMNO- Generic character. Dorsal fin extending along the CEPHA- whole length of the back, ventral fins filiform, anal LUS. deficient, caudal distinct; upper jaw very extensile;
teeth very small.

This genus is very nearly allied to Regalecus in the form of its ventral fins, and to Gymnogaster in the extent of the dorsal.

G. Cepedianus, Risso; Lacepede's Gymnetrus. Is the best known species; it is about three or four feet in length; of a silvery colour, with three large round black spots upon the back, and another oblong on the belly; the dorsal fin is of a purplish red, the pectorals pale red, and the caudal deep carmine; the shape of the body is very narrow, diminishing towards the tail; the gape wide and oblong, the upper jaw furnished with four large and the lower with five sharp crooked teeth; the lateral line formed by little rough projections of the skin, which increase in size as they approach the tail. It is found in the Mediterranean, often near Nice, and feeds on Medusæ and small fish.

See Risso, Ichtyologie de Nice; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

GYMNOCARPON, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx five-parted, coloured, persisting; corolla none, stamens ten, alternately barren; stigma simple, seed, one, covered by the indurated calyx.

One species, G. fruticosum, native of Egypt.

GYMNOCEPHALUS, from the Greek γυμνός, naked, and κεφαλή, a head; Schneider; Ruffe, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Percoides, order Acanthopterygii, class Pisces.

Generic character. Head entirely destitute of scales, and indented with numerous little depressions; gape narrow, and labial bones in the lips; the edge of the preopercule armed with eight or ten little crooked spines, a pointed spine on the opercule, and another at a little distance behind: the scales have their edge toothed.

This genus is described by Cuvier under the name of Acerina.

G. Cernua, Schneid.; Perca Cernua, Lin.; le Perche goujonnière, Petite Perche, Bloch; Ruffe, Pen. The Ruffe is, at first sight, similar to the Perch in form, though not so deep, whilst in colour it somewhat resembles the Gudgeon, as if it were a mule between the two, whence its French name: it is very common in fresh water; it is of a yellowish colour, spotted with black; the dorsal fin wavy, the caudal semilunar.

G. Schraetzer, Schneid.; Perca Schraetzer, Lin.; Striped Ruffe. Body yellow, marked longitudinally with four or five black lines; dorsal fin spotted with black; found in the rivers of Southern Europe.

G. Acerinus, Schneid.; Euxine Ruffe. Body oblong, marked with black spots and points; the head half as long as the trunk, upper jaw longest; gape narrow; second spine of the anal fin very strong; anal fin bifurcated. Found in the Euxine.

The other species described by Schneider are

G. Argenteus. Found in the East Indies.

G. Vermicularis. Native of the Antilles.

G. Unimaculatus. Pitanger of the Brasilians.

G. Ruber. Carauna of the Brasilians.

G. Pallidus. Sciæna Pallida, Lin.

See Bloch, Ichthyologia a Schneider; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

GYMNOCLADUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Diacia, order Decandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx five-toothed, corolla petals five; female flower, calyx five-toothed, corolla petals five, style one, pod one-celled, interior pulpy.

One species, G. Candensis, a tree native of Canada.

GYMNODONTES. In Zoology, the first family of the Plectognathous order of bony fishes.

GYMNOGASTER, from the Greek γυμνός, naked, and γαστήρ, the belly, Brunnich; Vogmar. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Tenioides, order Acanthopterygii, class Pisces.

Generic character. Body ensiform, covered with deciduous scales, lateral line curved downwards, and pointed behind; dorsal fin extending along the whole length of the back, caudal distinct, pectoral small, but neither ventral nor anal fins; upper jaw capable of great extension; teeth moderate sized, sharp, six above and eight below, the former inclining inwards, the latter outwards: belly studded with a double row of tubercles.

G. Arcticus, Brun.; Bogmarus Islandicus, Schneid.; Vogmar, or Waagmaer, of the Icelanders is the only species. They consider it poisonous, as the Crow will not touch it.

See Brunnich, Nye Saml II.; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

GYMNONOTUS, from γυμνός, naked, and νότος, the back, Schneid.; Gymnote, Shaw. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Anguilliformes, order Malacopterygii Apodes, class Pisces.

Generic character. Gill opening partly covered by membrane, situated in front of the pectoral fins; anal fin extending from the vent, which is immediately behind the pectorals, to the tail; no dorsal fin.

These fish in their general form resemble the Eels, but differ from them in the situation of the branchial aperture; they are all natives of South America. The name by which they were first designated was Gymnotus, but it has been corrected by Schneider to Gymnonotus. In this genus is found the remarkable animal known commonly as the Electric Eel, but no other species is possessed of its peculiar properties. They are ranged in two subdivisions; the scales, if any of the first, are very small, and the body is depressed; of the latter the scales are distinct, and the body compressed.

a. True Gymnotes.

Scales very small, almost imperceptible; body flattened from above to below; intestines short; air bladder double, the hinder one cylindrical, and extending far back in the tail.

G. Electricus, Lin.; le Gymnote Electrique, Lacep.; Electric Eel, Garden; Electric Gymnote, Shaw. This remarkable animal, according to Dr. Garden and Schneider, measures from two to three feet and upwards in length, (Rumboldt says, as much as five or six feet,) and twelve or fourteen inches in circumference when swimming. Its head is short, broad, smooth, and pierced with numerous pores, which, on the sides, are disposed more regularly in a line; the gape wide, the lower jaw rather longer than the upper, and both beset with teeth; the tongue warty: the nostrils two on each side, the first large, tubular, and elevated, the second small, level with the skin, placed immediately behind the snout and an inch apart from its opposite; eyes small, flat,

GYMNO-
CLADUS
—
GYMNO-
NOTUS.

GYMNO-
NOTUS.

and bluish, placed behind the nostrils, and rather to their outer side; the body is large, thick, and roundish to some distance from the head, then diminishes in width, but increases in depth, and terminates in a blunted tail; it is marked, at considerable distances, with numerous light spots in irregular lines, which increase in number and distinctness towards the tail; the back is convex and dark coloured, the belly keel-shaped and covered with a greyish reticular skin, the keel becoming thinner and deeper as it approaches the tail; the lateral lines, nearer the back than the belly, converge as they pass backwards and form deep and distinct furrows. The pectoral fins are short, placed immediately behind the head, and covering the branchial orifices; the anal and caudal fins linear, joined to each other, and forming but a single fin, which is at first narrow, but becomes deeper as it approaches the tail; the dorsal fin is deficient, whence the animal's name Gymnotus, naked backed. The vent is placed an inch in front of the root of the pectoral fins, and, consequently, the intestinal canal is very short.

Electric power of Gymnote.

The remarkable property which this animal, as well as the Torpedo, possesses of giving a severe shock, similar to that from an Electric battery, induced Mr. Hunter to examine the structure by which such effect was produced, and it is too interesting to be passed without notice.

The shortness of the cavity containing the nutrient and generative organs, should, according to the usual proportions of fish, determine (to use Mr. Hunter's own expression) that this should be a very short fish: its great length is, therefore, to be considered as affording surface for the expansion of its peculiar organ.

Anatomy of the Electric organs.

The Electric organs constitute about half that part of the flesh in which they are placed, and, perhaps, more than a third of the whole animal. Of these organs there are two pair, a large and a small one, placed on each side. The large organ is placed immediately beneath the skin, occupying the whole lower or anterior part of the body, and also its sides; it is broadest in front, but tapers to a point towards the tail. This pair is separated in front by the muscles of the back, behind by the air bag, and below by a middle partition; in front they approximate to the lateral line, but behind they dip below it; they are thin where resting on the muscles of the back, thick in the middle of the animal, and thinner again at the lower edge, but not so thin as above. The small organ is covered by the long row of small muscles moving the anal fin; it lies along the lower edge of the animal, occupying there nearly the same extent as the large organ in the chest, in the middle, and then at each extremity. These organs are separated from each other by the inferior spinous processes upon which the rays of the anal fin are articulated, and from the large organ by a membrane attached within to the partition, and without to the skin. The structure of these organs is simple; in the large organ it consists of longitudinal and transverse septa, which are thin membranes placed near each other, and in depth about the semidiameter of the body, of course varying according to the thickness of the body at different parts, and, consequently, are broadest at the anterior, and narrowest at the posterior part. The longitudinal vary in length, some being as long as the whole organ; their outer edges are attached to the skin and to the lateral muscles of the fin, and are at a greater distance apart there, than at their inner edges where attached to the middle partion and to the air bladder, at which places they very closely approximate, and, in some instances, two unite to form a single septum, especially where a nerve passes across. The number of septa in the broadest part of the large organ, which is an inch and a quarter, is thirty-four. In the small organ the septa differ much in breadth from each other and run in a serpentine direction, but are nearer together than in the large organ, fourteen being found in half an inch, the breadth of this organ. In both, the septa are very tender and easily torn, and are to be considered as distinct organs. These long septa are crossed transversely by thin plates of membrane, whose length depends on the distance between any two septa; they are broadest at the edge next the skin, and narrowest towards the centre of the body; they are placed in a regular series, and seem to touch, being so close that two hundred and forty may be counted in the length of an inch.

These organs are supplied with quantities of small arteries which accompany the nerves. These originate from the spinal nerves, and not from the cerebral; the trunks, after giving branches to the muscles of the back, &c. bend forwards between the muscles and the spine, and are distributed partly to the skin near the lateral line; the same branches, however, still bend forward between the skin and the organs to which they are ultimately distributed. The trunks of the nerves, however, pass between the muscles and the air bladder and then to the middle partition, giving small branches in their course to the organs, first to the large, then to the small, and ultimately terminating in the muscles of the anal fin. Mr. Hunter also states, that the branches going to the organs, during this course of the nerve, were so small that he could not trace their ramifications. Such are the organs by which this animal produces the powerful shock for which it is so remarkable.

The shock received on touching the Electric Gymnote, very closely resembles that produced by the Galvanic battery, and the disposition of the membranous plates present a striking analogy to that machine. There seems, from the experiments of Walsh and Williamson, but little doubt that the principle producing this curious effect in the Electric Gymnote, is the Electric fluid. Dr. Walsh obtained sparks by means of a pair of plates connected with the animal, and placed at a very short distance apart upon an insulated table. Dr. Williamson repeated this experiment by screwing two pieces of brass about the thickness of a crow quill, and rounded at their extremities, into a frame of wood, so as to come within less than a hundredth part of an inch in contact; he then took hold of the remote extremity of one wire, whilst an assistant held the extremity of the other wire, and one of them introducing his hand into the water near the Gymnote, the other at the same time touching the animal, the Electric circle was completed, and a shock passed through them. A slight shock would also be communicated to eight or ten persons by the extreme parties, the one touching the animal and the other putting his hand into the water near it; but if one touched the head and the other the tail, the shock was very severe. Various other experiments were performed by this gentleman, whence it resulted that whatever medium would convey the Electric fluid, would also convey that discharged by the Electric Gymnote. And it may also be noted that in an experiment made by insulating a person upon a glass stool, and passing shocks through him, no marks of positive Electricity were exhibited; nor

GYMNO-
NOTUS.Experiments on the Electric
Gymnote.

GYMNO-
NOTUS.GYMNO-
NOTUS.

would cork balls, suspended on silken threads, give any marks of it, either when held over the animal's back, or touched by the insulated person at the moment of receiving the shock. It appears also from Dr. Williamson's experiments, that the animal has control over this powerful organ; he himself frequently passed his hand from head to tail without receiving a shock. This, however, might be considered as dependent on the exhausted state of the animal, were it not for two experiments made with Cat fish; in the one the Gymnote swam up to the fish and turned away without attacking it, but presently returned and gave it a shock which deprived it of motion; in the other experiment, the Gymnote immediately struck the Cat fish, but did not at once destroy it, and was leaving it, when, observing that the fish moved, it returned and gave a second shock, which rendered it motionless. From these experiments it also appears that the shock does not at once destroy life; for if the fish struck be immediately removed into another vessel of water, it recovers; and so also if the shock be but slight.

Actual contact not necessary to produce the phenomena.

There appears little doubt that actual contact between the Gymnote and its prey is not necessary: in the experiments with the Cat fish that animal was untouched; it seems necessary only that the object to be shocked, should be sufficiently near to form part of the electric circle. Dr. Williamson felt the shock at the distance of three feet, by putting his hand in the water whilst another person touched the Gymnote; and it is a very curious fact that a hole having been bored in the vessel containing the animal, and a small stream of water allowed to escape, a person who placed his finger in the stream, felt a shock at the moment that another provoked the Gymnote by touching him: and Dr. Bancroft relates, that he had often had his hand shocked when held several inches above the water. Another remarkable instance is also mentioned by Mr. Bryant, in which the shock was felt through a thick piece of wood. One morning whilst he was standing by, as a servant was emptying a tub in which an Electric Gymnote was placed, he had lifted it from the ground, and was pouring off the water to renew it, when he received a shock so violent as occasioned him to let the tub fall. Mr. B. then called another person to his assistance, and caused them to lift the tub up, each laying hold only of the outside. When they were pouring off the remainder of the water, they each received so smart a shock that they were compelled to desist.

It is matter of dispute, whether touching with both hands is required to excite the discharge of the Electric fluid: Dr. Garden states that he held a large Gymnote several times with one hand, but received no shock, but he never touched them with both hands without receiving a very severe stroke. Captain Stedman, however, in his Voyages, says, it is by no means necessary to grasp the animal with both hands; and relates that, for a wager, he attempted twenty times to seize a Gymnote with one hand, and at every trial received so severe a shock, which extended to the top of his shoulder, that he was at last compelled to desist. If it be so, it is most probable that the electric chain is unwittingly completed by the approach, though not immediate contact, of some conducting body. The sensations experienced on touching the Gymnote are, according to M. Humboldt, more severe than those produced by the discharge of a highly charged large Leyden jar: he himself having accidentally, in coming out of the water, stepped with both feet upon a Gymnote, felt a horrible shock, and suffered, throughout the day, severe pain both in his knees and the other joints of his body. And Mr. Flagg, in the XIth volume of the American Philosophical Transactions, states, that a severe stroke will produce paralysis of the arms for many years.

VOL. XXIII.

Repeated discharges of this Electric fluid render the animal powerless, and it requires some time to recruit. With this circumstance the American fishermen are acquainted, and avail themselves of it when desirous to take Gymnotes. For this purpose they drive the wild horses, with which many of the plains of America abound, into the marshes wherein these animals are found: they are immediately and repeatedly struck till the Gymnotes have spent themselves, when the fishers either harpoon them, or take them with nets. And in further proof of the fact before mentioned, that animals thus struck, are numbed, but not destroyed, the Indians informed Humboldt that the horses thus driven into the marshes, were not dead on the second day afterwards. Notwithstanding this account of the powers of the Electric Gymnote, there are some persons who are not affected by handling them; how this is managed is uncertain, whether by powerfully compressing the back of the animal, or by interposing any non-conductor between it and the hand. Certain states of the body, however, seem unfavourable to the process; for Mr. Flagg mentions that he had seen a woman labouring under nervous fever, break the chain prepared for the passage of the electricity from the animal.

Gymnote
fishing with wild horses

The Electric Gymnote is found in the great rivers which wash the Eastern part of South America, the Meta Apuros and Orinoco; but it is most common in the extensive swamps and marshes which separate the Eastern bank of the Orinoco from the Venezuelan side of the Cordilleras, the temperature of the water in which it is found being about 78° 8' of Fahrenheit's scale. Vast numbers are found near the little town of Calabezo in the Caraccas; and near Uritucu, a road formerly much frequented has been entirely abandoned in consequence of the great number of Electric Gymnotes in a rivulet through which it runs, wherein very many mules were annually drowned in consequence of being struck by these animals. According to Humboldt's calculations, each square league of the Planos de Caracas, or Apuros, contains at least two or three ponds filled with Gymnotes.

The use which the stunning power possessed by these animals serves, is to enable them to procure their prey and devour it at their leisure; for as their teeth are but small, and their intestinal canal very short, a small portion can only be taken at a time, and without this organ the animal would be incapable of providing itself nourishment, which consists of small fish and worms.

The Electric Gymnote is often caught in Guiana and preserved in large troughs of water, being fed on small worms, fish, and cock-roaches, to which latter it is very partial. It has only twice been brought alive to Europe. Dr. Walsh's observations were made on one in England in the year 1778; and another was kept four months at Stockholm, by M. Tahlberg, in the year 1797.

G. Equilabratus, Humb.; Evenlipped Gymnote. About twenty-eight inches in length, body long, snake-like, compressed; the lips obtuse and of equal length; the back is olive green and the belly silvery, marked with little reddish spots. It was discovered by Humboldt in the great river of St. Magdalen. Resembles in

H

GYMNO- NOTUS. its manners the Electric Gymnote, but has no Electric apparatus; its air bladder is single, and does not extend along the tail.

GYMNO- SOPHIST.

β. Carapos.

The body compressed, scaly, and the tail much attenuated.

G. Macromus, Bloch; Long-tailed Gymnote. Head compressed and thin, upper jaw longest; body spotted; tail very long, and devoid of fin. Native of Brazil.

G. Brachiurus, Bloch; le Gymnote Carape, Lacep.; Short-tailed Gymnote. Head flattened; body striped transversely; scales very small, deeply embedded in the skin, and scarcely visible; lower jaw longest; tail short and finless. Native of the soft waters of America.

G. Cærulescens, Seba; Bluish Gymnote. Lower jaw longer than the upper; body bluish, with a round black spot on the gill cover; anal fin extending almost to the tail. Native of Surinam.

G. Rostratus, Schneid.; Beaked Gymnote. Head narrow and the jaws of equal length, forming a beak with a narrow gape; opercula on the sides, bound down by membrane; body and head scaly, spotted with very small scales. Native of America.

See Bloch, Ichthyologia a Schneider; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Philosophical Transactions, vol. lxx.; Humboldt, Observationes Zoologicae.

GYMNOPOGON, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Apocineæ. Generic character: flowers contorted, stigma two-lipped, villous at the apex, seed-vessel a drupe, nut mostly two-celled.

Three species, natives of the Society Islands.

GYMNORHYNCHUS, in Zoology, a genus of intestinal worms, established by Rudolphi.

Generic character. Body flat, jointless, very long, receptacle of the neck subglobular; head with two doubly-divided pits, armed with four retractile trunks.

The only species of the genus is G. reptans, which often grows to two feet long. Cuvier refers it to the genus Scolex, under the name of S. gigas. It lives in flesh.

A similar kind of worm has been found between the muscles of the Hedge Hog and in the Musk Shrew.

GYMNOSOPHIST, gymnosophistæ, γυμνσοφισταί, because they used to walk naked through gloomy deserts. Vossius.

Over and besides, among the Indians be certaine philosophers, whom they call gymnosophists, who from sunne rising to the setting thereof are able to endure all the day long, looking full against the sunne, without winking or once moving their eyes: and from morning to night can abide to stand sometimes upon one leg, and sometimes upon the other, in the sand, as scalding hot as it is.

Holland. Plinie, book vii. ch. ii.

And even there, by report, there be those who follow a certain strict, austere, and naked profession of wisdom, called thereupon gymnosophists, holy men, living according to their own laws, devoted altogether to a contemplative service of God, making less account of this life than Diogenes doth, and living more barely, as having no need at all of bag and wallet.

Id. Plutarch. Morals, fol. 1034.

The method which Apuleius tells us the Indian gymnosophists took to educate their disciples, is still more curious and remarkable.

Spectator, No. 337.

I mark'd where'er the Morosoph appear'd,
(By crowds surrounded and by all rever'd,)
How young and old, virgins and matrons, kiss'd
The footsteps of the bless'd gymnosophist.

Cambridge. The Scribleriad.

GYMNOSOPHIST is the title given by the Historians of Alexander to the Philosophers of India; not that they always went naked, for after a noviciate of 37 years (Strabo, xv. i. 59. 70.) they clothed themselves in sindon, (σινδών, muslin?) wore golden bracelets and ear-rings, eat meat, and married as many wives as possible, for the purpose of having many children; for more good, they said, comes from many than from few, and not having any slaves they had the more need of children as servants. The most distinct account of these Philosophers is that given by Onesicritus, who says, (Strabo, xv. i. 63.) that "Alexander having heard that they were always naked, practised great austerities, were held in the highest honour, and refused, when invited, to visit other persons, saying, that those who wished to profit by their example, or instruction, might come to them,—sent him to them, not thinking it proper to go himself, nor wishing to compel them to do any thing contrary to their hereditary institutions. He found 15 men, about 20 stadia (two miles and a half) from the city, sitting, standing, or lying in different postures, quite naked, and remaining immovable till the evening, when they went into the city. The heat of the sun which they then bore, was so great, that, about noon, no one else could endure to stand bare-footed on the ground." He entered into discourse with one of them named Calanus, who afterwards followed Alexander to Persia, and died after the custom of his forefathers, by mounting a funeral pile. Onesicritus told this Gymnosophist why he had been sent by the King; viz. in order to listen to their doctrine, and make a report of it to him. The Sage urged him to strip; "The ground was at first," he said, "covered with wheat and barley-meal instead of dust; and the springs flowed with water, milk, honey, wine, and oil, but from satiety and abundance men fell into excesses; Jupiter, offended at this, destroyed every thing, and made it manifest that they must live by labour. Temperance and other virtues having been since practised, an abundance of the good things of this world has been restored; but as men are now bordering on the insolence occasioned by satiety, there is a danger that all things will be again destroyed." Calanus then repeated his exhortations to him to strip, and lie down by him on the stones, if he wished to become a hearer, and to profit by his doctrine; but Mandanis,* the eldest and wisest of these Sages, reproved Calanus for thus pressing a condition with which Onesicritus hesitated to comply, and calling the stranger to himself, commended the King for his desire of knowledge, saying that he "was the only warrior whom he had ever seen studious of Philosophy, and that it would be most advantageous for all, if they who have the power of persuading such as are willing, and of compelling such as are unwilling, to practise temperance, would make use of their understanding." "He might himself," he added, "be pardoned, if speaking through three interpreters, who, being as ignorant as the multitude, understood nothing more than the mere words uttered, he was not able to demonstrate the utility of their doctrine; for it was as if any one expected water to run clear through mud."

This passage, which appears to give the words of Onesicritus himself, is the foundation of almost all the Ancients have said respecting the Gymnosophists; but that term was used by other writers to designate not

* Called Dandamis, or Damdamis, in other writers.

GYMNO- SOPHIST

GYMNO-
SOPHIST.

only the Jógis, or Indian Ascetics, to whom the above description strictly applies, but also the other divisions of the Brahmanical order, the secular, as well as regular divines of the Hindús. (Colebrooke, in As. Res. ix. 291.) That there was a discordance in the most authentic accounts, Strabo himself observes; (Ib. 68.) it is, therefore, the less surprising that a name strictly applicable to only one class of the Indian hierarchy, should be given to all, and that the Romans should speak of all the Philosophers of that Country as naked Ascetics. In ea gente, says Cicero, (Tusc. Disp. v. xxvii. 77.) ii qui sapientes habentur nudi ætatem agunt, et Caucasi nives, hiemalemque vim perferunt sine dolore: quumque ad flammam se applicaverunt, sine gemitu aduruntur. Pliny speaks in like manner, (Nat. Hist. vii. 2.) in the citation which we have given above.

Porphry, in his Treatise on Abstinence, (iv. 17.) expressly says, that the Indian Theologians, called Gymnosophists by the Greeks, were divided into two sects, (αἰρέσεις), the Brachmans (Βραχμᾶνες) and the Samanæans. (Σαμαναῖοι.) Each, therefore, ought to be noticed here; and an enumeration of the distinctive peculiarities in their practice and doctrine will not only point out the relation which they bore to each other, but also show how little the Religious institutions of India have changed in the course of more than one and twenty centuries.

I. Brach-
manes.

I. The Brachmanes, Brachmanæ, or Bragmanes, "are fewer in number than the other Tribes," says Arrian, (Indic. p. 324,) "but superior in rank and dignity." The attentions paid to them began even before their birth; for learned men visited their mothers during their pregnancy, in order to secure their safe delivery and obtain blessings for the children, by singing hymns and giving wholesome counsels. When born, their education was intrusted to the best instructors, and, as they grew older, they were placed under more learned men. A grove without the city was the place of their abode, where they remained for the space of 37 years, without any clothing, carefully abstaining from animal food, merely to touch which was a great sin; having no intercourse with women, and wholly engaged in teaching and being taught. At the close of that probationary period, they again entered the world, lived less abstemiously, took a great number of wives in order to propagate their race, and were fed and caressed by almost all the persons whom they met, one giving them provisions, and another pouring oil of sesamum over their heads. No women were admitted among them, as, if bad, they might betray the secrets of the Order, if good, they might desert their husbands; for "the better a man grows," said these Sages, "the less is he disposed to submit to the will of another." Disease they thought it irrational to bear; they, therefore, put themselves to death, when afflicted with any lasting disorder, and their wives were said, willingly, to ascend the funeral pile with them. Παρά τισι δ' ἀκούειν φησὶ, καὶ συγκатаκαί-ομέναις τὰς γυναῖκας τοῖς ἀνδράσιν ἀσμέναις τὰς δὲ μὴ ὑπομενούσας, ἀδοξεῖν. (Strabo, xv. 1, 62.) They professed to study Nature, and pretended to foretell various natural phenomena, such as changes of weather, storms, droughts, pestilences, &c. They affirmed that there are five elements, the fifth being that from which the heaven and the stars are formed; while water, from which the material world was made, was, in their estimation, the first. They believed the Deity to pervade every thing; the world to be created, perishable, and of a spherical form. The soul, they said, was immortal, and, as it were, in a state of gestation, while continuing in this world, preparatory to its birth, by death, in the next. Hence they professed to consider death as more desirable than life; and, contemning earthly pleasures, as well as disregarding earthly pains, to be at all times willing to die. Their doctrine approached nearly to that of the Stoics; while they delighted, like Plato, to clothe their tenets in symbols and allegories, and generally concealed their mysteries under the veil of Fable.

II. The Sarmanes,* Sarmanæ, or Samanæi, of whom the most venerated were called Hylōbii, because they lived in woods and forests, were clothed, and had their heads and bodies shaved; observed a strict celibacy; were extremely frugal, living solely on grains and herbs; often fasted; passed much of their time in prayer; were consulted by Kings on State affairs; gave charms and other remedies for diseases, and lived upon alms collected in market-places and on the highways.

II. Sar-
manes.

"Next in rank to the Hylōbii," says Megasthenes, (Strabo, xv. 1. 60.) "were the Medical Garmanes, (i. e. Sarmanes), the object of whose Philosophy was Man. They were frugal, but did not dwell in the open air; rice and meal, which formed their diet, were given to them by every one of whom they asked alms, and they received hospitality everywhere. They had recipes for making women bear many children, and could secure their being either male or female. They cured diseases more by diet than by medicine, preferred unguents and plasters to other remedies, but used, however, abundance of fraud and artifice. Both sects practised austerities, (καρτερίαν), the one by voluntary labours, the other by self-inflicted sufferings, such as remaining the whole day in one posture. Others, who were soothsayers and dealers in spells, and even skilled in the rites used relating to the dead, went begging through the towns and villages. Some, who were more favoured and polished than these, did not abstain, as much as piety and holiness require, from muttering incantations addressed to infernal Spirits."

On comparing these accounts of the Indian Philosophers, given on the authority of Megasthenes, Aristobulus, Onesicritus, and Nearchus, who were all officers in Alexander's army, with the information derived from the writings and actual practice of the Hindús, (Encycl. Metrop. xviii. 759.) it appears that the two distinct orders of Gymnosophists, mentioned by the Greeks, were the Jógis, Vairágis, Sanyásis, and other Ascetics among the Bráhmans, and the Yatis and Sramanas† among the Baudd'has; the latter term being changed into Samana in the Pracrit and spoken dialects. It must not, however, be forgotten that Sarman is a common title among the Bráhmans, and that Strabo speaks of the Garmanes (or, if the conjecture of some critics be right, Sarmanes) as belonging to that class of whom his Pramnæ were the opponents, who, likewise, correspond exactly with the regular divines among the Baudd'has. The latter, then, were existing in India, but not the predominant sect, in the time of Alexander.‡

* Tzschucke has substituted Γαρμᾶνες for Γεμᾶνες in Strabo, (xv. 1. 59.) on the authority of MSS., and there can be little doubt that the word was, originally, Σαρμᾶνες. Σαμαναῖοι (Porphyr. de Abstin. iv. 17.) is, probably, from an Indian corruption of Sarman, and Σαρμοί (Clemens Alexandr. Strom. iv. 1. p. 305.) is the same word grecised.

† If there were any authority for reading Σαρμᾶνες instead of Περίμ-ανες, in Strabo, (xv. 1. 70.) it would furnish an additional evidence that the Samanæi were Baudd'has, for his Pramnæ doubtless were such.

‡ Arrian drew from the same sources as Strabo.

GYMNO-
SOPHIST.GYMNO-THORAX.

This also applies to the passage in Porphyry, (de Abstinentiâ, iv. 17.) which contains a summary of the information obtained by Bardesanes the Babylonian, from the ambassadors sent by Damadamis to Cæsar: but later authorities, such as Clement of Alexandria, (I. p. 305.) who expressly names Budd'ha, and the anonymous writer* of the Tract on the Bragmans, either speak exclusively of the Baudd'has, or confound the two sects together. The latter, because his knowledge of the Indians was derived from Taprobane, (Ceylon;) the former, because he had conversed with merchants, most probably, from the coast of Coromandel or from that island, in which it is clear that Budd'hism was then established.

See Strabo, xiv. 1. tom. vi. Ed. Siebenkees; Arrian, de Expeditione Alexandri, vii. 1. p. 275; Hist. Indica, p. 324, Ed. Gronov. Lugd. Bat. 1704, fol.; Porphyrius de Abstinentiâ, iv. 17.; Clemens Alex. Stromat. i. 3.; Philostratus, Vita Apollon. i. 18. iii. 4.; Plutarch, Vita Alexandri, sec. 64.; Pliny, Nat. Hist. vii. 2.; Solinus, i. 52.; La Croze, Christianisme des Indes, p. 493; Mignot, in Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, xxxi. 86.; Brucker, Hist. Philosoph. i. 95.; Asiatic Researches, ix. 296.

GYMNOSTYLIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Necessaria. Generic character: calyx many-leaved, leaflets disposed in a single order, female florets apetalous, seeds compressed, partly toothed at the summit, awned with the persistent style.

Three species, natives of both hemispheres. Nuttall.

GYMNOTHORAX, from the Greek γυμνός, naked, and θώραξ, the chest, Schneid.; Muræna, Shaw. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Anguilliformes, order Malacopterygii Apodes, class Pisces.

Generic character. Branchial openings small, linear, and lateral; branchial rays very slender; pectoral and ventral fins deficient.

The individuals composing this genus are divided by Schneider into three subdivisions.

a. Palatine teeth placed in a long row.

G. Muræna, Schneid.; Muræna Helena, Gmel.; la Murénophis Hélène, Lacep.; Roman Muræna, Shaw. About three and a half feet long, body compressed, slippery, soft, of a brown colour, marked with white spots dotted with brown; head pointed, the upper jaw longer than the lower; teeth large, sharp, and far apart, with smaller teeth interposed; nostrils tubular, one pair in front of the eyes, the other on the top of the head; eyes lateral, lateral line indistinct; dorsal fin arising between the gills and the nostrils; dorsal, anal, and caudal fins narrow from above downwards, supported by innumerable rays; vent mesial. The Muræna is caught in the Mediterranean, especially off Sardinia, and in the Indian and American seas, where it is found in the clefts of the rocks, but in Spring is met with on the shore. It is extremely voracious, devouring large quantities of Crabs and Polyps, which it hunts after with great avidity. The Muræna is caught in wheels and with lead lines. It was esteemed by the Romans a great luxury, and ponds were made for the purpose of keeping them. Columella, also, has recommended the breeding Murænæ, and pointed out the methods best adapted for the purpose, by constructing reservoirs containing tortuous passages. To so great an extent was their culture afterwards carried, that at one of Cæsar's triumphs he distributed 6000 among his friends.

* This Tract, commonly ascribed to Palladius, is addressed to him, in the version of it by St. Ambrose.

G. Favagineus, Schneid.; Chestnut Muræna. About two and a half feet long; body compressed, of a chestnut colour, striped with yellow lines like the meshes of a net; head bending down; gape wide, gills far back, dorsal fin beginning above, and opposite to them. Found on the coast of Tranquebar.

G. Punctatus, Schneid.; Spotted Muræna. Body compressed, brown, and marked with small yellow oval spots. There is a variety which has the spots brown. From the Tranquebar coast.

G. Afer, Schneid.; African Muræna. Body marbled with brown and white, compressed; nostrils tubular; dorsal fin arising in front of the gills. Found on the Guinea coast and also on the Malabar coast.

G. Echidna, Schneid.; Viperous Muræna. Body yellowish white, varied with dark coloured lines, spots, and dots; the spots on the belly marked with white; the jaws are of equal length and obtuse; three rows of teeth in the upper and two in the lower jaw. Native of the South Seas.

G. Annulatus, Schneid.; Ringed Muræna. Body bluish, tail compressed, marked with thirty-one dark rings; lateral line hollowed out and mesial. Native of Japan.

β. Teeth on the Palate collected together, not in rows.

G. Catenatus, Schneid.; Chain Muræna. Head short, rather obtuse; tail sharp; dorsal fin commencing in the middle of the back; is about a foot long. Found on the Coromandel coast.

γ. No palatine teeth.

G. Zebra, Schneid.; Striped Gymnothorax, or Zebra Eel, Shaw; Zebra Muræna. Head small; upper jaw the longest; body marked alternately with dark and white stripes. From this species Lacepede derives his Gymnomuræna.

The other species are,

G. Reticulatus, Schneid.

G. Nebulosus.

G. Pictus.

G. Fasciatus.

G. Wilsoni.

G. Scriptus.

G. Brasiliensis.

G. Colubrinus.

See Lacepede, Histoire des Poissons; Bloch, Ichthyologia a Schneider; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

GYPAETUS, from the Greek γύψ, a Vulture, and ἀετός, an Eagle, Storr; Gypaete. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Diurnæ, order Accipitres, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak of moderate size, thickish, strong, straight, arched, and hooked at the tip, and the base cerigerous; nostrils oval, and covered with stiff hairs or narrow feathers inclining forward, and a tuft of hair forming a beard beneath the lower mandible; wings very long, the first quill shorter than the second, and the third the longest; tarsi short and feathered to the toes, of which there are four, the three anterior connected by a short membrane, and the middle one

GYMNO-
THORAXGYPAE-
TUS.

GYPAE-
TUS.

very long; the talons slightly curved, strong, and very sharp.

This genus forms part of the Falcones of Gmelin, but was separated from it by Storr, under the present title, and was ranged sometime after by Savigny, in his description of the Birds of Egypt and Syria, in his genus Phene. As its name implies, it has some common characters with the Vultures and Eagles, the latter of which are found among the Falcons. Like the Vultures it has the eyes placed low in the head, the claws weak comparatively with its size, the wings but half closed in walking, on account of their great length, and the crop, when filled, projecting at the bottom of the neck; but with the Eagles, its head is covered with feathers, except on the crown, the legs feathered to the toes, and they live only in pairs.

The Gypaeti are remarkable for the keenness of their sight, which enables them at an immense height to observe when a sheep, (its usual prey,) separating itself from the flock, strays to the edge of a precipice; immediately the bird stoops upon it, and by its weight, together with the force collected in its descent, tumbles it over, and, when thus disabled by the fall, devours it. The stories related of its carrying off animals, and even children, in its talons, are absurd, for its claws are ill-adapted to that purpose, and it never attacks an animal till it is disabled either by sickness or the mode just described, or when it is young; nor is it even averse to dead animals, or parts of them. Bruce, in his Travels, mentions that the Nisser (or Golden Eagle, as he calls it) which he shot "did not stoop rapidly from a height, but came flying slowly along the ground, and sat down close to the meat, within the ring the men had made round it. A great shout, or rather cry of distress, called me to the place. I saw the Eagle stand for a minute, as if to recollect himself: while the servants ran for their lances and shields. I walked up as nearly to him as I had time to do. His attention was fixed upon the flesh. I saw him put his foot into the pan, where there was a large piece in water prepared for boiling; but finding the smart, which he had not expected, he withdrew it, and forsook the piece that he held.

"There were two large pieces, a leg and a shoulder, lying upon a wooden platter; into these he thrust both his claws, and carried them off; but I thought he still looked wistfully at the large piece which remained in the warm water. Away he went slowly along the ground as he had come. The face of the cliff, over which criminals are thrown, concealed him from our sight. The Mahometans that drove the asses were much alarmed, and assured me of his return. My servants, on the other hand, very unwillingly expected him, and thought he had already taken more than his share.

"As I had myself a desire of more intimate acquaintance with this bird, I loaded a rifle-gun with ball, and sat down close to the platter by the meat. It was not many minutes before he came, and a prodigious shout was raised by my attendants, 'He is coming, he is coming,' enough to have dismayed a less courageous animal. Whether he was not quite so hungry as at his first visit, or suspected something from my appearance, I do not know, but he made a short turn, and sat down about ten yards from me, the pan with the meat being between him and me. As the field was clear before me, and I did not know but his next move might bring him opposite to some of my people, so that he might actually get the rest of the meat and make off, I shot him with a ball through the middle of his body, about two inches below the wing, so that he lay down upon the grass without a single flutter." (Appendix, vii. 271. 8vo. Ed.) His dimensions were very great; from wing to wing he measured eight feet four inches, from the tip of his tail to the point of his beak four feet seven inches, and he weighed twenty-two pounds.

G. Barbatus, Cuv.; Vultur Barbarus and Falco Barbatus, Gmel.; Falco Magnus, Sam. Gmel.; Vult. Barbat. and Barbar., Lath.; Gypaete des Alpes, Sonnini; Nisser, or Golden Eagle, Bruce; Læmmer Geyer of Germany; Alpine Gypaete. This is the largest, and fortunately the rarest bird of prey found in the Old World: it measures about four feet and a half in length, and from nine to ten in width; the head and upper part of the neck is of a dirty white colour, with one black stripe passing from the root of the beak above the eyes, which are furnished with a red eyelid, and another black stripe extending from behind them upon the ears; the lower part of the neck, the chest, and belly of a bright orange red; shoulders, back, and wing-coverts deep brown, but each feather streaked down its middle with white; the quills of the wings and tail ashy grey, their stems white; the tail long and spreading; legs blue; beak and claws black. When young, the head and neck are brownish black instead of white, and the under parts brownish grey, spotted with white, instead of the bright orange; and the lower part of the neck and the wing-coverts spotted with a lighter shade than their black ground, which spots on the back are large and white: the bird has then been described as another species; by Latham as the Vultur Niger, and by Meyer as the Gypaetus Melanocephalus. It feeds upon Chamois Goats, Sheep, Calves, and young Deer; but when pressed by hunger will devour carcasses. It is found in the Swiss Alps, is common in the Tyrol and Hungary, but very rare in Germany and the Pyrenees; and builds its nest in the most inaccessible rocks, where it lays two rough white eggs, spotted with brown.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Storr, in Delect. Opusc. ad Scient. Nat. Spect. de Ludwig; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Bruce, Travels.

GYPOGERANUS, from the Greek γύψ, a Vulture, and γέρανος, a Crane, Illig.; Secretary Bird. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Diurnæ, order Accipitres, class Aves.

Generic character. Head thickly feathered, forming an occipital crest capable of elevation; a cere extending to the orbits; beak shorter than the head, thick and strong, curved almost from the base, and hooked at the point, which is compressed; ocular circlet naked; nostrils in the cere oblong, expanded, and open; the bend of the wings protected with three bony tubercles; the wings themselves long, the first five quills the longest, and of equal length; the tail quills decreasing in length from the middle two, which are the longest; the legs are very long, the tibiæ feathered, the tarsi more than twice the length of the front toes, which are united at their roots by membrane, the skin beneath warty; claws slightly curved, strong, and sharp.

G. Africanus, Illig.; Sagittarius, Vosmaer; Serpentarius, Cuvier; le Messager du Cap de Bonne Espérance, Buff.; Snake Eater, Edwards; Secretary Bird. This bird, at first sight, appears to belong to the Waders from the length of its legs, but the curved form of the beak nearly resembling the Falcon kind, and the fea-

GYPAE-
TUSGYPOGE-
RANUS.

GYPOGE-
RANUS.
—
GYPSY.

the gathering of the legs themselves below the knee distinctly separate it from that order: whilst the great length of the legs and the slight curving of the toes equally distinguish it from the Falcons. In size the Secretary Bird equals the Stork; it has the root of the beak and the ocular region covered with a bare orange-coloured skin; the gape wide, and the back of the head ornamented with a tuft of ten pendent feathers, which, having been supposed to bear a resemblance to a pen stuck behind the ear of a clerk, have given rise to its name Secretary Bird. The general colour of the bird is greyish on the head, neck, breast, back, and wing-coverts, the latter clouded with reddish brown, and the quill feathers black; the throat and breast white; belly black, streaked with rufous; tail feathers, of which the middle two are twice the length of the others, partly black, becoming greyer as they lengthen, and tipped with white, but the middle two are bluish grey, tinged with brown towards the tip, which is white, marked with a black spot; under tail-coverts pale rufous; thighs black, streaked finely with brown. In the female the crest and two middle tail feathers are shorter; the grey less tinted with brown, and the belly and thighs more varied.

The Secretary Bird is found in the neighbourhood of the Cape of Good Hope, where it builds its eyry on the top of a high thicket, lining it with wool and feathers; but towards Terra del Natal, where it is also found, it builds in high trees. Its food consists principally of reptiles, which it destroys by a stroke of its wings, which are adapted to that purpose, more especially by the long tubercles on their bend; it takes its prey whilst running, and not by flight. It is voracious, as appears from Levaillant's account, who found in the crop of one, no less than twenty-one young Tortoises, three Snakes, and eleven Lizards, besides a ball, composed of the scales of reptiles and the horny coverings of insects, in its gizzard. It is capable of being tamed when caught young, and will live peaceably among poultry, unless pressed by hunger, when it will seize upon the young birds, and swallow them feathers and all.

See Vosmaer, Monographia; Buffon, Histoire Naturelle; Edwards, Memoirs; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Philosophical Transactions, vol. lx.

GYPSOPHILA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dicandria, order Digynia, natural order Caryophyllæ. Generic character: calyx one-leaved, bell-shaped, angular; corolla, petals five, ovate, sessile, capsule globose, one-celled, many-seeded.

Fourteen species, natives of the Eastern parts of Europe

GYPOGE-
RANUS.
—
GYPSY.

GYPSY.

GYPSY, } Spelman, in v. Egyptiani, calls them
GIPSY, adj. } a most nefarious kind of vagabonds GYPSISME. } and impostors. The name (Egyptian) seems to have been for some reason assumed by themselves.

The word is sometimes applied contemptuously for some ill quality; and sometimes playfully for some engaging quality.

He like a gypsy oftentimes would go,
All kind of gibb'rish he had learnt to know,
And with a stick, a short string, and a noose,
Would show the people tricks at fast and loose.

Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

The bonds made there (like gypsies' knots) with ease
Are fast and loose, as they that hold them please.

Suckling. Upon Lord Brothall's Wedding.

The companion of his [the tinker's] travels is some foul, sunburnt quean, that, since the terrible statute, recanted gypsisme, and is turned pedlar Overbury. Character, sig. I.

As we were riding away, Sir Roger told me, that he knew several sensible people who believ'd these gypsies now and then foretold very strange things; and for half an hour together appeared more jocund than ordinary.

Spectator, No. 130.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes;
The gypsy knows her power and flies.

Prior. A Dutch Proverb.

Outlandish persons calling themselves Egyptians, or Gypsies, are another object of the severity of some of our un repealed statutes.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. xiii.

The regicide Directory, on the day which, in their gipsy jargon, they call the 5th Pluviose, in return for our advances, charge us with eluding our declarations under evasive formalities and frivolous pretexts.

Burke. Works, vol. viii. p. 106. On a Regicide Peace. Letter 1.

GYPSY (from E-gypti-an) is the name of a remarkable Tribe of vagabonds found in every Country of Europe, and in most parts of Asia. Though more than 300 years have elapsed since they first made their appearance in Europe, and they have been a proscribed race in the greater part of it almost ever since, they still exist distinguished by the same peculiarities, exposing themselves to the same penalties, and setting the laws at defiance; a living instance of the extreme difficulty of extirpating deeply rooted habits.

A view of their condition in England, compared with the reports from other parts of Europe, collected at different periods and under different circumstances, will show that they are in reality a distinct People, and will suggest some conjectures on their probable origin. Their leading characteristic is the love of a vagrant life. Living in huts, holes, or tents, under hedges, or in ditches, a bank serves them for a wall, a few branches for rafters, and a rag of canvass completes the roof of their cabin, which is just high enough for them to creep in and out of it. Though delighting in finery, they are always covered with dirt and rags. Their children are nearly naked; but having been accustomed to travel on foot almost as soon as they can run alone, are extremely hardy. They maintain themselves as itinerant horse dealers, farriers, smiths, tinkers, braziers, knife-grinders, basket and chair-bottom makers; but many are fiddlers, and several, especially the women, gain a livelihood by carrying a basket of trifles and telling fortunes. They usually live in companies of one or more families together, and have donkies to carry their tents and the few articles of furniture which they possess. Each horde has its prescribed limits, within

Habits in England.

GYPSY. which it makes its circuit; but those limits are sometimes very extensive. Many, now, take up their abode in towns from Michaelmas to Lady-day, and resume their wandering habits on the return of Spring. They are great pilferers, but are rarely concerned in any considerable robberies. Their offences are usually hedge-breaking and poultry-stealing. They live principally on vegetables, but have no objection to dog's flesh or carrion, and give a decided preference to the carcasses of beasts which have died of disease. "Those that have died by the hand of God," said an old Gypsy woman to John Hoyland, their worthy Historian, "are better than those that have died by the hand of Man." Their moral habits, as may be supposed, are in other respects very dissolute. Their ignorance is extreme, very few of them having the least tincture of learning. Though always professing the Religion of the Country in which they reside, they are singularly regardless of Religious duties; and in England few of them know even so much as the Lord's Prayer. Their marriage is generally nothing more than a mutual agreement to live together. Whether they indulge in polygamy, or exchange their wives, does not appear, though the latter is probably common among them. They are, like most half-civilized Tribes, excessively fond of smoking and intoxicating liquors. Among their good qualities a regard for their promise holds the first place; it is, probably, connected with gratitude, for few persons are likely to exact a promise from a Gypsy without having previously done him some service. Another good trait is their abstaining from applications for Parochial relief; for many have means of obtaining a settlement, and as travellers they have all at times a claim for casual relief; but such applications are almost unexampled.

In Germany.

Germany has, lately as well as formerly, furnished the most ample account of this vagrant race; which is briefly, but completely characterised in the Preface to Dr. Bischoff's German and Gypsy Dictionary, printed in 1827 at Ilmenau; for large extracts from which Work no apology, therefore, is necessary. "The Gypsies," says this writer, (p. 2,) "whom I have had an opportunity of seeing, are lean, middle-sized, slender-limbed, and well-proportioned. Their complexion is swarthy, or sallow, (olivenfarbig;) their forehead high and rather round; their eyes and hair deep and black, or dark brown, the upper being larger than the lower lid; their eyebrows and eyelashes are long and coarse; their nose, particularly the women's, long; mouth broad; lips red; teeth white; chin round; fingers tapering." In the neighbourhood of Eisenach, Dr. Bischoff's place of residence, "they live in the open air in the summer months, in the villages in winter. Their food differs little from that of the country-people, but they do not turn up their noses at the most disgusting objects, such as the carcasses of cows, pigs, &c. Poultry is their darling food; but bread, vegetables, and water their common diet. A distempered beast is a dainty morsel to them. They slaughter it very expeditiously, dry its flesh in the sun, or broil it on the fire, and eat it with a high relish. They seldom make bread, as they prefer begging or stealing it with their other provisions. They have no fixed time for their meals; but, as soon as they have scraped together enough to make a dinner, it is boiled or roasted, and eaten. They seldom have any thing like plates and dishes, or knives and forks. They are fond of beer, but prefer brandy when they can get it; and at their merry-makings usually make themselves beastly drunk. Old and young, men and women, are passionately fond of smoking tobacco, which is often all that they have to satisfy their hunger for several days together. From two to ten years of age their children usually go naked; beyond that time the boys generally get, by begging or stealing, a pair of breeches, and the girls an apron. When old enough to be married they attend more to their dress. The men wear a hat, coat, waistcoat, and breeches, with boots or shoes in winter; but their clothes are generally old, tattered, and dirty; and the women, who are usually worse clad than the men, show no anxiety to mend their clothes, even when such parts of their bodies are exposed as the most depraved among the lower orders carefully conceal. An old shift, with a linen or wool-len cloth thrown over their head and folded round their waste, is often their only clothing." "Men, women, and children live all huddled together; in summer under tents and trees, where their cattle, horses, and goats are grazing; in winter they quarter themselves on the peasantry, lodge their effects with some of the villagers, and leave their horses, goats, and dogs to the care of the country-people, who are afraid of them. Their whole occupation, properly, consists in cooking, eating, smoking, talking, and sleeping. About nursing their children, washing their clothes, or cleaning their hovel, they never give themselves a thought. A few kitchen-utensils, a pair of bellows, a small stone anvil, a vice, some hammers, tongs, and files, are usually all the furniture they possess. They, for the most part, get their livelihood by dishonest means. It is only when they can neither beg, filch, nor steal, that they have recourse to labour. It is then that they turn tinkers, or deal in wooden spoons and platters, sell foundered horses, or glass and earthenware."

GYPSY.

Fiddling and fluting are practised by the men; fortune-telling and dream-expounding, arts always in vogue in the East, are, especially, the business of the women; who also drive the Devil out of bewitched cattle, find stolen goods, promise girls to make their sweethearts kind, (versprechen das Feuer,*) and give charms for cooling the blood. They usually marry very early: boys of 14 and girls of 12 are often man and wife; but a legal marriage is carefully avoided, for there is nothing they dread more than restraint. A trifling oversight on the woman's part, is a sufficient plea with the husband for dismissing her. When the infidelity is on the man's side, the woman frequently takes her revenge by lying in wait for him with a party of her female relations, and giving him a thorough pommeling. Their women are often the occasion of bloody battles. If one man takes a fancy for another's wife, he challenges him to fight; they strip, set to, and their knives often decide the contest. The woman is, of course, considered as the victor's prize. Those who are cleverest in stealing and fortune-telling are most valued, and are very frequently the causes of new contests. Their women are, usually, very prolific. As soon as the new-born infant is washed, and wrapped up in rags, its parents talk about the choice of a god-father, and always fix upon some rich man, not unfrequently upon some great personage. The hope of getting a fine christening-gift sometimes leads them to have their children christened over and over again in

* This expression is not given even in Campe's Wörterbuch, is probably, a slang phrase, and has, perhaps, been misunderstood by the Translator.

GYPSY.

different places. A few days after its birth, the mother wraps her infant up in a cloth, carries it to church, and after church goes from house to house begging and thieving as opportunity serves. As soon as her child is a few months old, she carries it on her back, and drives the rest before her. When able to run alone, it is taught to dance, and soon learns to practise its art for money. When a few years old, it is taught by its mother to lie and thieve; and while she is taking in the gaping country-folks, the child slips into the house unperceived, snaps up whatever comes to hand, and runs off with it to the camp hard by. The boys, when older, learn their father's trade; but the girls, corrupted by their mother's lawless example, begin at a very early age to look out for a husband. Gypsies' children are never corrected, be they ever so mischievous and unruly, no subordination is enforced, and those are the greatest favourites, who show the strongest propensity to fraud and thieving. Instruction in Religion is never thought of. Their constant exercise and exposure to the air render the Gypsies hardy, and they often live to a great age. They seldom suffer from infectious disorders, and generally have the measles and small-pox lightly: from ophthalmia, however, the itch, and most frequently from syphilitic complaints, they suffer severely; but, notwithstanding their dread of death, they cannot be easily persuaded to have recourse to medicine. When a Gypsy believes himself to be dying, he breaks out into lamentations on being separated from his friends, and as soon as he is dead, all the members of his family set up a bitter cry, and his nearest relations often tear their hair. They always bury their dead in church-yards, and their graves are like those of the country-people. They seem, at present, in Germany, to have nothing like a government among themselves, though they had, formerly, a King and leaders whom they called Dukes, Counts, &c. When several encampments unite together, they choose one of the seniors as their Head, while they remain in the same spot, and give up to him a small part of their earnings, whether honestly or dishonestly obtained. Most of them, notwithstanding their professions, have no notion whatever of Religion. Though they always have their children christened, they seldom call them by their Christian names, always giving them, afterwards, a name of their own invention. The commonest of these Gypsy names are, Vennel, Misser, Gringla, Póla, Gulludevel, Hanno, Potretari, Zonéla, Miffer, Daïb'ha, Dort'hé, Shnukelputz, and Vintermad. In Roman Catholic churches they even receive the sacrament, and most of the Gypsies in Germany profess that Religion. "Grellmann," says Dr. Bischoff, (p. 13.) "characterises them briefly, but ably, in these words: 'When we reflect upon the condition of men who are like children in intellect, with a mind full of rude, half-formed ideas, guided by feeling rather than reason, and using thought and reflection merely as the means of gratifying some powerful desire, we have a faithful outline of the Gypsy's character.' Those who have fallen under my observation," continues Dr. Bischoff, "were invariably hot and passionate; they are also mischievous, revengeful, lazy, selfish, foul-mouthed, suspicious, distrustful, hasty in judging and speaking, cowardly, foes to all useful knowledge, heedless, debauched, abandoned to gluttony, and indifferent about public disgrace. On the other hand, they have a good understanding, an excellent memory, quickness of comprehension, and are lively and talkative." "The unchangeableness of the Gypsy character is manifested," as a writer in the Berlin Monthly Magazine very justly observes, "not only by a language peculiar to themselves, and by means of which they are enabled to separate themselves from the people in the midst of whom they live, and form an intimate union among themselves, but also by their passion for the liberties and indulgences which spring from their separation from other people, and their union among themselves." "Hence," adds Dr. Bischoff, "it has arisen, that almost all the attempts to improve them have proved fruitless."

The best method of tracing their history, and showing their ubiquity in Europe, is to take the dates of the earliest laws respecting them, enacted by the different European States.

In 1422, the City of Basel, (Bâle,) in Switzerland, addresser a Warning to its citizens against the various frauds and impostures practised by "the cunning Zigeuners," (Gypsies,) the detail of which shows that they were as ingenious in extracting money from the credulous, then, as they are now. The first enactment against them in our statute books, is the Act passed in the 22nd of Henry VIII., A. D. 1522, for the expulsion from the realm of "an outlandish people, calling themselves Egyptians, using no crafte, nor feat of merchandise; who have come into this realme, and gone from shire to shire, and place to place, in great company; and used great, subtle, and craftie means to deceive the people, bearing them in hand that they, by palmistrie, could tell men's and women's fortunes; and so, many times by crafte and subtletie, have deceived the people of their money, and also have committed many heinous felonies and robberies." In France a similar edict was issued by Francis VII., who died in 1547, and an injunction to drive them away with fire and sword was published by the States of Orleans in 1561. In 1572, they were banished from the Milanese, and a few years earlier from the Venetian territory. The codes of Denmark and Sweden contain enactments to the same effect; the first, in the latter, being dated in 1662. Before 1556, they were forbidden, on pain of death, from appearing in the Netherlands. In 1591, an Act of the Council of Tarragona, in Spain, where they abound, condemned them as "mendaces, fures, deceptores et aliis sceleribus assueti."

They are not less numerous in the North and East, than in the South and West of Europe. In Hungary they are found in great numbers, and in addition to their ordinary trades, have that of gold-washing, thousands of both sexes being so employed during the summer, in the Bannat, Transylvania, Valakhia, and Moldavia. The Gypsies in the first of those Countries were more peculiarly the object of Grellmann's researches; and the Baron de Campenhausen (Bemerk. über Russland, u. v. w.) found the last divided into four Castes, with the lowest of which the others do not associate. Dr. Clarke met with them near Nauplia, (Napoli di Romania,) in the Peloponnesus, (Trav. vi. 435.) and again in Bulgaria, Valakhia, and Hungary. "The Bulgarian Gypsies," he says, (viii. 227.) "are exactly like those of England; the women were squalling about, with their usual wild and tawny complexions." After observing (Ib. 271.) that "it is singular enough, that in whatever country we find this people, their character for thieving is always the same," he adds, "but the Valakhian Gypsies are not an idle race; they ought rather to be described as a laborious

GYPSY.

European Laws concerning
Gypsies.Hungarian Gypsies.

GYPSY.

people; and the majority honestly endeavour to earn a livelihood. It is this part of them who work as gold-washers. They have a great skill in finding the metal. Some of them have ingenuity enough to smelt the gold into small ingots; but they generally sell the gold thus found in the form of dust." "The Gypsies of the Bannat," he informs us, (viii. 329.) "get their livelihood like those of Valakhia, by rambling about as blacksmiths and musicians. In winter they cut spoons, ladles, troughs, and other implements of wood. During summer they go nearly naked, and are then employed in washing gold from the sand of the rivers and plains. . . . A careful examination of the sand, after they have washed it, proves that hardly a particle of gold escapes them during the operation. The families supported by gold-washing are very numerous; but the gains of each are very inconsiderable, being barely sufficient to excite their industry, although the value of many thousands of florins of gold be annually produced in this manner." At a Ball given at Moscow by the citizens on Easter Monday, the same traveller saw (i. 77.) "a party of Gypsies performing the national dance, called, from the air by which it is accompanied, Barina. It resembled our English hornpipe, and was full of expressions of the most ferocious licentiousness. This dance, though extremely common in Russia, they confess to have derived from the Gypsies, and it may, therefore, seem probable that our hornpipe was introduced by the same people. Other Gypsies were telling fortunes, according to their universal practice, or begging for presents of oranges and ice. . . . In regulating their dress, they lavish all their finery on their head. Their costume in Russia is very different from that of the natives; they wear enormous caps, covered with ribbons, and decorated in front with a prodigious quantity of silver coins; these form a matted mail-work over their foreheads. They also wear the same coins as necklaces, and a smaller kind as pendants to their ears. The Russians hold them in great contempt, never speaking of them without abuse, and feel themselves contaminated by their touch, unless it be to have their fortunes told. They believe the Gypsies not only have the wish, but the power to cheat every one they see, and, therefore, generally avoid them. Formerly they were more dispersed over Russia, and paid no tribute; but now they are collected, and all belong to one nobleman, to whom they pay a certain tribute, and rank among the number of his slaves. They accompany their dances with singing and loud clapping of the hands; breaking forth, at intervals, with shrieks and short expressive cries, adapted to the sudden movements, gestures, and turns of the dance. The male dancers hold in one hand a handkerchief,* which they wave about, and manage with grace as well as art. This dance, like that of the Almehs in Egypt, although full of the grossest libidinous expression and most indecent postures, is, in other respects, graceful. Nothing can be more so than the manner in which they sometimes wave and extend their arms; it resembles the attitudes of Bacchanalians represented on Greek vases. But the women do not often exhibit those attitudes; they generally maintain a stiff upright position, keeping their feet close, and beating a tattoo with their high heels." Among the Finlanders, they have an appellation which signifies thieves. (Clarke's Travels, i. 78.) In the Crimea, the same traveller (ii. 137.) "found parties of the Tzigankies,* or Gypsies, encamped as we see them in England, but having their tents stationed between their waggons. Poultry, cats, dogs, and horses, were feeding around them, seeming like members of the same family. Gypsies are much encouraged by the Tatars, who allow them to encamp in the midst of their villages, where they exercise the several functions of smiths, musicians, and astrologers. Many of them are wealthy, possessing fine horses and plenty of other cattle; but their way of life, whether they be rich or poor, is always the same. One of their waggons was filled with an enormous drum: this instrument they accompany with a pipe, when performing before village-dancers. In their tents the men sat stark naked among the women. They rose, however, as we entered, and cast a sheep's skin over their bodies. The filth and stench of this people were abominable; almost all of them had the itch to such a degree, that their limbs were covered with blotches and scabs." In 1784, or 1785, M. Berto Pisani, the late able and well-known Chief Dragoman to the British Embassy at Constantinople, communicated some information respecting the Gypsies near that Capital, with a vocabulary of their language, to Mr. Marsden, who published it in the VIIth volume of the Archæologia, (p. 382.) Bishop Pococke met with them in the Northern part of Syria, where, he says, (i. 28. 358.) they are found in great numbers, pass for Mohammedans, live in tents or caverns, manufacture coarse carpets, and "have a much better character than their relations in Hungary or the Gypsies in England."

Having thus traced these vagrants through every part of Europe to nearly the centre of Asia, our next inquiry will be, from what Country did they originally come? The earliest record of their appearance in Western Europe does not go further back than the beginning of the XVth century. William Dilick, in his Chronicle of Hesse, (p. 229,) mentions their appearance in that Country in 1414; and we learn from Calvisius, (Annal. Misniens.) that they were driven from Misnia in 1418. Pasquier, in his Recherches sur la France, (iv. 9.) says, that "on the 17th of August, 1427, there came to Paris twelve penitents, (penanciers), as they called themselves, a Duke, an Earl, and ten men, all on horseback, and calling themselves good Christians. They were of the Lower Egypt; and gave out that, not long before, the Christians had subdued their Country, and obliged them to embrace Christianity, on pain of being put to death. Those who were baptized, were great Lords in their own Country, and had a King and Queen there. Sometime after their conversion, the Saracens overran their Country, and obliged them to renounce Christianity. When the Emperor of Germany, the King of Poland, and other Christian Princes heard of this, they fell upon them, and obliged the whole of them, both great and small, to quit their Country, and go to the Pope at Rome, who enjoined them seven years' penance, to wander over the world, without lying in a bed. They had been wandering five years when they came to Paris. They were then reduced to 100 or 120, from 1000 or 1200, their number when they left home; among others of their countrymen they had lost their King and Queen. Nearly all of them

GYPSY.

Tatarian.

Turkish.

Syrian.

Origin.

* It is singular that Dr. Clarke did not here mention the Romeika and other Greek dances, in which the same custom occurs.

* Tziganki is the Russian diminutive of Tzigan, a Gypsy.

GYPSY.

had their ears bored, and one or two silver rings in each, which they said were esteemed ornaments in their Country. The men were black, and their hair curled; the women were remarkably black, all their faces broad, (déployez)* their hair black, their only clothes a large old shaggy garment, (flossoyé), tied over the shoulders with a band, (lien), and under it a poor petticoat, (roquet). In short, they were some of the poorest and most miserable creatures ever seen in France; and notwithstanding their poverty, there were among them women, who, by looking into people's hands, told their fortunes. And what was worse, they picked people's pockets of their money, and got it into their own, through telling these things by art, magic, &c." Belon mentions his having met troops of them near Cairo. According to Dr. Bischoff, (but he has not given his authorities) they called themselves by the same name, and told the same story, on their first appearance in Germany in 1417; and the answer to the first question annexed to John Hoyland's circular, issued in 1815, is that "all Gypsies suppose the first of them came from Egypt." The origin of their common French name, "Bohémiens," is more obscure. Borel, says Moréri, (Art. Bohémiens), derives it from Boēm, an old French word, signifying bewitched, (ensorcelé). In Transylvania, they are called Pharao Nepek, i. e. Pharaoh's People, and in Spain, Gitanos; but their Portuguese name, Ciganos, seems to approach nearer to the German Zigeuner, which has manifestly the same origin as the Moldavian Cyгани, the Russian Тсүган', and the Italian Cingari, which are all derived from the Turkish Chingânéh, or Chingaréh, which bears some resemblance to Sangari, the name of a piratical Tribe established on the Southern Coast of the Gulf of Kach'h. (Rennell, Mem. 186.)† As the habits, features, and complexion of the Gypsies bear a strong resemblance to those of the inferior Castes of Hindús, this coincidence of their name with that of an Indian Tribe, seemed, when first remarked, not to be merely apparent and accidental, and gave rise to the conjecture, that they might have migrated from Western India. But this approximation, which promised to afford a clue to their real origin, has received a powerful and unexpected corroboration by an inquiry into the language peculiar to the Gypsies. It has been thence ascertained; first, that all the different hordes of Gypsies yet noticed in Europe and Asia, speak the same tongue: and, secondly, that it is identical with the Hindí, dialects of which are spoken in every part of Hindústan. Bonaventura Vulcanius, the first writer who mentions their language, after saying that Joseph Scaliger named 1430 as the year in which the Gypsies first appeared in Europe, gives some words of their tongue,‡ which he supposed to be a mere jargon. The next authentic specimen of it was furnished by Ludolf, in his Commentarius in Historiam Æthiopicam, (p. 214,) who found most of the words collected by himself to agree with those given by Vulcanius a century before. Büttner, according to Adelung, (Mithrid. i. 238.) first suspected their Indian origin, but Professor Rüdiger, whose work was printed in 1777, appears to be the first person who thought of comparing their dialect with those spoken in India; and Grellmann was the first who, by an actual and careful comparison, placed the matter beyond a doubt. The annexed Table, though very limited, will probably satisfy most readers as to the affinity between the languages of the Gypsies and the Hindús. The letters at the head of the columns denote the authorities from which the words are derived.

GYPSY

Name.

	Hindí.	Sanskrit.	L.	A.	B.	P.	H.	C.
Man,	mánus	mánusha	manush	manush	manush	manush		gorju.
Woman,	randí	randā						raí.
Queen,	Rání	Rání			romnin	romi		{ gorji. raní.
Eyes,	ánk'h	akshi	yaka	yak'h	yak	yak	yāk	yok.
Nose,	nák	násiká	nak	nak'h	nak	nak	nak	nok.
Hair,	bál	bála	bal	bala	ball	bal	bâlo	bal.
Teeth,	dánt	dant		dant	dant	dan
Ear,	kán	karna	kan	kan	gann		kan
Day,	diwas	divas		díves	díves	díves	díwes	dívas.
Night,	rát	rátri		rat	ratt	rati	rāt	rata.
Water,	pání	páníya	pani	pani	panin		pání	pání.
Fire,	ág	agni	yag	yag	yāk			yág.
Gold,	{ sóná saúná }	swarna		sonkaí	sônégāi		sonikā
Silver,	rúpá	rúpya		rup	rup		rup
House,	g'har	griha	ker	ker	kêr			kéhor.
Horse,	g'hórá	g'hódaka	grè	gro	grāi		{ ger, or gerar. }

The Gypsy numerals are these:

H.	Gr.	C.	Hindí.	Sanskrit.	H.	Gr.	C.	Hindí.	Sanskrit.
1. Yek	yek	yek	ék	éka	6.	chov	shóv	ch'hah	shash.
2. duì	dui	dúi	dú	dwi.	7.	eftà, fté	flá	sát	sapta.
3. trin	trin	trin	tín	tri.	8.	okhtó		át'h	ashta.
4. stār	shtar	shtá	chár	chatur.	9.	eniya		nau	nava.
5. pan	pansh	penj	páñch	pancha.	10. daích	dash	desh	das	dasa.

* John Hoyland translates this word "scarred," which may possibly be its meaning in the old French, but it has not now any such signification, as appears from the Dictionary of the Academy.

† They call themselves Roma, (men,) Kola, (black,) and Sinte (from Sind'h?)

‡ See De Literis et Lingua Getarum, Lugd. Bat. 1597, p. 100.

GYPSY.
—
GYRE.

L. Ludolf's list, collected about 1680. A. Adelung, from Grellmann's, formed in Hungary, 1780. B. Bischoff's, collected in Thuringia, 1825. P. Pisani, at Constantinople, 1782. Gr. Grellmann, 1782. H. Hoyland, London, 1815. C. Words collected near Cambridge, in 1809, or 1810. Equivalent letters have been substituted in each column, in order to reduce the orthography to one standard.

The Lord's Prayer in the Gypsies' Language is as follows :

Amáro Dad, savo hal ot'hé opré andro Chéros, avel sinton tro nav; te avel tri lume; te k'hergyol tri Voye sar andro Cheros, hidé té p'hé Phú; Amaro mendro ogyensuno de amengé agyes; ertine amengé amáro vitsigosé, té amén kidó ertinaha amaréngé; Nalià amén andro jungalo tassos; Tami unkav amén avri andral ò jungala. Tiri hin é lume, tiri hin é zor, te akana sekvar. Amén.

The number of Works written upon the Gypsies is very considerable: most of them are enumerated in Adelung's Mithridates, Berlin, 1806, (i. 237.) but the most complete list is given by Dr. Bischoff. The best Work which has yet appeared is H. M. G. Grellmann's Historischer Versuch über die Zigeuner, Zweyte Ausg. Göttingen, 1787; or Grellmann's Dissertation on the Gypsies, translated by M. Roper, Esq., F. R. and A. S., London, 1792; Hoyland's Historical Survey of the Gypsies, York, 1816, 8vo.; and Bischoff's Deutsch-Zigeunerisches Wörterbuch, Ilmenau, 1827, of which the Preface contains an excellent summary of the history and present state of the Gypsies, with an outline of the Grammar of their language. Captain Richardson's Paper on the Natas (Asiatic Researches, vii. 451. 8vo. ed.) is also well worth reading, and highly illustrative of this subject. Some particulars relative to this people are given in the VIIth vol. of the Archæologia; and Bishop Heber has noticed his meeting with them more than once during his progress through India. Journal, i. 100. 174. 218. 451. 4to.

GYPSY.
—
GYR-
NETH.

GYRE, v. } Fr. girer, gire; It. girare, giro; Sp. girar, giro; Lat. gyrus; Gr. γυρός, GYRE, n. } curvus, rotundus; arched, round, cir-GYRA'TION. } cular. Gyre, the verb, as the

Fr. "Girer. To veer or turn (with the wind,) to twirl, whirl, or wheel about." Cotgrave.

Gyre, a circle, a circuit.

Fashions in all our gesterings,
fashions in our attyre,
Which (as the wise haue thoughte) do cum,
and go in circled gyre.

Drant. Horace. Satire 2.

Suche posters may be likened well
vnto the carters oulde
Of forayne worlde, on Mounte Olimpe whose carts when they were rould
With gyrefull sway, by coursers swifte, to winne the glistring branche, &c.

Id. Ib.

The gyring planets, with their starry train,
Down to the South had sunk, and rose again
Up towards the North.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

There sits a needfull groom, the porter nam'd,
Which soon the full grown kitchen cleanly drains,
By divers pipes with hundred turnings giring,
Lest that the food too speedily retiring,
Should whet the appetite, still cloy'd, and still desiring.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 2.

Till that she rushing through the thickest preace,
Perforce disparted their compacted gyre,
And soone compeld to harken unto peace.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 1.

Pardon lady, this wilde straine,
Common with the sylvan traine,
That doe skip about this plaine:
Elves, apply your gyre againe.

Ben Jonson. Entertainmentes.

When the sun so enters a hole or window, that by its illumination the atomes or moats become perceptible, if then by our breath the ayr be gently impelled, it may be perceived, that they will circularly retorne and in a gyration unto their places again.

Sir T. Brown. Vulgar Errors, book ii. ch. iv.

Thus a French top, throwne from a cord which was wound about it, will stand as it were fixt on the floor it lighted; and yet continue in its repeated gyrations, while the sense discovers not the least footsteps of that precipitate rotation.

Glanville. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. ix.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book viii.

From this region of tympanum I might pass to that of the labyrinth, and therein survey the curious and admirable structure of the vestibulum, the semicircular canals, and cochlea; particularly the artificial gyrations, and other singular curiosities observ'd in the latter.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. iii.

Thus in one vast eternal gyre,
Compact or fluid shapes, instinct with fire,
Lead, as they dance, this gay creation,
Whose mild gradation
Of melting tints illudes the visual ray.

Sir W. Jones. Hymn to Bhavani.

GYRINUS, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous Coleopterous insects, established by Linnæus, belonging to the family Gyrinidæ.

Generic character. Antennæ club-shaped, shorter than the head; two front feet long, like arms, the four others much compressed, finlike; eyes four; the body oval, shining.

These animals swim with great rapidity on the surface of water, where they form groups, constantly twisting round each other. They secrete a pungent liquor from the sides of their vent, and copulate on the surface of the water, and lay their eggs on the water plants; the larva has six feet; their body consists of 13 rings, each of the hinder being provided with a conical thread similar to the gills of the Ephemera.

Several species are known. The type is G. natator of Linnæus. Figured by Olivier, vol. iii. pl. i. fig. 1. a—e.

GYRNETH, see GIRN, ante.

But the place is for all that so playne; that when Tyndall so playeth therewith, and so laugheth thereat; he laugheth but from the lippes forward, and gyrneth as a dogge dooeth when one porreth hym in the teeth with a stycke.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 438. The First Part of the Confutation of Tyndall.

Stode statues two, the greate so wull,
of wax was made the lesse,
The greater gurnde with visage grim,
as though he would oppresse
The lesse.

Drant. Horace. Satire 8.

GYRO-CARPUS.
—
HABEAS
CORPUS.

GYROCARPUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: flowers polygamous; calyx four-parted, unequal; corolla none; nectaries four; stigma sessile; capsule one-celled, one-seeded, seed five-winged.

One species, G. Jacquini, an elegant tree, native of Coromandel, bearing a grateful fruit, which spins round when falling from the tree, this motion is caused by the wings.

GYVE, v. } Thomson says, "Ger. gefesser, from GYVE, n. } fesser, a fetter." In A. S. ge-feterian.
To fetter: to take in a fetter or snare.

And shal nevē gyves þe greve.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 256.

The whole prison wus shaken, euen the foundation and all the doores of the prison wer open with the same, and al the prisoners gyues and other lyke bondes wer loosed. Udall. Actes, ch. xvi.

With gyues and fetters Ile tame the vnder a galow dyre,
But God (I hope) will reskewe me, at mine instant desyre.

Drant. Horace. Epistle to Quintius.

We rendred then with safetie for our liues,
Our ensignes splayed, and manynging our armes,
With furdur fayth, that from all kinde of gyues,
Our souldiours should remayne withouten harmes.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

He that hath his feete in fetters, giues, or stockes, must first be loosed, or he can go, walke, or run ..

Tyndall. Workes, fol. 63. Parable of the Wicked Mammon.

One hair of thine more vigour doth retain
To bind thy foe, than any iron chain:
Who might be gyv'd in such a golden string,
Would not be captive, though he were a king.
Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles.

I smile upon her, do: I will giue thee in thine owne courtship.
Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 317.

Heere is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper, if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeeme you from your gyues.

Id. Measure for Measure, fol. 75.

HAR. Dost thou already single me? I thought
Gives and the mill had tam'd thee.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1093.

These hands were made to shake sharp spears and swords,
Not to betide in giues and twisted cords.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bouloigne, book v. st. 42.

Whereupon they presently take arms, assail the Marshal's Inn, break open the gates, brought forth a prisoner in his giues, and set him at liberty.
Baker. Edward III. Anno 1376.

GYVE.
—
HABEAS CORPUS.

H.

"H," says Ben Jonson, "is rarely other than an aspiration in power, though a letter in forme." It is considered by Wilkins as a guttural vowel, i. e. formed by a free emission of the breath from the throat.

H, among the Ancients, as a numeral letter, signified 200; H, 200,000.

HA.

And therewithal he blent and cried, a',
As though he stongen were unto the herte.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1080.

Prayse her, but for this her without-dore-forme,
(Which on my faith deserues high speech) and straight
The shrug, the hum, the ha, (these petty brands
That Calumnies doth vse; Oh, I am out,
That Mercy do's, for Calumnies will seare

Vertue it selfe) these shrugs, these hum's, and ha's,
When you haue said shee's goodly, come betweene,
Ere you can say shee's honest.
Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 282.

Haue you eyes?
Could you on this faire mountaine cease to feed,
And batten on this moore? Ha? Haue you eyes?
Id. Hamlet, fol. 271.

LEO. Ha, ha, ha,
A miserable man thou shalt be.
This is the tamest trout I ever tickl'd.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Humorous Lieutenant, act iii.

Those accounts which some of them have attempted to give of the formation of a few of the parts, are so excessively absurd and ridiculous, that they need no other confutation than ha, ha, he.
Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

H A B E A S C O R P U S.

HABEAS CORPUS, a Writ of Right, by which an English subject is relieved in cases of illegal imprisonment.

It is of several kinds:—Ad respondendum, when a man has a cause of Action against one who is confined by the process of some inferior Court, in order to remove the Prisoner, and charge him with this new Action in the Court above. Ad satisfaciendum, when, after Judgment given against a Prisoner, the Plaintiff desires to bring him up to some superior Court to charge him with process of execution. Upon a cepi, where a party is taken in execution by the Sheriff, who has returned the cepi corpus; in order to carry him out of the County he must have the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus. Ad prosequendum; ad testificandum; ad deliberandum; Writs, as their several names imply, whenever it is necessary to remove a Prisoner in order to prosecute, or bear testimony, or to be tried in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact under cognizance was committed. Ad faciendum et recipiendum, which issues out of any of the Courts of Westminster Hall, when a person is sued in some inferior jurisdiction, and is desirous to remove the Ad prosequendum;

Ad testificandum;
Ad deliberandum.
Ad faciendum et recipiendum.

HABEAS
CORPUS.

action into the superior Court; commanding the inferior Judges to produce the body of the defendant, together with the day and cause of his caption and detainer, (whence the Writ is frequently denominated an Habeas Corpus cum causâ.) to do and receive whatsoever the King's Court shall consider in that behalf. This is a Writ grantable of common right, without any motion in Court, (2 Mod. 306.) and it instantly supersedes all proceedings in the Court below. But, in order to prevent the surreptitious discharge of prisoners, it is ordered by Statute 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, c. 13. that no Habeas Corpus shall issue to remove any Prisoner out of any gaol, unless signed by some Judge of the Court out of which it is awarded. And, to avoid vexatious delays by removal of frivolous causes, it is enacted by Statute 21 James I. c. 23., that, when the Judge of an inferior Court of Record is a barrister of three years' standing, no cause shall be removed from thence by Habeas Corpus, or other Writ, after issue or demurrer deliberately joined: that no cause, if once remanded to the inferior Court by Writ of procedendo or otherwise, shall ever afterwards be again removed; and that no cause shall be removed at all, if the debt or damages laid in the declaration do not amount to the sum of five pounds. But an expedient having been found out to elude the latter branch of the Statute, by procuring a nominal plaintiff to bring another action for five pounds or upwards, (and then by the course of the Court the Habeas Corpus removed both actions together,) it is therefore enacted by Statute 12 George I. c. 29., that the inferior Court may proceed in such actions as are under the value of five pounds, notwithstanding other actions may be brought against the same defendant to a greater amount. And, by Statute 19 George III. c. 70., no cause, under the value of ten pounds, shall be removed by Habeas Corpus, or otherwise, into any superior Court, unless the defendant so removing the same shall give special bail for payment of the debt and costs.

Ad subjiciendum.History of the Writ.Magna Charta

Edward III.

Elizabeth.

But the most celebrated Writ in the English Law, and that which is justly esteemed the chief bulwark of personal liberty, is the Habeas Corpus ad subjiciendum. It is scarcely necessary to direct our inquiries (and if we did so, they would be attended with little success) beyond the privileges created or confirmed by Magna Charta; and it may be sufficient to say, that from the earliest records of our Law, it appears that no freeman could be legally detained in prison except upon a criminal charge, upon conviction, or for a Civil debt. The Great Charter is here explicit, and many subsequent ancient Statutes (no less than three in the reign of Edward III.: 5. c. 9.; 25. St. 3. c. 4.; 28. c. 3.) provide similar securities. The jealousy of the subject on this point has always been very strongly marked, as might naturally be expected; and even in times anterior to any firm establishment of Constitutional landmarks, amid many instances of grievous oppression, and a plentiful struggle for the retention of dangerous prerogative, we find proofs of the tacit recognition of this grand principle of liberty. Thus, during a period of great national excitement, when both the peril of the Country and the popularity of the Sovereign rendered infractions of the privileges of the subject more than usually easy, we see the Commons, after the defeat of the Spanish Armada, petitioning for leave to bring in a Bill of Indemnity for those who, during that season of imminent danger, had imprisoned some Roman Catholics, as was admitted, by a stretch of authority, however salutary on the particular occasion, nevertheless beyond the Law. Again, during the reign of the same Princess, (34 Elizabeth,) the Judges refused to listen to a command, obtained by certain persons of high influence, that a process for the liberation of some prisoners should not be expedited; and in the very face of this order, they set them at liberty, expressly denying the power of the Queen and her Council to imprison at will. Having been desired to specify in what cases a person sent to custody by her Majesty or her Council, some one or two of them, is to be detained in prison, and not to be delivered by her Majesty's Court or Judges, they gave it as their opinion, which they delivered in writing to the Chancellor and Treasurer, that "if any person be committed by her Majesty's command, from her person, or by order from the Council Board, or if any one or two of her Council commit one for High Treason, such persons so in the cases before committed, may not be delivered without due trial by the Law, and judgment of acquittal had. Nevertheless, the Judges may award the Queen's Writ to bring the bodies of such persons before them, and if upon the return thereof the causes of the commitment be certified to the Judges as it ought to be, then the Judges in the case before ought not to deliver him, but to remand the prisoner to the place from whence he came; which cannot conveniently be done unless notice of the cause in generality, or else specially, be given to the Keeper or Gaoler that shall have the custody of such prisoner."

Here the right of the Judges to grant a Habeas Corpus is plainly asserted. Afterwards, in 1627, this opinion was quoted by Coke and Selden as decisive against the right then claimed by the Crown to commit without assigning the cause; "and the Lawyers on the other side," continues Mr. Brodie, "did not oppose what was said, while they could not advance a single precedent in support of the principle for which they had contended." (Hist. of Brit. Emp. i. 235. and Anderson's Reports, 298. as there cited.)

The Petition of Right acceded to with so much reluctance by Charles I. in 1628, referred to the well-known clause in Magna Charta, and also to the Statute 28 Edward III., as securities against arbitrary imprisonment. "Nevertheless," it went on, "against the tenor of the said Statutes, and other good Laws and Statutes of your realm, to that end provided, divers of your subjects have of late been imprisoned without any cause showed: And when for their deliverance they were brought before justice by your Majesty's Writs of Habeas Corpus, there to undergo and receive, as the Judges should order, and their keepers commanded to certify the cause of their detainer, no cause was certified, but that they were detained by your Majesty's special command, signified by the Lords of your Privy Council; and yet they were returned back to several prisons without being charged with any thing to which they might make answer according to the Law."

Here a grievance is objected; no new enactment is prayed: but the King is petitioned to rule according to Law, and to revert to the wholesome measures already provided by existing Statutes.

In consequence of this Petition, therefore, it was enacted, (or rather reenacted,) that no freeman shall be imprisoned or detained without cause shown, to which he may make answer according to Law. Again, yet further, by 16 Charles I. c. 10. it was provided, that if any person be restrained of his liberty by order or

HABEAS
CORPUS.Petition of Right.

HABEAS CORPUS.Jurisdiction of the Court of Common Pleas.Mode of issue.

decree of any illegal Court, or by command of the King's Majesty in person, or by warrant of the Council Board, or of any of the Privy Council, he shall, upon demand of his Council, have a Writ of Habeas Corpus to bring his body before the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, who shall determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. Till this enactment the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer had been unwilling to countenance applications for these Writs, unless for their own officers and suitors; and even then, if they were committed for any criminal matter, they only remanded them, or took bail for their appearance in the King's Bench; but since under this Statute the jurisdiction of the Common Pleas was mentioned as co-ordinate with that of the Court of King's Bench, it has been held that every subject in the Kingdom is equally entitled to the benefit of the Common Law Writ, in either of these Courts at his option.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus is a high prerogative Writ, and therefore by the Common Law issues out of the Court of King's Bench, not only in Term time, but also during the Vacation, by a fiat from the Chief Justice, or any of the Judges, and runs into all parts of the King's dominions: for the King is at all times entitled to have an account why the liberty of any of his subjects is restrained whenever that restraint may be inflicted. If it issues in Vacation, it is usually returnable to the same Judge who issued it, and he proceeds by himself thereon, unless the Term should intervene, and then it may be returned in Court. It has been said, that the like Habeas Corpus may issue from the Court of Chancery during Vacation. But Lord Chancellor Nottingham refused it, as we shall have occasion to state presently, in the great case of Jenkes, upon which the details of its present operation are founded. In the King's Bench and Common Pleas it is granted, like all other Prerogative Writs, upon application by Motion, showing some probable cause why the extraordinary power of the Crown is called to the party's assistance.

Even after the establishment of this Writ by the Petition of Right, and the yet later Act of 16 Charles I. c. 10., many abuses were permitted to remain which demanded reformation. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first Writ, and might wait till a second, and even a third (an alias and a pluries) were issued; and numerous other shifts were practised to detain an obnoxious State Prisoner in custody.

Habeas Corpus Act.Case of Jenkes

Early after the Restoration efforts appear to have been made to regulate the practice. A Bill to prevent the refusal of the Writ of Habeas Corpus was brought into the Commons, April 10, 1668, but did not pass through the Committee. Another to the same purpose, in March, 1669-70, was thrown out of the Lords. In 1673-74 the Commons passed two Bills, one to prevent the imprisonment of the subject in gaols beyond the seas, the other to expedite the Writ of Habeas Corpus in criminal matters. Similar Bills were sent to the Lords in 1675, and in the following year the great struggle occurred, which, in 1679, terminated by establishing that which is now generally known as the Habeas Corpus Act; an Act, allusion to which has become as necessary an ingredient in all popular harangues, as is an eulogium upon the Liberty of the Press, or the Cause of Civil and Religious Liberty all over the World.

Francis Jenkes, a Citizen of London, at a Common

Hall on Midsummer-day, 1676, after a very inflammatory speech, moved a Petition to the King, to call a new Parliament. For so doing he was summoned before the King in Council. Here he was interrogated with much rudeness and want of temper, and appears, in the Account of the Proceedings, (published by his friends,) to have answered with great sagacity and moderation. By a Warrant of the Council he was committed to the Gate House Prison. He first applied to the Secretary of State to receive Bail. This having been denied, he moved the Chief Justice Rainsford for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, and was denied on the plea of its being Vacation. The Lord Chancellor (Nottingham) on a similar motion before him at first refused to hear it, but afterwards postponed it for a few days till the next Seal, when he overruled the Motion, and refused the Writ; stating, when the authority of Lord Coke was cited against him, that he did not consider my Lord Coke infallible. At the ensuing Quarter Sessions for Westminster Mr. Jenkes moved to be bailed; but the Court not finding his name upon the Calendar, (the Gaoler never calendaring any prisoner committed by the Council,) demurred as to its own authority: it seemed to think that it had not power to bail a prisoner committed by a superior Court, and it desired time to advise. Jenkes next petitioned the Lord Chancellor to admit bail, and issue a Writ of Mainprize, and this was also declined till it should be considered in the following Term. The Chancellor, however, was somewhat staggered, and laid the Petition before the Privy Council, saying it had some appearance of Law. The Councillors refused to interfere, replying that he was the fit Judge of Law, and leaving him the responsibility, under which he appears to have felt considerable uneasiness. Application was then renewed to the Privy Council for acceptance of Bail, and this was again ineffectual; and so also, on the approach of the Old Bailey Sessions, was another Motion before the Lord Chancellor for Writs of Habeas Corpus ad deliberandum and ad recipiendum, in order that Jenkes might put himself on his Trial. But the Chief Justice having represented to the Chancellor that such Writs could not legally be refused, the King was consulted, and the prisoner was bailed. (Howell's State Trials, vi. 1189.)

We have been particular in tracing the steps of this transaction, which, although relating to an obscure, and probably a factious individual, is yet of great Historical importance, because it has always been supposed to be the proximate cause of the Act which we are about to mention; and there appears no sound reason for doubting that it really was so. Mr. Hallam, (Constit. Hist. of Eng. xiii.) however, has recently endeavoured to remove this impression, and refers the origin of the Habeas Corpus Act to "the arbitrary proceedings of Lord Clarendon." Accordingly he enumerates (as we have above borrowed from him) the various unsuccessful attempts which had been made before Jenkes's case came under public notice, to strengthen the personal freedom of the subject. This is not the place to do so, or it might be very easy to refute the attack thus levelled against one of the most virtuous and unimpeachable Statesmen whom the History of our own or any other Country can produce. Clarendon administered the Laws as he found them; if from any defect in them the power of imprisonment at will resided in the Government, surely he was not to blame for exercising that power whenever in his discretion he conceived that it

HABEAS
CORPUS.Remarks on this case.

HABEAS CORPUS. was called for. If such power did not exist, the subsequent Act, by which it was curtailed, was wholly unnecessary, and never would have been passed; for the legal remedies in being would have been sufficient to prevent its undue exercise. But, in fact, the Law was defective; the principle of personal liberty, as Mr. Hallam rightly asserts, was not newly introduced by the Statute of Charles II.; but nevertheless, before that Statute the principle was comparatively useless, for there were countless modes by which it might be violated; and, as might be proved by instances which crowd upon us in every reign, hourly was violated. Jenkes's commitment was the last drop in the cup, which in consequence overflowed.

The substance of the Statute 31 Charles II. c. 2. is as follows:

Substance
of the Act.

"1. That the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall be returned, and the prisoners brought up within a limited time, according to the distance, not exceeding in any case twenty days. 2. That such Writs shall be endorsed as granted in pursuance of this Act, and signed by the person awarding them. 3. That on complaint and request in writing by or on behalf of any person committed and charged with any crime, (unless committed for treason or felony, expressed in the warrant, or for suspicion of the same, or as accessory thereto before the fact, or convicted or charged in execution by legal process,) the Lord Chancellor, or any of the twelve Judges, in Vacation, upon viewing a copy of the Warrant, or affidavit that a copy is denied, shall (unless the party has neglected for two Terms to apply to any Court for his enlargement) award a Habeas Corpus for such prisoner, returnable immediately before himself or any other of the Judges; and upon the return made shall discharge the party, if bailable, upon giving security to appear and answer to the accusation in the proper Court of Judicature. 4. That officers and keepers neglecting to make due returns, or not delivering to the prisoner or his agent, within six hours after demand, a copy of the Warrant of Commitment, or shifting the custody of a prisoner from one to another, without sufficient reason or authority, (specified in the Act,) shall, for the first offence forfeit 100*l.*, and for the second offence 200*l.* to the party grieved, and be disabled to hold his office. 5. That no person, once delivered by Habeas Corpus, shall be recommitted for the same offence, on penalty of 500*l.* 6. That every person committed for treason or felony shall, if he requires it, the first week of the next Term, or the first day of the next Session of Oyer and Terminer, be indicted in that Term or Session, or else admitted to Bail; unless the King's witnesses cannot be produced at that time; and if acquitted, or if not indicted and tried in the second Term or Session, he shall be discharged from his imprisonment for such imputed offence; but that no person, after the Assizes shall be opened for the County in which he is detained, shall be removed by Habeas Corpus, till after the Assizes are ended; but shall be left to the justice of the Judges of Assize. 7. That any such prisoner may move for and obtain his Habeas Corpus, as well out of the Chancery or Exchequer, as out of the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and the Lord Chancellor or Judges denying the same, on sight of the Warrant or Oath that the same is refused, forfeit severally to the party grieved the sum of 500*l.* 8. That this Writ of Habeas Corpus shall run into the Counties-Palatine, Cinque Ports, and other privileged places, and the Islands of Jersey and Guernsey. 9. That no inhabitant of England (except persons contracting, or convicts praying, to be transported, or having committed some capital offence in the place to which they are sent) shall be sent prisoner to Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or any places beyond the seas, within or without the King's dominions; on pain that the party committing, his advisers, aiders, and assistants, shall forfeit to the party grieved a sum not less than 500*l.*, to be recovered with treble costs; shall be disabled to bear any office of trust or profit; shall incur the penalties of præmunire, and shall be incapable of the King's pardon." (Blackstone, Com. iii. 8.)

HABEAS CORPUS.

This Bill was passed not without great opposition from the Lords. The Houses had several conferences upon it, and its final arrangement and the Royal Assent was postponed to the very latest hour of the Session. Burnet relates a curious anecdote concerning it, from which it would appear that its success must be attributed to a trick, which arose, perhaps, in the first instance, from whim, but a perseverance in which can little be justified on principles even of the most obvious honesty. "The former Parliament (that of 1689) had passed a very strict Act for the due execution of the Habeas Corpus. It was carried by an odd artifice in the House of Lords. Lord Grey and Lord Norris were named to be the Tellers. Lord Norris being a man subject to vapours was not at all times attentive to what he was doing, so a very fat Lord coming in, Lord Grey counted him for ten, as a jest at first; but seeing Lord Norris had not observed it, he went on with this misreckoning of ten: so it was reported to the House, and declared that they who were for the Bill were the majority, though it indeed went on the other side, and by this means the Bill passed." Mr. Speaker Onslow has corroborated this story, by a reference to the Minute Book of the House of Lords, and a comparison with the number of Lords that day present, and the number reported to be in the division. (Burnet, Own Times, 1680, i. 485. fol. ed.) Upon so slight an accident depended that favourite Rhetorical common-place, "The Palladium of our Liberties."

Passed by a trick.

The efficacy of this Writ extends not only to liberate the subject from illegal confinement in a public prison, but it extends its influence to remove every unjust restraint of personal freedom in private life, even when exercised by a husband or a father. It was said to have been the intention of some meddling individual to have moved for such a Writ at the time in which Bonaparte was lying off the British shores after his surrender to Captain Maitland. Such an application, however, must have been nugatory, for Bonaparte could not be considered in any other character than that of a prisoner of war; and it is decided that no Habeas Corpus lies for such a person, however ill used or deceived. (2 Black. Rep. 1324.)

Its extent

Mr. Hallam concludes his observations on this celebrated Statute, with an able summary of the benefits which it has conferred. "The remedies of the Habeas Corpus Act are so effective, that no man can possibly endure any long imprisonment on a criminal charge, nor would any Minister venture to exercise a sort of oppression so dangerous to himself. But it should be observed, that as the Statute is only applicable to cases of commitment on such a charge, every other species of restraint on personal liberty is left to the ordinary remedy as it subsisted before the enactment. Thus a and benefits.

HABEAS CORPUS.
—
HABER-DASHER.

party detained without any Warrant must sue out his Habeas Corpus at Common Law, and this is at present the more usual occurrence. But the Judges of the King's Bench, since the Statute, have been accustomed to issue this Writ during the Vacation in all cases whatsoever. A sensible difficulty has however been sometimes felt, from their incompetency to judge of the truth of a return made to the Writ. For though in cases within the Statute the prisoner may always look to his legal discharge at the next Session of Gaol Delivery, the same redress cannot be obtained when he is not in custody upon any criminal accusation. If the person, therefore, who detains any one in custody, should think fit to make a return to the Writ of Habeas Corpus, alleging matter sufficient to justify the party's restraint, yet false in fact, there would be no means, at least by this summary process, of obtaining relief. An attempt was made in 1757, after an examination of the Judges by the House of Lords as to the extent and efficiency of the Habeas Corpus at Common Law, to render that jurisdiction more remedial. It failed, however, for the time, of success; but a Statute has recently been enacted, (56 George III. c. 100.) which not only extends the power of issuing the Writ during the Vacation, in cases not within the Act of Charles II., to all the Judges, but enables the Judge, before whom the Writ is returned, to inquire into the truth of the facts alleged therein; and, in case they shall seem to him doubtful, to release the party in custody on giving surety to appear in the Court to which such Judge shall belong, on some day in the ensuing Term, when the Court may examine by affidavit into the truth of the facts alleged in the return, and either remand or discharge the party according to their discretion. It is also declared, that a Writ of Habeas Corpus shall run to any harbour or road on the coast of England, though out of the body of any County; in order, I presume, to obviate doubts as to effects of this remedy in a kind of illegal detention, more likely perhaps than any other to occur in modern times, on board of vessels upon the coast. Except a few of this description, it is very rare for a Habeas Corpus to be required in any case where the Government can be presumed to have an interest." (Ib.)

It is almost superfluous to add, that in cases of great public emergency, the Legislature possesses the power of suspending the Habeas Corpus Act for a short and limited period, and enabling the Crown, under certain specified particulars, to imprison suspicious persons without assigning reason. This dangerous and delicate power has more than once been exercised in our own times to great national benefit. It should always be regarded with a most jealous and watchful eye; yet the salutary control of public opinion must, for the most part, be a sufficient guarantee against its abuse or unsuccessful application; so that it is little likely to be employed, unless when, as Addison well says, in one of his Freeholders, the very intention of the Habeas Corpus Act, namely, the preservation of the liberties of the subject, requires its suspension.

The Writ of Habeas Corpora Juratorum lies, to compel the attendance of a Jury on any of them.

HABEAS CORPUS.
—
HABER-
GEON

Power of suspension.

Habeas Corpus Juratorum.

HABENARIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Gynandria, order Monandria, natural order Orchideæ. Generic character; corolla, petals five, ringent, superior petal arched; a spur at the base of the lip; anthers connected, two straight horns at the base of the anther.

Two species, natives of Jamaica.

HABERDASHER, } Minshew: from the Ger.
HA'BERDASHERY, } habt ihr das, i. e. have you
HA'BERDASH-WARE. } that? or from the Fr. avoir d'acheter, i. e. to have to buy. Skinner, (whom Lye transcribes) runs far away. Serenius: from the Ger. habe, goods or wares, and tauschen, to exchange; as if a haberdasher were an exchanger of wares. Mr. Thomson constructs a German compound, haabvertauscher, of haab, goods, wares, and tauscher, vertauscher, a dealer, an exchanger. The Fr. avoir de pois, we formerly wrote haber de pois; a similar corruption may have occurred in avoir d'acheter, haber d'achet, haberdash.

An haberdasher and a carpenter,
A webbe, a deyer, and a tapisier,
Were all yclothed in o levere,
Of a solempne, and grete fraternite.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 363.

He set vp his shop with haberdash ware,
As one that would be a thriuing man,
To get great goods for his welfare.
The wife lapped in Morel's skin.

Early Popular Poetry, ii. p. 199.

The haberdasher heapeth wealth by hattes.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Is not Rogue Haberdasher come? HAB. Yes, here, Sir.
I ha' beene without this halfe-houre.

Jonson. The Staple of Newes, act i. sc. 2.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, and had his circle of admirers about him, called several to witness that he had declared his opinion above a week before, that the French king was certainly dead.

Spectator, No. 403.

At length the tedious days elapsed, I was transplanted to town and, with great satisfaction to myself, bound to a haberdasher.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 116.

The trader and the mechanic may assure themselves, that, notwithstanding the flattering suggestions of their own vanity, they usually appear no less absurd, and succeed no less unhappily, in writing verses, or composing orations, than the student would appear in making a shoe, or retailing cheese and haberdashery.

Knox. Essays, No. 55.

HABERGEON, Fr. haubergeon; It. usbergo; Low Lat. halsberga, or halsperga, which, Vossius says, is a Saxon word, signifying armour for the neck and breast, from hals, the neck, and bergen, to cover, to protect, to defend. De Vitiis, l. ii. c. 9. p. 220. Skinner also prefers this Etymology. And see Tooke, ii. p. 183. and HAWBERK.

Grose says the haubergeon was a coat composed either of plate or chain mail, without sleeves. (Mil. Ant. ii. 246.)

But we that ben of the dai ben sobre, clothid in the haburion of feith, and of charite.

Wiclif. 1 Tessalonians, ch. v.

Clothe you, as they that ben chosen of God in herte, of misericorde, debonairtee, suffrance, and swiche maner of clothing, of whiche Jesu Christ is more plesed than with the heres or habergeons.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 386.

It is in God to gyue us grace to disconfyte them, for they are bat yuell armed, and we haue good speares, well heedid, and good swerdes; the habergyns that they beare shall nat defende them.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Chronicle, vi. ch. 415.

HABER-
GEON.

HABESH.

But, when she list, it raught
Downe to her lowest heele, and thereuppon
She wore for her defence a mayled habergeon.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 5.
Their mighty stroakes their habergeons dismayld.
Id. Ib. book ii. can. 6.
The scalie beetles, with their habergeons,
That make a humming murmur as they flie.
Ben Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, act ii.
The shot let fly
At random 'mong the enemy,

Pierc'd Talgol's gabberdine, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass habergeon.
Butler. Hudibras, part i. ch. iii. v. 537.

HABER-
GEON.

HABESH.

Crested nelms
Above, bright maile, habergeons scal'd in gold,
And figur'd shields along the spiry wood
Up to th' aerial heads in order wind,
Tremendous emblems of gigantic Mars.
Glover. The Atheniad, book viii.

HABESH.

Name.

HABESH or HHABESH, HABESHEH, and OHBOSH, signify, in Arabic, a mixed multitude of different Tribes brought together; and Hhobshán, the plural of the two first, with Ahhábish, that of the last, are often used to signify any Negroes, though they properly apply only to those who inhabit the mountainous region which gives rise to the Abáwí, or Eastern branch of the Nile. That Country, in fact, received this name from the mixed multitude of different Arab Tribes by which it was peopled, (Ludolf, Com. No. 15. p. 50;) and from Hhabesh, the Portuguese, who never sound an aspirate, formed the words Abex and Abexim, (Abeshing), and Abessini when writing in Latin. To give the word a more classic form, subsequent writers changed it into Abyssini, whence the term Abyssinia has been finally adopted as the name of this Country by all the European nations. For a general account of ABYSSINIA, the reader must be referred to the abstract already given in this Work; but as Mr. Salt's last Voyage to that Country, and a few brief hints from other travellers, have supplied some fresh materials, in addition to the ample particulars furnished by Mr. Bruce, they may be noticed here in order to give a more complete view of the subject Provinces, and to correct any accidental oversights or omissions.

Lasta.

The two great divisions of the Country, called Tigré and Amhárá, are separated by the Province of Lasta, forming an almost impenetrable barrier of mountains, from the centre of which the Takazzé rises. The Province of Samén, to the North and North-West of Lasta, is a continuation of the same chain. From Tigré to Amhárá there are only two passes, and those easily defended by a handful of men. (Salt, 279.) Massawwah and Síré, mentioned as Provinces of Abyssinia by Bruce, have long ceased to be such: the former, having been seized by the Turks when they were masters of the Red Sea, became a separate Principality, tributary in some degree to the Kings of Abyssinia, as soon as the Náyibs, or Governors of the Town, could throw off their allegiance to the Porte, and the latter has merged in the Province or Viceroyalty of Tigré.

Damot.

The Southern part of the curve formed by the Abáwí in its course from the Lake Tzana, is the boundary of the Province of Damót, separated from Gojam by the mountainous ridge of Amid-Amid. It is about 40 miles from North to South, and 50 from East to West,* hilly, fertile, and inhabited chiefly by Basso Gállá, settled there by Yasús the Great.

* Its extent appears from Mr. Salt's map to be rather greater than Mr. Bruce supposed; and a small portion of the Country to the South of the river is also called Damót'abáyí, or the Greater Damót. (Bruce, iv. 441.)

Besides those districts enumerated by Bruce, Gregory, the Abyssinian Priest, who was Ludolf's instructor, mentioned the following Kingdoms or Provinces, which, in the first half of the XVIIth century, still formed a part of the Abyssinian territories. They are here given nearly as they occur in passing from East to West. (1.) Dawáró; (2.) Fategár; (3.) Gédmi; all to the East of (4.) Angót, and occupied by the Bórén, or Eastern Gállá. (5.) Báli, at the South-Eastern extremity of Abyssinia, the point whence all the hordes of the Gállá first issued. (6.) Ganyě (as gagne in French) and (7.) I'fát, to the East of (8.) Shawà, (or Shóá.) This latter was anciently the first and most flourishing Province. It contained, among other large Monasteries, Debre-Libanós, the residence of the Ichebí, or Superior of all the Monastic Orders. The Chakha mountains separate this Province from (9.) Mugár and (10.) Wedj, (Oge of the Portuguese,) which contains the lake Zawaya, whence the river Machi flows into the Hawásh. (11.) Ganz and (12.) Gombo lie between Mugár and (13.) Gurágé, to the South of which is (14.) Kambát, the inhabitants of which are called Seb'a Hadyá, whence Adea appears as the name of the Country in some maps. It is the most Southern Province. Adjoining to it is (15.) Enáryá, the South-Western extremity of Habesh, the natives of which are celebrated for their probity; its soil is fertile, and contains much gold. Gregory heard from the Portuguese, that it is only 35 days' journey from the Indian Ocean. (Ludolf, Hist. Æth. i. 3. 18.) (16.) Shát, (17.) Cónch, (18.) Damót, and (19.) Gafat, lie to the North-East of Enáryá, between it and the Abáwí, or Nile. (20.) Bizamó to the South, and (21.) the Gongas to the East of that river, with (22.) Gazhgě, in the Kólla, make up the remainder of Gregory's list.

Other Provinces.

Mr. Bruce appears to have formed a very erroneous idea of the height of the Abyssinian mountains: had he been aware of their great elevation he could not have supposed that snow was scarcely known. Near the summit of Amba-Haí, Mr. Pearce was caught in a shower of snow on the 18th of October; and at Mishekka, on the 24th December, "it lay so thick on the ground, that they could with difficulty make their way through it." (Salt, 283. 287.) The summit of these peaks, therefore, cannot be less than 10,000 feet* above the level of the sea; and it is evident

Height of
mountains.

* Taking 1° of Fahrenheit's scale as the mean decrement of heat in 345 feet, the mean result of Baron Alex. de Humboldt's observations on the Andes, we shall have 11,040 feet for the height of perpetual congelation; the level, therefore, reached by Mr. Pearce, was lower than 11,000, but as congelation occurred so early in the season, was probably above 10,000 feet.

HABESH. that Lamalmon and Amda Gideon, mentioned by Mr. Bruce as the highest mountains in Abyssinia, are considerably lower than those which Mr. Pearce crossed. The triple ridge of Aformasha, Lej-ambara, and Amid-Amid, to the South of the Lake Tzana, nearly in the same latitude as Amba-Haï, are probably part of the same chain, though lower than the former, as is proved by their freedom from snow. Another evidence of the great height of these mountains is, that they contain the sources of the largest rivers. The Abáwí, or Eastern Nile, rises from the Western declivity of Aformasha, and the Takazzé, one of its largest affluents, from the Northern side of the Lasta mountains. Aïn Takazzé, (i. e. the source of the Takazzé,) in 11° 42' North, and 39° 20' East, is a small lake, or reservoir, which receives the water of three springs, and discharges it in one stream. Its elevation may be conjectured from Pearce's having experienced severe cold there on the 3rd of October. That ill-requited man, who had a mind above his station, "could not help reflecting, as he threw a small piece of wood into the water, how many regions it had to pass through before it reached the ocean." (Salt, 278.)

Wojerat.

Wázhrát (Wazirát, in Bruce, iii. 5.) is a tract on the borders of the Lasta mountains, inhabited by a mulatto race, said to be the descendants of the Portuguese soldiery, a distinction on which they pride themselves. They are taller and more athletic than the rest of the Abyssinians, and proverbial for fidelity to their rulers. They appeared to Pearce to be hospitable and kind-hearted, and did not manifest any surprise or suspicion on account of his colour. This tract is supposed to be the Jannamora of Alvarez. To the South and East of it is Doba, an extensive uncultivated plain, inhabited by an isolated Tribe of Negroes, formerly ill-famed as desperate robbers, but now, it seems, humbled, and anxious only to maintain their independence. Lasta, the adjoining District, is extremely mountainous. Its climate is cold and salubrious. The ground at the village of Dufat, on the summit of one of its hills, was covered with hoar-frost on the 1st of October. Senaré and Sokóta are its principal Towns; the latter is larger than Antálo, from which it is about six days' journey (120 miles) distant. Its inhabitants speak the Amharic, and wear their hair in long plaits like the Southern Abyssinians. They are good horsemen, which is extraordinary in so mountainous a country; but their vicinity to Begemder, famous for horsemanship and an excellent breed of horses, will account for this peculiarity. In other respects they resemble the Gállá more than the people of Tigré. On the East side of Amba-Haï is Segonet, one of the chief Towns of Samén; the scenery near it is extremely beautiful, the masses of rock being broken by lofty trees, and affording through openings, at intervals, a view over a boundless extent of country.

Barbarous customs.

During the campaign against the Gállá, in which Pearce accompanied the Rás Weled Sélásé, he witnessed the practice of two horrible customs, one of which illustrates some of the ancient sculptures at Thebes, and the other throws light upon one of the least credible statements of Bruce. "On the morning after the battle, no less than 1864 of the barbarous trophies which are collected on these occasions were thrown before the Rás." For an illustration of this singular custom, Mr. Salt refers to the History of the Jews, (1 Sam. xviii. 25. 27.) and to De Bry's Navigations. (De Caffrorum Militiá Ind. Orient. ii. tab. 38.) But the most remarkable representation of it is found in one of the scenes represented on the sculptured walls at Thebes, (Description de l'Egypte; Antiq. lib. ii. pl. xii.) in commemoration, probably, of the victories of Sesostris. "On the 7th of February, Mr. Pearce went out with a party of the Lasta soldiers on one of their marauding expeditions, and in the course of the day they got possession of several head of cattle, with which, towards evening, they made the best of their way back to the camp. They had then fasted many hours, and still a considerable distance remained for them to travel. Under these circumstances, a soldier attached to the party proposed 'cutting off the shuladà' from one of the cows they were driving before them, to satisfy the cravings of their hunger. This 'term,' Mr. Pearce did not at first understand, but he was not long left in doubt upon the subject, for the others having assented, they laid hold of the animal by the horns, threw it down, and proceeded without further ceremony to the operation. This consisted in cutting out two pieces of flesh from the buttock, near the tail, which together, Mr. Pearce supposed, might weigh about a pound; the pieces cut out being called 'shuladà,'* and composing, as far as I could ascertain, says Mr. Salt, 'part of the two 'glutei maximi,' or 'larger muscles of the thigh.' As soon as they had taken these away, they sewed up the wounds, plastered them over with cow-dung, and drove the animal forwards, while they divided among their party the still reeking steaks. They wanted Mr. Pearce to partake of this meat, raw as it came from the cow; but he was too much disgusted with the scene to comply with their offer; though he declared that he was so hungry at the time, that he could without remorse have eaten raw flesh, had the animal been killed in the ordinary way; a practice which, I may here observe, he never could before be induced to adopt, notwithstanding its being general throughout the Country. The animal, after this barbarous operation, walked somewhat lame, but, nevertheless, managed to reach the camp without any apparent injury, and immediately after their arrival, it was killed by the Worari (foragers) and consumed for their supper. This practice of cutting out the shuladà in cases of extreme necessity, is said very rarely to occur; but the fact of its being occasionally adopted was certainly placed beyond all doubt, by the testimony of many persons, who declared that they had likewise witnessed it, particularly among the Lasta troops." (Salt, 294-296.) This, however, is a very different thing from the brutal practice of cutting up the beast piecemeal at the door of the chamber in which the feast is held; (Bruce, iv. 483. 485.) "a practice," adds Mr. Salt, (p. 297,) "never witnessed by myself, nor ever heard of by Mr. Pearce or any other person with whom I conversed; and the Rás, Kasimaj Yasàs, Dofter Esther, and many other very respectable men, who had spent the greater part of their lives at Gondar, solemnly assured me that no such inhuman custom had ever come under their observation. They all, indeed, asserted that it was impossible, and as a proof of it remarked, that it would be flying in the face of Heaven, as the person who kills the animal invariably sharpens his knife for the occasion, and nearly dissects the head from the body, pronouncing the invocation, Bism Ab, wa Weled, wa

HABESH.

Flesh from living animals.

* Sheludà, in Amharic, signifies the hip or thigh.

HABESH. Menfús Kedús, (in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,) which gives a kind of Religious sanctity to the act." (Salt, p. 297.) The complete agreement between this account and that given by Abram the Abyssinian, examined by Sir William Jones at Calcutta, in 1784, (Lord Teignmouth's Life of Sir W. Jones, p. 245,) is as striking, as its disagreement with the disgusting and extravagant narration of Bruce is remarkable. "The country people and soldiery," said Abram, (As. Res. i. 384.) "make no scruple of drinking the blood, and eating the raw flesh of an ox, which they cut without caring whether he is dead or alive; this savage diet is, however, by no means general." One part of this passage may, indeed, appear at variance with the accounts given to Mr. Salt; but that discordance is removed when we observe that he is speaking of the ordinary practice of the Abyssinians, when he says they think it impious to eat the flesh of a beast not previously slaughtered: while Abram's account applies only to the occasional and extraordinary practices of the soldiery and savage peasantry.

It is much to be lamented that so much national and personal feeling has been suffered to warp the judgment of those who have discussed the merits of Bruce. Had his advocates gone candidly to work, and compared his account of the source of the Nile with that given by the Portuguese Missionaries, they would have discovered that he either never saw the passage cited from Paez by Kircher, or purposely misrepresented its contents:—a dilemma little favourable to his regard for Truth. The laudable diligence of his last editor has enabled the reader to distinguish, with tolerable accuracy, between what is true and apocryphal in his Narrative: but it appears that, besides relying too much on his memory, he made no scruple to embellish, when it suited his purpose. Of exaggeration on many occasions, and something like deliberate falsehood on some, it is almost as impossible to acquit him, as it is to overlook his arrogant pretensions to superior knowledge with regard to subjects of which he was really ignorant.

Besides their difference of position, the people of Amhárá and Tigré are distinguished by a different degree of cultivation and polish. Mr. Salt (p. 332) found the Prince Kasimaj Yasús much more accomplished, and his companions more careful in their dress and polite in their manners, than the Chiefs in Tigré; but he had reason to believe the Amhárá women to be more dissolute. The habits and etiquette of these barbarous Courts, in many respects, resemble those of Europe in the dark Ages. The Rás Weled Sélásé had a regular jester, "one of the cleverest mimics," says Mr. Salt, (p. 372,) "I have ever seen;" and his causing himself to be carried on a man's back up to his master's seat, when forbidden to set his foot on the carpet beneath him, is quite in the style of the jests played off by some of our Court-fools of old. Kersa, a game exactly similar to "Bandy," is the favourite sport of the lower orders, and, as among ourselves, often ends in blows: but serious accidents seldom occur; in one instance, however, Mr. Pearce witnessed the loss of several lives. Among the Arts practised in Habesh, Painting must be noticed. As the churches are filled with pictures of Saints, and he Chiefs delight in ornamenting their apartments with such decorations, Painters are always in request. Mr. Salt has given a plate from one of the best productions of the chief Painter to the Rás. It represents a battle between two Habeshís and a Gállá, whose companions are in the back ground, retreating. These men are represented full-faced, with enormous eyes; a face in profile being, as we learn from Mr. Salt, the peculiar distinction of a Jew, according to the Habeshí notions. The artist began by drawing his outline with charcoal, and finished by laying on, in large, inharmonious masses, coarse colours, brought from Caïro. Of Medicine the Abyssinians, as appears from Bruce, know nothing; but, being very superstitious, they have great faith in exorcisms, and when a man is seized with the fever called Tigré-tér, they set before him all the glittering ornaments and fine clothes they can get together, making, at the same time, the most horrible din with shouts, drums, and trumpets, in order "to drive away the devil:" when the signs of death appear, they commence a lugubrious howl, tear their hair, scratch their faces, scream, sob, and roll on the ground in real or pretended agony. The corpse is immediately washed, fumigated, and sewed up in one of the deceased's wrappers; after which the friends and relations carry it on their shoulders to the grave, the priests reciting the appointed prayers during the interment. On the same or following day the tezkár, or "commemorative feast," is kept. A figure of the deceased, dressed in his best clothes, and mounted on his best mule, followed by all his stud richly caparisoned, is paraded through the town, and women, hired as mourners, follow in procession, uttering shrieks and lamentations, and crying out, "Why did you leave us, had you not plenty of land and houses, wives and children?" &c. At the grave, screams, shouts, and yells of every kind are heightened by "Hallelujahs" from the priests, which, as Mr. Salt (p. 428) says, (aptly applying the words of Milton,) "embowel with outrageous noise the air." On the return of the mourners to the house of the deceased, cattle are slaughtered, maiz and sowa served out, feasting becomes the order of the day, and drunkenness its consequence at night. These funeral-feasts are repeated, at intervals, for a whole year, and all the relations vie with each other in their frequency and magnificence. They are, however, disapproved of by some of the higher classes.

Axum, (spelt by the Abyssinians and Arabs, Ak-súm,) the Axūmis, Auxūmis, or Axōmis of the Greeks, is about 12 miles nearly due West of Adowa, and, therefore, in 14° 11' North, and 38° 45' East. It is agreeably situated in a corner of the plain sheltered by the adjacent hills. A small unornamented obelisk at the foot of a hill, on which the Monastery of Abbá Pantaleon stands, is the first object which attracts notice on approaching the Town; for no houses are seen till the traveller has passed between that obelisk and a large square stone opposite to it, bearing a long Greek inscription. The church and great obelisk which have been delineated both by Bruce and Salt, soon afterwards open upon the view, close to an immense daro tree. Several other obelisks are lying upon the ground broken, not far from the principal one yet standing, which, to a very bold relief, unites such lightness and elegance, as render it one of the most perfect structures of its kind. As the decorations of these monuments are strictly Grecian, they cannot be older than the Age of the Ptolemies; but they are ascribed by tradition, to that of

* This is clearly pointed out by Hartmann in his excellent edition of Idrisi's Africa, (p. 13,) and had been ascertained, in the same way, by the writer of these remarks, long before he saw Hartmann's book.

HABESH.

Axumitic Inscriptions.

Aīzanas who lived 600 years later. The style in which they are executed, renders it most probable that they belong to the earlier period. The church, which is very ancient, had three vestibules or enclosures before its entrance, and in the centre of one of them, there is a large block of granite, having beneath it another of the same stone (not freestone) as a foot-stool; the latter bears a short, mutilated inscription, evidently in the Æthiopic character, as appears from the transcript of Messrs. Salt and Stuart. This, Mr. Bruce, either from a strange error at the time, or an incautious reliance on his memory, converts into a Greek Inscription in honour of "Ptolemy Euergetes;" and laughs at Poncet, who never mentions the stone, (Salt, p. 408,) for imagining ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ (which Bruce says is engraved upon it) to mean Basil. But the most curious of these monuments is the stone, already mentioned as being opposite the obelisk at the entrance of the Town. It records the conquest of the Bugaītæ by Sæazanas and Adéphas, brothers of Aīzanas, King of the Axumites, (ΑΞΩΜΙΤΩΝ,) Homerites, (ΟΜΗΡΙΤΩΝ,) Raīdan, (ΡΑΙΔΑΝ,) Æthiopians, Sabæans, (ΣΑΒΑΕΙΤΩΝ,) Sileë, (ΣΙΛΕΗ,*) Tiamo,† (ΤΙΑΜΩ,) Bugaītæ,‡ (ΒΟΥΓΑΕΙΤΩΝ,) and Cleos.§ (ΚΛΕΟΥ.) These brothers of Aīzanas are evidently the Aīzanas and Sazanús, Kings of the Axumites, to whom the Emperor Constantius addressed the Epistle, cited in the Apology of St. Athanasius, (p. 542.) It was in their reign, about A. D. 330, (Ludolf. Comment. in Hist. Æth. iii. 2. 7. p. 282,) that the Æthiopians were converted to Christianity by St. Frumentius: but as their brother Aīzanas calls himself in this Inscription, "Son of the invincible God Mars," and concludes by saying that "from gratitude to the invincible Mars who begat him, he had erected one golden, one silver, and three brazen statues of him:—May he be propitious!" (ΥΠΕΡΔΕΕΥΧΑΡΙΣΤΙΑΚΤΟYΕΜΕΓΕΝΝΙΚΑΝΤΟCΑΝΙΚΗΤΟYΑΡΕΩCΑΝΕΘΗΚΑΑΥΤΩΑΝΔΡΙΑΝΤΑΧΡΥCΟΥΝΑΚΑΡΓΥΡΑΙΟΝΕΝΑΚΑΧΑΛΚΟΥCΓΕΠΗΓΑΘΩ) it is manifest that he was not a Christian. This Inscription, consequently, was made a short time prior to the conversion of the Æthiopians, and can hardly be dated earlier than the beginning of the IVth century, as might equally be inferred from its orthography, and the form of its letters. It also throws light upon another curious Inscription, long known, but not, till Mr. Salt published this, well understood. The learned reader will immediately recollect the stone copied by Cosmas Indicopleustes, (Cosmographia Christiana, in Montfaucon's Nova Collectio Patrum, tom. ii., and Fabricii, Biblioth. Græca, lib. vi.) in the VIth century, on which there are, in reality, two Inscriptions; one in honour of Ptolemy Euergetes I., (Letronne, Recherches, p. 7,) and a second, the beginning of which is lost, commemorating the conquests of an Æthiopian Sovereign, and dated in the 27th year of his reign. That Prince calls himself the son of Mars, and mentions, as first conquered

* Zeilá, according to Mr. Salt.

† Or Tziamo, mentioned in the Adulitic Inscription also.

‡ The Boja, (Geogr. Nub. i. 4. p. 18,) as the same writer justly conjectures.

§ Taguie, according to Mr. Salt, who, probably, read the name ΤΟΚΑΕΟΥ, Tocæu; but all the other barbarous names occurring in this Inscription in the singular number, have the article prefixed; the original, therefore, had, probably, ΤΟΤΚΑΕΟΥ, or ΤΟΤΚΑΕΟΥ, i. e. Cleu, or Caëu. The Taguie, or Takué, (Tagáí, or Takáí,) of Mr. Salt, are the Taka Hallanga of Bruce, (vii. 93.) and Táká and Hallengah of Burckhardt, (Nubia, 387.)

by himself, several Countries, named, also, as the conquests of Aīzanas on the Axumitic stone. Both Inscriptions also have the same peculiarities of style; it is manifest, therefore, that they belong to the same period, and that this great conqueror was no other than Aīzanas, who is, perhaps, the El Ameda of the Abyssinian annals.

"Adowa," in 14° 12' 30" North, and 39° 30' East, "may be considered," says Mr. Salt, (p. 424,) "as a place of great importance; its houses, which are all conical, are regularly disposed in streets or alleys interspersed with wanzi trees. (Cordia Abyssinia.)" Its population is probably more than 8000; as that traveller counted more than 800 dwellings, to each of which 10 inhabitants may be allowed on a moderate computation. It is the great mart for the commerce of the Country East of the Takazzé, and most of its traders are Mohammedans. Cloths, coarse and fine, are its principal manufactures, which work up a great deal of cotton brought from the low lands, near the Takazzé, or imported at Masawwah; the former being the best. Lead, tin, copper, gold-foil, Persian carpets, raw silk, velvets, French cloths, coloured leather from Egypt, Venetian beads, glass-ware, and trinkets of various kinds, pass through Adowa to Góndar. Ivory from Walkáyt and Síré, gold from various parts of the interior, and about 1000 slaves every year, are the returns sent down to the coasts.

At Axum and at Yíha, in the ruins of the Monastery of Abá Asfé, Mr. Salt found some ancient Inscriptions in the Æthiopic character, remarkable on account of two letters, the equivalents of which it is difficult to find in the alphabet now used.* The resemblance of the rest to those actually in use, is remarkable, and renders it the more desirable that their age should be ascertained. They do not at first sight appear to have any affinity with the characters found by M. Caillaud in the ruins of Meroë, (pl. v. tom. iii.) though a further examination will hardly leave any doubt that both are radically the same.

Carpets of an inferior quality are manufactured in Samén. Axúm is celebrated for its parchment; the búda, or smiths, are found every where, and universally believed to be in the habit of assuming the form of hyænas by night, for the purpose of preying upon the first carcass of man or beast they may happen to find: a tenet of the popular creed often mentioned by the Greek and Roman writers. The most finished chains are said to be made by the Southern Gállá.

Of that people an account has been already given. The Shangallas, or, more properly, Shenkelàs, the Northern and Western borderers on Habesh, are complete Negroes, with flat noses and thick lips, and are in the lowest state of civilization. (Ludolf, i. 14. 52.) They make themselves huts by cutting and bending down the branches of trees, according to Mr. Bruce, (iv. 29.) and correspond in habit, manners, and position with the wild Tribes called Root, Elephant, Locust, and Ostrich eaters (Rhizophagi, Elephantophagi, Acridophagi, and Struthiophagi) by the Greeks.† By the Abyssinians they are annually hunted down to recruit their supply of slaves. The Habeshís, or "collected Tribes" themselves,

* They bear some resemblance to Taít and Tsadaí; but the former may, possibly, be an ancient form of Tsappa.

† If Mr. Bruce's account can be trusted, the resemblance between the ancient and modern Rhizophagi, &c. is complete.

HABESH

Adowa

Ancient characters.Manufactures.Tribes.
Shangalles.

Habesheer.

HABESH. are the Amhárá, Damót, and Cherech Agaús, Gafat, Gállá, Falasha, and Geëz. Of these, the Geëz are the descendants of some Arabian Tribe who must have crossed over from the Eastern shore of the Red Sea at a very early period, as the near affinity of their language to the Arabic clearly shows. The Æthiopic, or language of the Geëz, has long ceased to be spoken; but the Tigré, which is the vernacular dialect of the Country to the East of the Takazzé, is a daughter of the Æthiopic, strongly resembling its mother. The Amharic, which has supplanted the Æthiopic in the Countries West of that River, is a genuine African language, and has no affinity in its elements and structure with any known Asiatic language. Compared with each other, the Amharic and Gafat, the Falasha and Cheretz Agaú, seem to belong to the same families. The Agaú and Gállá are distinct languages. As many words in all the languages spoken in Abyssinia are borrowed from the old Æthiopic, it is difficult to draw from mere vocabularies any positive conclusion as to their mutual relations. The Falasha are Jews, whose ancestors, according to their traditions, came from Jerusalem with Menilek, son of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. Being principally brick and tile makers, they first settled in the low country near the Lake of Dembea, where there is plenty of clay. They are governed by their own King, whom they believe to be a lineal descendant of Solomon, and who is always called Gideon, his Queen being named Judith. They were subsequently obliged to take refuge in the almost inaccessible heights of Samén; and there they still maintained themselves, as tributaries to the King of Abyssinia, when Mr. Bruce was in the Country. He was told that they have no copies of the Scriptures in Hebrew, nor any knowledge of that language. The Gafat and Agaú nations are, and ever were, Pagans. The Damót Agaús speak a language entirely different from that of the Cherech Agaús; so that, though bearing the same name among the Abyssinians, they do not really belong to the same nation. According to Mr. Bruce (ii. 326.) they are Troglodytes, inhabiting caverns. On the Eastern side of Habesh, the Shíhos, Hazortas, and Dumhoetas,* whose Northern neighbours are the Hallenkahs, (Hallangas of Bruce,) occupy the ancient Kingdom of Dankalí, and are therefore Danákil. From the borders of Egypt to the Northern confines of Dankalí, the Bisháriyeh language, of which the Hadárib, or Haderebeh, and Bojah, according to Bruce, (vii. 91. 8vo. ed.) are dialects, prevails; but the Bojah and Takué, (Tákawí,) given by Salt, differ entirely from the Boja of Bruce. The Danákil speak nearly the same language as the Adáyil, or natives of Adel, while in the interior a dialect of the Geëz is used in Tigré and Harar; but the Somális, their Southern neighbours, do not seem allied to them by blood.

"The present state of Abyssinia," says Mr. Salt, (p. 485,) "may with justice be compared to that of England previously to the time of Alfred; the government of the Country being formed on the model of a complete feudal system. The constant disputes on the borders, the dissensions among the several Chiefs, the usurpation of power by a few of the more considerable of the Nobles, the degraded condition of the Sovereign, and the frequent incursions of a barbarous enemy, too strongly bear out the comparison; though I fear that the result of the struggle in which Abyssinia has for so long a time been engaged, is not likely to terminate in so favourable a manner as that which ensued in our own Country." Habesh may be considered as actually divided into three independent States. I. Amhárá and Tigré are separated by the river Takazzé and the lofty mountains of Samén. II. The Provinces of Shóá and Ifát have been severed from the rest by the Gállás. III. Tigré is governed by a Chief styled the Rás, (Head,) nominally a subject, but really independent of the King, who resides at Góndar, and is entirely at the disposal of some powerful Noble.

I. Tigré is bounded by the Bekla, Bojah, the Tá-kawí, and wild Shangalá on the North; by the mountains of Samén on the West; by the Gállá, Dóbá, and Danákil on the South and East. It has ten Districts or Subdivisions, of which (1.) the central one is Tigré Proper, intersected by a range of high mountains, and abounding in strong positions; to the East is (2.) Agamé, rich and fertile, on an elevated level, separated from the Salt plain near the coast, by the mountains stretching from Senáfé to Taranta. It has eight subdivisions. (gúltas.) To the North of Agamé is (3.) Inderta, a large and mountainous District, the Capital of which is Antálo. It has 14 gúltas, some of which are occasionally considered as separate Provinces. (4.) Wojerát, or Wozhrát, to the South of Enderta, is a long strip of wild country abounding in elephants, rhinoceroses, beasts of prey, and game; where the rains are said to be less periodical than in the neighbouring tracts. (5.) Wófila is a small and low District to the South and East of Wozhrát, where the Gállá have mixed with the Habeshís, and embraced Christianity. In this Country there are several lakes, the largest of which is called Ashangí. To the South and West is the rugged mountainous Province of (6.) Lasta, the Southern part of which is the Búgnà of Gregory (Ludolf, Hist. Æth. i. 3. 15.) and the Portuguese. (7.) Bórá and (8.) Selewà are in the mountains to the North of Lástá; and (9.) Wág, together with (10.) Gúaliú, are inhabited by Christian Agaús between the mountains and the Takazzé. Further North, on the Eastern bank of the same river, is (11.) Avergálé, or Abárgalé, also inhabited by Agaús, whose houses are built in the form of the old Egyptian Temples. On the opposite side of the Takazzé are the mountains of (12.) Samén, the Abyssinian Alps, stretching from North to South about 80 miles. Between the Northern part of Samén and Tigré Proper is the valuable Province of (13.) Tembén, subdivided into several Shumuts, or Districts. Here again plaited locks and temple-shaped houses recall the recollection of the ancient Egyptian and Æthiopian sculptures. (14.) Shiré (anciently Siré) is above Tembén, and West of Aksúm, bordering on the Takazzé; beyond which are (15.) Waldubba and (16.) Walkáyít; the former abounding in meads and groves, the retreat of nominal devotees, whose dress, like that of the Budd'hist monks in Eastern Asia, is yellow. (17.) The Kingdom of the Báhr-negash, or Bár-nagáshí, (maritime Chief,) comprises the Districts of Hamásén, Kók, Séa Kúde Falásha, (Feláshyán, i. e. Exiles,) Egelà, Seráwé, Maïsella, Diksan, Halai, Tsamá, Logo, Rivai-Munai, Gehasé and Zewán, or Upper Búr, (i. e. Defile,) the

* The uncertainty of our common orthography renders it impossible to say whether this people are called Damhóetas, or Damhótas, Damhwétas, or Dumhóetas; for Mr. Salt sometimes gave the Italian sounds to the vowels, as in shum, which, spelt in the common way, would be shoom.

HABESH. ancient road from Axum to Adulis, which are governed either by Shums, Kantíbas, or a Bahr-negásh.

Amhara.

II. Amhárá contains the Provinces of 1. Begemder, 2. Menna, 3. Belesan, 4. Foggora, 5. Dembeyá, 6. Cherkin, 7. Kwará, 8. Chelgá, 9. Maicha, Gójám or Gózhám, and Damót; all in the power of a Chief, who was originally nothing more than a Provincial Governor, and now rules without control, keeping the King all but prisoner, without troops or any real authority. Powussen, the Chief of Amhárá in Mr. Bruce's time, had been succeeded by Gukso, when Mr. Salt was in Abyssinia; but in 1827, the most powerful Chief was Sélsásé, Governor of Shóá. (Miss. Reg. 1828, p. 247.) The principal and almost only passes between Amhárá and Tigré, are near Lamalmon and Inchetkaub.

Snoa.
Ifat.

III. Shówá and I'fát, now in the possession of the Gállá, form the Southern division of Habesh. I'fát, between the ninth and eleventh parallels of North latitude, is the mountainous spine, or ridge, which supplies the Upper Nile and the Hawásh. It sinks gradually on each side into a kóllá, or level, watered by the various affluents of those rivers, the latter of which is lost in the sand, or drawn off in canals for the purposes of irrigation, 40 or 50 miles to the South-West of Zeíla'. Ankober, Capital of I'fát, is the residence of the Murd-azimaj, or Chief. Wussen, the reigning Chief in 1810, was grandson of Yasús, who is mentioned by Bruce. Shówá, on a lower level, is famed for its valleys abounding in rich pasturage, its large Towns, and numerous Monasteries. There Mr. Salt supposes Abyssinian literature to be in the most flourishing state; and there likewise the customs of the ancient Æthiopians are best preserved, as well as their language best understood. He was also of opinion, that the establishment of an independent power in some port on the Southern coast of the Red Sea, is the only effectual plan for the improvement of Habesh. An opportunity of effecting this object has now presented itself, as Mr. Coffin, who was left by Mr. Salt under the protection of the Rás Weled Sélsásé, in 1810, has lately arrived in England, (in July, 1827,) commissioned by a successor of that Chief to petition the British Government to occupy Amfíla on the coast of his territory, as a port by which the commerce of Abyssinia may find an outlet.

Natural history.
Beasts.

Among the most uncommon animals found in that Country, may be reckoned the gusela, or black leopard; the muntillut, or wobo, probably an undescribed species; the nibré arrar, nearly allied to the common lynx; nibré gulgul, the grey lynx; chon ambasa, the caracal; akul-dimmo, or yedír dimmut, the wild cat figured by Bruce, vii. pl. xxx.; turing dimmo, or ankeso, the civet cat; wakhária, or kabbaro, a small species of wolf; wuggera, or tokela, the sea-fox, and a great variety of antelopes, many of which will be illustrated by the travels of Messrs. Ehrenberg and Hemprich. The giha, or ashkókó, a kind of cavia, or guinea-pig, much like that found at the Cape; the muntílá, a grey species of hare, considered as unclean; faunkus, or gweréza, an undescribed makis, or lemur, imperfectly figured by Ludolf, (i. 10. 38.) are also rare. There are many species of falcons; the niser werk, or golden eagle, (Bruce, pl. xxxi.) is the Gypaetus of modern Ornithologists. Niser tokúr, Falco occipitalis, well figured by Bruce, (pl. xxxii.) is much more rare. The gúdik-gúdik, nearly allied to the Falco laniarius, is held sacred by the Abyssinians, who constantly draw

Birds.

omens from it; Mr. Salt supposes it may be the Sacred Faulcon of the ancient Egyptians. Vultures are extremely common, and the largest is probably a new species. The rakhamah, or Vultur percnopterus, called Pharaoh's fowl in Egypt, is seen everywhere. The feras sheítán (Devil's horse) is a large species of heron noticed by Lobo. Abbá gumba, or erkúm, (Bruce, pl. xxxiv.) is common in Tigré. Bruce's Abú Hanes (pl. xxxv.) is a Numenius, but probably not the Ibis of the Ancients, though nearly resembling it. (Cuvier sur l'Ibis, Annales du Musée, iv. 116.) The Egyptian goose, a duck allied to the Anas Lybica, and the derho maí, (water-fowl,) a peculiar kind of bittern, are among the more remarkable aquatic birds. The most rare of the remaining tribes collected by Mr. Salt, were a new species of barbot, (búcco,) an undescribed bee-eater, (merops;) the red-beaked hoopoe, Upupa erythrorhyncos; Tanagra rubirostris, an undescribed species; the Muscicapa Paradisi and Mutata, Paradise and altered flycatcher, respecting the determination of which Dr Latham was doubtful. The shining thrush, Turdus nitens; the wa'liá, or Abyssinian dove, Columba Abyssinica, figured by Bruce, (pl. xxxviii.) but with feet too large;—it is wild, frequents the daro tree, and is an article of food;—a nondescript tringa; the Cursorius Europæus, and the Erodia Amphilensis, (Salt, pl. xxxvii.) resembling the Pondicherry heron, (Ardea Pondiceriana.)

Figures of many of the Plants have been given with more or less fidelity by Bruce; viz. the Sássa, (Mimosa sassa;) Erget-i-dimmo, (Bloody Erget, or Desmanthus divergens, Willdenov. Sp. Plant.) Mimosa divergens; Erget el korón, (Crown Erget,) the many-flowered Mimosa, (M. Polyacanthos, Willdenov. Habbás of Delille, in Flora Ægyptiaca;) Enset, (pl. viii.) probably a species of Musa; Kolkwal, (pl. x. xi. Kelkwel, prohibited?) a variety of the Euphorbia officinarum; Rák, (pl. xii.) Avicennia tomentosa; Wanzi, (Bruce, pl. xvii.) Cordia Abyssinica; Sadú, Rhamnus inebrians; Kantuffa, (Bruce, pl. xiv.) Pterolobium lace-rans; Gagwédi, (Bruce, pl. xv. xvi.) Protea Abyssinica, Terminalia cycloptera; Fárek, (Bruce, pl. xvi.) Bauhinia acuminata; Kwará, (pl. xix.) Erythrina corallodendron; Walkuffa, (pl. xx.) Pentapetes Phænicea; Wáginús, (pl. xxi.) Bucea ferruginea; Cusso, (pl. xxii. xxiii.) Hagenia Abyssinica; Poa Abyssinica, (pl. xxiv. Leoghe, not Téf, according to Mr. Salt in Lord Valentia's Travels, iii. 215.) Krihaha, (pl. xlv. xlvii.) Bambusa arundinacea; Anguah, (pl. xlviii. xlix.) Sterculia Abyssinica; Núk, (pl. lii.) Polymnia frondosa; Amfár, (pl. liii.) Buddleia acuminata; Kummel, (pl. liv.) Mimusops Elengi. There are likewise several new or very rare species among those brought to England by Mr. Salt, but he has unfortunately omitted the vernacular names, so that though he has increased our stock of Botanical knowledge, he has not thrown any fresh light on those passages in his own, as well as Bruce's volumes, wherein the native names only are mentioned.

Plants.

Salt's Travels in Abyssinia, London, 1814, 4to.; Bruce's Travels to discover the Source of the Nile, 2d edit. Edinburgh, 1804, 7 vols. 8vo.; Ludolfi Historia Æthiopica Francof. ad Mœnum, 1681, fol.; Ludolfi Comment. in Hist. Æthiop. Francof. ad Mœnum, 1691, fol.; Missionary Register, London, V. Y. 8vo.; Platt's Catalogue of Ethiopic Biblical MSS. London, 1823, 4to.; Burckhardt's Travels in Nubia, London, 1819, 4to.

HABILIMENTS. HABILIMENTS, Fr. habillement; from habiller, to dress, to clothe. See HABIT. As the Fr. habillement.

HABIT. "Apparel, clothing; array, attire; a sute of apparel; also, armour or harness." Cotgrave.

The whiche furnysshynge his people with all habylymentys of warre, made out of the towne, and pyght his feelde in a playne ioyngye vnto it.
Fabyan, Anno 1399.

Hector Boetius saith, that after this agreement, John Comin brought Baliol, voyd of all kingly habiliments, with a white rod in his hand, to the English campe at Montros.

Speed. Edward I. book ix. ch. x. sec. 30. Anno 1297.

I, purposing to be briefe, will omit the royall habits of kings at their coronation. As also the honourable habilliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, &c.

Camden. Remains. Apparell, p. 231.

He is particularly nice in his habiliments; and to the end justice may be done him that way, constantly employs the same artist who makes attire for the neighb'ring princes and ladies of quality at Mr. Powel's.

Guardian, No. 92.

The drum, the fife, the habiliments of a soldier, the flag, and all the pomp and parade of military transactions, contribute, perhaps more than any sense of duty, or any native or acquired sentiments of bravery, to lead on the embattled phalanx even to the cannon's mouth.

Knox. Essays, No. 149.

HA'BIT, v.
HA'BIT, n.
HABITABI'LITY, HA'BITABLE, HA'BITABLENESS, HA'BITACLE, HA'BITANCE, HA'BITANT,
HABITA'TION, HA'BITATOR, HABI'TUAL, HABI'TUALLY, HABI'TUALNESS,
HABI'TUATE, v.
HABI'TUATE, adj.
HA'BITUDE.

Fr. habiter; It. abitare; Sp. habitar; Lat. habitare, from habere, to have or hold, to keep.

To habit or inhabit; to have or keep himself; to dwell, to reside, to remain or abide.

Habited, (in Chapman,) as we now use, habituated, i. e. accustomed, used, enured.

Habit, n. applied to the mode or manner of having or keeping; the usual or customary manner; and, thus, to custom, usage, fashion; the custom, usage, or fashion, of dress; dress.

Habitude, also applied to the mode or manner, state or condition, of having or keeping; the relative state or condition; the relation.

A quest than wild he take of þe monke þat bare þe coroune,
His abite he gan forsake, his ordre lete alle doune.

R. Brunne, p. 172.

In whom als be ghe bildid togidre into the abitacle of God in the Hooli Goost.

Wiclif. Effesies, ch. ii.

And it is writen in the boke of Salmys, the abitacion of hem be maad desert and be there noon that dwelle in it.

Id. Dedis of the Apostles, ch. i.

It is wrytten in the boke of Psalmes: hys habytacion be voyde, and no man be dwellynge therein.

Bible, Anno 1551.

In many places were nightingales
Alpes, finches, and wodwales
That in her swete song deliten
In thilke places as they habiten.

Chaucer. Romant of the Rose, fol. 119.

Mine harte chaungeth neuer the mo
For none habite, in which I go.

Id. Ib. fol. 150.

And also sette therto, that many a nacion dyuers of tongue and of maners, and eke of reason of her liuing, been inhabited in the close of thilke habitable.

Id. The second Booke of Boecius.

He was out cast of mannes compaignie.

With asses was his habitation;

And ete hey, as a best, in wete and drie.

Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 12222.

Happely you may come to the citie Siberia, or to some other towne or place habited vpon or neer the border of it.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 435. A Tripartite Commission.

There we stood in our habite bare-footed, and bare-headed, and were a great and strange spectacle in their eyes.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 109. The Tartars.

Make, in purenes of mynde and spirite, vnto God an holye habitable vnspotted from all synnes, and voyde of lustes.

Udall. Ephesians, ch. ii.

Therefore the trouth is, that the habitual belief is in the childe, verry beliefe, though it be not actuall belieuing and thinking vpon the faith, as the habitual reason is in the childe very reason, though it be not actuall reasoning and making of sillogismes.

Sir Thomas More. Confutation of Tyndale, part ii. book vii. fol. 732.

She shall be habited, as it becomes

The partner of your bed.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 296.

Or is it Dian habited like her,

Who hath abandoned her holy groves,

To see the generall hunting in this forrest?

Id. Titus Andronicus, fol. 37.

The goddesse smilde; held harde his hand, and said,

O y'are a shrewd one; and so habited

In taking heed; thou knowst not what it is

To be vnwary; nor vse words amisse.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book v.

The same daie the King created the Lord Thomas, Marques Dorset, before dinner, and so in the habite of a Marquess about the habite of his knighthoode, he beganne the table of knights in Saint Edward's chamber.

Stow. Edward IV. Anno, 1475.

All sins are single in their acting; and a sinful habit differs from a sinful act, but as many differ from one, or as a year from an hour: a vicious habit is but one sin continued or repeated; for as a sin grows from little to great, so it passes from act to habit.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. iv. sec. 2.

For such vast room in Nature unpossess

By living soule, desert and desolate,

Onely to shine, yet scarce to contribute

Each orb a glimps of light, conveyd so farr

Down to this habitable, which returnes

Light back to them, is obvious to dispute.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 155.

O Hercules (quoth he,) what a small deale of the earth is our portion by the appointment of Nature, and yet see how we will not rest, but covet to conquer the whole world that is habitable.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 225.

What art thou, man, (if man at all thou art,)

That heere in desert hast thine habitaunce?

And these rich heapes of wealth doost hide apart

From the world's eye, and from her right usance.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 7.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,

Translated saints, or middle spirits hold

Betwixt th' angelical and human kind.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iii. l. 460.

O what a mansion have those vices got,

Which for their habitation chose out thee!

Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,

And all things turn to fair, that eyes can see.

Shakspeare. Sonnet 95.

The longest day in Cancer is longer unto us, then that in Capricorn unto the Southern habitor.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book vi. ch. x.

Mean while in Paradise the hellish pair

Too soon arriv'd, Sin there in power before,

Once actual, now in body, and to dwell

Habitual habitant.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 588.

Because opinions which are gotten by education, and in length of time are made habitual, cannot be taken away by force, and upon the sudden; they must therefore be taken away also by time and education.

Hobbes. De Corpore Politico, part ii. ch. x.

If a man sins often in several instances it is a habit, properly so called; for although the instances be single, yet the disobedience and disaffection are united and habitual. When a single act of sin is done, and the guilt remains, not rescinded by repentance, that act which naturally is but single, yet morally is habitual.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. iv.

HABIT.

Be persuaded therefore, as you have renounced it, in all its pomps and vanities, when you gave up your names to Christianity, so to renounce it likewise in your lives; habitually at all times, by sitting loose from it, and living above it.

Hopkins. Sermons, fol. 18.

As the merchants, at the Isles of Zente and Cephalonia, told me (when I was there,) it was the custom of our English dogs (who were habituated to a colder clime) to run into the sea in the heat of the summer, and lie there most part of the day.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

So for all his temporary forbearance, upon some either policy or necessity, the habituate sinner hath not yet given over his habit. Leave him to himself, give him room and opportunity, and he will hold no longer.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 17.

Having in that time call'd to his memory the presence of Sir George Villiers, and the very cloths he used to wear, in which at that time he seem'd to be habited, he answer'd him, that he thought him to be that person.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, book i.

The Greeks call the confidence of speaking by a peculiar name, παρρησία; which power or ability in man, of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing, is that idea we name habit; when it is forward, and ready upon every occasion to break into action, we call it disposition.

Locke. On Human Understanding, book ii. ch. xxii. sec. 10.

No Civil broils have since his death arose,
But Faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for Halcyons, when they breed at sea.

Dryden. On the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

Look round the habitable world, how few
Know their own good; or, knowing it, pursue.

Id. Juvenal. Satire 10.

Of how infinite advantage it hath been to those two or three last ages, the great improvement of navigation and advancement of trade and commerce by the rendering the remotest countries easily accessible, the noble discovery of the vast continent of the New World, besides a multitude of unknown kingdoms and islands; the resolving experimentally those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth; of the being of Antipodes, of the habitableness of the Torrid Zone, and the rendering the whole terraqueous globe circumnavigable, do abundantly demonstrate.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

And an admirable provision this is for the perpetuity of the globe, and to continue the state and habitability thereof throughout all ages, which would otherwise waste and decay, or run into the most irreparable and pernicious disorders.

Derham. Astro-Theology, book vi. ch. ii.

While we to Jove select the holy victim,
Whom apter shall we sing, than Jove himself,
The god for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earth-born race, and measures right
To Heaven's great habitants.

Prior. The first Hymn of Callimachus.

The body moulders into dust, and is utterly incapable of itself to become a fit habitation for the soul again.

Stillington. Sermon 9. vol. iii.

Our indisposition [of devotion] itself is criminal, and, as signifying somewhat habitual or settled, is worse than a single omission: it ought therefore to be corrected and cured.

Barrow. Sermon 7. vol. i.

Their hearts and affections are habitually fixt upon things here below; and therefore they will not attend to the force of any argument, that would raise their affections to things above.

Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 449.

But true perfection, and that which is possible and necessary for us to attain, consists, as has been shown, in these three things, in the uprightness, the universality, and habitualness of our obedience.

Id. Sermon 5. vol. ix.

Under a righteous and holy governour, who can never possibly be reconciled to wickedness, it is neither reasonable nor possible that men should be saved, who have never had any regard to truth and right, nor habituated themselves to the practice of any virtue.

Id. Sermon 5. vol. viii.

Names being supposed to stand perpetually for the same ideas, and the same ideas having immutably the same habitudes one to another; propositions concerning any abstract ideas, that are once true, must needs be eternal varieties.

Locke. Of Human Understanding, book iv. ch. ii. sec. 14.

Connivance, to improve the plan,
Habited like a juryman.

Churchill. The Ghost, book iv.

If we are in so great a degree passive under our habits, where, it is asked, is the exercise of virtue, the guilt of vice, or any use of moral and religious knowledge. I answer, in the forming and contracting of these habits.

Paley. Philosophy, vol. i. book i. ch. vii.

We know that, after a certain period, polytheism and idolatry prevailed, through the greater part of the habitable globe.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. iv. p. 64. On the Jewish Dispensation.

Thee Lycia and Mæonia, thee, great pow'r,
The blest Miletus' habitants adore,
But thy lov'd haunt is sea-girt Delos' shore.

Lloyd. Hymn to Apollo.

It [arson] is an offence against that right of habitation, which is acquired by the law of nature as well as by the laws of society.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. xvi.

A state of happiness is not to be expected by those, who reserve to themselves the habitual practice of any one sin, or neglect of one known duty.

Paley. Philosophy, vol. i. book i. ch. vii.

The plump convivial parson often bears
The magisterial sword in vain, and lays
His reverence and his worship both to rest
On the same cushion of habitual sloth.

Cowper. The Task, book iv.

And although from the text we may collect, that any one vice, habitually indulged, will as effectually exclude us from reward, and subject us to punishment, as if we had been guilty of every vice; yet the degrees of that punishment will be exactly proportioned to the number and the magnitude of the sins we have committed.

Porteus. Sermon 15. vol. i.

The mind long habituated to a lethargic and quiescent state, is unwilling to wake to the toil of thinking; and though she may sometimes be disturbed by the obtrusion of new ideas, shrinks back again to ignorance and rest.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 103.

In the Antigone, it [the chorus] is composed of old courtiers, devoted, by an habitude of slavery, to the will of a master, assembled, by his express appointment, as creatures of his tyranny, and prompted, by no strong movements of self-love, to take part against him.

Hurd. Works, vol. i. p. 163. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

HA'BLE, v.	} i. e. able, ableness, ability, q. v. and enable.
HA'BLE, adj.
HA'BLENESS, HA'BLING, HAB'ILITATE,
HABILITA'TION,
HAB'ILITY.	} To give force, power, strength; to strengthen, to empower; and, as we now say, to enable. Habilitate ; Fr. habilitier , to enable, and thus to qualify.

And eke remember thine habilité
May not cōpare with her.

Chaucer. The Court of Love, fol. 353.

To thentent that vnder the name and proteccion of such noble personages the said weorkes mighte be the better habled to the readers, and the better accepted of the people.

Udall. Actes. Dedication to Quene Katherine.

I cannot of my selfe promesse any hablenes to take suche a prouince in hande.

Id. Luke. Preface.

For this benefite of God is not bestowed or geuen, eyther for the valuacion of substaunce and riches, or for the estimacion of kynred, or for the woorkes of the lawe, or for anye other desertes or hablyng of mannes power.

Id. Ib. ch. i.

The slender habilitie and substaunce as wel of Joseph and Marie bothe, as also of their aliaunce and kinsfolkes, was not vnknown.

Id. Ib. ch. iii.

HABLE. But the Cornish men inhabiting in the least part of the realme, and the same part also barreyne and wythout all pleasantnesse, complayned and grudged greatly, affirming that they were not hable to pay such a great somme as was of them demaunded.

Grafton. Henry VII. The twelfth Yere.

Because he was not of sufficient habilitie of himselfe to susteyne and furnishe the warre, he determined to desire king Henry to take part with hym.

Id. Henry VII. The seventh Yere.

In the passage whereof [Acts of the Reuersall of Attaindors], exception was taken to diuers persons in the House of Commons for that they were attainted, and thereby not legall, nor habilitate to serue in Parliament, being disabled in the highest degree.

Bacon. Henry VII. fol. 12.

For the things that we formerly have spoken of are but habilitations towards armes; and what is habilitation without intention and act?

Id. Essay 29. Of Kingdomes and Estates.

Why does a man tender and regard his servant, but because he is for his use? The hability and aptness of the creature for the serving of God's use, does induce God so far to preserve him.

South. Sermons, vol. viii. p. 120.

By the godly order now set forth by the Lord Mayor, those that be not of hability are sufficiently provided for in this case.

Strype. Life of Grindal, book i. ch. viii. Anno 1563.

HACK, v. } A. S. haccan; Ger. and D. hacken;
HACK, n. } Fr. hacher; Sp. hachear.

HA'CKING. } To cut, to chop; to maim or mangle
by cutting or chopping.

And þer, as ys vnle ded laȝ, ys foule caroȝne he brouȝte,
And rȝt þer by pece mele hakked yt al to noȝte.

R. Gloucester, p. 216.

Ne how the hacking in Masories
As corbettes, and imageries.

Chaucer. The third Booke of Fame, fol. 280.

And hact beneath trembling doth bend his top,
Till yold with strokes, geuing the latter crack,
Rent from the heighth, with ruine it doth falle.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

The fishmongers were forced to hacke it in gobbets, and so to carrie it in peecemeale throughout the cuntry, making thereof a generall dole.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, ch. iv.

CRE. O braue man!

PAN. Is a not? It dooes a man's heart good, looke you what hacks are on his helmet, looke you yonder, do you see?

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 80.

Whom not the prancing steed, nor pondrous shield,
Nor the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But the soft joys of luxury and ease
The purple vests, the flowery garland please.

Addison. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book iii.

That man who could stand and see another stripped or hacked in pieces by a thief or a rogue, and not at all concern himself in his rescue, is a traitor to the laws of humanity and religion.

South. Sermons, vol. x. p. 248.

(He) with the sweat of Mars was covered o'er,
And his hack'd target stain'd with dewy gore.

Lewis. Statius, book iii. v. 12.

HACK, v.

HACK, n.

HA'CKNEY, v.

HA'CKNEY, n.

HA'CKNEY-CHAIR,

HA'CKNEY-COACH,

HA'CKNEY-COACHMAN,

HA'CKNEY-JOB,

HA'CKNEY-LADY,

HA'CKNEY-SCRIBBLER.

D. hackeneye; Fr. hackenée; Sp. hacanea, haca;
It. acchine, acchenea, chine. Menage traces thus, equus, akus, akinus, akineus, akinea, haquenée.
Wachter, from the Ger.
nake, hnake, equus, a horse,
(a nag.) transpositis literis;
and nake, from the A. S.

hnæg-an, hinnire, to neigh. A nag, hack, or hackney, was, thus, hors hnægend, a neighing horse; a lively, active horse, distinguished for its frequent neighing.

VOL. XXIII.

And as this kind of horse was most frequently kept for hire, the name became applied, consequentially, to

HACK.

A hired horse, or horse let to hire; to any thing hired or let out to hire; and, hence, to a horse or any thing constantly in work or use; any thing constantly used. And the verb,

To use a hackney; to convey or carry, or ride in a hackney; to let out to hire; to toil, or work, as a hack; to use or practise frequently, or constantly; to accustom.

Tille oþer castels about þei sent tuesday & tuesday,
In aneus (fettres) for doute, ilk on his hakneye.

R. Brunne, p. 278.

Fettred on hakneis, to Inlond ere þei sent,
On sere stedis it seis.

Id. p. 335.

For ich coupe selle
Boþe dregges and draf. and drawe at one hole
Thicke ale and þynne ale. and þat is my kynde
And nat to hacke after holynesse.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 387.

Hus weddyng to honoure
Ac hakenejes hadde þei none. bote hakenejes to hyre.

Id. Ib. p. 33.

Thome þe tynker. and tweye of hus knaves
Hicke hakeneyman. and Houwe þe neldere. (needler.)

Id. Ib. p. 106.

His hakeney, which that was al pomelee gris,
So swatte, that it wonder was to see,
It semed as he had priked miles three.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16027.

The knyghtis and squiers are well horsed, and the comon people and other, on litell hakeneyis and geldyngis.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Chronicle, vol. i. ch. xviii.

There they use to put out their women to hire as we do here hakney horses.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 400. W. Geoffrey Duckett.

In the declaration wherof Vergille leaueth farre behynde hym all breeders, hakney-menne, and skorsers.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i. ch. x.

Such was the use then of stage-coaches, post-horses, and councils, to the great disappointment and grievance of the many: both men and horses and leather being hackneyed, jaded, and worn out upon the errand of some contentious and obstinate bishop.

Marvel. Short Historical Essay on General Councils, &c.

Boy. No Master, the hobbie-horse is but a colt, and your loue, perhaps, a hacknie.

Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 128.

Is't not a shame to see each hoomely groome
Sit perched in an idle chariot roome,
That were not meete some pannel to bestride,
Sursingled to a galled hackney's hide?

Hall. Satire 6. book iv.

I was the other day driving in a hack thro' Gerard street, when my eye was immediately catch'd with the prettiest object imaginable, the face of a very fair girl, between thirteen and fourteen, fixed at the chin to a painted sash, and made part of the landskip.

Spectator, No. 510.

I accepted his kind offer, and immediately took him with me in an hack to White's.

Tatler, No. 15.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag
In quest of you came hither post.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 1.

Steal by the back-door out, and leave him there;
Then order Squash to call a hackney-chair.

Swift. Toland's Invitation to a Dismal, &c.

One of these ladies keeps her seat in a hackney-coach as well as the best rider does on a managed horse.

Spectator, No. 454.

And though some fits of small contest
Sometimes fall out among the best,
That is no more than every lover
Does from his hackney-lady suffer.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 1.

L

HACK. You are a generous author; I a hackney scribler; you a Grecian, and bred at a university; I a poor Englishman, of my own educating; HACKBUT you a reverend parson, I a wag; in short, you are Dr. Parnelle with (an e at the end of your name) and I, &c.

Pope to Dr. Parnell.

Are—but farewell, for here comes Bob,
And I must serve some hackney job;
Fetch letters, or for recreation,
Transport the bard to our plantation.
Robert joins compts with Burnham black,
Your humble servant, Hanbury's hack.

Lloyd. An Epistle from Mr. Hanbury's Horse to the Rev. Mr. Scot.

All catch the frenzy, downward from her grace,
Whose flambeaux flash against the morning skies,
And gild our chamber ceilings as they pass,
To her who, frugal only that her thrift
May feed excesses she can ill afford,
Is hackney'd home unlacquey'd.

Cowper. The Task, book ii.

In the broad, beaten turnpike-road
Of hackney'd panegyric ode,
No modern poet dares to ride
Without Apollo by his side.

Churchill. The Ghost, book ii.

The necessity of preventing the tedium arising from hacknied expression is so instant, that those, who are neither capable of prescribing to themselves this rule of the callida junctura, or of following it when prescribed by others, are yet inclined to ape it by some spurious contrivance.

Hurd. Works. Notes on Horace's Art of Poetry.

What charms can a London carman, chair-man, hackney-coachman, fish-woman, and all the numerous tribes of the lowest class, find in an English meeting or a church? but they would be delighted, and very powerfully affected, with the grandeur and solemnity of a Romish procession.

Knox. Essays, No. 149.

HA'CKBUT, } Fr. hacquebute, a haquebut, or HA'CKBUTTER. } harquebuz, Cot. A Haquebuse, or arquebuse, q. v. particularly the Quotation from Lodge. See also Hagbut and Hagg in Jamieson. The 33 Henry VIII. c. 6. regulates the length in stock and gun of the hag-but or demy-haque; and sets forth who may keep and use them, and under what restrictions.

Wherevpon capteine Lamie and capteine Granestane were sent with two companies of hackbuts vnto the relieve of the lard of Johnstane.

Holinshed. History of Scotland, Anno 1583.

And his sonne sir William Winter that now is, and sundrie other capteins, hauing vnder their charge two hundred *hackbutter*s.

Id. Ib. Anno 1544.

A patent of license granted to Sir John Cheke, K^t. one of the gentlemen of the king's privy chamber, to license at all times, one of his household servants, to shoot in the cross-bow, hand-gun, hackbut, or demy-hake, at certain fowls or deer, expressed in his patent.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1552.

By the statute 33 Henry VIII. above alluded to, "concernyng crossebowes and handgunnes," the Haquebut, or Hagbut, might not be under the length of three quarters of a yard, gun and stock included. Its name is supposed to be derived from the curve in the stock. After some time it was called a Harquebuse, which Fauchet derives from the Ital. arca bouza, a bow with a hole. (Grose, Mil. Ant. xi. 290.) Dr. Meyrick says the hooked form of the butt continued in fashion in France and Spain till the close of Elizabeth's reign. (Hist. of Anc. Arm. Gloss. vol. iii. ad v. Hagbutt.) In the time of Francis Markham, (1622,) they were obsolete. In speaking "of the Arming of Shot," he says, "Harquebusses I cannot allow in this place, because they are grown out of use, and can by no means make their encounter good where the musquet is opposed against them, for the one killing at twentie score, the other hardly at six, how is it possible hee should come to play within his distance, before all or the most part of the HACKBUT body be overthrowne and destroyed." (Epist. of Warre, Dec. i. Ep. ix. p. 33.)

HA'CKLE, or } D. hekelen, to comb flax; hekel, a HE'CKLE, v. } comb, from haeckel, a hook, haecke- HA'CKLE, n. } len, to draw with a hook. Kilian.

Skinner calls heckle (the noun) linifrangibulum, from the D. hackelen, "to cut or hack into small pieces," minutatum concidere, and refers to the verb hack; and Lye explains the English verb hackle, or D. hackelen, in the same words, and asserts it to be a frequentative of hack.

To hackle seems to be; To sever, separate, or sunder, (e. g. as flax in dressing.) The noun:—A tool or instrument for the purpose; also applied (Jamieson) to "a fly for angling, dressed merely with a cock's feather, from its resemblance to a comb for dressing flax."

Burke has revived the verb.

Some layde to pledge
Theyr hatchet and their wedge
Their hekel and their rele.

Skelton. Elinour Rimming.

2. This month also a plain hackle, or palmer fly, made, with a rough black body, either of black spaniel's fur, or the whirl of an ostrich feather; and the red hackle of a capon, over all, will kill, and, if the weather be right, make very good sport.

Walton. Angler, part ii. ch. vii.

The other divisions of the kingdom being hackled and torn to pieces, and separated from all their habitual means, and even principles of union, cannot, for some time at least, confederate against her.

Burke. Works, vol. v. p. 351. On the Revolution in France.

HACKSTER, Holland renders grassatores, robbers and hacksters; probably from the verb to hack.

Wherevpon, he disposed strong guards, and set watches in convenient places; he repressed those robbers and hacksters, he visited and surveyed the foresayd prisons.

Holland. Suetonius, fol. 53. Cæsar Augustus.

Some such desperate hackster shall devise
To rouse thine hare's heart from her cowardice.

Hall. Satire 4. book iv.

HACQUETON, Fr. hocqueton, or hoqueton, a (fashion of) short coat, cassock, or jacket, without sleeves, and most in fashion among the country people; at Court, a coat for one of the guard. Cotgrave. Written by Walsingham, aketon; by old French authors, auqueton. See Menage. "Hocke, vetus Fland. sagum, tunica militaris, Ger. hockete." Kilian. I know not (says Skinner) whether said, quasi jacketon.

And next his shirt an haketon,
And over that an habergeon
For percing of his herte.

Chaucer. Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13789.

Which hewing quite asunder, further way
It made, and on his hackqueton did lye,
The which diuiding with importune sway,
It seiz'd in his right side, and there the dint did stay.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 8.

The AKETON, gambeson, vambasium, and jack, were military vestments calculated for the defence of the body, differing little from each other except in their names; their materials and construction were nearly the same; they were all composed of many folds of linen stuffed with cotton, wool, or hair, quilted, and commonly covered with leather made of buck or doe skin. The Aketon was long the sole defensive armour for the body worn by the English infantry. As it not only covered the breast, but also the belly, it was, by the Germans, called wambasiam, or the belly piece. (Grose, Mil.

HACKBUT
HAC-QUETON.

HAC-QUETON. Ant. ii. 247.) Du Cange, also, identifies it with the — Gambeson, and gives various derivations from the Fr.
HAD- hoqueton, or hauqueton, which itself is from the Gr.
DINGTON- χιτών, or from the Cambro Brit. actuum, lorica duplex, SHIRE. duplodes. From the MS. Roman du Riche et du Ladre, he gives a receipt for an invulnerable Auqueton:

*Si tu veul un Auqueton,
Ne l'empli mie de coton,
Mais d'œuvres de miséricorde
Afin que Diables ne te morde.*

HAD I WIST, wist from wiss-ian, to know; had I known.

And thus ful ofte her selfe she skiereth,
And is all ware of had I wist.

Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 30.

This blindnesse is not of the eyes alone,
But of the mind, a dimnesse and a mist:

For when they shift to sit in hautie throne

With hope to rule the scepter as they list,

Ther's no regard nor feare of had I wist.

Mirroure for Magistrates, fol. 160. Aulus Vitellius.

Beware of had I wist.

Camden. Remains. Prouerbs, p. 304.

For fear of fool Had I wist, cause the wail,

Let Fizgig be taught, to shut door after tail.

Tusser. Huswifely Admonitions.

In the purchasing thereof [ground] be you nothing forward: a thing overbought, hath evermore repentance, (quod malè emptum est, semper poenitet;) and had I wist, attending upon it.

Holland. Plinie, book xviii. ch. v.

His pallid feares, his sorrowes, his affrightings,

His late wisht had I wists, remorseful bitings.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song ii.

HADDER, i. e. heather, heath, q. v.

By this meanes those Indian Brachmanni kept themselves continent, they lay upon the ground covered with skins, as the Redshanks doe on headder, and dieted themselves sparingly on one dish.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 542.

HADDINGTONSHIRE, called also EAST LOTHIAN, a County of Scotland extending along the shores of the Frith of Forth, which bounds it on the North and East.
It is bounded on the South by Berwickshire, and on the East by Edinburghshire, or Mid-Lothian; the rivulet of Dunglas marking the separation in the former instance, and that of Ravensheugh in the latter. The extreme length of the County, from East to West, is 25 miles; and its breadth, from North to South, about 16. Measurements from recent maps give it a superficies of 280 square miles, or 179,200 English acres.

Surface.

The surface of the country is extremely diversified, though the elevations are not of such a height as to allow it to be designated mountainous. From the continual alternation which it presents of hill and dale, tourists have styled it the Northamptonshire of Scotland.
The Lammermuir range runs across the County from West to East, terminating in the bold promontory of St. Abb's Head, and its lateral branches generally wind until they gain a parallel direction. Spartleton hill, said to be one of the highest in the range of Lammer-muir, rises to the height of 1615 feet above the sea.
There are some other hills in the County, less remarkable for their elevation than for their insulated positions and effect on the landscape. Trapene-law, a conical rock, rises, in a level country, to the height of 700 feet.
On its summit are the remains of an ancient castle, and the whole shore of the Frith of Forth may be distinctly surveyed from it. Haddingtonshire may be said to slope, in general, from the hills of Lammermuir, towards the North and West; but the descent is not uniform, some extensive open plains occurring, particularly on the Eastern side of the County in the neighbourhood of bold acclivities.

The mineral which predominates in the County is granite, but limestone is of frequent occurrence, so as to be the manure in general use; common marl is also often met with, and at Saltoun a bed of shell marl has been found which is likely to add to the riches of the agriculturist. Iron ore abounds in Humbic, Keith, and Oldhamstocks, and has given rise to manufactories; the lead ore, of which numerous traces are found in the Lammermuir district, has met with less attention. The freestone, which is found abundantly in every part of the shire, is, perhaps, the most profitable of its fossil products. The mineral waters of this County are numerous, and were formerly much resorted to for scorbutic disorders, but their reputation has considerably declined. A number of small rivulets descend from the hills to the Frith of Forth, but they are too small to be made available to the purposes of navigation, or even to nourish fish. The County might, therefore, be said to be ill watered, if it were not that the great extent of its indented shores rendered the want of inland water-communications a matter of little importance. It has no lakes, and the Tyne, which rises in Edinburghshire and winds Westward till it falls into the Frith at Tynning-ham, is its only river. The Tyne has a very slow course and is subject to sudden floods, which have frequently done much damage to the shire town situated on its banks.

Rivers.

On the coast of this County, at Dunbar, is found a singular columnar rock which is not basaltic. The account of this mineralogical curiosity, we shall give in the words of the Bishop of Ossory, (Hamilton,) who first described it. (Philosophical Transactions, vol. lii. p. 98.)
“The passage into the harbour of Dunbar is very narrow, between two rocks; one of them is the East side of the harbour, the other a promontory stretching out about a hundred yards to the North, and is about 20 yards wide, having the sea on each side of it when the tide is in. This head is a most extraordinary natural curiosity, it is of a red stone, which is not a limestone, but appears rather like a very hard freestone. It looks on both sides like the Giant's Causeway in Ireland; the stones, on the West side, are from a foot to two feet over; on the East side they are larger, from two to four feet. I observed pillars from three to eight sides; but only one or two of the first and last. They may be said to be in joints, but are strongly cemented together by a red and white sparry substance which is found in laminæ round the pillars and between the joints, two or three inches in thickness. The interstices between the large pillars, which are but few, are filled with small pillars, without joints. The pillars consist of horizontal laminæ; the joints are not concave and convex when separated, but uneven and irregular; they lie sloping from East to West; on the West side, towards the end, the pillars become very large and confused, as I saw them to the East of the Giant's Causeway, and in the Isle of Mull; except that these are divided by such a sparry substance into a great number of small figures, which seem to go down through them.”

Pit coal is met with in every part of Haddington, but it is in the parishes of Tranent, Ormiston, Gladsmuir, Preston-Pans, and Inveresk, that this valuable mineral is particularly abundant. Here it was dug for as early as the XIIIth century, if not earlier. It appears from old charters still extant, that the monks of Newbotle

Coal.

HAD DINGTON
SHIRE.

Minerals.

HADDINGTONSHIRE.

Agriculture.

worked coal on their estates of Preston Grange as early as the year 1200.

Haddingtonshire is the County from which the improved system of agriculture has been diffused over Scotland. There is reason indeed to believe, from the great number of mills scattered over the County, and possessing prescriptive rights, that even in very ancient times the produce of corn here was considerable; and proofs of an excellent husbandry may be gleaned from monuments of the XIVth century. In 1736, the horse-hoeing husbandry was introduced in all its vigour, and East Lothian, which had the honour of leading the way in Scotland to agricultural improvements, still maintains its preeminence. The tillage of this County is thought to be hardly susceptible of improvement. The soil, situation, and climate, are advantageous; lime and sea-ware, for manure, are in abundance; and in the Eastern parts rain seldom falls during the summer months, a circumstance to which is due the superiority of the corn produced here. Nearly four-fifths of the whole County is in tillage, the remainder being waste or mountain pasture. In the Lowlands cattle are a secondary consideration, being kept only for the sake of the manure. In the Lammermuir district, however, the breeding of live stock is the chief care of the farmer. The farms are of moderate size, from 300 to 500 acres, and the leases are generally for 19 or 21 years. The rents as well as produce of this County exceed those of any other corn lands in Britain.

The real rent, as returned under the Property Tax Act, amounted, in 1811, to the sum of £180,654; so that the land rent, including the hill of Lammermuir, is almost a guinea an acre.

Manufactures.

Attempts have been made to introduce manufactures into this County, but never with success. Manufactories of woollen, cotton, and linen cloths, still exist, employing a few hands, and returning but little profit. The making of salt, from which Preston-Pans received its name, is still continued along the same coast; the yearly produce is about 30,000 bushels. Connected with the salt manufacture is fishing. An oyster fishery on the coasts formerly employed a great number of boats; and the sea fowl of the Forth engaged the people of the adjacent shores, who used them as food; but the inhabitants of the coast, at present, give their whole attention to the herring fishery. The exportation of corn is the chief foreign trade of this County.

Haddingtonshire is divided into 24 parishes, subject to the Presbyteries of Haddington, Dalkeith, and Dunbar. No Druidical monuments remain within the limits of Lothian, although the inhabitants of this County, prior to the invasion of the Romans, were a Tribe of British. The only remnants of remote antiquity are the numerous circular encampments, from 1500 to 2000 feet in circumference, which are met with in several conspicuous situations. There are three Royal Burghs in the County, viz. Haddington, Dunbar, and North

Population.

Berwick. The population of the County was, in 1755.....29,709

1811.....31,164

1821.....35,127

exhibiting a very accelerated rate of increase during the latter period.

Haddington.

Haddington, the Shire town, situated on the left bank of the Tyne, has four good streets well laid out, and exhibiting, in their architecture, the progress of modern improvement. Its chief ornament is the parish Church, which formerly belonged to a Franciscan monastery. This edifice, supposed to have been erected in the XIIth century, is 210 feet long by 110 in the transept. The ancient choir and tower were going fast to ruin, when, a few years back, the whole underwent repair, and part was rebuilt in a style of magnificence. Two bridges, one of which is a recent construction, cross the Tyne at this place. About a mile Eastward of the town is the Abbey of Haddington, founded in 1178, by Ada, mother of Malcolm IV. In this Abbey was assembled the Parliament which, in 1548, consented to the marriage of Mary with the Dauphin of France. Haddington is supposed to have been created a Royal Burgh by David I. The town was, in old times, frequently destroyed by fire, and has suffered much in latter times from the overflowing of the Tyne; in 1775, this river rose 17 feet above its ordinary level, sweeping away the stock and produce of the fields, and causing unspeakable calamities. On the right bank of the Tyne, joined to Haddington by the bridge, is the suburb of Nungate, remarkable for being the birth-place of the reformer Knox. The attempts to make Haddington a commercial or manufacturing place, have all proved unsuccessful; but the weekly market, held there every Friday, in which agricultural produce is disposed of, is the largest in Scotland. Population of the Burgh and parish in 1821, 5,255. 16 miles East of Edinburgh.

Dunbar, on the coast near the mouth of the Frith of Forth, was made a Royal Burgh by David II. It is a small but tolerably neat town, with little or no trade, although it has dock-yards and a harbour formed by piers. Boat-building for the fisheries is chiefly carried on here. On the rock of columnar formation, described above, or Isle as it is called, is the battery which defends the haven. A little to the West of the harbour lie the ruins of the castle of Dunbar, a fortress of great Historical note, and so strong, that, before the invention of artillery, it was thought impregnable. Dunbar, or the castle of Bar, was bestowed on a Chieftain of that name, by Kenneth, king of Scotland, as a reward for his valour against the Picts. This ancient hold was demolished, by order of the English Government, in 1567, in consequence of the shelter it afforded to the crimes and excesses of the Earl of Bothwell. The population of Dunbar, in 1818, was 4,490, but the erection of a cotton manufactory had increased it, in 1821, to 5,272.

North BERWICK, the other Royal Burgh, has been already described.

The County sends one member to Parliament, and the three Royal Burghs, conjointly with Jedburgh and Lauder, elect another.

Along the coast of this County are the islets of Bass, Islands. Craigleith, Fidra, Lamb, and Idris. The most remarkable of these is the Bass, a rock about a mile in circumference, a mile from the shore, and inaccessible on all sides but the South-West. It has a spring of fresh water on its summit, and pasture for a few sheep; immense flocks of Solan geese and other sea-fowl frequent it. The situation and strength of this small island occasioned its being, at different epochs, a military station, a State prison, and a place of resort for pirates.

Chalmer's Caledonia, vol. ii.; Playfair's Description of Scotland, Mr. Baron Hepburn's View of Rural Economy in East Lothian, 1794; R. Somerville's Survey of the same, 1802.

HADDINGTONSHIRE.

HAD- DOCK. HADDOCK, Fr. hadot, the trivial name of the Gadus Eglesinus.

HADES. If I had another elder brother, and say it were his chance to feed *haddock*s, I should be still the same you see me now, a poor contented gentleman.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, act ii.

On each side, beyond the gills, is a large black spot, superstition assigns this mark to the impression Saint Peter left with his finger and thumb, when he took the tribute out of the mouth of a fish of this species, which has been continued to the whole race of *haddock*s ever since that miracle.

Pennant. British Zoology, vol. iii. p. 245. The Haddock Cod Fish.

HADE. Perhaps head, head-lands.

The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother slades,
And on the lower leas, as on the higher hades,
The dainty clover grows. Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 13.

HAD- DOCK.

HADES.

H A D E S.

Of the opinions which the Greeks and Romans entertained concerning their HADES, (Ἅιδης,—Ἄδης, as it is written in prose,) or invisible world, we must be content, for the most part, to derive our knowledge from their Poets. Nor is it likely that we shall lose much by so doing; for, in the uncertain state of their Mythology, the Poets, probably, are the best guides. They adopted and embellished such popular traditions as they found before them, till the Philosopher acquiesced and the vulgar believed in their fictions. If not the inventors, they were, at least, the most learned teachers and the surest guardians of the general Creed; and, without determining the question whether themselves had faith in the doctrines which they sang, we may assert with confidence that the faith of the great mass of their countrymen depended upon this singing.

Hesiod.

Hesiod is naturally the first to whom we turn for information, as he is the earliest of the Greek Poets, any of whose writings have been authentically transmitted to us. ADES, with him, is, we believe, in every instance in which he uses it, employed as the name of Pluto, Ἄϊδωνεύς, as he is often called, from whom εἰς Ἄϊδα, with the ellipse of οἶκος, became the common direction to the Infernal Regions. To the obvious derivation from a and εἶδω we may add another given by Plutarch (de Superstitione, ad fin.) from Plato, ὃν Πλάτων φησὶ Φελάνθρωπον ὄντα καὶ σοφὸν καὶ πλούσιον, πειθοῖ καὶ λόγῳ κατέχοντα τὰς ψυχὰς, Ἄδην ὠνομάσθαι.

A Poem has sometimes been ascribed to Hesiod, as we are told, by Pausanias, (ix. 31.) on the descent of Theseus and Pirithous to Hades, ὡς Θησεὺς εἰς τὸν Ἄδην ὁμοῦ Πειρίθῳ καταβαίῃ, which, if it were left to us, might, perhaps, fully elucidate his opinion upon a Future state; but as nothing except the title of the Poem now remains, it is very idle to guess what it would or would not have shown us. All that he positively delivers in his existing Works is to this effect; that the men of the Golden Age, after their decease, became Good Spirits, guardians and protectors of their descendants, hovering invisibly over the earth, observant of good and evil actions, and (as the Commentators understand the word πλουτοδοῦται) bestowing wealth by assisting Agriculture. (Εργ καὶ Ἡμ, 121.) Cooke, in a note upon his translation of this passage, remarks, "Here the Poet endeavours to deter his brother from any future injustice by telling him all his actions are recorded, and that according to their merits he shall be rewarded." If Hesiod's words justified this interpretation, he had indeed made large progress in pursuit of Truth, and but little remained for him to learn as to his future destinies; but we read his expressions otherwise, οἱ ῥα φυλάσσουντι τε δίκας καὶ σχήτλια ἔργα, observing is not recording, and, even if it were so, recording is not rewarding.

The second race of men, after death, in like manner, obtained certain honours which are not so fully described. The mortals of the Brazen Age were the first who descended to Hades, probably as a punishment, for their death was violent, by their own hands; they are described as perishing without honour; and the epithets attached to their abode express vastness, coldness, and darkness. (Ib. 152.)

The fourth generation, a better and a juster race than the third, Heroes already Demigods, after perishing at Thebes and Troy, were translated by Jupiter far from men, to the confines of the earth, where they now dwell discharged from all care and anxiety, near the depths of Oceanus, revelling in the happy climate and rich productions of the Fortunate Islands, μακάρων νῆσοι, where the fertile bosom of Earth annually presents them with a triple harvest. (Ib. 168.)

It is only thus far that Hesiod approaches towards a state of future reward; and from the Tartarus, which he prepares for the defeated Titans, after the Gigantomachia, we obtain all which is to be learned from him as to punishment. This Tartarus, it is true, does not appear to have any relation to Man; nevertheless, as it is plainly the groundwork upon which Homer, and afterwards Virgil, in part, erected their more extensive superstructures, we shall briefly sketch its outline. The Titans had already scaled Heaven when Jupiter no longer delayed his lightnings, and the impious invaders fell, as is implied, for twenty days and nights consecutively, as far below the Earth as the Earth is below the Sky; words which Homer has borrowed to express the same immensity of space. (Il. Θ. 16.) A brazen wall girds in the abode which gaped for their reception, round it broods a threefold night, and above it spring the roots of Earth and Sea. The place itself is vast, at the extremity of the Earth, without an issue; nevertheless, as we suppose, for the sake of greater precaution, Neptune placed iron gates upon its walls; and Gyges, Cottus, and Briareus sentinelled them. In this huge gulf, for a whole year after his entrance, no one can hope to touch the solid ground, but must be perpetually agitated and driven about by blasts and whirlwinds. Night and Day alternately enter and depart; and the children of the former, Sleep and Death, here shrink from the Sun. Sleep, indeed, wanders abroad placidly and calmly during the season of darkness; but the heart of Death is iron-bound, his bosom is of brass, he seizes the first mortal who comes in his way, and he is an enemy even to the Immortals. In the vestibule are the palaces of Pluto (Ἄϊδεω) and Proserpine; and there stands the terrific Dog, who before has been mentioned by his well-known name, and other fearful attributes, tarus.

His Tar-

Κίεβρον ὠμῆσθην, Ἄϊδιαι κύνεα χαλκείφωνον.—311.

He fawns upon and rubs his ears and tail against all who enter, but his jaws are a sure receptacle for such as attempt to return. Styx, the eldest-born daughter of Oceanus, hateful to the Gods, dwells by his side, under huge vaults propped by silver columns. Sometimes, but it is to be hoped rarely, (and, indeed, so Hesiod adds,) she is visited by Iris, whenever a God is suspected of a lie. Then Jupiter despatches his messenger to bring a golden vessel filled with the cold water of Styx, which drips from a lofty rock. The streams of this river are tenfold, nine of them gird the Earth, the tenth is reserved to punish the perjury of the Celestials. Whatever God has forsworn himself by it, lies senseless, breathless, and speechless during an entire year, undieted by ambrosia and nectar, and stretched in lethargy upon a couch. Even when he recovers his faculties his offence is not expiated, till after a nine years' banishment from the Councils and the Banquets of Heaven. (Hesiod. 717-807.)

HADES.

Hesiod concludes his description with some lines which he has employed before, and in which both the imagery and the language is too vague to admit paraphrase:

ἵνα δὲ γῆς δοφίης καὶ Ταρτάρου ἡριόεντος, πόντου τ' ἀτρυγέτοιο καὶ ἕραν ἀσπίοντος,
ἕξις πάντων πηγῶν καὶ πείρατ' ἰᾶται,
ἀργαλί', εὐρώεντα, τὰ τε συγίαισι θεοῖσι πίῃ.
ἵνα δὲ μαρμαίῃαι τι πύλαι, καὶ χάλκῳ ἄδῳ ἀσπίδῃσι, βίβῃσι διπλοκίεσσι ἀσπίδῃσι, αὐτοφύης. πρόσθεν δὲ, θῶν ἱκτοσθὲν ἀπάντων,
Τιτῆνις καίουσι, πύρην χάριος Ζοφίοντος.

Ib. 807.

Such are Hesiod's statements, in no part of which do we perceive any intimation of a general retribution in a Future state; and scarcely any thing which implies more than a slight suspicion of the probable Immortality of the soul. Yet Mr. Mitford has remarked, that "as Hesiod's morality is more pure, so his notions of a Future state are less melancholy than those of Homer." (Hist. of Greece, ch. ii. sec. 1. ad fin.) Homer's notions, as we shall presently show, are indeed sufficiently melancholy; but we are at a loss to determine whether Hesiod possessed any notions at all on the subject.

Homer.

In the XIth Book of the Odyssey, Ulysses having arrived at the Country of the Cimmerians at the extremity of the Ocean, a land of perpetual clouds and darkness, prepares for a communication with departed Spirits. The rites which he performs beforehand are not to our purpose here, we confine ourselves to the particulars which Homer relates of the Ghosts with whom his Hero conversed; and in tracing these we shall, with a slight variation, and a few additions, follow Jortin, who has admirably concentrated in his VIIth Dissertation, all which the Poet has delivered on the subject, both in this and other passages of his great Works.

Homer's account in one point is somewhat confused, and perhaps he intended it to be so, that the marvellous might be heightened. It is not easy to say whether Ulysses descends into Hell, or simply evokes the dead by a Νεκρομαντεία, or does both; the images are mixed together. Most of the Spirits plainly rise from beneath, and hover over the foss and its bloody libation; but the machinery upon which the punishments of Tityus, Ixion, Sisyphus, and Tantalus depends is far too cumbersome to be transferred to upper day, and must have been visited in the very prison-house. The Souls with which Ulysses converses are separated from the body, yet they are still either material, or clothed with a material covering so thin that it cannot be felt or handled. The funeral pile has destroyed the bones and the flesh, and the form of them which remains is but as a dream. The bodily appearance and the dress which was worn by the living man, his passions, affections, sentiments, and dispositions all survive him. The Soul quits the body reluctantly, and cannot pass the gates of Hades till its funeral rites have been performed. When once within, it annexes itself to some little fraternity of its friends or countrymen. Tartarus, as we have before said, is situated in Homer's theory as far from Heaven as Hesiod places it. It is governed by Pluto (Ἄϊδης, Zeus καταχθόνιος) and Proserpine, and their ministers the Erynnyes. (Il. I. 158. 454. 565.) Cerberus is the house dog. (κύνα στυγεροῦ Ἄϊδαο. Il. Θ. 368.) Homer does not give this animal the specific name of Cerberus, nor does he describe his shape; but Pausanias is mistaken in saying that later writers invented the name, οἱ δὲ ὕστερον Κέρβερρον ὄνομα ἐποίησαν; (iii. 25.) for, as we have already seen, it was known to Hesiod. Those who are punished in Tartarus are offenders, by particular impieties, against the Gods, (such as the Worthies whom we have before specified,) and the perjured; (Il. Γ. 279.) for, though Minos is expressly mentioned as legislating to the dead, (θεμιστεύοντα νεκύεσσιν), no other crime but perjury is named as provoking a punishment resulting from his judicature. The Hades of Homer, even in its bettermost parts, is but an unpleasant Country, (ἀτερπέα χώραν) in which, as Achilles tells his friend, he would feel so little delight in obtaining the sovereign rule, that he would infinitely prefer being the hired labourer of some poor farmer, even at the risk of encountering short commons.

But Homer has an Elysium (Ἠλύσιον πεδίον) of far more agreeable cast, which he mentions incidentally, (Od. Α. 561.) and which is widely different from the Hades opened to Ulysses. These fields, like the gloomy abode which we have just considered, are situated in the extremities of the Earth, under the sway of Rhadamanthus. Life is there enjoyed in full repose; snow, showers, and tempests are unknown, and perpetual gales of the softly-breathing Zephyr, wafted from Ocean, refresh the happy dwellers. This is a glowing picture; but we know not how long the possessors of this happiness were doomed to enjoy it. They were still men, and had not passed through death. The promise to Menelaus was translation, and it might, perhaps, not be translation to immortality.

His Elysium.

Pindar has borrowed from Homer and added to him. He speaks without obscurity of future retribution. The impious Spirits of the dead, (ἀπαλάμνοι φρένες), he says, immediately undergo punishment in another state, and sentence is pronounced, through a stern necessity, by some one judging below the crimes committed here. But the Good enjoy an undisturbed existence, visited by the Sun alike by day and night. No toil by sea or land is requisite for their subsistence. All those who have cultivated loyalty, justice, and fidelity, are endued with a tearless being among the most honoured of the Gods, while grief is the lot of the Wicked. The Good, after three recalls to human life, (for Pindar here inculcates transmigration,) if they have preserved themselves spotless, pass over the road of Jove to the City of Saturn. There the gales of Ocean breathe over the Island of the Fortunate, the Earth laughs with golden flowers, which, budding also from the waters, tempt the hands to weave garlands. He then names Rhadamanthus as the Judge of this abode, and Peleus, Cadmus, and Achilles among its inhabitants. (Olymp. xi. 102.) Plutarch has cited an exquisite Pindar.

HADES. fragment of the same Poet, (τοῖσι λάμπει μὲν μένος ἁέλιου, κ. τ. λ.) in which many of the above images are repeated. The Good, according to this passage, appear to occupy themselves chiefly in horsemanship and music, and one of their pleasures arises from the fragrance of incense exhaled upon altars. (Plut. Consol. ad Apollon. Ed. Xyl. 1620, vol. xi. p. 120; and Pindar, a Heyne. Frag. Threni, i.)

The Greek Tragedians.

The Tragedians add little to our subject. Hades is frequently mentioned by them both as a person and a place, but they do not enlarge on either. The Ghost of Darius, in the Persæ of Æschylus, and that of Polydorus, in the Hecuba of Euripides, speak decisively as to the popular belief in some future state; a belief probably varying in its details, according to the fancy of each individual who entertained it. How much the Poets found, and how much they invented,—to what extent they guided or followed others,—it is impossible now to determine, and therefore very useless to inquire. We may add that Jortin has pointed to some lines in the Alcestis, in which the Chorus wishes happiness to the deceased Queen, if in Hades greater happiness be permitted to the Good than to others. Here is a doubt which at once sets retribution at defiance.

Virgil.

In passing on to the VIth Book of the Æneid, in addition to Jortin's Dissertation already mentioned, we shall make use of Heyne's VIIIth Excursus, and occasionally of his Notes, and those who seek for more may turn to the XVIth Dialogue of Spence in his Polymetis. The route of Æneas lies first through a cave, then through huge and dark forests to a river. In the vestibule of Hell is found a hideous train of Beings, which sufficiently explain their own allegory, Grief, Cares, Diseases, Old Age, Fear, Famine, Want, Death, Toil, Sleep, Evil Joys, War, the Furies, and Discord: in the midst are seen Dreams nestling on the branches of an elm-tree, and, distributed around, are various monsters, the creations of darkness, as the Centaurs, Scyllæ, Briareus, the Hydra and Chimæra, Gorgons, Harpies, and Geryon. The bounding river is first called Acheron, afterwards Styx,* and over this Charon, (ἀχαίρων, the joyless,) a personage unknown to Homer, is ferryman. On the opposite shore is the kennel of Cerberus. The first abode of shades is tenanted by infants, those who have unjustly suffered death, or have inflicted it on themselves. Next to these in the Fields of sorrow (Campi lugentes) are placed those who have been unhappy in their deaths, love-sick heroines, and distinguished women; at the extremity of these Fields inhabit illustrious men slain in battle; thus completing the list of those who have perished immaturely. Hence two roads diverge, one on the right to the Palace of Pluto, and beyond it to Elysium, another on the left to Tartarus. Æneas enters neither the Palace nor the place of punishment, but the latter is vividly described to him. We need not cite a passage familiar to every reader; but we may remark upon it, how largely the doctrine of retribution must have gained between the times of Homer and those of Virgil. None but the perjured are condemned by the elder Poet; in the later scarcely any offence which man can commit against his brother escapes repayment, and the evil lusts of the flesh are very fully and fearfully catalogued. In the Odyssey there appears no classification, but the sufferers are intermingled with the happy. Orion chases his prey by the side of the ever-thirsting Tantalus, the wheel of Ixion revolves, the stone of Sisyphus rebounds, and the vulture gnaws the entrails of Tityus, in the presence of Hercules, and under the very eyes of Achilles.

There is another division of Hades which Æneas did not enter, but which Anchises described to him, a Purgatory; in which evil is cleansed away by the operation of Air, Water, or Fire. It is not clear whether this hospital of the Soul was within or without Tartarus, but Servius (ad Æn. vi. 404.) conceives it properly to be named Erebus. After passing through it, the Spirits of the best men, and they were comparatively few in number, were consigned to that which, as we think, Virgil more than once implies was the eternity of Elysium. The less perfect were doomed to return to human bodies. But in this part of the system there is hopeless confusion between præ-existence and transmigration.

The doctrine delivered by Plato in his Phædo is not very widely dissimilar, the incurably wicked are never released from Tartarus; those who are wicked in less degree undergo frequent purgations; and the eminently Good, according to their gradations of virtue, freed from all bodily commixture, enjoy eternal happiness in a region of purity. (Ed. Bip. I. 258.) Socrates appears to deliver this as his own conviction; the account of transmigration which he gives (Ib. 244.) is introduced as if it were that of others, λέγεται δὲ οὕτως. A concise view of parts of the Platonic scheme on this subject may be found in the Somnium Scipionis of Macrobius. (i. 11, 12, 13.)

Plato.

We confine ourselves, however, as we projected at the outset, to the view given of Hades by the Poets of Antiquity. Many particulars, added by popular superstition to the state of happiness which the Poets taught as existing in the Fortunate Islands, may be found in the IIId Book of the Veræ Historiæ of Lucian, mixed, as may be supposed, with numerous oblique strokes of satire; but on that very account, perhaps, conveying a statement from which far more truth may be elicited, by such as will take pains to detect it, than from the gravest narrative, or the most regular system framed by a staunch Mythological believer. The Necyomantia of the same writer may be consulted to a similar purpose, and with scarcely less advantage.

Lucian.

It has not been our purpose, in this place, to agitate the broad and boundless question of the belief entertained by the Ancients in the Immortality of the Soul. But under all the follies of their many headed superstitions, it is impossible not to perceive the uncontrollable inclination of the Human Mind to adopt this opinion, and the shifts which it perpetually has made to relieve itself from uncertainty regarding it. Faith on this point indeed cannot, in the nature of things, be obtained without Revelation; but it is no small argument in favour of the Truths which are bestowed on Faith, that even previous to Revelation, Instinct, if we may so call it, led mankind incessantly to persevere in inquiring for them, and in some instances brought us as near to their discovery as we could possibly arrive without the higher aid of Divinity itself.

* Heyne has a separate Excursus, the IXth, on the Infernal Rivers.

HADRA-
MAUT.

Boundaries.

Principal Towns.

Schibâm.

Dafâr.

Keshîn.

Merbât
Hâsik.

Terîm.

Schâhîr.

Cape
Fartash.
Ainâd.

Kochtân.

Mahrah.

Coasts.

HADRAMAUT, or HHADDARAMAUT, (HUZRAMOUT, according to the Indian pronunciation and common orthography,) is one of the largest Provinces of Arabia, and almost the only one of great interest which has never been explored by Europeans. It is bounded on the North by Yâfa' and the great Central Desert, on the East by O'mân, on the South by the Indian Ocean, and on the West by A'den and other Provinces of Yemen. It is a rugged, mountainous territory, intersected by fertile valleys, barren on its Northern frontier, and having several harbours, conveniently placed for the export of its produce to different ports of Asia and Africa. It was considered by the Ancients as a part of the Happy Arabia, (Arabia Felix), as well as Yemen, though separated from that Province by a lofty ridge, which extends from the Central Desert to the Sea, and terminates in an abrupt Promontory. (Geogr. Nub. p. 26.) The whole is at present divided into a number of petty States, each Township being independent of its neighbours. Its inhabitants are either Bedewî, (nomade,) or cabâyil, (settled,) Arabs. Shibâm, eight days' journey (160 miles) from San'â, and 10 days' (200 miles) from Máreb, is still the largest Town in Hhaddramaút, but the country between it and the latter place is entirely uninhabited. Doân, 25 days' journey (500 miles) East of San'â, is said to be the larger of the two. Ddhafâr is the principal port of this division of Arabia, and the great mart for frankincense, (olibanum;) but through the negligence or dishonesty of the Arabs, their gums are so impure, as to be of much less value than those brought from India. Keshîn, the inhabitants of which are very civil to strangers, is in 15° 26' North. It is probably the Sachalites of the Greeks, and its Sheikh is now, as in the time of Arrian, (Peripl. Maris Erythr. p. 18,) master of Socotorah: the trade in aloës, as well as that in olibanum, are, therefore, in his hands. At Morbâtt and Hhâsik frankincense is also to be had, but it is of an inferior Quality. The Tomb of the Prophet Húd, or Haud, mentioned in the Korân, (xxxiv. 16.) and so much venerated by the Arabs, is in this Province, probably not far from Keshîn. Terîm, mentioned by Idrísí, (Geogr. Nub. p. 26,) and Cohhtân, are deserving of notice. Shehr, on the West of Hhaddramaút, (not on the East, as placed in our maps,) is a small Township and harbour of the same name. Sharmah, mentioned by Idrísí, is another port, the inhabitants of which trade with Mokhâ, A'den, and Mascatt. Medínat-el-asfal is held in great veneration, on account of the many Saints buried there. Of Raísút, Suwír, Hhanbel, Sharwaín, Raider, and Fartac, Niebuhr could learn nothing more than the names. The position of the latter, however, is fixed by the Cape, which is called from it, Râs-el-fartac; not Fartash, as it is spelt in modern maps. Aïn 'Ad, 13 days' journey from Keshîn, and seven from Shehhr, probably belongs to Yâfa', though said to be one of the independent territories in Hhaddramaút. Cohhtân, the name of a Town mentioned above, is the Arabic appellation of Joktan, son of Eber, and father of Hazarmaveth. (Hhaddramaút.) The District of Mahrah, lying between Hhaddramaút and 'Omân, probably belongs to the former; but of it M. Niebuhr could not obtain any distinct account.

The coast is clearly laid down by Idrísí. (Geogr. Nub. p. 26.) From 'Aden to Abín, on the Yemânî Sea Eastward, the distance is 12 miles. A mountainous ridge, stretching from the Desert to the Sea, where it forms a Promontory, separates Abín from Las'â, the first Town in Hhaddramaút, and distant a day and a night's passage by sea. Two days' journey from the latter is Sharmah, near which there is a warm medicinal bath, much used. Between Sharmah and Morbâtt is the bay called Ghobbo-l-camar, (Moon Bay,) at the bottom of which is Khalfât, and its extremity is formed by a white and crescent-shaped mountain, called Jebel-el-camar-el-abyadd, (White Moon Mountain.) It is six days from Sharmah to Morbâtt by sea, and the mountains near the latter place produce the trees (shejer-el-lubnân) yielding frankincense, (olibanum), which is exported thence to all the Countries of the East and West. Hhâsik is two days' sail from Morbâtt, and four days' journey by land. Opposite to the former, which is only two miles from the Tomb of Húd, are the two Islands Khartân and Martân,* and it is overhung by Laûs, a high mountain, projecting into the Sea, its North side being opposite to the land of the Tribe of 'A'd. (Corân, vii. 66. 70.) Hhâsik is situated on the Jaún-el-hhashîsh, (Hemp Harbour,) a deep gulf, extremely difficult to enter or issue from. The District of Shejr, in the Territory of Mahrah, is the Eastern boundary of Hhaddramaút, and Mahrah lies between that Country and 'Omân. From 'Aden to the boundary of the Province (bilâd) of Shejr, says Idrísí, (p. 53,) there are 300 miles.†

The most Northern District of Hhaddramaút is Máreb, the ancient Capital of Belckís, Queen of Sabâ, (Sheba,) destroyed by the bursting of a mound or embankment, (seddu-l-arim), (Corân, xxxiv. 16.) by which the mouth of a deep ravine in the adjacent mountain was closed up. This embankment was nearly 20 fathoms (câmet) in height, and the waters, when it burst, instantly swept away "men, beasts, and buildings, destroying every thing, or dispersing them on all sides. (shedher medher.) The Arabs were scattered, their tongues confounded, (tebelbelet-el-elsin), and they wandered to the East and West; but vestiges of the City remained, and people (caum) from Hhaddramaút returned thither, and dwell there till now." (Clim. ii. part vi. Idrísí, MSS.‡) It contained the Castle of Sserwâhh, which was the Palace of Solomon, son of David, and the Castle of Cashíb, the Palace of Belckís, wife of Solomon. From Máreb to Shibâm was four days' journey, (100 miles.)

The two principal Cities of Hhaddramaút (Idrísí, p. 53) are Tarím§ and Shibâm. The latter is a strongly fortified, populous Town, on the brow of a hill, extremely difficult of ascent, on the summit of which there are many populous villages, corn-fields, and running streams, "grain, palms, and brushwood in abundance. Cornelians, ('ackíc), amethysts, (jemmist), and onyxes, (jeza'), are found imbedded in the pebbles of its stony watercourses, and form a considerable article of

* Curia-Muria in our maps; whence it may be conjectured, that Kharyân and Maryân is the true reading; but both MSS. have tá, (t), not yá, (y.)

† Very nearly approaching to 250 Geographical miles, the distance according to our latest maps.

‡ Omitted in the Abridgement printed at Rome, and published under the title of Geographia Nubiensis.

§ The orthography in the MSS. is rather doubtful: Niebuhr has Tarím; but it is spelt Berím in the Jehân-numâ, (p. 491,) and the river Prim, in the map, is doubtless the same name: as the Arabs have no p, the true word must, therefore, be Brim. Berím, says Háji Khalífah, (p. 491,) is a large and populous City, 15 miles from Dhamár.

HADRA-
MAUT.Tomb of Haud.

Shejer.

Mareb.

Tarím.
Schibâm.

HADRA-
MAUT.Shejr, or Sháhr.

Mahrah.

Hiyaree tongue.

Religion.

commerce among the merchants of that Country. The District (bilád) of Shejr,* contiguous to Hhaddramaút on the East, is a part of the land (ardd) of Mahrah, a Country said to be 900 miles long, and from 15 to 25 broad. It is all a tract of moving sands, driven about from place to place by high winds. The Tribes (cabáyil) of Mahrah are genuine Arabs, famous for an excellent breed of camels, unequalled in swiftness of pace, intelligence, and docility. Each has his name, and comes immediately when called by it. The tongue of the people of Mahrah is very strange, and hardly intelligible. It is the ancient Hhimiari tongue. The greater part of Mahrah is a complete desert, (cafr), inhabited only by wandering Tribes, whose support is derived from their camels and goats. All their cattle are fed with a very small kind of fish, called el werec,† and caught in the adjoining Sea of 'Omán. It is the principal article of food for man and beast in Mahrah. Wheat (hhinttah) and bread are unknown there; fish and dates are their only diet; milk and a little water their drink. They are so accustomed to it that they have no inclination for other food. When any one of them goes into the neighbouring Countries, and drinks water after eating bread, he is in danger of falling sick in consequence of it." (Idrisí, MSS. ubi suprà.) Adjoining to the land of Shejr on the North, is the territory (bilád) of Omán.

Though the commerce in gums and spices, the ancient staple of Hhaddramaút, has now found a different channel, and the mutual jealousy of the petty Chiefs, who are masters of this Country, has a strong tendency to check all enterprise, trade to some extent is still carried on: aloes and frankincense are exported thence to the Towns on the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, and though there is no intercourse across the Desert between the Southern and Western parts of Arabia, their communication by water is easy and frequent. Olibanum, gum-arabic, myrrh, dragon's blood, and aloes are sent to Mascatt and India; linens, carpets, and large knives or daggers (yambe) to Yemen. In Religion the people of Hhaddramaút are Sunnies, or orthodox: in learning they probably do not excel, and their dialect differs so much from that of Yemen, that M. Niebuhr could not converse with them without an interpreter. (Beschr. p. 285.) The names of Cohhtán, Hhaddramaút, and Sabà approach so nearly to those of Joktan, (Yacttán, called Cahhtán by the Arabs,) Hazarmaveth, and Sheba, that little doubt can remain as to the identity of this Country with that in which the children of Joktan first settled; (Gen. x. 25—29.) and Niebuhr's supposition that the Country between Mesha and Mount Sephar (Gen. x. 30.) is the mountainous tract from Yemen to Hhaddramaút, seems probable, though the Hebrew and Arabian names, which he compares together, have only an apparent resemblance. (Beschr. p. 290.) The ancient Hhimiari dialect, next to the Hebrew, is the most venerable relic of the primitive language of the East: the tribe of 'Ad, whose history occupies so conspicuous a place in the old Arabian traditions, and the Tomb of Húd, venerated by the Arabs so many centuries before Mohammed, are all objects of great interest, and might, if Niebuhr was rightly informed, (Beschr. p. 289,) be visited without much hazard or difficulty, in an excursion from some of the Indian ports, by those among our countrymen established on the Malabar coast, who, having successfully cultivated a knowledge of the Arabic language, have already acquired the most essential requisite for the attainment of this object. It is therefore to be hoped that, at no distant period, some attempt will be made to visit the rugged mountains and fertile valleys of this unexplored region, once among the most celebrated in the annals of Oriental commerce.

Niebuhr's Beschreibung von Arabien, Kopenhagen, 1772, 4to.; Idrisí's Geography, Arabicè, Rom. 1592, 8vo.; Geographia Nubiensis a Gabr. Sionita et Joan. Hesronita, Paris, 1619; Jihán-numà, Istánböl, 1732, fol.

HÆMANTHUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Narcessi. Generic character: involucre many leaved, many flowered; corolla six-parted, superior; berry three-celled.

A genus of bulbous plants, natives of the South of Africa: the singularly formed flowers are usually produced from the bulb, without leaves.

HÆMATOPOTA, in Zoology, a genus of Dipterous insects, belonging to the family Tabanidæ, founded by Fabricius, and generally adopted.

Generic character. Antennæ longer than the head, the first joint a little shorter than the third, oval, cylindrical, the second very short, truncated, the last elongated, conical, or subulate. This genus contains four European species described by Meigen. The type is Tabanus pluvialis, Linnæus; figured by Reaumur, iv. pl. xviii. fig. 1. and Meigen, pl. xiv. fig. 16. It is very troublesome to cattle.

HÆMATOPUS, from the Greek αἱματώεις, bloody, and πούς, a foot, Lin.; Oyster Catcher, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Pressirostres, order Grallæ, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak long, slender, strong, straight, and compressed, more especially at the tip, which is square like a pair of scissors; nostrils linear, placed near the base of the groove in the upper mandible: wings of moderate length, the first quill feather the longest; legs strong and muscular, having the tarsi reticulated, and three toes in front, of which the outer is connected by membrane to the middle as far as the first joint, and the inner to the middle by a short membrane; all the toes edged with a narrow membrane, and the nails short and slightly curved.

The Oyster Catchers are always found on the seashore, following the tide in search of marine animals, which they drag along the shore, and, if bivalves, open by means of their narrow, wedge-shaped beak, which is admirably adapted for that purpose; and they also dig in the sand for worms. They both run and fly quickly, and have a long, shrill cry. Although assembling in large groups for their migration, they live solitarily during the breeding season, and build in the marshes near the sea. They moult in Autumn and Spring, but the only difference consists in the presence or absence of the upper white collar. The sexes are not distinguished from each other in plumage.

There is but one English species, the

H. Ostralegus, Lin.; l'Huiterier, Buff.; Sea Pie, or Pied Oyster Catcher, Pen. About fifteen inches long, and two feet wide: the bill is about three inches long

HADRA-
MAUT.HÆMA-
TOPUS.

* Shehhr, of which Niebuhr heard, (Beschreib. p. 282.) seems to be a different place, lying West, not East, of Hhaddramaút.

† Werec signifies leaf: it is, therefore, some kind of flat-fish.

HÆMA-TOPUS.HÆMO-
PIS.

and bright orange, as are also the naked ocular circlets; the head, neck, upper part of the chest, back, wings, and tip of the tail deep black; the under eyelids white, as also a crescent-shaped collar under the throat, which latter, as before mentioned, is black in pairing time in the Spring; the transverse band on the wings, the roots of the alar and caudal quills, the rump, and all the under parts, are beautifully white; irides crimson; legs pale red like blood, whence the generic name. They lay their eggs in open, dry situations only sheltered by a few blades of grass, which are left during the day to the heat of the sun, but at night are carefully sat on by the hen. The young are easily tamed, and will live among poultry. Although not good swimmers, they are not averse to the water, on which they float rather than swim. Native of the British coasts, and of the Northern parts of Europe and America.

In the young birds the white is not so clear, and the black part of the plumage varied with brown.

H. Palliatus, Tem.; l'Huiterier à Manteau; Brown-backed Oyster Catcher. The beak stronger and longer than in the last species; the back, scapulars, and wings, ashy brown: the legs stronger than the last. Native of South America.

H. Niger, Cuv.; l'Huiterier Noir, Tem.; Black Oyster Catcher. Rather larger than the English bird; the plumage entirely black in the old and brown in the young birds; the beak and legs of a red coral colour; the ocular circlets red. Native of Southern Africa and Australasia.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ; Temminck, Manuel d'Ornithologie; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

HÆMATOXYLON, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla, petals five; capsule lanceolate, one-celled, three-valved, valves keeled.

One species, H. Campechianum, the Logwood, an elegant small bushy tree, native of most parts of the West Indies, but particularly of the coast of the Bay of Campeachy.

HÆMOCHARIS, in Zoology, a genus of Annelides, belonging to the family Hirudinidæ, established by Savigny.

Generic character. The oral sucker slightly concave, very large; jaws reduced to three prominentes; eyes eight, placed in pairs, so as to form a trapezium; anal sucker oblique.

Some authors have placed these animals with the Leaches, and Blainville established a genus for their reception under the name of Piscicola, which has been adopted by Lamarck.

The genus consists of only one species, which lives in fresh water, attached to the bodies of fresh-water fish; when they move, they walk like the larvæ called Loopers. The Hirudo geometra of Linnæus, and H. piscium of Muller. It has been figured by Roesel and Muller.

HÆMODORUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla, petals six, the three interior having stamens inserted above the middle of the petal; stigma obtuse, capsule inferior, three-celled.

One species, native of New South Wales.

HÆMOPIS, in Zoology, a genus of Annelides, belonging to the family Hirudinidæ, established by Savigny

Generic character. Oral disk concave, upper lip much produced, lanceolate; jaws large, oval, each with two rows of small teeth; eyes ten, placed in a curved line, the four hinder most distant; the anal disk oblique, terminal. The Leaches are the most carnivorous of the family, and their bite, from the large size and form of the teeth, is difficult to heal, and is usually very painful.

The type of the genus is the Horse Leach, Hirudo sanguisuga of Linnæus; the Hæmopsis sanguisorba of Savigny. They are common in ditches near London, and generally live on worms and dead animals, but sometimes attach themselves to bathers. Savigny has described three other small species found near Paris, but it is doubtful if they are not varieties of age and sex of the above.

HÆNKEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx two-leaved, one of the leaves two-lobed; corolla pitcher-shaped; stigma three-angled; drupe one-seeded; nut three-celled.

One species, H. flexuosa, native of the Andes.

HAFT, A. S. hæft, from hæft-an, capere, prehendere; (Junius;) to take, to hold in the hand; and this (Skinner) from habban, habere, to have. Tooke forms it thus, "Haved, hav'd, haft."

"The haft of a knife or poniard is the haved part; the part by which it is haved, or held."

But yet ne fond I nought the haft,
Whiche might unto the blade accorde.

Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 68.

CIT. O, if he had, I would have made rare hafts and whistles of 'em, but his shin-bones if they are sound shall serve me.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Philaster, act v.

It has a haft, fit to hold it by in one's hand, to the end that it may not hurt the hand, whiles it presses upon the knife.

Digby. Of Man's Soul, ch. i.

HAFTING, Junius, Hafte, cessare; Hafter, tergiversator; A. S. hæftan, tenere. Belgis, hechten, hachten, haften, est apprehendere, tenere, morari; to hold or keep, to stay, tarry, or delay. And thus, met.

To hesitate, to come to no decision, to say or act indecisively, inconclusively, insincerely.

Whan was there more hafting and craftyng to scrape money to gether.

Udall. Ephesians. Prologue to the Reader.

With these pernicious words iterated continually unto him, he grew enkindled, and (without any farther hafting or holding off) (sine cunctatione) delivered up all that was demanded.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 275. Jovianus.

(The Consuls themselves kept a hafting and flinching,) (consules ipsos tergiversari), and without all question, made but a score and game at their miseries.

Id. Livius, fol. 59.

And the yonger sort of the Romanes, (without any hafting and drawing backe,) (sine detrectatione), upon the proclamation gathered together.

Id. Ib. fol. 237.

HAG,

HA'GGISH,

HA'GSHIP,

HAG-BORN,

HAG-SEED.

D. heks, hex; Ger. here; Sw. hexa; A. S. hægesse, hægtesse; (Sp. hechisera, hechizera.) A hag, or witch, a furie or fiend, a woman-divell. Somer. Junius says, some derive from Hecate, others from hecken, mordere. Wachter, the A. S. hægesse, from A. S. eges-ian, to fear, to affright, to terrify, to make afraid: and observes in confirmation, that a hag is also called Egese-grimma, velut atrox terrore; grimma likewise being a name bestowed upon hags or witches.

To hag; to affright, to terrify, to scare.

HÆMO-
PIS.

HAG.

HAG or HAGARD. Hagged face, in Gray, "having the face of a witch, or hag." Mason.

The goddess above are calm'd with verse, with verse the *hagg*es of hell.

Drant. Horace. Epistle 1. book ii.

Nay, nay, the battayle now I leaue, nor me with feare affright
Do any more your filthy foules, and *hagg*es of Limbo low,
Your hellish sound, and clapping of your winges I well do know.

Phaer. Virgi. Æneidos, book xii.

And after him

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags,
With hoarie locks all loose, and visage grim;
Their feet vnshod, their bodies wrapt in rags,
And both as swift on foot, as chased stags.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 11.

MAC. How now you secret, black, and midnight hags?
What is 't you do?

ALL. A deed without a name.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 144.

But on vs both did haggish Age steale on,
And wore vs out of act.

Id. All's Well, fol. 232.

What's this? Oh, 'tis the charm her hagship gave me
For my duchess' obstinate woman; round about
A threepenny silk riband of three colours.

Middleton. The Witch, act ii. sc. 2.

Then was this island
(Saue for the son, that she did littour heere,
A frekeld whelpe, hag-borne) not honour'd with
A human shape.

Shakspeare. Tempest, fol. 4.

Pros. Hag-seed, hence:

Fetch vs in fewell, and be quicke, thou'rt best
To answer other businesse.

Id. Ib. fol. 5.

The ape that looks pale at the sight of a snail, and flies as if he had feared lest that slow creature should overtake and devour him, would be a great deal less ridiculous than the timorous man, whose nature is thus hagg'd with frightful imaginations of invisible powers and a judgment to come.

Scott. Christian Life, part ii. ch. iii. sec. 2.

Can widows feed on dreams and wishes,
Like hags on visionary dishes.

Fenton. The Widow's Wile.

She seem'd a beggar of the lowest tribe:
No words can half her filth obscene describe;
But such a hag to paradise convey'd,
Had wither'd by her looks the blissful shade.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xliii.

The ghostly prudes with hagged face
Already had condemn'd the sinner.

Gray. A Long Story.

HAGENIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Oc-tan-dria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx two-leaved; corolla, petals five, flat; nectaries five; leaflets one-fourth the length of the petals.

One species, H. Abyssinica, native of Abyssinia.

HA'GARD, n. } Fr. hagard, from vagardus;

HA'GGARD, adj. } vagus, vagardus, hagard, Menage.

And Skinner, wagard, a vagando; or from A. S. hæg, a hedge, because non domi, sed foris, sc. in sepibus agitat. Haggard, the adj., Skinner (who writes it hagger) thinks may be from the Ger. hager, macer; or, as Wachter interprets it, gracilis, macilentus, or from hagard the n., a kind of falcon. Turberville, in his Book of Falconry, 1575, (cited by Mr. Steevens, in his note on the first passage quoted below from Shakspeare,) tells us, that "the haggard doth come from foreign parts a stranger and a passenger." And a French writer, quoted by Pennant, says, that hagar is a Hebrew word, and signifies stranger. And see FALCONRY.

Fr. hagard, "wild, strange:" in English also applied to the countenance or features; spare and harsh, lengthened, distorted,—with fatigue, with anxiety.

For haggard hawkes mislike an emptie hand.

Gascoigne. Memoires.

Liue like a haggard still therefore,
And for no luring care,
For best (I see) contents thy minde,
At wishe and will to fare.

Turberville. The Louer to a Gentlewoman, &c.

No, truly Vrsula, she is too disdainfull,
I know her spirits are as coy and wilde,
As haggerds of the rocke.

Shakspeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, fol. 109.

As hagard hauke, presuming to contend
With hardy fowle above his hable might,
His wearie pounces all in vaine doth spend
To trusse the pray too heauie for his flight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

If I do proue her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my deere heart-strings,
I'll whistle her off, and let her downe the winde
To prey at Fortune.

Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 325.

Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable flood;
Staring his eyes, and haggard was his look;
Then, kissing first the threshold, thus he spoke.

Dryden. Theocritus. The Despairing Lover.

How haggardly so e're she looks at home.

Id. Juvenal. Satire 6. l. 601.

A swarm of half-starved haggard flies,
With furie seiz'd the floating prize.

Yalden. Fable 13. The Fox and Flies.

The falcon, the falcon gentil, and the haggard, are made distinct species, whereas they form only one.

Pennant. British Zoology. Lanner, vol. i. p. 224.

HAGGARD. Dr. Jamieson derives from English haw (q. v.) and geard, sepes, sepimentum; q. d. an enclosed piece of ground.

The Connagh men foorthwith set on fire and burned all their townes, villages, and churches, as also all such corne as they had in their haggards, and in their caues, and could not carrie with them.

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, ch. xxi.

When the barn was full, any one might thrash in the haggard.

Howel. Letter 24. book ii.

HAGGIS, or HAGGASE, derived by Jamieson from hack, a loathsome dish in high esteem among the Scotch, commonly made of the lungs, heart, and liver of a sheep, minced with suet, onions, salt, and pepper, and boiled in the animal's maw; sometimes oatmeal supplies the place of the intestinal meat. The Germans have a similar mess, which they call by a name as disgusting as the food which it represents, leber-wurst, liver-pudding. Haggase is represented by Minshew to signify a sausage in English.

HAGGLE, i. e. to hackle or hack.

Suffolk first dyed, and Yorke all hagled ouer
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteeped,
And takes him by the beard.

Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 88.

HA'GGLE, v. } Cotgrave has Fr. "harceler, to haggle, HA'GLER. } huck, hedge, or paulter long in the buying of a commodity." See HIGGLE, and HUCKSTER.

Dorsers are peds, or panniers, carried on the backs of horses, on which haglers use to ride and carry their commodities.

Fuller. Worthies. Dorsetshire.

Every man will haggle as long, and struggle as hard to cheat his employer of twopence in a day's labour, as an honest tradesman will to cheat his customers of the same sum in a yard of cloth or silk.

Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

HAGGLE.
—
HAIL.

But what then? always haggling and haggling. A man is tired of getting the better before his wife is tired of losing the victory.
Goldsmith. The Good-natured Man, act i.

HAIL, v. } A. S. hagol, hæg-ele, hægle; D. }
HAIL, n. } hueghle; Ger. hagel. A. S. hagol-an, }
HAI'LY, } grandinare, of unknown Etymo- }
HAIL-SHOT, } logy. In Swed. hælla is to pour; }
HAIL-STONE, } and Ray, in his Northern Words, } HAIL-MIXED. } has "Heald, as when you pour out } of a pot." Junius also, "Held, hell, hill, to pour, to } pour forth." See HYLL.

Hail, the n. See the Quotation from Locke. To hail,

To pelt or patter, cast or pour down, hail; generally, to cast or pour down.

Neiþr hete ne hail. ne helle pouke hym greve
Neiþr fuþr noþr flod.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 251.

And leitingis weren maad, and voices, and thundris, and erthemouyng, and greet hail.
Wiclif. Apocalips, ch. xii.

And there folowed lyghtninges and voices, and thondringes, and erthquake, and much hayle.
Bible, Anno 1551.

I wept and I wayled,
The teares down hayled,
But nothing it auailed.

Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

And the Lorde so hayled in the lande of Egypte, that there was hayle and fire mengled with the hayle, so greuous, that there was none suche in all the lande of Egypte, sence people inhabyted it.

Bible, Anno 1551. Exodus, ch. ix.

For our admirall supposing some such assault, had prouided all our muskets with haile-shot, which did so gaule both the Indians and the Portugals, that they made them presently retreat.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 711. M. James Lancaster.

Hedys hopped undur hors fete,
As haylstones done in the strete,
Styckyd was many a stede.

Le Bone. Florence of Rome, l. 641. In Ritson, vol. iii. p. 28.

Now and then we feasted for it in the meane time; and that was when there fell any haile or raine: the haile-stones wee gathered vp, and did eat them more pleasantly then if they had bene the sweetest comfits in the world.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. part ii. fol. 163. The Hon. Erle of Cumberland.

For ere Demetrius lookt on Hermias eyne,
He hail'd downe oathes that he was onely mine.
And when this haile some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolu'd, and shoures of oathes did melt.

Shakspeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, fol. 147.

— The sulphurous hail,
Shot after us in storm, oreblown hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of Heav'n receiv'd us falling.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 171.

These they have raked up together, and discharged as it were haile-shot upon Aristotle, Socrates, Pythagoras, Protagoras, Theophrastes, Heraclides, Hipparchus, and whom not of all the most renowned and principall philosophers.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 477.

And therewithall it hayled, whiche hayle-stones were of wondrous greatnes, and slew great numbers of men and beastes at Constantinople.

Stow. Anno 369. The Romanes.

Hail seems to be the drops of rain frozen in their falling.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, ch. vi.

Instead of strength of reason, he answers with a multitude of words, thinking (as the proverb is) that he may use hail when he hath no thunder.

Wilkins. The Discovery of a New World, book i. prop. 9.

Some arsenical, or other corrosive or poisonous exhalations, being suddenly emitted from the subterranean parts into the air, were by the wind they chanced to meet with there, hurried along with it, and blown against the bodies that stood in its way, moving in the air like hail-shot discharged out of a gun.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 54. Discourse of Causes of the Insalubrity and Sulubrity of the Air.

Nor were the effects of it less astonishing by the relations from France and Brussels, where the damages were infinite, as well from whirlwinds, thunder, and lightning, as from hailstones of prodigious bigness.
Sir William Temple. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 274.

HAIL.

But with a thicker night black Auster shrouds
The heavens, and drives on heaps the rolling clouds,
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily showers.

Pope. Thebais of Statius, book i.

Now from his cuirass, now his helmet high,
Now from his shield she makes the sparkles fly:
Thick, and more thick, as on the rustic shed
The pattering hail, her rapid blows she sped.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xlv. l. 590.

— Here, amid the roar
Of winds and waves, the drifted turbulence
Of hail-mix'd snows, resides th' ungenial power
For ever silent, shivering, and forlorn!

Mallet. The Excursion, can. 1.

HAIL, v. } A. S. "Hael or haile, safe, well in HAI'LING, } health, safty; also saluation. Our HAIL-FELLOW. } ancestors used it instead of Ave, as a word of most well wishing, as when they sayd, Haile Mary, &c. I find the name of our Lord Jesus to be, in our ancient English, translated hælende; that is to say, Saviour, or Saluator." Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii. See HEAL, and HALE.

And thei bigunnen to grete him and seyden, heil thou Kyng of Jewis.
Wiclif. Mark, ch. xv.

And they began to salute him, Haile Kynge of y^e Jewes.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Ill haile, Alein, by God thou is a fonne.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4087.

Thereupon wee bare roome with him, and hauing hailed one another, Captaine Withrington shewed the disposition of all his company, which was rather to goe roome with the coast of Brasil, then to lie after that sort in the sea with foule weather and contrary winds.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 773. The Hon. Erle of Cumberland.

And yet mighte thei seme to bee no more but vainglorious and folishe, if thei made no farther seking nor suing, but for the swift blastes of brute and fame of the people, and the vanishing smoke of hailinges and greetings.

Udall. Luke, ch. xx.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach; I gain'd a son,
And such a son as all men hail'd me happy;
Who would be now a father in my stead?

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 355.

FRA. Heere comes the holy Legat of the Pope.

PAN. Haile you annointed deputies of beauen.

Shakspeare. King John, fol. 9.

— Yet I well remember
The fauors of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All hayle to me?
So Judas did to Christ.

Id. Richard II. fol. 39.

Now man, that erst haile-fellow was with beast,
Woxe on to weene himsele a god at least.

Hall. Satire I. book iii.

At last, perhaps, the glorious day may come,
The day that brings our royal exile home;
When, to thy native realms in peace restor'd,
The ravish'd crowds shall hail their passing lord.

Pitt. Vida's Art of Poetry, book i.

Ha! didst thou say revenge? Hail, sable pow'r,
To me more dear than riches or renown!
What gloomy joy, to drench the dagger deep
In the proud heart of him who robb'd my fame!

Smollett. The Regicide, act iii. sc. 7.

HAINOUS. HAINOUS, now commonly written Heinous, q. v.

HAIR.

HAIR, HAIRY, HAIRINESS,
HAIR-LESS,
HAIR-BREADTH,
HAIR-CLOTH,
HAIR-CUTTER,
HAIR-DRESSER,
HAIR-DRESSING,
HAIR-FRIZZER,
HAIR-HUNG, HAIR-LACE,
HAIR-LIKE,
HAIR-MERCHANT,
HAIR-POWDER,
HAIR-WORM.

A.S. hær; D. haer; Ger. haar;
Sw. haor. Of unknown Etymology.
Hair, sometimes used (as in Chaucer) for hair-cloth.

Of David Kyng, in preysing of him hit is radde, that he was rede, but vnderstondeth, that my lorde the kyng is subruphus, for a colour of worshipfulle age, which a litelle harenesse hath chaunged sum-what his colour.
R. Gloucester, p. 481, note.

His hod was ful of holes, and his heare out.
Piers Plouhman. Crede, p. 16.

And ye schulen be in hate to alle men for my name. And an heere of youre heed schal not peresche.
Wiclif. Luk, ch. xxi.

And hated shall ye be of all men for my name's sake. Yet there shall not one heere of your heades peryshe.
Bible, Anno 1551.

Under hire robe of gold, that sat ful faire,
Had next hir flesh yclad hire in an haire.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15601.

Ne she was gaie, freshe, ne jolife,
But semed to be full ententife
To good werkes, and to faire,
And therto she had on an haire.
Id. Romant of the Rose, fol. 118.

Mother, with you wold I changen my cheste,
That in my chambre longe time hath be,
Ye, for an heren clout to wrap in me.
Id. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12670.

They ware long nayles, which they neuer cutt, and long heare, that was neuer clipped.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, book ix, fol. 283.

But John hath preferred the hearie hide of camels before ueluettes and silkes.
Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

Some with a sho cloute
Bynde their heades aboute,
Some have no herelace,
Theyr lockes about their face.
Skelton. Elinour Rummig.

The Indians of Taucuylabo weare their haire long downe to their knees, tied as women vse to doe with their haire-laces.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 459. John Chilton.

My fansie eke from former follies moove
To stayed steps; for time in passing weares,
(As garments doen, which wexen olde above,)
And draweth newe delights with hoarie *haire*s.
Spenser. The Shepherd's Calendar. June.

Without any man's privity he arrived at the Court, and the next morning apparelled Thyus (a tall man, and of a terrible grim look, being black haired, and wearing his hair long) with a great robe, such as great lords use to wear.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 1027. Datames.

The hairiness therfore will be occasioned in those parts, where the mother fanied it to be.
Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxviii.

And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So is her face illumin'd with her eye,
Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Shakspeare. Venus and Adonis.

When my sword,
Advanced thus, to my enemies appear'd
A hairy comet, threatening death and ruin
To such as durst behold it!
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, act i. sc. 1.

Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances;
Of mouing accidents by blood and field,
Of haire-breadth scapes i'th' imminent deadly breach.
Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 314.

But within a while that manner of dealing grew more cold and slack, by reason that they stopped the mine betweene when they list, one while with sacks and haircloth, otherwhiles with dore and such trash as they could come by in hast and stood next hand.
Holland. Livius, fol. 986.

In distilled or water strongly boiled, neither uliginous coats, guatworms, acari, hairworms, like crude and common water.
Sir Thomas Brown. Cyrus Garden, ch. iv.

But to what shall we attribute the foetus its likeness to the parents, or omitting them, to the precedent progenitors, as I have observed some parents that have been both black hair'd, to have generated most red hair'd children, because their ancestors' hair hath been of that colour.
Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

Our earth, even in the microscope, appeared to consist of as small particles, as the finest hair-powder to the naked eye.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 104. Origin of Qualities and Forms.

I take the grant, and by degrees prevail,
(For hair by hair I pull the horse's tail,)
And while I take them year by year away,
Their subtile heaps of arguments decay,
Who judge by annals, nor approve a line
Till death has made the poetry divine.
Francis. Horace. Epistle 1. book ii.

The tail of the latter [stoat] is always tipt with black, is longer in proportion to the bulk of the animal, and more hairy.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Stoat.

You jest; but proud Cynisca makes me sad;
Nay; I'm within a hair-breadth raving mad.
Fawkes. Theocritus. Idyllium 14.

These kind of hair-breadth missings of happiness look like the insults of Fortune, who may be considered as thus playing tricks with us.
Fielding. The History of a Foundling, ch. ii.

He might as well say, that reading the Rape of the Lock would make one a good hair-cutter.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. p. 14.

In this refined age we are all persons of taste, from the hair-dresser and milliner to the duke and duchess.
Knox. Essays, No. 155.

There are many who assume the office and authority of critics in all literature, who have no pretension to judgment beyond the cut of a coat, the neatness of a shoe, the style of hair-dressing, a minuet, or the dress of an actor or actress on the stage.

Knox. Winter Evenings. Evening 32.

The instruction of the fair sex in this country is entirely committed to the care of foreigners; as their language-masters, music-masters, hair-frizzers, and governesses, are all from abroad.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World. Letter 87.

And man alone; and man, whose fate,
Fate irreversible, entire, extreme,
Endless, hair-hung, breeze-shaken, o'er the gulf
A moment trembles.

Young. The Complaint. Night 2.

In the lower exterior sheaths, where this connecting membrane is decayed, the more durable hair-like fibres remain distinct, giving to the whole the appearance of an ermine's tail.
Sir William Jones. Works, vol. v. p. 49. Observations on the Spike- nard of the Ancients.

This act reminds me, ge'men, under favour,
Of old John Bull, the hair-merchant and shaver.
Byrom. Horace, book i. ode 20

HAIR.

HAKEA.

HAL-BERD.

HAKEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia, natural order Proteaceæ. Generic character: common calyx imbricated, many leaved, scales deciduous; corolla, petals four, linear, the apex concave, bearing the stamens; germen pedicellate, glandular at the base; capsule woody, two-valved, two-seeded; seeds two-winged.

This genus of Proteaceous plants, allied to Banksia, contains six species, natives of New South Wales.

HALADROMA, from the Greek ἅλς, the sea, and ὀρέμω, I run, Illig. Haladrome. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Longipennes, order Palmipedes, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak strong, compressed, straight, its ridge, edges, and tip well marked, the tip hooked; a groove on each side of the upper mandible, which gradually vanishes towards the point, which is truncated; nostrils double; throat dilatable; wings long, fit for flying; legs short, turned outwards, three-toed, webbed; claws curved and sharp.

The Birds of this genus very much resemble the Peterels in their general figure and beak, and the Cormorants in their pouch-like throat; but, like the Albatrosses, they have no hind toe. They are extremely good divers.

H. Zeelandicus, Illig.; Procellaria Urinatrix, Gmel.; Pelecanoide, Lacep.; New Zealand Haladrome. About eight and a half inches long; beak black; upper parts brownish black, under parts white; chin black; legs bluish-green. Native of New Zealand, and the only known species.

See Illiger, Prodromus Mammalium et Avium; Cuvier, Règne Animal.

HALBERD, or } Fr. hallebarde, hellebarde; It. halabarda; Sp. halabarda; D. halabarda; Ger. hellebard; Sw. hellebard. A word, says Junius, which all confess to be of Teutonic origin. See Vossius de Vitiis, Menage, Wachter, Ihre, and Kilian. Junius (as Ihre and Kilian do) prefers helm-bard, because it (barte, securis) splits helms or helmets in battle: Kilian notices the existence, veteribus Teutonibus, of the word helm-ar.

The halberts hewe on hed, the browne billes bruse the bones.
Gascoigne. Flowers. Devise of a Maske, &c.

The horsemen ouertooke one of them who had a halbard in his hand, whom the Spaniards thought to haue taken.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 791. Lopes Vaz.

Then pushed souldiers with their pikes,
And holbarders with handy strokes,
The Hargabushe in fleshe it lightes,
And duns the ayre with misty smokes.

Poems of Vncertaine Auctors. Thassault of Cupide, &c.

Harold also with the like forwardnes, marshalled his battaile, placing in the vant-guard the Kentish men, (who by an ancient custom had the front of the battaile belonging to them,) with their heauy axes, or halberts.

Speed. Harold, book viii. ch. vii. sec. 36. Anno 1066.

The gentlemen of the round have vowed to sit on the skirts of the citie, let your provost and his half-dozen of halberdiers doe what they can.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act iii. sc. 5.

For the statue of a trumpeter which Polycletus made, as also that other of an halbard, are commended in regard of the maker, and not of those whom they do represent, and for whose sake they were made.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 309.

With which answer they not being satisfi'd, threatened, that, unless he would confess the truth, they would hang him immediately; and, to affright him, tied a piece of match about his neck, and began to pull him upon a halbert.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 62.

The king had even then, upon his suit, made his father captain of his guard of halberteers, and created him Earl of Norwich.

Clarendon. History of the Civil Wars, vol. ii. part ii. p. 643.

And whereas his grace thought that so few halbardiers, with so many archers, did not well agree, he replied, "Sir, if the halbardiers had not been by me appointed to back your archers, verily it would have been a proportion full unmeet, and not equal."

Strype. Memoirs. Henry VIII. Anno 1524.

Within two years (from 1585) there were nearly three hundred merchants and others, capable of training and teaching soldiers the management of their pieces, pikes, and halbards; to march, counter-march, and ring.

Pennant. London, p. 355.

The HALBERT is supposed to be an invention of the Swiss, borrowed from them by the French in the reign of Louis XI., and first used by the English under Henry VIII. (Meyrick, Hist. of Anc. Arm. Glossary, vol. iii. ad v.) It was designed both for cutting and thrusting; and the blade consisted of three parts, the spear for thrusting, the hatchet for cutting, and the flook, or hook, for attacking field works. Some were called sword-blade halberts, from the part designed for pushing being formed like the blade of a sword. The Swiss halberdiers of old were placed in the front rank alternately as pushers and strikers. Halberts were commonly borne by the guards of the great officers of the army, and also by a set of chosen men appointed to protect the colours. At present they are only carried by sergeants of the battalion companies in Infantry. (Grose, Mil. Ant. i. 130.)

From Francis Markham's Souldiers Accidence, (p.4.) Grose (loc. cit.) has quoted the following passage: "Your Halbardier should be armed in all points like your Pike, onely instead of the Pike, he shall carry a faire Halbard, that is strong, sharpe, and well armed with plates of iron from the blade, at the least two feet downward upon the staffe, and fringed or adorned according to pleasure. And these Halbards doe properly belong to serjeants of companies, who, by reason of their much employment, are excused from armes; otherwise in the day of battaile, or in the battaile, they are for guard of the ensigne, or matter of execution, and then to be armed as aforesaid."

HALCYON, n. } Lat. halcyo; Gr. ἁλκυών, from HALCYON, adj. } ἅλς, the sea, and κύειν, to bring HALCYONIAN. } forth, quod in mari pariat. See the Quotation from Plinie.

For thei saye, that in the most sharp and coldest tyme of the yere, these halcyons (making their nestis in the sea rockis or sandis) wille sitte their egges and hache forth their chickens.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel. Epis. Ded.

The halcyones are of great name and much marked. The very seas, and they that saile thereupon, know well when they sit and breed. This bird so notable, is little bigger than a sparrow; for the more part of her pennage, blew, intermingled yet among with white and purple feathers, having a thin small neck and long withall. They lay and sit about mid-winter when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broodie, is called the halcyon daies: for during that season the sea is calm and navigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie.

Holland. Plinie, book x. ch. xxxii.

There came the halcyon, whom the sea obeys,
When she her nest upon the water lays.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

As late, they love: their nuptiall faiths they shew,
Now little birds; ingender, parents grow.
Seaven winter dayes with peacefull calme possess,
Alcyon sits upon her floating nest.
Then safely saile.

Sandy. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xi.

Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyones dayes,
Since I haue entred into these warres.

Shakspeare. Henry VI. First Part, fol. 98.

HAL-BERD.HAL-CYON.

HAL-CYON. Those peaceful and halcyonian days, which the church enjoyed for many years. Mede On Churches, p. 52.

HALF.

If Anna's happy reign you praise,
Pray, not a word of halcyon-days;
Nor let my votaries snow their skill
In aping lines from Cooper's hill.

Swift. Apollo's Edict.

When, lo! a halcyon, of cerulean hue,
O'er the fair head of slumbering Jason flew
In airy circles, wondrous to behold,
And screaming loud, the ceasing storm foretold.

Fawkes. Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, book i. l. 1406.

He who possesses the peace of God, may be said to resemble the halcyon, whose nest floats on the glassy sea, undisturbed by the agitation of the waves.

Knox. Works, vol. vii. p. 245. Christian Philosophy, sec. 57.

As luckless is the virgin's lot,
Whom Pleasure once misguides;
When hurried from the halcyon cot,
Where Innocence presides.

Cunningham. The Contemplatist.

HALE, adj. } "i. e. healed, or whole." A. S.
HALE, n. } hal, whole, sound, safe, in health.
Somner. See HEAL.

þo ilk fwe sorowes he calles fwe woundes,
þat ere not ȝit haled, ne salle be many stoundes.

R. Brunne, p. 7.

My seely sheepe like well belowe,
they need not Melampode,
For they been hale enough, I trowe,
and liken their abode.

Spenser. The Shepherd's Calendar. July.

Eftsoones, all heedlesse of his dearest hale,
Full greedily into the heard he thrust
To slaughter them, and worke this finall bale.

Id. Adrophel, v. 103.

But when on the other side, sin after the combate with God's rod, comes off unwounded, and haile, and the bruised and batter'd rod is seen to have retired also, then, &c.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 10.

That exceeding hale and intire sense of God which Nature herself had planted deeply in me, [Dr. Henry More,] very easily silenced all such slight and poetical dubitations as these.

R. Ward. Life of Dr. H. More, p. 5.

His stomach too begins to fail:
Last year we thought him strong and hale:
But now he's quite another thing.

Swift. On the Death of Dr. Swift.

HALE, v. } Also written haul, D. haelen; Sw.
HA'LING, n. } hala; Fr. haler; Sp. halar. See HAUL
To drag or pull along.

Richard bade, "hale vp hie ȝour sailes, þe God vs lede,
"Our men at Acres lie, of help þei haf gret nede."

R. Brunne, p. 171.

Dobest bere sholde. þe bisshopes croce
And halye with hoked ende. ille men to goode

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 170.

His reliques with his conquer'd Gods he [Panthus] bare, and him beside

His Neuew smal he haling drew, and swift to shoreward hied.

Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book ii.

Thither by harpy-footed Furies haile'd,
At certain revolutions all the damn'd
Are brought.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 596.

For whiles the Tribunes for their part would needes have all, and the Consuls on the other side draw all to them; betweene this plucking and haling, there was no strength left in the midst.

Holland. Livius, fol. 83.

At length we concluded to send one man over with a line, who should hale over all our things first, and then get the men over.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1681.

There are a great number of small sandy bays very convenient for haling the seyne.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book i. ch. v.

HALESIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dode- candria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx four-toothed, superior; corolla four-cleft; nut four-angled, two-seeded.

Three species, natives of North America.

H A L F.

HALF, v. } Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "A side, a part;
HALF, n. } a Goddess half, on God's part, with HALF, adv. } God's favour. A' this halfe God. On HA'LFER, } this side of God. Four halves, four HALVE, v. } sides." Goth. halbs; A. S. half, healfe;
HALVES. } D. halfe, halve; Ger. halb; Sw. half.

The A. S., Ger., and Swedish, as well as the old English, are not only applied to dimidium, but also to latus, ora, a side, a coast. Dimidium totius alterum quasi latus constituit, Ihre: who suspects it to come from some Northern word signifying to cleave or split, to divide. As used in English

To halve is, to divide into two equal parts, or shares; into moieties.

Half is much used in composition.

þer aftur euene a two he [Leir] delede hys kyndom,
And ȝef hys twei dogtren half, & half hym self nom.

R. Gloucester, p. 31.

After Adelwolf, his sonne hight Edbalde;
To ȝere & a half þe regne gan he halde.

R. Brunne, p. 20.

Loke upon þy lyft half quath hue. lo war he standiþ.
Ich loked on my lyft half. as þe ladye me tauhte.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 24.

And he seid to her wnat wolt thou? Sche seith to him, sey, that these tweyne my sones sit oon at thi right half, and oon at thi lift half in thi kyngdome.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xx.

Whan that thou wendest homeward by the mell,
Right at the entree of the dore behind
Thou shalt a cake of half a bushel find,
That was ymaked of thine owen mele,
Which that I halp my fader for to stele.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4242.

Full long lay the siege and litell wroughten,
So y^t theye were halfe ydel, as hem thoughten.

Id. Legend of Lucrece of Rome, fol. 205.

For whan she hath me well beholde,
Haluyng of scorne she sayd thus:
Thou wost wel that I am Venus,
Whiche all onely my lustes seche.

Gower. Conf. Am. book viii.

And whan they had worked halfe a day and more, Sir Gaultier of Manny and his company entred into a shyppe, and came on the workemen, and made them to leaue worke, and to recule backe, and brake agayn all that they had made.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 120.

And the halfe, whiche was the parte of them that went out to warre, was iii. hundred thousande.

Bible, Anno 1551. Numbers, ch. xxxi.

He has all other qualities of the minde and parts of the bodie, that must an other day serve learning; not trobled, mangled, and halfed, but sounde, whole, full, and hable to do their office.

Roger Ascham. The Schoolmaster, p. 213.

HALF.

"Fayre sir," sayd she, halfe in disdaine ful wise,
 "How is it that this word in me ye blame,
 And in yourselfe doe not the same advise?
 Him ill beseemes another's fault to blame,
 That may unwares be blotted with the same."
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 9.

So perfect in that art was Paridell,
 That he Malbecco's halfen eye did wile:
 His halfen eye he wiled wondrous well,
 And Hellenors both eyes did eke beguile.
Id. Ib. book iii. can. 10.

Sure it would be more pleasing unto God, and commendable with men, if yourselves and such halfers in opinion, omnium horarum homines, for your private ends, would openly avow what covertly you conceale.
Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, p. 142.

When a square cut in halves makes two triangles, those two triangles are still only the two halves of the square.
Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 57.

We see that a few of the rays of the sun, even no more than what fall within the compass of half an inch, or an inch in a burning glass, will fire combustible bodies even in our own climate.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book ii. ch. iv. note †.

Having now been exposed to the cold and the snow near an hour and a half, some of the rest began to lose their sensibility; and one Briscoe, another of Mr. Banks's servants, was so ill, that it was thought he must die before he could be got to the fire.

Cook. Voyage, book i. ch. iv.

HALF, in Composition.

þis Kyng hadde eke Herfortschire, þat on bischopriche is;
 Ac Schropschire naþ haluendel to þilke bischopriche i wis.
R. Gloucester, p. 5.

þe on alf vel adoun anon, þe oþer býlenede styлле
 In þe sadel, þey yt wonder were, as yt was Gode's wylle.
 þys hors ber vorþ þys haluemon among hys felawes echon.
Id. p. 401.

Haluendele his godes he gaf to Gode's werkes.
R. Brunne, p. 24.

— gut tel ich nauht þe haluendele.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 111.

Thei wolde non halpenij ale. in none wýse drynke.
Id. p. 145.

Now blisful Uenus, thou me grace send
 (Qd. Troilus) for neuer yet no dede
 Had I er now ne halfendele the drede.
Chaucer. Troilus, book iii.

A Goddes halfpeny, or a masse peny.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7331.

The erle beside diuerse and many fayre promises made to the duke, offered him his eldest daughter (being of ripe age and elegante stature) in mariage with the hole halfedele of his wiues inheritaunce.

Hall. The seventh Yere of King Edward IV.

He reignede her
 Other half-hundred yer,
 At Westmustre he was ded,
 Ant yburied, for so he bed.

Chronicle of England, l. 120. In Ritson, vol. ii. p. 275.

It another beeing of more power than he, dooe sette vpon him, and dooe with plaine force of armes conquer him that was in harnesse well armed, he wil entre no league of felowship to bee as half- partner with him in his castell.
Udall. Luke, ch. xi.

I am vtterlye undoen, or I maye geue my life for an halfepenie.
Id. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 134.

This enterprise was not so secret, but it was reueled to the duke, whiche marched forwarde, and mette the Frenchemen half-waie.
Hall. The eighteenth Yere of King Henry VI.

As well a well-wrought urn becomes
 The greatest ashes, as half-acre tombs.
Donne. Canonization.

If I begin the batt'rie once againe,
 I will not leaue the half-atchieued Hartflew,
 T'ill in her ashes she lye buried.
Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 79.

The worke which you command me, I intend Scarce with a half-bent minde.
Browne. Pastorals, book ii. song 4.

ALB. The let alone lies not in your good will.

BAST. Nor in thine lord.

ALB. Halfe-blooded fellow, yes.
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 307.

Of Nature's guifts, thou mayst with lillies boast,
 And with the halfe-blowne rose.
Id. John, fol. 8.

After distastefull lookes; and these hard fractions
 With certaine halfe-caps, and cold mouing nods,
 They froze me into silence.
Id. Timon of Athens, fol. 85.

I (by the honour of my marriage bed)
 After young Arthur, claime this land for mine,
 And now it is halfe-conquer'd, must I backe,
 Because that John hath made his peace with Rome.
Id. John, fol. 19.

DAP. By this good darke, I ha' nothing but a halfe-crowne
 Of gold, about my wrist, that my love gave me.
Ben Jonson. The Alchemist, act iii. sc. 5.

As in the land of darkness yet in light,
 To live a life half dead, a living death,
 And buried.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 100.

— The humid night was farforth spent,
 And heauenly lampes were halfendeale ybrent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 9.

That twixt his pleasing tongue, and her faire hew,
 He lost himselfe, and like one halfe-entranced grew.
Id. Ib. book vi. can. 9.

— Sirra speake
 What doth moue you to claime your brother's land?
 PHILIP. Because he hath a half-face like my father.
 With halfe that face would he haue all my land,
 A half-fac'd groat, fíue hundred pound a yeere.
Shakspeare. John, fol. 2.

But out vpon this halfe-fac'd fellowship.
Id. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 52.

'Twas such a shifter, that if truth were known,
 Death was half-glad when he had got him down.
Milton. Ep. 1. On Hobson.

— Of them all, [the rivers about Troy,]
 Apollo open'd the rough mouthes; and made their lustie fall
 Ravish the dustie champion, where, many a helme and shield,
 And halfe-god race of men were strew'd.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xii. fol. 160.

TUB. I cannot choose but smile, to see thee troubled,
 With such a bald, halfe-hatched circumstance.
Ben Jonson. Tale of a Tub, act iii. sc. 3.

For not these leaues do sing that dreadfull stound,
 When Giants blood did staine Phlegreæan ground.
 Nor how th' halfe-horsie people, Centaures hight,
 Fought with the bloudie Lapithæes at bord.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

Thus in the space of one halfe-houre was the triall of this battaile dispatched.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 100. Constantius and Julianus.

You filthy famish'd correctioner, if you be not swing'd, I'll forsweare halfe kirtles.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 99.

— Troxartes cast
 His eye upon the foe that fell before;
 And (see'ng him halfe-liu'de) long'd againe to gore
 His gutlesse bosome; and (to kill him quite)
 Ran fiercely at him.

Chapman. Homer. Batrachomyomachia.

Alone, and without guide, half lost, I seek
 What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
 Confine with heav'n.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 975.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
 In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.
Id. Paradise Regained, book iii. l. 308.

By that time Night had newly spread her robe
 Over our halfe-part of this massie globe.
Browne. Pastorals, book iii. song 5.

Whereas before this time, the penny was wont to haue a double crosse, with a crest in such sort, that the same might be easily broken in the midst, or into foure quarters, and so to be made into halfe-pence, or farthings: which order was taken in the yeere of HALF. Christ 1106. the 7. of H. the 1. It was now ordained, that pence, halfe-pence, & farthings, should bee made round.

Stow. Anno 1279. Edward I.

PRINCE. O monstrous! but one halfe-penny-worth of bread to this intollerable deale of sacke.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 60.

Where halfe-pikes were borne
In every chincke rise stems of bearded corne.

Browne. Pastorals, book ii. song 4.

They amongst them all, bestowed and brought home to his house (which stood upon the castle hill) wheat meale by the halfe-pintes, and wine by the quartes.

Holland. Livius, fol. 210.

He on his side
Leaning half-raised, with looks of cordial love
Hung over her enamour'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book v. l. 12.

Hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice.

Id. L'Allegro, l. 150.

The building was a spacious theatre
Half-round on two main pillars vaulted high,
With seats where all the lords and each degree
Of sort, might sit in order to behold.

Id. Samson Agonistes, l. 1606.

Now drew they nigh
The western point, where those half-rounding guards
Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd.

Id. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 862.

But every temptation puts on his strength as the man is. Sometimes a full meal will not prejudice our health; and at another time half so much would be a surfeit: and some men take cold with leaving off a half-shirt, who at another time might leave off half their clothes. The indisposition is within.

Taylor. On Repentance, ch. viii. sec. 7.

Maintaine your sprig upright; your cloke on your halfe-shoulder falling; so.

Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, act v. sc. 3.

Lord, how is Gam'ster chang'd! his haire close cut!
His necke fenc'd round with ruff! his eyes halfe-shut.

Id. Epigram 21.

Either he that follows this trifle is light of belief, or unreasonable in his choice, or his reason is to him but as eyes to an owl or bat, half-sighted and imperfect.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. iv. rule 8.

Search this half-sphere, and the antarctic ground,
Where are such wit and bounty to be found?

Drummond. The Wandering Muses.

But now whose choler would not rise to yield
A peasant halfe-stakes of his new-mowne field,
Whiles yet he may not for the treble price,
Buy out the remnant of his royalties?

Hall. Satire 3. book v.

What thinkst thou of our Empire now, though earn'd
With travail difficult, not better farr
Then still at Hell's dark threshold to have safe watch,
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thy self half-starv'd?

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 595.

Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood,
Half-spied, so thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd.

Id. Ib. book ix. l. 427.

As if on earth
Winds under ground or waters forcing way
Sidelong, had push'd a mountain from his seat
Half-sunk with all his pines.

Id. Ib. book vi. l. 198.

My halfe-supt sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bed [bit]; thus goes to bed.

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 104.

Yet I think we fought bravely: for mine own part,
was four several times at half-sword with him.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Bonduca, act 5.

That so much skarfe of France, and hat, and fether,
And shooe, and tye, and garter should come nether

VOL. XXIII.

And land on one whose face durst never bee
Toward the sea, farther than halfe-way tree.

Ben Jonson. Epigram 88.

Half-witted people talk against God, and make objections against Religion, and themselves have not wit or will enough to answer them, and they intending to make Reason to be the positive and affirmative measure of Religion, are wholly mistaken, and abuse themselves and others.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book i. ch. ii. rule 3.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women
Must be halfe-workers?

Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 379.

Our searchers after the northern passage have cut their way through mountaines of ice, more affrightful aud horrible, than the Simplegades. They have imprison'd themselves in half-year nights;
they have chain'd themselves up in perpetual stone-cleaving colds.

Digby. Of Man's Soul. Conclusion.

First, wide and round,
With distant awe, in airy rings they rove,
Endeavouring by a thousand tricks to catch
The cunning, conscious, half-averted glance
Of their regardless charmer.

Thomson. Spring.

Then taking wing from Athos' lofty steep,
She speeds to Lemnos o'er the rolling deep,
And seeks the cave of Death's half-brother, Sleep.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xv.

The next to danger, hot pursued by Fate,
Half-cloth'd, half-naked hastily retire:
And frighted mothers strike their breasts too late,
For helpless infants left amidst the fire.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

The Muse's charms resistless then assail,
When wrapp'd in Irony's transparent veil:
Her beauties half-conceal'd, the more surprise,
And keener lustre sparkles in her eyes.

Brown. Essay on Satire, part ii.

I heard, I ran, I found him out of breath,
Pale, trembling, and half-dead with fear of death.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xiii.

Polemo half-drunk, crowned with roses, and in the dress of a harlot rather than a man, coming into the school of the severe Zeno-crates, hearing him discourse of temperance, as by a charm, was perfectly changed.

Bates. The Harmony of the Divine Attributes, ch. xviii.

Here lay poor Fletcher's half-eat scenes, and here
The frippery of crucify'd Moliere.

Pope. The Dunciad, book .

[And] for his father's sins condemn'd to write,
Some young half-feather'd poet takes a flight.

Fenton. Epistle to Mr. Lambard.

Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes:
Back to thy native islands might'st thou sail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book iii.

A common half-hundred weight, which you know amounts to 56 pounds, would very quickly be manifestly heaved up by the spring of the included air.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 271. New Experiments touching the Spring of the Air.

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half-hung,
The floors of plaster and the walls of dung,—
Great Villiers lies.

Pope. Moral Essays. Epistle 2. l. 300.

We went up the shrouds half-mast up, and there we spread abroad the flaps of our coats, and presently the ship wore.

Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. part iii. p. 64. Of Storms.

We call them half-moon proes, for they turn up so much at each end from the water, that they much resemble a half-moon, with the horns upwards.

Id. Ib. Anno 1688.

The half-pence are coming, the nation's undoing,
There's an end of your ploughing and baking and brewing:
In short you must all go to rack and to ruin

Which nobody can deny.

Swift. A New Song on Wood's Half-pence.

N

HALF.

Æneas was the first who dar'd to stay;
 Apollo wedg'd him in the warrior's way,
 But swell'd his bosom with undaunted might,
Half-forc'd, and half-persuaded, to the fight.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xx.

The queer curs maintain'd that stile of dialogue till we had drank our quarts apiece by half-pints. Tatler, No. 57.

The King commands his servants to their arms,
 Resolv'd to go; but the loud noise alarms
 His lovely queen, who from her chamber flew,
 And her half-plaited hair behind her flew.

Croxall. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book xi.

And last, uncertain whose the narrow span,
 The clown unread, and half-read gentleman.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Meantime the hero lands his warlike train;
 Some watch, impatient, the retreating main;
 Then vault, and seize the half-recover'd shores;
 Some slide, more vent'rous, down the bending oars.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book x.

The great pieces, as scepters, and half-scepters, which are made to serve for the payment of greater sums, and are for dispatch in tale, will not in tale fall into even pounds.

Locke. Further Considerations concerning rising the Value of Money.

Nay, then truly, you may be said to have fairly embarked yourself in this cause. You have passed the channel, and are more than half-seas over.

Shaftesbury. The Moralist, part ii. sec. 2.

The blushing colour in her cheeks express'd
 What tender thoughts inspir'd her heaving breast.
 Sometimes a sigh half-smother'd stole away;
 Then she would "Strephon, charming Strephon," say.

Pomfret. Love's Triumph over Reason.

A swarm of half-starv'd haggard flies,
 With fury seiz'd the floating prize,
 By raging hunger led.

Yalden. Fable 10. The Fox and Flies.

Yet such her meekness, as half-veil'd the throne,
 Lest, being in too great a lustre shown,
 It might debar the subject of access,
 And make her mercies and our comforts less.

Stepney. To the Memory of Queen Mary.

The fault is, we carry the laugh but half-way. The false earnest is ridiculed, but the false jest passes secure, and becomes as arrant deceit as the other.

Shaftesbury. Essay on the Freedom of Wit and Humour, p. 1. sec. 6.

It is not that I am mortified to all ambition, but I scorn as much to take it from half-witted judges, as I should to raise an estate by cheating of bubbles.

Dryden. Dedication to the Spanish Friar.

It is certain a well trained mastiff might be of considerable use in distressing such half-armed and irregular combatants as the adversaries of the Gauls seem generally to have been before the Romans conquered them.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Dog.

For if there be a much nearer kinsman of the half-blood, a distant kinsman of the whole blood shall be admitted, and the other entirely excluded; nay, the estate shall escheat to the lord, sooner than the half-blood shall inherit.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. xiv.

The gentle student rises from his chair when the operation is completed, takes off his flannel gown, sends back the half-bound book to the library, and enters upon the momentous business of making calls.

Knox. Essays, No. 153.

There is no refuge for astonished and affrighted virtue, but being annihilated into humility and submission, sinking into a silent adoration of the inscrutable dispensations of Providence, and flying, with trembling wings, from this world of daring crimes, and feeble, pusillanimous, half-bred, bastard justice, to the asylum of another order of things, in an unknown form, but in a better life.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

Swift up the mounting billow now she flies,
 Her shatter'd top half-buried in the skies.

Falconer. The Shipwreck, can. 3.

Miss, with her little eyes half-clos'd,
 Over the smuggled toilet dos'd.

Churchill. The Ghost, book iv.

Not so Aletes, struck with decent awe,
 Ent'ring he seem'd half-wishing to withdraw;
 As one surpris'd, his forward step repress'd,
 And bore his hand respectful to his breast;
 Then easy, bow'd with deference profound,
 And fix'd his eyes half-closing on the ground.

Brookes. Jerusalem Delivered, book ii.

When Leochares was no more than half-convicted of perjury, the punishment of which was a perpetual deprivation of all civil rights, the plaintiff not only was permitted to decline taking the verdict, but even consented to accept the promise of Leochares himself, that Dicæogenes should surrender the property in dispute.

Sir William Jones. Works, vol. ix. p. 49. Speeches of Isæus.

Prefatory Discourse.

She not a little vain, repeats the song;
 But so repeats, that Colin half-despised
 His pipe and skill, around the country priz'd.

Philips. The fifth Pastoral.

Hard by, a venerable priest,
 Risen with his God, the sun, from rest,
 Awoke his morning song;
 Thrice he conjur'd the murmuring stream;
 The birth of souls was all his theme,
 And half-divine his tongue.

Watts. Lyric Poems, book ii. The Indian Philosopher.

No half-form'd insect of a peer
 With neither land nor conscience clear;
 Who if he can, 'tis all he can do,
 Just spell the motto on his landau.

Mallet. Cupid and Hymen.

They [metaphysics] have induced the half-learned and the conceited, those who think they understand them, and those who wish to be thought by others to understand them, to adopt, without being apprehensive of danger, opinions fatal to their own happiness and to the existence of society.

Knox. Essays, No. 138.

We paint the giant ravaging the country, plundering the innocent traveller, and afterward gorged with his half-living flesh.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, sec. 24.

He then immediately tore off his bolts, and now leaves at night his outer door half-locked, that he may not by his own folly perish in the flames.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 126.

They [the eyes] roll about, as if they were in search of an object that may be equal to the explanation; and the half-opened mouth seems eager to receive the desired information.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. p. 59. Wonder.

Now half-orb'd they stand
 By Cæta's fence protected from behind,
 With either flank united to the rock.

Glover. Leonidas, book xii.

He returned sullen and thoughtful; I supposed him sorry for the hard fortune of his friends; and tried to comfort him, that the war would soon be at an end, and that, if they had any honest occupation, half-pay would be a pretty help.

Johnson. The Idler, No. 95.

If, by the first man's sin, we understand
 Only some breach of absolute command
Half-punished, half-remitted, by a grace
 Like that, which takes in human acts a place;
 The more we write, the more we still expose
 The Christian doctrine to its reas'ning foes.

Byrom. An Epistle to a Gentleman of the Temple.

The half-ripe pod (cashaw) affords a strong cement.

Granger. The Sugar Cane, book i. note.

Observe those wither'd firs, those mould'ring oaks
 Down that declivity, half-rooted, bent,
 Inviting human force,—Then look below,
 There lies Thermopylæ.

Glover. Leonidas, book vii.

He etched some small plates of birds and beasts from drawings of Barlow, and five large half-sheet plates of birds in a set of twelve.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting.

HALF.

HALF.

HALICORE.

Their webs were spread of more than common size,
And half-starv'd spiders preyed on half-starv'd flies.
Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

Truth is shown sometimes as the phantom of a vision; sometimes appears half-veiled in an allegory; sometimes attracts regard in the robes of fancy, and sometimes steps forth in the confidence of Reason.
Johnson. Life of Addison.

A canoe was observed about half-way between us and the shore, seemingly coming after us.

Cook. Voyage, book ii. ch. xiii.

Half-weeping Polynices takes his prize,
A beauteous handmaid with celestial eyes.

Hart. The Sixth Thebaid of Statius.

Such readers generally admire some half-witted thing, who wants to be thought a bold man, having lost the character of a wise one.

Goldsmith. Dedication to the Traveller.

Whilst we were at dinner in this miserable hut, the guests of a people, with whose existence we had before been scarce acquainted, and at the extremity of the habitable globe, a solitary, half-worn pewter spoon, whose shape was familiar to us, attracted our attention; and, on examination, we found it stamp'd on the back with the word London.

Cook. Voyage, book vi. ch. ii.

HALF.

HALIDAM.

HALICORE, from the Greek ἅλιος, marine, and κόρη, a maid, Illig.; Dugong, Raffles. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Cetacea Herbivora, order Cetacea, class Mammalia.

Generic character. In the upper jaw a pair of short conical tusks extending directly forward, occupying the place of the incisive teeth, which are wanting in both jaws; no cuspid teeth; molars three on a side in each jaw far back, the first oblique and somewhat pointed, second flat, third seemingly composed of two cylinders joined together; neither of them rising far up above the gums; muzzle obtuse; no auricles, but the auditory openings very small, and at some distance behind the eyes; the fore legs distinct, the feet enclosed in skin forming fins; rudiments of hinder extremities are found in the muscles opposite the lumbar vertebræ, but do not appear externally.

H. Dugong, Illig.; Trichechus Dugong, Gmel.; Indian Walrus, Pen.; Duyong of the Malays; Dugong, Raffles. This animal was formerly included in the genus Trichechus of Gmelin, who placed it amongst Linnæus's Bruta; from which, however, it was withdrawn by Illiger to form the genus Halicore, and with the Trichechus placed by him and Cuvier among the Cetaceous Order. The best description of the animal is given by Sir Stamford Raffles, in the Philosophical Transactions of 1820; to which is added an account of its anatomy by MM. Diard and Duvancel.

The Dugong has a rounded body, diminishing towards the tail, which is broad, horizontal, and crescent-shaped; the skin is thick, smooth, bluish above, and white below, and sprinkled with a very few hairs; the head is small in proportion to the size of the body; the upper lip obliquely truncated, forming a short thick snout, which is tumid and very movable, and nearly covers the projecting tusks; the lower lip smaller and resembling a rounded chin; both lips covered with strong bristles, which, together with those in the palate, form rasps, and supply the place of incisive teeth; the front of the jaw is bent down at an angle, so as to bring the mouth nearly vertical, in order to assist the animal in feeding on sea-weed and other marine vegetables. The nostrils are placed at the curve on the top of the upper jaw; they penetrate obliquely, and form a kind of valve; the eyes are small, and situated on the sides of the head; the opening of the ears so small as to have occasioned denial of their existence. The fins are, in reality, the fore extremities completely invested in the thick skin covering the body; the last phalanges of the fingers are without nails, but somewhat warty on their anterior margin. The Dugong is distinguished from the Manati (Trichechus Manatus) by the existence of incisive teeth in the adult, and from the Rytina of Illiger by its smooth skin.

The Dugongs are natives of the East Indian seas, and common at Singapore; they are caught about eight or nine feet in length; but when larger generally escape, and therefore to what size they attain is not known. The Malays stated to Sir S. Raffles that the Dugong was never found either ashore or in fresh water, but in shallows and inlets of the sea not exceeding two or three fathoms in depth. It feeds on algæ and other marine vegetables, which grow in these places, browsing on them in much the same manner as a Cow. The attachment of the dam to its offspring is very great, so that the hunters make almost sure of obtaining the parent if they have caught the young animal, which is stated to shed tears. These tears are carefully preserved by the common people as a charm to secure the affections of those to whom they are attached. They are taken by spearing, and the natives are led to their resorts by the snuffing noise they make on the surface of the water.

Two varieties are observed by the Malays, who call one the Duyong bumbam, and the other the Duyong buntal, of which the latter is thickest and shortest. The Dugong is considered a royal fish, and the King is entitled to all that are caught. Their flesh is much esteemed, and resembles excellent beef.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Illiger, Prodromus Mammalium et Avium; Philosophical Transactions, part ii. 1820.

HALICTUS, in Zoology, a genus of stinging Hymenopterous insects, belonging to the family Apidæ, allied to Andrenæ.

Generic character. The middle lobe of the lip curved, much longer than the side lobes, longer than the sheath, as long as the head, lanceolate, and rather silky; the hind legs differing in the two sexes; the vent of the female with a longitudinal slit.

Walkenaer, the Historian of Spiders, published a small work on the habits of two of the European species of this genus at Paris, in 1827. Kirby has described 24 species of the genus as inhabiting England.

The type of this genus is Apis bicincta of Gmelin; Hyleus flavicinctus of Illiger; the Mellita flavicincta of Kirby; and the Halictus terebrator of Walkenaer.

HA'LIDAM, } Halidam, in R. Brunne, is Holy HA'LIDOME. } Dame, sc. the Virgin.

Holidom, halidom, or holidame, an ancient oath, (says Skinner;) either, as Somner thinks, from the A. S. haligdome, sanctitas, q. d. by the sanctuary, or holy reliques;—otherwise from halig, sanctus, holy,

HALIDAM. and dom, doom, judgment; or from English holy-dame, q. d. per sanctam dominam. Skinner coincides with HALIEUS. Somner. And see Douce, Illust. of Shakspeare, i. 44.

So help him God alle myght, & þat halidam.

R. Brunne, p. 110.

Now sure and by my hallidome (quoth he)
Ye a great master are in your degree.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

JUL. Host, will you goe?

HO. By my hallidome, I was fast asleepe.

Shakspeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, fol. 34.

BAP. Now by my hollidam here comes Katerina.

KAT. What is your will, sir, that you send for me.

Id. Taming of a Shrew, fol. 228.

HALIEUS, from the Greek ἁλιεύς, a fisher, Tem.; Cormorant, Pen. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Steganopodes, order Palmipedes, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak generally exceeding very much the length of the head, straight and compressed; upper mandible much curved towards the point and hooked; its ridge rounded; lower compressed; base surrounded by a membrane which extends naked on the throat, and forms a pouch; nostrils near the root of the bill linear and hidden; cheeks and throat naked; wings adapted for flying; tail wedge-shaped; legs short, strong, set far back, three toes in front, and the fourth facing inwards completely webbed, the outer toe directed almost immediately forwards; claw of the middle toe serrated.

The Cormorants were placed by Linnæus among his Pelicans, from which, however, they are easily distinguished by the hooking of the upper mandible, and the compression of the bill; they are also distinguished from the Gannets, which have the beak conical. Illiger includes the Frigate birds (Tachypetes) among the Cormorants, but by Temminck they are restricted as by ourselves. Brisson describes the genus by the title Phalacro-corax.

This genus are remarkably voracious; they live upon fish, and having seized their prey give it a cant in the air and catch it open mouthed, the head being thrown very much back; in doing this they are assisted by a little bony process articulated to the back of the head, which serves the purpose of a lever. They are tolerable though not very elegant walkers, and when at rest the short feathers of their tail give them a third point of support somewhat resembling the tail of the Woodpeckers, which is required on account of their legs being set so far back. This tail, although inconvenient for walking, admirably adapts them for swimming and diving, in which they are very clever; they swim deep, generally the head alone being above water. But they are further remarkable amongst Web-footed Birds for the power of perching even on trees, a function which is requisite to them on account of their nests being built amongst craggy precipices. They undergo a double moult in the year; in the Spring they have usually a crest on the back of the head, which disappears in the autumnal moult, but there does not appear to be any difference in plumage between the sexes.

Two divisions may be fairly made of this genus, the True Cormorants, which have fourteen quill feathers to the tail, and the Shags, which have only twelve; but, although this seems to be the only difference, it is observed that they never associate; and, with regard to their breeding, the Cormorants build their nests on the tops of the cliffs, whilst the Shags are content with holes in the rocks much lower down. In character, the whole genus is sullen and heavy; the eye, however, is remarkably keen; and when hungry they are very active, but having satisfied themselves they squat lazily and inactively till hunger induces their wonted activity in search of food.

a. True Cormorants.

Tail consisting of fourteen quills.

H. Cormoranus, Illig.; Pel. Carbo, Gmel.; Carbo Corm. Mey.; le Cormoran, Buff.; Corvorant, or Cormorant, Willugh., Pen. The usual length of the Cormorant is about two feet and a half, but sometimes it attains more than three feet; the bill about five inches long, of a dusky colour; throat surrounded with a white collar, the extremities of which reach below each eye; the throat-pouch yellow; head, neck, chest, under parts, and rump iridescent greenish black; the feathers of the back ashy brown in the middle, and edged with a broad black margin; the alar and caudal quills black, the latter fourteen in number, stiff and strong; the legs short, the outer toe about four inches long, and placed almost directly forward. During pairing-time a long crest of deep green extends from the occiput; and on the top of the head, part of the neck and thighs, numerous fine, silky, very long, and white feathers. In young birds the upper parts are deep brown; the collar greyish white, the under parts greyish brown, spotted with white, especially on the belly. They are common in all the Northern parts of the world upon the sea-coast, and feed voraciously on fish, more especially, it is said, on Eels. In Greenland the natives make use of their throat-pouch as bladders for floating their fishing darts.

Cormorants were formerly used in England for fishing, of which Willughby gives the following account. "When they come to the rivers they take off their hoods, and having tied a leathern thong round the lower part of their necks, that they may not swallow down the fish they catch, they throw them into the river. They presently dive under water, and there for a time, with wonderful swiftness, they pursue the fish; and when they have caught them they arise presently to the top of the water, and, pressing the fish lightly with their bills they swallow them, till each bird hath in this manner swallowed five or six fishes; then their keepers call them to the fist, to which they readily fly, and, little by little, one after another, vomit up all their fish, a little bruised with the nip they gave them with their bills. When they have done fishing, setting the bird on some high place, they loose the string from their necks, leaving the passage to the stomach free and open; and for their reward they throw them part of the prey they have caught, to each, perchance, one or two fishes, which they by the way, as they are falling in the air, will catch most dexterously in their mouths."

β. Shags.

Tail consisting of twelve quills.

H. Graculus, Illig.; Carbo Grac. Mey.; le Petit Cormoran ou Nigaud, Buff.; Shag, Pen. Rather smaller than the Cormorant; the bill ashy red, but black above; not quite so long, and more slender than in that bird; top of the head, back of the neck, back and rump dark green, or black, shining like satin; feathers of the upper part of the back and wings deep brown, edged with purplish black; ocular region and HALIEUS. throat-pouch reddish yellow, under parts clouded with dirty white and brown; a very few white spots on the tail, which is very much wedge-shaped, and consists of twelve stiff black feathers of a dirty appearance; legs black. In pairing time, the Shag has also a crest of a deep iridescent green, and the top of the head, neck, and thighs are studded with very short white feathers. They are found in the Northern and Southern regions of the world, and are especially numerous in the Arctic and Antarctic circles. Are as voracious as the Cormorant, and dive very well. They swim very deep, little more than the head appearing above the water; but they cannot remain there a very long time, as their feathers do not keep the water out, but become wet; and the bird may be therefore frequently seen flying about or sitting ashore flapping its wings, in order to dissipate the moisture. Although very nearly resembling the Cormorant in its habits, the Shag does not at all associate with it, but even builds its nest in the shelvy sides of the cliffs, whilst the Cormorant builds at the top. In some parts of the country, notwithstanding their offensive smell, they are eaten, generally potted, after having been skinned and drawn, and buried in a clean cloth in the earth.

H. Cristatus, Illig.; Carbo Crist., Tem.; Pel. Crist. Lath.; Crested Shag, Pen. About two feet long; the bill very long and slender, and of a brown colour; the plumage beautiful deep shining green; upper part of the back, shoulders, wing-coverts, and quills bright bronze, each feather edged with a narrow black velvet-like margin; tips of the wings not extending beyond the tail, which is very short and rounded, and consists of twelve dull black quills; base of the beak and throat-pouch yellow. In the Spring there is a crest of broad expanding feathers on the top of the head between the eyes, about an inch and a half long, and capable of erection; ten or twelve feathers, rather longer, also spring from the occiput; but there are no white feathers on the neck and thighs, as in the great Cormorant. Common in the North of Europe.

H. Pygmæus, Illig.; Carbo Pygm. Tem.; le Cormoran Pygmée, Sonnini; Dwarf Shag, Lath. Rather less than the H. Graculus; the beak much shorter than the head, and of a deep black colour; the plumage of the upper parts of the body ashy black, each feather bordered with a narrow shining black margin; head, neck, and under parts greenish black; little white spots placed in the upper eyelid; ocular circlets and throat-pouch deep black; feet ashy black. In pairing-time the plumage is very brilliant; the occipital feathers are not, however, elongated, as in the other species, into a crest, but on the head, neck, and thighs some fine and delicate white feathers are seen, webbed only at their points; these fall out before the autumnal moult. Native of Hungary and of Asiatic Russia, occasionally seen in Austria, and very rarely in Germany.

H. Urile, Illig.; le Cormoran Ouril, Dumer.; Red-faced Shag, Lath. Rather larger than the Shag; the beak slender, upper mandible black, lower red, as are also the ocular circlets; back and wings shining black; thighs white. Native of Kamtschatka, where it is caught in the evening by the natives, who, having attached a cord with a slip-knot to a stick, throw the noose over the bird's neck.

H. Sinensis, Illig.; Pelec. Sin. Lath.; Chinese Shag. The beak is yellow; the plumage blackish brown above, and spotted with brown and white below; the throat white, like the Cormorant; legs black. This bird is called by the Chinese Leu-tze, and employed by them for fishing in the river Luen, where are collected a number of small boats, in each of which is placed a man with ten or a dozen of these Shags; at a signal they dive into the water and bring up fish to their masters, without even requiring a ring about their neck.

H. Magellanicus, Illig.; Pel. Mag. Lath.; Magellanic Shag. About the size of the common Shag; has the cheeks and throat red, a white spot behind the eyes, and the under parts of the body of the same colour; the head and neck to the chest and the upper parts iridescent black; beak and legs black. Found at Terra del Fuego.

From New Zealand there are

H. Carunculatus, Illig.; Pelec. Carunc. Gmel.

H. Cirrhatus, Illig.; Tufted Shag, Lath.

H. Varius, Illig.; Pied Shag, Lath.

Besides these are also found many other new species, but these are the principal.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Buffon, Histoire des Oiseaux; Temminck, Manuel d'Ornithologie; Pennant, British Zoology; Latham, General History of Birds.

HALIMEDA, in Zoology, a genus of Corals belonging to the family Corallinidæ.

Generic character. Coral plantlike, jointed; joint flat or compressed, very rarely cylindrical, generally fanlike; axis fibrous, covered with a thick, chalky bark.

These Corals have been generally placed with the Corallines; they have much the appearance of the Indian fig, from their flat proliferous articulations. Some Naturalists have thought them like the Alcyonia, but they are not fleshy within. As the Polypes have not yet been seen by Naturalists, many doubt if these as well as the rest of the Corallines are not Chalky Sea Weeds; especially as some fuci have been found which are nearly as calcareous, but which have the fructification of that genus.

There are several species; they are only found in the seas of warm climates, and Corallina opuntia, Ellis, is the type of the genus.

HALIMODENDRON, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx pitcher-shaped, slightly five-toothed; keel of the corolla obtuse, nearly straight; pod inflated, depressed at the sutures.

One species, H. argentea, (Decandolle,) the Robinia halodendron of Willdenow.

HALIOTIDÆ, in Zoology, a family of Gasteropodous Mollusca.

Family character. Animal gasteropodous; head distinct; tentacula two; eyes two, pedicelled; gill placed on the left side of the back of the neck mantle; slit in front over the gills; operculum none.

Shell spiral, ear-shaped; spire very short; mouth very large; body whole, often pierced, or grooved, the inside pearly.

This family contains the genera Haliotis, Stomatia, Stomatella of Lamarck, and probably the genus Pleurotomaria of DeFranc, which has not yet been found. The genus Scissurella of Dorbigny appear to be the young fry of the genus Haliotis. The shell of this family is known from the Trochides and Turbines, which are the only other families with pearly insides, by the expanded form of the mouth.

HALIEUS
—
HALIO-TIDÆ.

HALIOTIS. HALIOTIS, in Zoology, a genus of Mollusca, with spiral shells, belonging to the family Haliotidae.

—
HALI-
THEA.

Generic character. Animal like the family character; shell spiral, ear-shaped; spire very small, whorls very rapidly enlarging; the outer edge of the last whorl with a series of holes placed on a raised ridge; mouth very large. The animal is very nearly allied to the animals of the perforated or slit-mouthed Patellæ, but the gills are placed on the columella side of the back, and not in the centre, which is occupied by the adductor muscle; but their close affinity to the family is shown by some of the emarginulæ assuming a subspiral shape.

There are but a few species in the genus, but they offer several varieties; as, like the Patellæ and Capuli, they are much altered in shape and surface by the form of the rock to which they are attached, and in thickness by the stillness of the sea which they inhabit.

Most of the species inhabit the seas of warm climates. There is one found in the British Channel, which is but rarely thrown on the English coast, though it is very common on those of Guernsey and Jersey, where they are much used as food by the inhabitants, and is certainly one of the most savoury made from molluscous animals. They live attached to the rocks like the Limpet, but hold firmer on account of the great extent of their foot, and they are much attacked by marine insects. The inner surface of the shell is pearly, and offers several varieties of colour, from the pale iridescent to the most brilliant purple and red.

The type of the genus is Haliotis tuberculata of Linnæus. The animal is figured by Cuvier in the Annals of the Museum, and the shell by almost every conchological author.

One or two fossil species have been said to be found in the Crag, but they are doubtful.

HALIPLUS, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Dyticidæ, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Antennæ of ten distinct joints, outer palpi ending in an awl-shaped joint; body swollen above, or ovoid; scutellum not visible; base of the hinder feet covered by a shield-shaped plate; tarsi filiform, nearly alike in the two sexes.

This genus corresponds with the genus Cnemidotus of Illiger, and Hoplitus of Clairville. It is composed of several small species, which are found swimming with great facility in stagnant waters.

The type is Dytiscus impressus of Fabricius; figured by Panzer, pl. xiv. fig. 10. 7. About one line long.

HALITHEA, in Zoology, a genus of Annelides, belonging to the family Aphroditidæ, established by Savigny.

Generic character. Trunk with cartilaginous jaws, crowned at its orifice with tentacula placed in the form of a hoop, the gills ceasing to alternate after the twenty-fifth pair of feet; the back covered with thirteen adpressed scales. The body of these animals is oval or elliptical, formed of a few rings; their feet are composed of two distinct oars; the dorsal oars are provided with two bangles or rows of bristles; the ventral oar is formed of one bangle of two or three simple or forked bristles; the head is convex, the forehead projecting, leaflike, placed between the tentacula, which support the eyes.

This genus contains three species, which have been divided into two sections, according to the bristles of the ventral oars being simple or forked.

The type of the genus is Aphrodita aculeata of Linnæus; well figured by Swammerdam, under the name of Physalus, (Bib. Nat. pl. x. fig. 8,) and by Rede, who calls it Hystrix marina. (Opusc. iii. fig. 25.) It lives in the Mediterranean, as does the other species.

HALITUOUS, Lat. halitus, from halare, to breathe. Airy, vaporous.

Since upon the bare dilatation of the thorax, the spring of that internal air, or halituous substance that is wont to possess as much of the cavity of the chest as the lungs fill not up, being much weakened, the external and contiguous air must necessarily press in at the open wind-pipe into the lungs, as finding there less resistance than any where else about it.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 100. Experiments Physico-mechanical touching the Spring of Air.

Part of it being cast upon a live coal, did by its blue and halituous flame discover itself to be of the nature of that salt.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 363. Chemical Experiment relating to Saltpetre.

HALK, A. S. healc, hyle, hylca, bowing, turning, winding, and (as Mr. Tyrwhitt) a corner.

As yonge clerkes, that ben likerous
To reden artes that ben curious,
Seken in every halke and every herne
Particular sciences for to lerne.

Chaucer. The Frankleines Tale, v. 11433.

Ne menest thou not Urban (quod he tho)
That is so often damned to be ded,
And woneth in halkes alway to and fro,
And dare not ones putten forth his hed?

Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15778.

READ. Where hast thou dwelt good Geoffrey al this while,
Unknowne to vs, saue only by thy bookes?

CHAU. In haulks, and herne, God wot, and in exile,
Where none vouchsaft to yeeld me words or lookes.

The Reader to Geoffrey Chaucer. Speght, 1598.

HALL, } A. S. healle; Ger. halle; Fr. halle.
HA'LLIER, } The Ger. halle, as applied to a struc-HALL-DOOR. } ture formed for a dwelling or habitation, is derived by Wachter from the Ger. hüllen, tegere, operire, to cover. And Tooke, in its general usage, as "A covered building, where persons assemble, or where goods are protected from the weather;" believes it to be the past participle of the A. S. verb helan, tegere, to cover; in old English to hele, to heal, to hil.

A covered building, where persons meet or assemble for the administration of justice, or the transaction of business; where goods are stationed or deposited,— covered or protected from weather; where persons wait (under cover) till admitted into the interior building.

þe tour he made of Londone, Wyllam þys proute kyng,
And muche halle of Londone, þat so muche was þorw all þyng.
R. Gloucester, p. 390.

Whan he was at London, a haule he did vp wright.
First þouht & founden, for chambre was it right.
R. Brunne, p. 88.

Reson stod and stihlede. as for stywarde of halle.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 244.

Thanne knyghtis of the justise token Jhesus in the moot halle and gaderiden to him al the company of knyghtis, and unclothiden him and diden about him a reed mantel.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxvii.

Then ye souldiers of the debite toke Jesus vnto the comon hall, and gathered vnto hym all the companye. And they stripped hym and put on him a purple roob, and a reed in his right hand.

Bible, Anno 1551.

A semely man our hoste was with alle
For to hau ben a marshal in an halle
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 754.

HALI-
THEA.
—
HALL.

HALL. And so he went forth into the hall, and as he went thider he encountered with the Erle of Penbroke, whome he knewe ryght well, yet he had nat often sene him before.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 301.

A hall, hall, giue roome, and foote it girles,
More light you knaues, and turne the tables vp:
And quench the fire, the roome is growne too hot.

Shakspeare. Romeo and Juliet, fol. 57.

Then cry a Hall, a Hall!

'Tis merry in Tottenham-Hall, wen beards wag all.

Ben Jonson. Tale of a Tub, act v. sc. 9.

Thus he passed thorowe the towne with his sworde and maces borne before him, and alighted at the hall-doore with his sworde borne.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The fifth Yere.

The students also that remaine in them, are called hostellers or halliers.

Holinshed. Description of England, ch. iii.

These two gentlemen discoursing with some warmth together, Sir William Waller receiv'd such provocation from the other, that he struck him a blow over the face, so near the gate of Westminster Hall that there were witnesses who swore, that it was in the Hall itself; the Courts being then sitting; which, according to the rigour of the law, makes it very penal.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. ii. book vii. p. 278.

The great Hall was built by William Rufus, or possibly rebuilt; a room of that description being too necessary an appendage to a palace, ever to have been neglected.

Pennant. London, p. 114.

HALLELUJAH, i. e. Praise ye the Lord. Hebrew.

He ended, and the heav'nly audience loud
Sung halleluja, as the sound of seas,
Through multitude that sung.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 642.

What is it to denie a base inclination that will undo me; in obedience to him that made and redeemed me; and to despise the little things of present sense, for the hope of everlasting enjoyments; trifling pleasure, for hallelujahs?

Glanvil. Discourses, &c. Sermon 1.

In those days, as St. Jerom tells us, "any one as he walked in the fields, might hear the plowman at his hallelujahs, and the labourers in the vineyards singing David's Psalms."

Sharp. Works, vol. vii. Sermon 4.

Ravishing forms arising without end
Would, in obedience to their wills, ascend;
Change and unfold fresh glories to their view
And tune the hallelujah song anew.

Byrom. An Epistle to a Gentleman of the Temple.

HALLERIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia. Generic character: calyx three to five leaved; corolla four-cleft, inflated; berry superior, two-celled, many seeded.

Two species, natives of the South of Africa.

HALLIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx five-parted, regular pod one-seeded, two-valved.

Eight species, natives of Southern Africa and the East Indies.

HALLIRHOA, in Zoology, a genus of fossil fleshy corals, allied to Alcyonium. Established by Lamaroux.

Generic character. Coral fossil, simple, or pedicelled, forming a more or less flattened spheroid surface, smooth or furnished with lateral ribs, covered with scattered cells, the centre of the top with a round and deep pit.

Lamaroux has described two species of this genus, the first, H. costata in the Oolithe, and the second H. lycoperdoides, in the coral strata near Caen.

HA'LLOO, v. } See HALLA. Henshaw (in Skin-HA'LLOO, n. } ner) from the It. a lui, to him; HA'LLOOING. } Skinner from the Fr. haller; or from the sound. Probably from the A. S. ahlow-an, to low or bellow.

To make or utter a loud (low-ed) noise, to shout HALLOO aloud; to call or cry aloud.

Ile tarry till my sonne comme: he hallow'd but euen now. Whoa-ho-hoa. Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 289.

So with his hook in hand,
The shepherd him pursues, and to his dog doth halloo:
When, with tempestuous speed, the hounds and huntsmen follow.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 13.

When as they find their speed avails them nought,
Upon the toils run headlong without fear,
With noise of hounds and halloos as distraught.

Id. The Barons' Wars, book ii.

EL. B. List, list, I hear

Some far off hallow break the silent air.

Milton. Comus, l. 482.

They'd fly
Into a phrensie, run into the woods,
Where there are noises, huntings, shoutings, hallowings.

Ben Jonson. Magnetic Lady, act v. sc. 5.

Yet for these two lines, which in the mouth that speaks them are of no offence, he halloos on the whole pack against me.

Dryden. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

Their best conversation was nothing but noise; singing, holloing, wrangling, drinking, &c.

Fielding. Joseph Andrews, vol. vi. book iii. ch. iii.

But as soon as they found themselves unhurt they got again into their canoes; gave us some halloos; flourished their weapons; and returned once more to the buoys.

Cook. Voyage round the World, book iii. ch. iv.

HALLORMENUS, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Helopsidæ. Established by Hedwig, and generally adopted.

Generic character. Antennæ filiform, short, inserted near a nick in the eyes, insertion naked; all the joints of the tarsi entire; jaws nicked near the extremity; the mandibular palpi longer than the labial, rather enlarged at the extremity, last joint nearly cylindrical; labial palpi filiform.

Illiger united this genus to the Serropalpi, and they form part of the genus Dircea of Fabricius. The type of the genus is H. humeralis, Latreille, figured by Panzer, pl. xvi. fig. 17.

HA'LLOW, v. } A. S. halgian; D. heylighen;
HA'LLOW, n. } Ger. heiligen; Sw. helga. Ihre
HA'LLOWING, } observes of the Sp. diada huelga, a HA'LLOW-MAS. } holiday, that the word (huelga) was without doubt left among that people by the Goths. Wachter says, that the Ger. heiligen signifies (quantum potest) colere, purgare, sanctificare, segregare ab usu vulgari, consecrare, dedicare, devovere.

To worship, to purify, to sanctify, to separate from common use; to consecrate, to dedicate, to devote.

þe pope asoyled & blessed Wyllam & al hys, þat into þys batayle myd hym ssolede y wys,
And halwede hys baner.

R. Gloucester, p. 358.

Moný ys þe holy halwe, þat her y bured ys.

Id. p. 233.

On Saýnt Steuen daý he did halow þat kirke.

R. Brunne, p. 64.

And the pask of the Jewis was nygh, and manye of the cuntrey wenten up to Jerusalem, bfore the pask, to halowe hemself.

Wiclif. Jon, ch. xi.

Wherefore neithir the firste testament was halwid withouten blood.

Id. Ebrewis, ch. ix.

For if the chirche be halowed, and man or woman spille his kinde within that place, by way of sinne or by wicked temptation, the chirche were enterdited til it were reconciled by the bishop.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 376.

First, for God that is her juge shal be withouten mercie to hem, and they may not plesse hem; ne non of his halowes.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 294.

HALLOW.
—
HALMA-
TURUS.

To tellen in short, this noble Queen Dido
She seketh halowes, and doeth sacrifice.
Chaucer. Legende of Dido, fol. 203.

He then assemblyd a multitude of bisshoppes, for to dedicate and halowe the monastery of Seynt Denys i moost solempne wyse, where a great miracle was shewyd of the clēsyng of a lepar, or lazar, that duryng the nyght laye within the sayde church.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 132.

In many cityes are to be sene great stacks of such thinges pyled vp in hallowed places.

Goldinge. Caesar, book vi. fol. 158.

There are many, some indifferant, but moste detestable, grosse and fonde decrees, falsely fathered upon this Syluester, as halowing of chrysmes, geuing of orders, &c.

Bale. Pageant of Popes, by Studley, fol. 23.

For it had been an auncient tree,
Sacred with many a mysteree,
And often crost with the priestes crewes,
And often hallowed with holy-water dewe.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

Into these secret shades, quoth she,
How dar'st thou be se bold
To enter, consecrate to me,
Or touch this hallow'd mould?

Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

And whom they had well neare canonized amongst the holie hal- lowes of heaven, (quem prope caelestem fecerint) or at leastwise by his newe addition of surname, made equal to Jupiter Capitolinus, was it well done to suffer him, imprisoned in chaines, lying in a darke dungeon, to draw his lively breath at the pleasure of the hangman?

Holland. Livius, fol. 228.

But because time in it selfe, as hath beene alreadye prooued, can receiue no alteration, the halloving of festiuall dayes must consist in the shape or countenance which we put vpon the affaires that are incident in these dayes.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book v. fol. 375.

And I beseech you, looke into Master Froth here sir, a man of four-score pound a yeare; whose father died at Hallowmas: was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 65.

He will not suffer a sinful creature to come near him, otherwise than by a proxy; he will not accept of a service from a guilty hand, nor listen to a prayer from a sinful mouth, till 'tis first hallowed, and presented to him by a pure and holy mediator.

Scott. Christian Life, part i. ch. iv.

Are all seasons equally fit; are all places equally pure; are all persons equally hallowed, for the oblation of them.

Hurd. Works, vol. vii. Sermon 34.

HALLU'CINATE, } Lat. alucinari, allucinari,
HALLUCINA'TION. } or hallucinari; of uncertain origin. Vossius enumerates various Etymologies; and adds, that he follows those who derive a luce; a luce aberrare, or rather, ad lucem offendere. Met.

To offend against the light of reason; to blunder, to err, to mistake.

For if vision be abolished, it is called cæcitas, or blindness; if depraved, and receive its objects erroneously, hallucination; if diminished, hebetudo visus, caligatio, or dimness.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iii. ch. xviii.

A few hallucinations about a subject, to which the greatest clerks have been generally such strangers, may warrant us to dissent from his opinion, without obliging us to be enemies to his reputation.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 628. An Hydrostatical Discourse, &c.

Adorning richly, for the poet's sake,
Some poor hallucinating scribe's mistake.

Byrom. An Epistle to a Friend.

HALMATURUS, from the Greek ἄλμα, a leap, and ἄρα, a tail, Illig.; Kangaroo, Cook. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Salientia, order Marsupialia, class Mammalia.

Generic character. Incisive teeth, six above of equal length, placed obliquely, two below long, large, sharp, and inclined so as to be on the same plane with the jaw;

no cuspid teeth, but a large void space between the incisive and molar teeth, which vary according to the age of the animal, from four to seven on each side on either jaw, the anterior the smaller; their crowns tuberculated; upper lip cleft; head of a lengthened form; ears long and erect; eyes large; tail, in length equal to the body, covered with close hairs; limbs dispropor-tioned to each other, the fore legs very short, five toed, hind legs of great length, four toed, the inner two very small and connected to the root of the claws, which are sharp; outer toe of moderate length; between it and the inner toes an enormously strong large toe, much exceeding either of the others in length and thickness, the last phalanx shod with a kind of hoof, as is also that of the outer; the metatarsal bones very long; when at rest the whole foot, even to the hock, resting on the ground; hair woolly.

Kangaroos were first discovered in the year 1770 by some of the navigators in Captain Cook's expedition to New Holland. Like the other marsupial animals they are furnished with a bag attached to the lower part of the abdomen, and supported on the sharebones by a pair of bones peculiar to this order, in which the young animals are received after birth, but when or how is not known, and here they remain attached to the nipple of the parent until they have attained sufficient size to shift for themselves; prior, however, to their finally quitting this bag, they occasionally leave it, in order, probably, to learn the method of providing for themselves, but upon the slightest fright they return to it again. The tail in this genus is of remarkable length and strength; it serves not only as a third resting point when the animal is at rest upon its haunches, but answers the purpose of an offensive weapon, and is commonly employed in locomotion to assist in the astonishing leaps which the Kangaroos continually take in moving about, their progresses being a series of springs frequently of twenty feet at a time, and not walking on all four extremities, a position which they only assume when feeding. They are herbivorous, and have a remarkably curiously shaped stomach, and a very large cæcum. They are harmless and inoffensive, except when quarrelling about the females, or when attacked.
They have been naturalized in France and England;
at the present time there are many at Windsor, which have bred and continued so to do: a few years back, also, there were several in Lord Castlereagh's park at Foot's Cray, but they were destroyed by disease, which generally appears in the jaws, and produces large bony funguses about the roots of the teeth.

H. Gigas, Illig.; Kang. Fuliginosus, Peron and Lesuer; le Kangaroo Géant, F. Cuv.; Great Kang.
This is the largest species of Kangaroo, measuring five or six feet from the tip of the nose to the root of the tail, which itself is about two and a half feet long; the skin is of a sooty brown colour, deeper on the back than on the sides, and inclining to a light grey on the neck, chest, and belly; the ears, which are scantily covered with hair, and edged with white, are black on the outside, as is also the snout, the upper part of the tip of the tail, and the extremities of the legs. It is found on Kangaroo Island on the South coast of New Holland, where, Peron says, that, when sitting, it is about the height of a man. In this Island the Kangaroos are so numerous that their tracks at first give the idea of the place being inhabited by a numerous and active people; and when first visited by

HALMA-
TURUS.

HALMA-TUKUS.
HALO.

Captain Flinders, they were so stupid that, as he says, they "not unfrequently appeared to consider us to be Seals, the only animal which shared with them the coast, and, consequently, in a single day, thirty-nine were carried on board ship, although on the continent they were as timid as Deer."

H. Labiatus, Illig.; Kang. Lab., Geoffroy; Didelphis Gigantea, Gmel.; Macropus Major, Shaw; Moustached Kang. This has been improperly called the Great Kangaroo, as it is at least a foot shorter than the last species. The skin is ashy grey, with a brownish tint on the back and sides, and becoming white on the belly; a deep grey stripe passes from each side of the chin which meets below; the upper lip is extremely white; the tips of the paws and the upper part of the tail blackish, the under part of the latter yellow. Found in the neighbourhood of Botany Bay, Port Jackson, and the banks of the Endeavour River, New Holland.

H. Rufogriseus, Illig.; Kang. Rufo Gris, Peron and Lesuer; Reddish Grey Kang. About three feet and a half long from the snout to the root of the tail; reddish grey on the back, becoming lighter on the belly; paws and tip of the tail inclining to brown. Native of Kangaroo Island.

H. Ruficollis, Illig.; Kang. Ruficol., Peron and Lesuer; Red-necked Kang. Not quite two feet in length; brownish grey, like a Hare on the back, white on the belly; the upper lip marked with an indistinct whitish stripe terminating below the eyes; back of the neck, top of the shoulders, a spot in front of each eye, and the under part of the tail red; tips of the paws brown. Native of King's Island, Bass Straits.

H. Eugenii, Illig.; Kang. Eugen., Per.; Eugene Kangaroo. About twenty-two inches long; the fur, which is very soft, is greyish brown on the back, mingled with red about the shoulders and fore legs; belly white; under part of the tail reddish white. Native of the Ile d'Eugene on the coast of New Holland.

H. Fasciatus, Illig.; Kang. Fasc., Per.; Banded Kang. About seventeen inches long; has the ears very short comparatively with the other species; the general colour is grey, marked across the back and loins with brown stripes. It is found on the islands situated on the Western coasts of New Holland, where it forms numerous galleries in the mimosæ which cover the surface of the land.

H. Brunii, Illig.; Kang. Brunii, Desmar.; Didelph. Brun., Gmel.; D. Asiatica, Pall.; Lebrun's Kang. About two feet ten inches in length; has the head shorter than the other species; the upper middle incisive teeth much longer than the others, and depending before the lower incisives. They are found in the Aroe Isles, between New Guinea and Arnheim's Land, and also in the Isle of Solor, one of the Isles of Sunda. This is the only species not found immediately in New Holland.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Desmarest, Mammalogie; Cuvier, Règne Animal; Shaw, General Zoology.

HALO, Lat. halo; Gr. ἅλως, corona, seu circulus; a circle sometimes appearing around the sun or moon.

This halo is made after this manner: between the body of the moon, or any other star, and our eye-sight, there gathereth a grosse and misty air, by which air anon our sight cometh to be reflected and diffused: and afterwards the same incurreth upon the said star, according to the exterior circumference thereof, and thereupon appeareth a circle round about the star, which being there seen is called halo; for that it seemeth that the apparent impression is close unto that, upon which our sight so enlarged, as is before said, doth fall.

VOL. XXIII.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 681.

HALORAGIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Octandria, order Tetragynia, natural order Onagræ. Generic character: calyx four-leaved, superior; corolla, petals four, caducous; drupe dry; nut four-celled; two species. Persoon.

HALSE, or } Minshew calls a halser, a rope where-HAWSE, } with barks or boats are towed or haled
HA'LSER, or } alongst some chanell or river. And a HA'USER. } halsier, he which haleth and draweth a ship or barge alongst the river by a rope. I know not (says Skinner) whether from the Fr. hausser, to raise up, because through these holes the anchor is hauled up; (i. e. hoised, or hoisted up;) and Sir Thomas More uses the verb to hawse. See HOISE. To halse, is

To hoise or hale up; and halser, that which hoisteth or haleth up, or that wherewith any thing is hoisted or haled up.

Which neuer asked litle, but euery thing was hawsed aboue the mesure: amerceuiētes turned into fines, fines into ransomes, &c.
Sir Thomas More. Works, fol. 62. The History of King Richard the Thirde.

For one of the barks not being fully ready as the rest, was faine for haste to cut the cable in the hawse, and loose both ancker and cable, to saue her selfe.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. p. 514. John Hawkins.

There arose a great storme with the winde out of the sea, by force whereof the cables and halsers were broken, and their vessell put a shoare, and broken to pieces against the rockes.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 425. Christopher Burrough.

He wayed vp his ancors and halsed vp his sayles.

Grafton. Richard III. The third Yere.

Bomilcar gat forth of the haven of Saracose with 35 ships, and having sea-roume, halsed up sails, and away he went with a mery gale of wind.

Holland. Livius, fol. 568.

— The nymph then brought
Linnen for sailes, which, with dispatch, he wrought.
Gables, and halsters, tacklings.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book v. fol. 78.

— In it lies
A harbor so opportune, that no ties,
Halsers, or gables need; nor anchors cast.
Id. Ib. book ix. fol. 131.

Two craggy rocks projecting to the main,
The roaring winds' tempestuous rage restrain;
Within, the waves in softer murmurs glide,
And ships secure without their halsers ride.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book xiii.

No sooner were we at sea, but by the violence of the storm, and the working of the ship, we made a great quantity of water through our hawse-holes, ports, and scuppers.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book iv. ch. iv.

Æea's celebrated port they reach
And fasten here their halsers to the beach.
Fawkes. Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, book iv.

Their hausers now they loose, and on the brine
To Neptune pour the consecrated wine.
West. Song of Orpheus, from the Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius.

— The anchor, slipp'd at need
With haulser huge, abates their fearful speed.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xix. l. 384.

HALSE, v. } Goth., A. S., Ger. D. and Sw. hals,
HALSE, n. } the neck. Stiernhælm, (see Ihre and Wachter,) from Goth. halda; A. S. heald-an, tenere, sustinere, to hold, to uphold, because the neck upholds or sustains the head.

To halse, D. halsen, helsen; Sw. halsas, to embrace.

HALO.
—
HALSE.

HALSE.

HALT.

to take round, to throw the arms round, the neck; and consequentially, "to salute, to salute with reverence." Tyrwhitt. See ENHALSE. Archdeacon Nares, who produces the passage quoted below from More's Utopia, interprets,—to say hail!

I halse hym hendlich, as I hys frende were.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, fol. 22.

And the eleveu sterres halsed him all.
Id. Ib. fol. 39.

Ther was no raton of al þe route. for al þe reame of Fraunce
þa þerste have bonde þe belle. a boutte þe cattes necke
Ne have it hongid a'boute h' hals.
Id. Ib. p. 10.

O dere child, I halse thee
In vertue of the holy Trinitee,
Tell me what is thy cause for to sing,
Sith that thy throte is cut to my seming.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13575.

I stand and speak & laugh & kisse & halse.
Id. The Court of Loue, fol. 354.

And if it so be, that thou finde me false,
Another day hang me up by the halse.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16497.

Let vs haue our desired halsing
For we may safe be till in the morning.
Id. The Remedie of Loue, fol. 324.

And therewyth I turned me to Raphaell, and when we had hayl- sede (in Dibdin's Reprint, hailed) thone thother, and hadde spoken thies comen wordes, that be customably spoken, &c.

More. Utopia, by Robinson, 1551, book iv.

While thee my derling childe, myne onely ioy, my parting blis,
Thus halsing here I hold, er tidings worse myne eares may wound.
Phaer. Virgil. Aeneidos, book viii.

Surely it wer a great shame to the empire, an offence to the goddis, an iniurie to me, and an vngentilnesse of thee, that thou hast founde them eighteene yeres, with their armes abroad to halse thee; that they should finde one day thy gates shut against them.

Golden Boke, ch. xlvi.

Thorgh his armurs sone it smate,
A litel intil hys hals it bate.
Ywaine and Gawaine, l. 2070. in Ritson, i. p. 87.

Of which so soon as they once tasted had (Wonder it is that sudden change to see)
Instead of strokes each other kissed glad,
And louely hault from feare of treason free,
And plighted hands for euer friends to be.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 3.

HALT, v. } Skinner says, perhaps from the HALT, adj. } A. S. heald-an, retinere, tenere; to HALT, n. } make a halt; from Ger. halten, tenere, HA'LTING, n. } to hold, i. e. cessare, to stop. Tooke
(i. 477.) that halt (classed by him with the adverbs) is the imperative of the A. S. verb heald-an, to hold, (q. v.) and means hold, stop, (as when we say, hold your hand,) keep the present situation, hold still, (in Ger.
still halten, in D. still houden.) To halt, is

To hold, to stop or stay; met. to hesitate; to stop or stay in the gait, in the free action of the limbs, and,
thus, to limp.

The hors, on whiche she rode was blacke,
All lene, and galled upon the backe,
And halted, as he that were encloied.
Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 70.

Haue you perceiued my liberalitie or goodnesse, towards you, to halt, to faynt, or to be slacke, at any tyme, or in any thyng?
Udall. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 24.

It is no great signe of honesty, for a woman to be much known, talked, & song of, & to be marked by som special name in many mens mouthes: as to be called fair, gogle-eied, squint, brown, halt, fat, pale or leane.

Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, book ii. ch. ix.

How many shepheard's daughters who in dutie,
To griping fathers have inthral'd their beautie,
To waite upon the gout, to walke when pleases Old January hault.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song 2.

But lovers (who are Nature's best Old subjects) never long revolt;
They soon in Passions' warr contest;
Yet in their march soon make a halt.

Davenant. The Dreame.

Others from the dawning hills
Look'd round, and scouts each coast light-armed scoure
Each quarter, to descree the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight,
In motion or in alt.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 532.

We have many observers whose malice makes them critical and curious; they lay in wait for our haltings, and are glad at heart, when they have caught an opportunity to revile us.

Glanvil. Discourses, &c. Sermon 5.

The emperor's minister here hath in the late conferences among the confederates, made great complaints of Mr. Skelton, who, having received at Norimberg the orders sent him to make a halt in his journey, had, notwithstanding, gone afterwards from thence to Ratis-bone.

Sir William Temple. Works, vol. iv. p. 494.

From thence I continued my way to a place called Multon-bridge, of one side of which there is a causey about three foot broad, where
I made a halt.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 101.

Yet thousands still desire to journey on,
Though halt, and weary of the path they tread.
Cowper. The Task, book i.

In cold stiff soils the bleaters oft complain
Of gouty ails, by shepherds term'd the halt.
Dyer. The Fleece, book i.

HALTER, v. } Halter, the noun, that which halt-HA'LT, n. } eth or causes to halt or stop, that which holdeth or keepeth. To halter,
To confine, contain or bind, in or with a halter.

And I must nedes sewe her route
In this maner, as ye nowe see,
And trusse her halters forth with mee,
And am but her horse knaue,
None other office I ne haue.

Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 70.

All the grace that he shall finde nowe in me is, that they lette sixe of the chiefe burgesses of the towne come out bare heedid, bare foted, and bare legged, and in their shertes, with haulters about their neckes, with the kayes of the towne and castell in their handes.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 146.

For I haue sauage cause,
And to proclaime it ciuilly, were like
A halter'd necke, which do's the hangman thanke,
For being yare about him.

Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 358.

Some that are tall, and some that are dwarffes,
Some that are halter'd, and some that weare scarffes.
Ben Jonson. Masques. The Vision of Delight.

Where wilt thou appeal? power of the courts below
Flows from the first main head, and these can throw
Thee, if they suck thee in, to misery,
To fetters, halters.

Donne. Satire 5.

3 CIT. Content, farewell Philip.
1 CIT. Away you halter-sack you.

Beaumont and Fletcher. A King and no King.

They would give a summary of their faith, for which they would be ready to offer up their lives to the halter, or the fire, as God should appoint.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1554.

Edward disavowed the act, by public proclamation, and resigned to them [the City] the monopoly of the ax and halter, and vested in them the exclusive privilege of hanging, drawing, and quartering.

Pennant. London.

HALYARDS, i. e. hale-yards, yards for haling,

HALT.

HAL-YARDS.

HAL-YARDS. Skinner. The ropes (says Falconer) by which sails are hoisted or lowered.

HAM-BURGH. Each mast has only two shrouds of twisted rattan, which are often both shifted to the weather-side; and the halyard, when the yard is up, serves instead of a third shroud.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book ii. ch. x.

The halyards and top-bow-lines soon are gone.

Falconer. The Shipwreck, can. 2.

HAM, } Goth haim; A. S. ham; D.
HA'MSTRING, v. } hamme; Ger. hamm. See Spel-HA'MSTRING, n. } man, Junius, and Wachter; who HA'MLET, v. } have written largely upon this word, HA'MLET, n. } but have overlooked the A. S. hæm- ian, coire, to come or go together.

A ham, or hamlet, a place where people come or assemble together, whether house or village; their home.

A ham, the part where the leg and thigh unite and meet; the thick part of the thigh, where it meets or unites with the body.

Upon þe þrid day, at a toun hamelet,
 Thomas was his pray, as he to mete was set.

R. Brunne, p. 269.

His tyme was no more sette here to regne in landes,
 He died at a hamelette, men calle it Burgh bisandes.

Id. p. 340.

They were naked, wearing their hair long vnto their hammes as the sauages vse to do.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 337. M. Rene Laudonniere.

Other some they found lying along still alive, cut shorter by the thighs and hammes, who offred their bare neckes and throates to be cut, and called vnto them to let forth the rest of their blood.

Holland. Livius, fol. 464.

Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round.

Milton. L'Allegro, l. 92.

Yet I will not omit to speake also of the manor which was the chiefe lordship sometime of a parish or hamlet called Bendishes.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, ch. xvi.

He is properly and pittiedly to be counted alone, that is illiterate, and unactively lives hamletted in some untravail'd village of the duller country.

Feltham. Resolve 49. part ii.

And like a strutting player, whose conceit
 Lies in his hamstring, and doth thinke it rich
 To heare the wooden dialogue and sound
 'Twixt his stretcht footing, and the scaffolage.

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 82.

What with wounding their hackes, and cutting their ham-strings, they made foule worke and carnage among them, and more than that, raised a greater feare and tumult by farre.

Holland. Livius, fol. 462.

The criminal is laid flat on his belly on the ground, with his britches pluckt down over his hams, in which posture a lusty fellow bangs his bare britch with a split bambo, about 4 fingers broad, and 5 foot long.

Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. Anno 1688.

With this instrument they ride at a beast, and surround him, when the hunter that comes behind him hamstrings him.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book i. ch. vi.

My remarks caused only a vacant stare, and received no other reply than such as—"I do not know, sir.—I really forget, sir.—Give me leave to help you to a slice of ham, sir."

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 56.

When they have only their upper garments on, and sit upon their hams, they bear some resemblance to a thatched house.

Cook. Voyages, book ii. ch. ix.

Be mine the hut
 That from the mountain's side
 Views wilds and swelling floods,
 And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires.

Collins. Ode to Evening.

To several of these towns there are small appendages belonging called hamlets, which are taken notice of in the statute of Exeter, which makes frequent mention of entire vills, demivills, and hamlets.

Blackstone. Commentaries. Introduction, sec. 4.

HAMADRYAD, so called, as Mnesimachus thinks, because they are born and die ἄμα ταῖς ὄρυσιν, simul cum quercubus; together with the oaks. Vossius. See DRYAD.

This were the only way to render both our countries habitable indeed, and the fittest sacrifice for the royal oaks, and their hamadryads, to whom they owe more than a slight submission.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees. Conclusion, sec. 13.

They were called Dryades and Hamadryades; because they begin to live with oakes, and perish together.

Sandys. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book viii. notes.

For besides the living genius of each place, the woods too, which, by your account are animated, have their hamadryads, no doubt, and the springs and rivulets their nymphs in store belonging to 'em.

Shaftesbury. The Moralist, part iii. sec. 1.

The sun, moon, and stars, are all Gods, according to his system: fountains are inhabited by nymphs, and trees by hamadryads.

Hume. Natural History of Religion, sec. 5.

HAMADRYAS, in Botany, a genus of the class Diœcia, order Polyandria, natural order Ranunculaceæ. Generic character: male flower, calyx five or six-leaved; ten or twelve petals; female flower, germens numerous, seeds many.

One species, H. Magellanica, native of the Straits of Magellan.

HAMAMELIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Digynia, natural order Berberides. Generic character: involucre three-leaved; proper calyx four-leaved; corolla, petals four, linear; nut two-horned, two-celled.

One species, H. Virginica, native of Virginia.

HA'MATE, } Lat. hamatus, hooked, from hamus, HA'MATED. } a hook.

To explain cohesion by hamate atoms is accounted ignotum per ignotius. And it is not as much so to account for the gravity of bodies by the elasticity of ether?

Bishop Berkeley. Sermons, sec. 227.

Nothing less than a violent heat can disentangle these creatures from their hamated station of life.

Swift. On the Mechanical Operation of the Spirit.

HAM.
 —
 HAM-
 BURGH.

H A M B U R G H.

HAMBURGH, the first commercial City of Germany, owes its former prosperity and present importance to its fortunate situation on the Elbe, by means of which great river it maintains an easy intercourse with the interior of that Country. It is built at the place where the navigation of large vessels ceases, and that of rafts or flat-bottomed boats commences. The Elbe here, although more than 70 miles above its junction with the sea, has a breadth of four or six miles, according to the state of the wind and tide, but immediately above the Town it is divided into a number of comparatively narrow and intricate channels by a series of

HAM-
BURGH.

Situation.

Description.

Havens.

Walls.

islands, which owe their fertility and existence to the continual deposits of this great stream. Hamburg is situated on the Northern bank of the river, being built in the form of a semicircle, the diameter of which, turned towards the Elbe, has nearly a mile and a half in extent. On approaching the Queen of the Hanse Towns from the river, her appearance is not unsuited to the loftiness of her designation; the thousands of masts, with towers and steeples rising behind them, the activity of the city, the rich cultivation of the environs, the breadth of the stream, and the green islands sprinkled over it, form altogether an imposing spectacle; but the interior of the Town disappoints every favourable expectation. Crooked and narrow streets, small houses reared to a great height, in the fashion of the middle ages, and gloomy, overhanging roofs, attest its antiquity. Notwithstanding the attempts made of late years to improve the interior of the City, no art can compensate the want of room. Even the abodes of the opulent are incommodious, and Hamburg, in every respect, but particularly in comfortable lodging, is the dearest City of Germany. The labouring classes live in cellars, deprived of light and free air, and when the river is swoln beyond its ordinary level, these subterranean dwellings are not unfrequently flooded. Two small rivers, the Alster and the Bille, flow into the Elbe through the Town. The former of these, which is much the more considerable of the two, supplies the canal communicating with Lubeck. It is enclosed by sluices within the Town, so as to form a large basin, and from this the water is distributed in such a way as to turn a great number of mills, to supply numerous fountains, and, finally, to fill the canals, or fleets, as they are here called, which descend into the Elbe. These canals are so numerous, that Hamburg may be called the Venice of Germany; they are crossed by no fewer than 84 bridges, and are for the most part lined by lofty storehouses, to which the merchandise is carried by boats directly from the Havens. These Havens are the Oberbaum and Niederbaum. The former, at the East side of the Town, receives the boats employed in the internal navigation. The Niederbaum, lower down the river, has 20 feet of water, and merchantmen of considerable burden can discharge their cargoes at the Quay walls. Hamburg is surrounded with walls and fortifications, four gates opening from them on the land side, and two towards the river. These works had their origin in the jealousy and hostile feeling which so long existed between Denmark and this City; no pains or expense were spared upon them, and they were considered as strong and perfect as Art could make them. After the disputes with Denmark, however, were set to rest by the Treaty of Gottorp, in 1768, the fortifications of Hamburg were neglected, and the walls were adorned with gardens and plantations. In this dilapidated state were they, when Davoust, in 1813, received orders to convert the place into a military position. In the execution of this project, he engaged with a more than usual degree of military rigour, levelling houses, destroying gardens, and compelling the citizens to assist in the annihilation of their property, wherever the accomplishment of his plan afforded a pretext to his vindictive spirit. The vicissitudes of his master's fortune, however, forced him to a premature retreat before he was able to complete what he had undertaken, so that he left Hamburg much weaker in respect of fortifications than he found it. But it is very questionable whether Hamburg, in the present state of the Art of war, could ensure her safety by works of defence; the old works were deemed strong, and they required nevertheless, at a time when the principles of attack were less understood than at present, a garrison of 20,000 men. The ground cleared by Davoust has been built on since in much better taste, so that the City has risen more beautiful from its ruins. It was during the occupation of Hamburg by the French Marshal, that he undertook the construction of a bridge across the Elbe, uniting its banks with the Island of Wilhelmsberg in the centre. This famous bridge, a mile and a half in length, which might have passed for one of the wonders of the world, was completed in 83 days. The timber of which it was constructed was taken wherever it could be found, without any respect for private property, and the people of Hamburg were compelled to labour in its erection. But the hasty workmanship of the Devil's Bridge, as this fabric was called by the people of Hamburg, from the hardships they endured in building it, was not calculated to last long, and not a vestige of it remains at present. Outside of the walls are the Fauxbourgs of St. George and the Hamburger Berg; this last was destroyed by the French, but has been rebuilt with great improvements.

Within the crowded space enclosed by the walls, are Streets, 14 squares, or open places, not one of which, however, edifices, &c. deserves notice, unless we except the Jungfernstieg, a favourite promenade along the basin of the Alster, planted with three rows of lime trees. Of the streets, only three, viz. that of the Admiralty, the Neuwall, and the Steinweg, are justly entitled to the name; the rest, 230 in number, are dark and narrow lanes. Among the public edifices the palm of architectural beauty is generally given to the Orphan Asylum. The Council House, the Admiralty, the Exchange, and the Theatres, are also good buildings, but labour under the common disadvantage of being so closely beset with houses, as to produce no effect. The Churches are 19 in number, but are none of them remarkable, except that of St. Michael, which has a tower 450 feet in height.

Hamburg is honourably distinguished by the number and liberal endowments of its Charitable Institutions, in which it is excelled, perhaps, by London alone. It would be tedious to enumerate the various Hospitals for the sick and helpless, the Houses of refuge to shelter the unfortunate, or the numerous funds destined to support the needy, amounting, it is said, to 200,000 marks, and all derived from voluntary contributions. The Institutions which have instruction for their object are on the same liberal scale. These are, the Gymnasium, with five Professors; the Charitable Institutions. Johanneum, with 17 Teachers, besides the Director; and ten elementary Free-schools, liberally endowed and carefully conducted. A Society, established in 1765, for the promotion of the useful Arts, possesses cabinets of Natural History, Machinery, &c. and maintains Model Schools, with an establishment for the cultivation of Rural Economy. There are besides, numerous Literary and Scientific Societies of a private nature. The City Library contains about 80,000 volumes, and the Commercial Library about a third of that number. Schools.

Although the Hamburgers still retain, particularly in the lower orders, much of that roughness and surliness which formerly distinguished them from the other Germans, their manners have nevertheless undergone a great change within the last 30 years. The great influx Character of the inhabitants.

HAM-
BURGH.

HAM-
BURGH.

of emigrants from France and Hanover during that period, (for no less than 10,000 strangers are said to have found shelter in Hamburg,) contributed to polish and refine the manners of the free City. The merchants, who are in general great travellers, are, for the most part, candid, well-informed men; education is duly attended to in their families, and there are few ladies of the better class, who cannot converse with ease in English and French, as well as in several dialects of German. Hamburg is unrivalled in hospitality and good cheer; and nothing detracts from the value of the welcome with which a stranger is received, but the necessity of devoting too much time to the pleasures of the table. Every luxury, foreign and continental, is easily procured here. There is no City in Europe, perhaps, the markets of which are so constantly and abundantly supplied with an equal variety of game, fish, wine, and fruit.

Commerce

The trade of Hamburg surpasses that of every other continental port, not even excepting Amsterdam. During the late war it suffered a great depression, but it is at present on the increase, and the number of vessels belonging to the place (about 200) is greater than before the Revolution. Some of these are fitted out for the whale fishery, but the far greater part are engaged in trading with England, America, and the Spanish Peninsula. The number of vessels which entered the port of Hamburg in 1791 was 1484; at present the annual average is about 1900, and in 1816, when the continental markets were crammed by adventurers, they amounted to 2230. Of these, a great and increasing proportion are English. In 1824, the ships entered from Great Britain were 645; and in the following year, out of a total of 1863, the British vessels amounted to 757. The trade with America does not appear to increase, the arrivals from that Country being 243 in each of the above years. The great object of speculation in the Hamburg market is coffee, which is the current article, like cotton in Liverpool, for the investment of loose capital. The quantity annually imported is about 30 millions of pounds. It is chiefly imported from the Havannah and St. Domingo, and re-exported to the interior of Germany and Russia. But Hamburg derives a still greater revenue from sugar, the refining of which gives employment to 10,000 persons. The establishments for this purpose are more than 300 in number, and produce daily about 50,000 pounds of the refined article, a great part of which is sent to Russia. The importation of sugar amounts to about 80 millions of pounds annually, one-eighth of which is consumed at home, and the remainder exported with a great increase of value. Cotton occupies the third place in importance. The sale of this article is increasing rapidly in Hamburg; in 1825 the number of bales sold was 16,600. A portion of this is manufactured in the Town, the indigo and other dye stuffs being procured from England. Silks, velvets, and laces may also be reckoned among the manufactures of Hamburg, but these bear no proportion to the great commerce from which the place derives its consequence.

Bank.

The Bank of Hamburg, established in 1619, resembles that of Amsterdam in the principles on which it is conducted. It does not issue any specie, but simply keeps transfer books, by means of which commercial dealings are easily transacted. None but citizens or inhabitants can have an account in the Bank books, and they must deposit cash equal in value to the credit they wish to obtain. Thus the real funds of the Bank are always equivalent to its nominal capital. The agio, or premium on Bank money, was originally fixed at 16, but has occasionally risen to 25 per cent.

HAM-
BURGH.

Notwithstanding that the bustle and crowded agitation of a commercial city seem little favourable to the cultivation of letters, Hamburg has been the birth-place, or the chosen retreat, of many learned men. Among these we may enumerate Gronovius, Hagedorn, Seidler, Klopstock, Lessing, Reimar, Karsten, Gerstenberg, Busch, Volkman, Bode, Ebeling, Meyer, &c. Klopstock, who resided here for thirty years, till his death in 1803, received the honours of a public funeral. He lies interred in Ottensen, a hamlet contiguous to Altona, which is not more than two miles from Hamburg. An inscription taken from his Messiah still distinguishes the house in which the Poet lived.

Celebrated natives.

The country round Hamburg, although rather level, is still agreeable, owing to the richness of its cultivation, and the vicinity of the river. The banks of the Elbe are thickly strewed for many miles with gardens and country houses. The Town is surrounded on all sides with villas and plantations in the English fashion, and on holidays, the whole population is poured out into the suburbs. The territory subject to the City, comprising an extent of 135 square miles, extends for the most part continuously from the Islands in the Elbe to Ritzebuttel at the mouth of that river. The Vierlande, or Marshy Islands, formed by the Bille and Elbe, which Hamburg holds in common with Lubeck, are of unrivalled fertility, and together with garden cultivation yield large revenues. The remainder of the territory along the North bank of the Elbe costs Hamburg more than it produces, but the possession of it ensures that City the undisputed navigation of the River.

Territory.

Ritzebuttel, or Cuxhaven, at the mouth of the Elbe, (for these two places are contiguous,) is of great importance as a station for pilots, and as a safe anchorage in stormy weather, when the navigation of these channels becomes extremely dangerous. Cuxhaven, with a population of 2000, has all the appearance of an English Town; and as its visitors are chiefly seamen, it maintains, perhaps, a more constant intercourse with the British, than even with the Dutch, or Germans. The expenses incurred by the lighthouses, buoys, and other establishments, to facilitate the navigation of the Elbe to Hamburg, amount annually to 60,000 rix-dollars.

Cuxhaven.

The population of Hamburg is divided into three classes, viz. those who have the full rights of Citizenship; Citizens of the second class (Kleine Burger;) and Sojourners including strangers, German and Portuguese Jews. The Citizens of the first class alone are eligible to offices of honour, or emolument, in the City, and are exempted from all duties on the merchandise imported by them in Hamburg bottoms. Citizens of the second description possess municipal rights with some restrictions. The Sojourners under the protection of the State (Schutzverwandte) pay one rix-dollar annually. The Members of the English Court, or Society of English Merchants, residing here, consisting of one Court-Master and 19 Merchants, are exempted from personal taxes, but their goods are subject to the usual duties. The Jews have their freedom, but are not capable of becoming citizens, and can possess houses in certain streets only; in other respects they enjoy all the rights of municipality. Citizens alone

Constitution.

HAM-
BURGH.

HAMELED

Government.

can hold real property within the territory of Ham-burgh. Citizenship is not hereditary, but the son of a Citizen has some advantages, and pays a less sum on his admission.

The Government of Hamburgh is purely democratic, and is extolled by the Germans as a model of perfection, uniting mild laws with a firm and vigorous administration. The supreme power is divided between the Senate and the Common Council, (Burgerschaft), according to a Convention framed in 1710. The Senate is composed of four Burgomasters, (three of whom are Civilians,) and 24 Councillors, eleven of whom are graduated in Law; to these, who are styled in Senatu, are added four Syndics, a Prothonotary, Registrar, and Secretary, who are Members de Senatu, possessing only a deliberative voice.

The Members of the Common Council are elected in equal numbers from each of the five Parishes, and are divided in the first instance into the College of Aldermen, 15 in number; into that of the Sixty, in which the Deacons are united to the Aldermen; and that of the Hundred and Eighty. Every proposed law is discussed by each of these Colleges separately, before it is offered to the collective suffrages of the Commons. To the Senate are reserved the prerogatives of sending embassies, and of granting pardons. Taxes can only be imposed by the joint authority of the Senate and Common Council. To the latter body, or rather to a Committee of Ten, deputed by it, belongs the care of the Treasury; the Senate, however, having the superintendence of the accounts. None but Lutherans can hold the chief offices.

The tribunals of justice have nothing in them peculiar. A Supreme Court for the determination of appeals is possessed by Hamburgh, in common with the other free Cities of the German Confederation, Lubeck, Bremen, and Frankfort, conformably to the Constitution of 1814, and the Representatives of these Cities collectively have one vote in the general Assembly of the Diet. (See GERMANY.)

Population.

The population of the whole territory of Hamburgh is about 130,000, of which number 107,000 belong to the City alone. The regular military maintained by the State, including a corps of artillery and a squadron of horse, does not exceed 1400 men; to these must be added the night watch, consisting of 400 men accoutred like soldiers. The militia exceeds 10,000, and is a well-organized, effective corps.

History

Hamburgh owes its origin, according to most Historians, to Charlemagne, who fortified a Town on the site of the present City. Louis le Debonnaire made it the seat of a Bishopric, which has been since transferred to Bremen. The foundation of the Cathedral dates from 811. During the course of the XIth and XIIth centuries, a great influx of wealth, derived from the fisheries and the transit trade, poured into Hamburgh, which, being originally a free Imperial City, had been bestowed by the Emperors on the Counts of Holstein, and, like other commercial Towns in those feudal times, was treated with peculiar indulgence by its immediate Sovereigns. Important privileges were obtained in 1258, when the City acquired a fixed tribunal, and a jurisdiction of considerable extent. In 1269 was added the right to make laws and to execute them.

Thus political independence was gradually developed, while the increasing wealth of the State enabled it to purchase valuable immunities from the Empire.
Already, in the year 1189, Frederick I. exempted the navigation of the Elbe between Hamburgh and the sea from tolls and impositions. In 1241 was formed the alliance between this City and Lubeck, which gave rise to the Hanseatic League, a bond of confederation at one time uniting many Cities of Europe, and still subsisting between Lubeck, Hamburgh, and Bremen.
Among all the vicissitudes of commercial prosperity
during the middle Ages, the good fortune of Ham-burgh appears never to have received a check; a circumstance owing not more to the uncommon advantages of its situation, than to the wisdom of its commercial policy, which never deviated from the simple system of free trade. In the mean time the City had frequently to contend for its political independence with the King of Denmark, as Count of Holstein, and was obliged on almost every occasion to purchase with large sums a short respite from the evils of war. At length a Convention was framed in 1768, and confirmed by the Emperor two years afterwards, in which the House of Holstein resigned its claims, and the independence of Hamburgh was formally acknowledged. But the unhappy period of its history now approached. In 1803 the French, in possession of Hanover, extorted from the City a loan of 1,700,000 marks; and these exactions were frequently repeated, until, in 1810, Hamburgh shared the fate of the North of Germany, was deprived of its independence, and annexed to the French Empire. An unsuccessful attempt to expel the invaders only served as a pretext for the indulgence of further rapacity. When the City was entered by Davoust, in 1813, a fine of 48 millions of livres was imposed on it, all respect for political rights or private property was set aside, and at last the Bank was robbed. The loss sustained by Hamburgh, between November 1806 and May 1814, is estimated at 140 millions of Marks Banco, about £11,200,000 sterling. The peace of Paris, in 1814, restored the City to its independence, which was still further confirmed by the Congress of Vienna, and Hamburgh accepted from the restored Bourbons, the sum of 500,000 livres of Rentes as a compensation for all its losses.

J. Von Hess, Hamburgh Topog. Stat. und Hist.
beschreiben, 1811; C. de Villers, Constitution des trois
Villes Anseatiques, Lips. 1814; Nugent's Tour through Germany; Riesbeck's Travels.

HAM-
BURGH.

HAMELED

HAMELED;—Abated, perhaps from A. S. hamelan, poplitibus scissis mutilare; Skinner; and Tyrwhitt, to hamstring, to cut off. See HAM. Minshew says, ham- ling of dogs is q. hamehalding, i. e. keeping at home, by paring their feet, so as they cannot take delight in running abroad.

And therefore hath she laid her faith to borow
Algate a foote is hameled of thy sorowe.

Chaucer, The Second Booke of Troilus, fol. 162.

HAMELLIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rubiaceæ.
 Generic character: corolla five-cleft; berry, five-celled, inferior, many-seeded.

Five species, natives of the West Indies. Willdenow.

HAMILTONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polygamia, order Diœcia. Generic character: hermaphrodite flower; calyx five-cleft; corolla none; disk of the nectary five-toothed; stamens five; style one; drupe inferior. Male flower, as the female, no style.

One species, H. oleifera, native of North America.

HAMITES, in Zoology, a genus of Fossil Shells, established by Parkinson, in his Work on Organic Remains, for a chambered shell allied to the Ammonites.

Generic character. Shell chambered, fusiform, recurved, or folded on itself; the margins of the chamber irregular, waved; syphon placed on the outer edge of the shell; mouth the outer edge produced, the sides sinuous; the peristome often thickened internally. These shells differ from the Ammonites by the shell being simply bent, instead of being regularly twisted on its own axis; the mouth of the shell exactly corresponds with the mouth of the Ammonites; and, like them, their cast is often furnished with a sunken band near the mouth, which is doubtless caused by the periodical thickening of the inner edge of the mouth. The cast of these shells are most generally found alone, but when the shell is also preserved, they exhibit a most beautiful pearly surface, similar to the fragments mixed with indurated clay which are usually called Fire Marble, a substance which owes the whole of its brilliancy to the fragments of these or similarly chambered shells.

The type of the genus is Humatus armatus of Sowerby, Mineral Conchology, in which Work several other species are described.

HA'MMER, v. } D. haemer; Ger. hammer; Sw.
 HA'MMER, n. } hamar; a word, as the Etymolo-HA'MMERING, } gists observe, common to all the HA'MMER-HEAD, } Northern languages; and for the HA'MMER-MAN. } origin of which they resort to the Greek or Hebrew. It may be from the A. S. hæm-ian, to come together; and, consequentially, to drive or strike together. To hammer is

To strike or drive, to beat, to knock; met. to drive or beat into the head, to work in the head or brain; to work carefully, painfully, ineffectually at.

For ge ben men beter y tagt to schouele and to spade,
 To cartestaf and to plowstaf, and a fischying to wade,
 To hamer and to nedle, and to marchandise al so,
 Jan with swerd or hauberk eny batail to do.

R. Gloucester, p. 99.

The fomy stedes on the golden bridel
 Gnawing, and fast the armureres also
 With file and hammer priking to and fro.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2511.

Tuball
 That found out first the Art of song,
 For as his brother's hamers rong
 Upon his anvelt up and downe
 Thereof he toke the first sowne.

Id. The Duchesse, v. 1164.

Is not my worde lyke a fyre, sayeth the Lord, and lyke an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone.

Bible, Anno 1551. Jeremy, ch. xxiii.

The smythe confortd the moulder, and the iron smyth the hammerman.

Id. Esaye, ch. xli.

Who tore the lion, as the lion tears the kid,
 Ran on embattel'd armies clad in iron,
 And weaponless himself,
 Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
 Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
 Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
 Adamantean proof.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 132.

Marry, there was one thing hammer'd in the commons heads, by what meanes they might revive againe the Tribune's authoritie; the very grand bulwark of their freedome, and a thing that now had discontinued and lien dead.

Holland. Livius, fol. 112.

But that laughter (as woman's mindes, God wot, are soone kindled with a little) set her a worke and hammered in her head.

Id. Ib. fol. 241.

Then, how the lab'ring spirits, to rocks by fetters bound,
 With bellows' rumbling groans, and hammers thund'ring sound,
 A fearful horrid din still in the earth do keep,
 Their master to awake, suppos'd by them asleep.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 4.

Even so, that which is to judge of reasons in philosophy, if it meet with any thing that resoundeth, and keepeth an hammering within, hardly will it be able to understand that which shall be delivered without forth.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 833.

Because it was fashioned like a little mallet or hammer-head, it was and is at this day called in Latine malleolus.

Id. Plinie, book xvii. ch. xxii.

But now preferments so possess'd my brain
 That scarce I could produce a single strain:
 Indeed, I sometimes hammer'd out a line,
 Without connection, as without design.

Gay. Epistle 1. To a Lady.

What had become of me, if Virgil had taxed me with another Book? I had certainly been reduced to pay the publick in hammered money, for want of milled; that is, in the same old words which I had used before.

Dryden. A Discourse on Epick Poetry, vol. iii. p. 242.

A thousand things are hammering in this head; 'tis a fruitful nod-dle, though I say it.

Dryden. Sir Martin Marr-all, act i. sc. 1.

It is certain, that gold itself will be sometimes so eager, (as artists call it) that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself.

Locke. Human Understanding, book iii. ch. vi.

The orator of the hammer denominates a cit's country-box, a villa and a mansion; a cistern, a reservoir; a horse-pond, a canal; a ditch, a trout stream; a grass-plot, ten feet by twelve, a paddock.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 40.

We found innumerable oysters of various kinds; among others the hammer-oyster, and a large proportion of small pearl-oysters.

Cook. Voyage, &c. book iii. ch. i.

Pegge has given the following account of the origin of a HAMMERCLOTH: "It was requisite that the Coachman should have a few implements in case of accidents or a sudden and little repair was wanting to the Coach; for which purpose he carried a Hammer with a few pins, nails, &c. with him, and placed them under his seat, made hollow to hold them, and which thence was called the Coach-box; and in a little time, in order to conceal this unsightly appearance, a cloth was thrown over the box and its contents, of which a Hammer was the chief, and thence took the name of the Hammercloth. This is my idea of the etymon of these two common terms. And here again it cannot but be observed, that this little appendage is now become the most striking and conspicuous ornament of the equipage." Curialia Miscellanea, 304.

HAMMOCK, Sp. hamaca; Fr. hamac. In Dutch hang-mat; Sw. heng-matta; Ger. hang-matte; obviously compounded of hang and mat, q. d. a mat hung, sc. for a bed or place of rest; but hamaca is said to be Indian.

HAMMER.

HAM-MOCK.

HAM-MOCK.
—
HAMPER.

They also recouer great store of cotton, Brasill wood, and those beds which they call hamacas, or Brasill beds, wherein in hot countreyes all the Spaniards vse to lie commonly, and in no other, neither did we our selues while we were there.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 641. Sir Walter Raleigh.

It was now dark, therefore we lighted a candle, and I being the oldest stander in our new country conducted them into one of the houses where we did presently hang up our hammocks.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. Anno 1688.

A sailor, who died on board, had his death concealed for some days by his brother, who during that time lay in the same hammock with the corpse, only to receive the dead man's provisions.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book i. ch. iii.

HAMPER, } The Fr. hanap; Low Lat. hana-
HANAPER. } pus, is a cup, or goblet, from the A. S. hnæp, also a cup, or goblet. Hanaperium, a large vessel, or a place for storing or packing cups or goblets, (recondendis hanapis.) See Menage and Du Cange. Minshew says, hamper, q. hand-panier. It is now applied to

A kind of basket, adapted for package.

Than vpon the Saterdaye folowyng, beyng the xxiii. daye of Februarii, the mayer and aldermen yode vnto the kyng, and presented hym with an hamper of golde.

Fabyan. Anno 1432.

One good daies worke it is for a man to fill foure hampers made of purpose for such brouse.

Holland. Plinie, book xviii. ch. xxxi.

This charge they laid to John Hales, clerk of the hanaper, a good and publick spirited man, and one of those commissioners.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1549.

These writs (relating to the business of the subject) and the returns to them, were, according to the simplicity of ancient times, originally kept in a hamper, in hanaperio; and the others (relating to such matters wherein the Crown is immediately or mediately concerned) were prepared in a little sack or bag; and thence hath arisen the distinction of the hanaper office and petty bag office.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iii. ch. iv.

HAMPER, v. } Seems to be of the same origin with,
HANAPER, n. } and to be used as equivalent (though metaphorically) to hamele or hamble; i. e. to ham-string, or lame the hams; and to be thus, generally,

To impede, to hinder, to fetter, to shackle, to perplex, to entangle.

For I trow he can hamper the.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, ch. iv. fol. 145.

But at what tyme the lawe of Moses was made and geuē, all thynges were whollye replete with terrours, for to snibbe and hamper the hardenesse of herte that reigned in the people.

Udall. Luke, ch. xxiv.

KING. Sweet aunt be quiet, 'twas against her will.

DUTCH. Against her will, good king? look to't in time,

Shée'le hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby.

Shakspeare. Henry VI. Second Part, fol. 124.

There was a dance of horses, in which they kept exact time of music. The means used for bringing them to it, is said to have been by tying and hampering their legs in such a sort, that they could lift them up, but in a determinate way.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvii.

Or we shall find such engines to assail

And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force,

Though thou art firmler fastn'd then a rock.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1397.

The swarthy smith spits in his buckehorne fist,
And bids his men bring out the five-fold twist,
His shackles, shacklockes, hampers, gives, and chaines,
His linked bolts.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song 5.

These difficulties and perplexities the man of intrigues is always hamper'd with; they necessarily arise from the various flexures and turnings of the way that leads to his ends.

Sharp. Sermon 5. vol. i.

Come, bailiffs, cries Doll, (how I'll hamper this cheat!)
Let the law be no longer delay'd.

Cunningham. An Epigram.

HAMPER.
—
HAMP-SHIRE.

HAMPSHIRE, a County of England, bounded on the East by Surrey and Sussex, on the North by Berkshire, on the West by the Counties of Wilts and Dorset, and on the South by the British Channel. Its extreme length from North to South is about 55 miles, with a breadth of about 40. The area of the County, including the ISLE OF WIGHT, is about 1640 square miles, or 1,041,920 statute acres.

Few Counties in England are superior to this either in the commercial advantages of its situation, in its cultivation, or picturesque beauty. The surface is everywhere diversified with gentle elevations, rich valleys, and extensive woodlands interspersed with country-seats and populous villages. Two ranges of chalk hills run through the County nearly parallel to one another; one in a South-Easterly direction from Hungerford to Basingstoke and Alton, along the Northern boundary; the other through the centre from Salisbury, by Winchester and Petersfield. Between these ranges the land is in many places high, assuming the character of downs, as in the neighbourhood of Andover: the soil is a strong flinty loam, or hazel-coloured mould on chalk, occasionally veined with gravel, and more or less peat in the valleys. To the North of the chalk hills, on the borders of Berkshire, the soil is a deep clay, producing heavy crops of corn, and particularly adapted to the growth of the elm. Light sand and gravelly loams intermixed with clay and brick earth are found in the New Forest, in which, as also in the Forest of Bere and Waltham Chase, there occurs much peat and turf moor on the heath and low ground. Along the Tees are alluvial meadow lands of uncommon luxuriance, terminating towards the sea in extensive salt-marshes.

The only rivers which flow from Hampshire into the basin of the Thames are the Loddon and the Rivers. Auburn; the greater number run towards the sea through the Southern range of chalk. The principal of these are the Itchin, which rises in the centre of the County near Alresford, and passing by Winchester and Southampton, enters the great estuary of the Southampton water. The Tees, Tesse, or Test, united with the Anton, falls into the sea by the same inlet, after watering Andover, Stockbridge, and Romsey. The Avon, flowing from Wiltshire through a country of uncommon beauty, along the borders of the New Forest, joins the Stour at Christchurch, where it empties itself into the inlet called Christchurch Bay. The Boldre Water collects many rivulets of the New Forest, and meets the sea at Lymington. The Exe, a little to the Westward, pursues a parallel course. The advantages presented by a great extent of indented coast, and numerous streams flowing towards it, have not been neglected. The Itchin is said to have been made navigable between Winchester and Southampton, as early as the reign of William the Conqueror. The Act for making the present Winchester Canal was obtained in the reign of Charles I. The Basingstoke Canal, commenced in 1778, terminates near the village of Westley in the River Wey, which falls into the Thames. The Andover Canal, a collateral branch of which is navigable to within two miles of Salisbury, commences at the former place, and falls at Redbridge into the Southampton Water; which is, properly speaking, an arm of the sea, extending above 10 miles between irregular and woody banks. Its breadth near Southampton is four miles, and vessels of considerable burden can navigate still higher up. To the East of this inlet, along the coast, is Portsea Island, separated from the main by a shallow creek, over which a bridge is built. On this Island is PORTSMOUTH, and off its Southern point is the famous road of Spithead, where ships of war anchor when equipped for service.

HAMP-
SHIRE.

Minerals.

There are not any minerals of importance in Hampshire. Iron stone is found in the South-Western quarter, and fine potter's clay occurs on Pool Heath. The fossils met with on the shores of this County are published by Brander under the title of Fossilia Hantoniensis.

The New Forest.

One of the principal attractions of this County lies in the scenery of the New Forest, a tract of great importance for the supplies of naval timber which it furnishes, and celebrated no less for the historical events connected with it, than for the richness of its landscapes. The New Forest was formerly bounded on the East by the Southampton river, and on the South by the sea, occupying, within a circumference of 90 miles, the whole extent of country between the Southampton and Christchurch rivers. Various disafforestations have reduced it to much narrower limits. Its boundaries at present extend from Godshill on the North-West, to the sea on the South-East, a distance of about 20 miles, and from Hardley on the East, to Ringwood on the West, about 15 miles, so that it contains within its limits about 92,365 acres. Some portion of this is private property, and a small part is held by the Forest officers, so that, strictly speaking, the woods and waste lands of the New Forest, belonging to the Crown, do not exceed 63,845 acres. Little advantage accrues to the Crown from the commonage of this Forest except the pasturage of deer. The annual supply required from the Lord Warden is 64 brace. The oak is the chief timber of this tract, and was formerly abundant enough to form the chief supply of our Dock-yards. The oaks here have a peculiar character: instead of growing to a considerable height, as they would do in richer soils, they extend their branches horizontally, and in irregular forms, so as to form what ship-builders call knees, and are on that account more valuable. But the quantity of timber applicable to naval purposes has continually decreased, from wanton destruction, or neglect of making new plantations. In 1608, the trees fit for the navy were 123,927; these were reduced, in 1783, to 12,447, or little more than a tenth. No less than from three to four thousand beech trees are cut annually, as assignments of fuel to those who have prescriptive claims on the Forest. The average annual supply of timber for the navy from the New Forest during the late war was 885 loads of oak, and 270 loads of beech. This was floated down the Exe, or Southampton Water, to Portsmouth. The sylvan beauty of the New Forest is unrivalled. Its woods and lawns are everywhere divided by large districts of heath, many of which are of great extent, running several miles without interruption. Different parts, too, both of the open and woody country, are high enough to command extensive prospects. The most interesting parts of the Forest in a picturesque point of view are between the Beaulieu river and the bay of Southampton, where grand water views are continually mingled with richly wooded scenes.

VOL. XXIII.

A considerable portion of the County is occupied also by the Forest of Alice Holt and Woolmer, and the Forest of Bere. This latter is situated to the Northward of the Portsdown hills, and includes about 16,000 acres. The Forest of Alice Holt and Woolmer, on the North-Eastern border, is of nearly the same extent, and contains very valuable timber. During the dry summer of 1741, the extensive sheet of water in the Forest, called Woolmer Pond, having been dried up, its bed was carefully searched, and many hundreds of Roman coins were found in it.

Tillage, though not conducted on a large scale in Hampshire, is nevertheless managed with the greatest skill. Hop plantations are increasing on the Eastern borders of the County. Irrigation in the low lands, particularly near the Tees, is practised with more than ordinary success; the water meadows of this part of the County are thought to be the most valuable lands in the kingdom. The culture of saintfoin, also, is encouraged by the calcareous nature of the soil, which appears peculiarly adapted to the growth of that valuable grass.

The cattle of Hampshire are of mixed races. The farmers pride themselves on the fine condition of their team horses, which are of a very excellent race. Four of these strong horses are thought requisite to plough the heavy soils, but on the lighter lands, and with the single-wheeled plough, two will sometimes perform the work; they are very seldom yoked abreast. This County has been always famous for the breeding and fattening of hogs. Bacon is the chief animal food of the farmers and the rural peasantry; a great quantity is also exported. In the vicinity of the Forest, the hogs are fed with acorns and beech mast; and the animals so fattened are considered much superior to others in the quality of their bacon. They sometimes weigh as much as 800 pounds, though the average does not, perhaps, exceed 450 pounds. The indigenous horned sheep have been nearly supplanted, of late years, by those of the Southdown breed, which are found to fatten on a less quantity of food. The flocks are very large, and the downs are mostly covered with them. The whole number of sheep annually fed in the County has been estimated at 350,000.

The manufactures of Hampshire are unimportant, except those which are carried on in Portsmouth for the supply of the Naval Arsenal. Woollen goods are manufactured on a small scale in the principal towns, and paper also is made at Romsey and Overton. The mills of this latter place have supplied, ever since the reign of George I., the whole of the thin paper used by the Bank of England in the manufacture of their notes. A large quantity of salt was formerly made on the shores near Lymington; but this branch of industry has been continually on the decline, the expense of fuel rendering it difficult to compete with the salt works of the Northern Counties. At the commencement of the present century, the quantity of salt annually made at Lymington was 5000 tons; at present, the crystals known as Epsom salts, made from the bitters, or recrementitious brine, alone yields a profit. The large quantities of wood ashes found here, on the shore near the site of the present salt works, gives rise to a conjecture, that the natural advantages of the place for the manufacture of salt

HAMP-
SHIRE.

Bere.

Alice Holt.

Cultivation.

Stock.

Manufactures

HAMP-
SHIRE.

were not neglected by the ancient Britons. At Weyhill, not far from Andover, is held annually one of the greatest fairs in England for sheep, hops, and cheese. It is the chief market for the Farnham hops, and upwards of 140,000 sheep have been sold in it in one day. The fair commences the day before Michaelmas, and generally lasts a week.

Divisions,
&c.

Hampshire is divided into 52 Hundreds according to Vancouver, who, perhaps, reckons the several liberties and jurisdictions, the Hundreds in Driver's survey being only 39. The latter writer, in the same way, states the number of parishes to be 253, while the former makes them 356. There is one city, Winchester, 20 market towns, and about 1000 villages. The Town of Southampton is a County in itself, and also the County Town, though the Sessions are held at Winchester. Besides the Members for the County, two are also returned to Parliament for each of the following places; viz. Winchester, Southampton, Christchurch, Portsmouth, Petersfield, Stockbridge, Lymington, Whitchurch, and Andover; making 20 in all, besides six returned from the Isle of Wight.

Population.

The population of this County amounted in 1801..... to..... 226,900,

1811..... 245,080,

and in 1821..... 283,298;

thus exhibiting a very uniform rate of increase. From the returns made during the last census, it appeared that the families employed

In agriculture were 24,303

In trade, manufactures, &c. 19,810

Not comprised in the former classes. . . 13,829.

The chief places in this County, not mentioned below, are noticed separately in their alphabetical order.

Beaulieu

Beaulieu, a village on a small stream of the same name, is remarkable only for the remains of its Abbey, which stands in a beautiful circular valley, bounded by richly wooded hills on the Eastern bank of the river. It was founded by King John, in 1204, for Cistercian Monks, in consequence, as the legend runs, of a dream, in which he was so severely scourged, that his shoulders tingled after his awakening, by Abbots of that Order, to which he had always shown himself particularly hostile, and which he had recently treated with great contempt and cruelty. (Dugdale, Mon. Ang. i. 926. App. II.) The outer wall, comprising a circumference of nearly a mile and a quarter, is almost entire. The chief gateway also still remains. Besides these, the Abbot's lodging, with the Hall, the Dormitory, and Kitchen, are well preserved. The Refectory has become the village Church, for the Abbey Church itself has been entirely destroyed. Beaulieu afforded sanctuary to two distinguished, though by no means similar personages in English History, Margaret of Anjou and Perkin Warbeck.

Fareham.

Fareham is a sea-port town at the North-West extremity of Portsmouth Harbour, to which it owes its prosperity. Small vessels are built in it; cordage, sacking, and coarse pottery is manufactured; and there is a considerable coal trade. It is frequented also as a Bathing place. Population, in 1821, 3325. Distant 12 miles South-East from Southampton, 73 South-West from London.

Lyndhurst.

Lyndhurst, nearly in the centre of the New Forest, may be considered the Capital of that district. The jurisdiction of the Chief Justice in Eyre was exercised in it, and the Forest Courts are still held there. The King's House is occupied by the Lord Warden whenever he visits the Forest; it is but a mean residence, but the stables are of great extent. A stirrup, reputed to be that used by William Rufus when he received his death-wound, is among the wonders of the place exhibited to travellers. Population, in 1821, 1015. Distant from Southampton 9½ miles West by South. The village gives his title to the present Lord Chancellor Copley.

Odiham is a small market town, on the road from London to Winchester, and was once a Free Borough. It appears to have been a Royal residence; some remains, now converted into a farm-house, are known as Place (Palace) Gate. To the West of the ancient Church is a huge chalk-pit. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in spinning worsted and winding silk. It is the birth-place of Lilly the Grammarian. The remains of Odiham Castle stand about a mile North-West from the town. Within its walls King David Bruce was confined during 11 years. Population, in 1821, 1104. Distance 41 miles South-West from London.

Romsey is a large and ancient market town, on the road between Salisbury and Southampton, surrounded by meadows overflowed by the River Test. In this town Edward the Elder founded an Abbey for Benedictine Nuns, and made his daughter Elfreda the first Abbess. The post was frequently, afterwards, filled by Ladies of the Royal Blood. The Abbey Church, a spacious and interesting building, is still used for public worship to the two Parishes of Romsey infra and extra. Sir William Petty, the founder of the Lansdowne Family, is buried within its walls. He was a native of this town, the son of a clothier: clothing having formerly been carried on in it to a considerable extent. Population, in 1821, 5217. Distance 74 miles West from London, eight North North-West from Southampton.

Selborne is a pleasant village on the Western skirts of Woolmer Forest. It was a Royal Manor in Saxon times. A Priory of Augustins was founded in it in 1232. The village is best known by the attractive Work of one of its former incumbents, Gilbert White, The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne. Population, in 1821, 770.

Titchfield is a market town on a river of the same name. The Church is of great antiquity, and near the town are the ruins of Titchfield House, the seat of the family of Wriothesley. Within its walls Charles I. concealed himself after his escape from Hampton Court. Little is now left but the gateway. Population, in 1821, 3227. Distant three miles West from Fareham.

Warner's Topographical Remarks on Hampshire, 2 vols. 1793; Gilpin, Remarks on Forest Scenery; Driver's Agricultural Survey of Hants, 1794; Vancouver's Agricultural Survey of Hants, 1810; Beauties of England and Wales.

HAMPSHIRE, (NEW,) one of the UNITED STATES of North America, is bounded on the West by Vermont, on the South by Massachusetts, on the East by Maine, and on the North, where it is most contracted, by Canada. At its South-Eastern angle the Atlantic washes a shore not exceeding 18 miles in extent. The extreme length of this Province from South to North is 168 miles, its breadth, decreasing towards the North, from 90 to 19. Its area, according to Melish, who has

HAMP-
SHIRE.
—
HAMP-SHIRE,
NEW.

HAMP-SHIRE,
NEW.HAMP-SHIRE,
NEW.

Surface.

executed good maps of the States, is about 8500 square miles, or 5,440,000 acres, 100,000 of which are covered with water.

The South-Eastern portion of New Hampshire towards the sea is low and sandy, with extensive and valuable salt-marshes affording excellent pasture for sheep and cattle. About 30 miles from the shore, the land begins to rise, and the Blue Hills traverse the country in a direction nearly parallel to the Atlantic. To the Westward of these are numerous detached mountains scattered over an elevated plain. Beyond these again rise the White Mountains, the loftiest portion of the chain which crosses New England. Mount Washington, the highest point, is 6600 feet above the level of the sea, and numerous other peaks attain an elevation nearly equal. They are visible at a distance of 80 miles from the South; it is said that they appear higher from the North, and may be seen from the neighbourhood of Chamblee and Quebec. The number of summits in this cluster cannot be ascertained, the country around them being a thick wilderness. They appear to be covered with snow during nine or ten months of the year, and to owe their brilliant whiteness to this cause, as, during the heats of summer, they appear of a pale blue colour.

Rivers.

Along the base of this mountain chain, on the Western side, runs the Connecticut river, which separates this Province from that of Vermont. In this part of its course, its annual increase, after the melting of the snow, is ten feet, and sometimes it has been known to double this elevation. The rivers which more properly belong to New Hampshire, are the Merrimac, Piscataqua, Saco, Androscoggin, Upper and Lower Ammonoosuk, and some smaller streams. The Merrimac is formed of the waters of the Pemigewasset and Winipiseogee, streams which issue from a mountain West of the White Hills; after their union the course of the river is 100 miles to its outlet in the ocean at Newbury Port. The Piscataqua river issues from a marsh, and runs in a South-Eastern direction to the sea, a distance of 50 miles, forming the boundary between New Hampshire and Maine. A branch of this river, called the Swanscal, has sufficient depth of water for vessels of 500 tons. The navigation of all these rivers, at different distances from the sea, is interrupted by frequent and rapid cascades.

Lakes.

The lakes are numerous. The largest, known by the name of Winipiseogee, is 24 miles in length from 3 to 12 in breadth, and contains many islands. It is frozen over during three months of the year, when the ice is strong enough to bear teams and loaded sledges; at other seasons it is navigable by good sized vessels.

Harbours.

The only harbour is Portsmouth, two miles from the mouth of the Piscataqua river, where the largest vessels ride in safety every season. It is nearly surrounded by heights which shelter it from every wind, and, owing to the rapidity of the current, is never frozen. Several ships of war have been built in it. Canals have been constructed on the Connecticut and Merrimac rivers, to obviate the inconveniences of falls and rapids, and to extend the facility of communication across deep marshes.

Isles of shoals.

The Isles of Shoals lie off the mouth of the Piscataqua. From one of these Islets, called Smutty Nose, a jetty, of great importance to navigators frequenting this coast, was begun in the summer of 1822, and finished two years afterwards. It is 784 feet in length, reaching from the abovementioned rock to the Isle of Cedars, 11 feet broad at the surface, 6 feet above the highest tide, and in from four to six fathoms of water. The bay formed by this pier offers a secure port for vessels bound to Portsmouth, when hindered by Northerly winds or tides from ascending the river.

The climate of New Hampshire is healthy, though rather severe. The inhabitants are strong and robust, with florid complexions. Instances of remarkable longevity are more frequent among them than in any other of the United States. Frosts commence in September, and the snow is not melted in the open country until April. During the summer months the temperature varies extremely, sudden transitions from intense heat to severe cold not unfrequently taking place. The central plains, from which the mountains rise immediately, have a general elevation of 1800 feet above the level of the sea.

The swamp, or bog iron ore, which, previous to the Revolution, was found in large quantities in Lamprey Eel river, and furnished iron of excellent quality, is at present exhausted; but iron mines have been opened in the district of Franconia, in the North-West part of the State, and more recently another in Enfield. Native silver is said to be found in slender masses at West mountain. Ochres and potters' clay are abundant. Talc in large plates occurs in Walpole; it is used for the windows of ships. In the neighbourhood of Dartmouth College, in the Lamprey river, are large beds of fossil oysters.

All the valleys of New Hampshire are remarkably fertile, and agriculture is the sole occupation of the inhabitants. The lowlands between the rivers produce from 40 to 50 bushels of wheat per acre; the uplands half that quantity. Indian corn and rye are generally sown on the new lands. Flax, hemp, and culinary vegetables are also produced in abundance. The crops of hay in the lowland meadows average about a ton per acre, and two tons of clover. It is along the banks of the Connecticut that the progress of agriculture is most apparent. The orchards in that quarter are numerous, and the fruit is of the best quality. Horses are few, and much neglected in this State, their place being supplied in the labours of the field by oxen. The horned cattle, which were first introduced from Denmark, are of a large and excellent breed. Swine are numerous in the woods, whence they are driven, when harvest is over, and fattened on Indian corn.

The extensive woods of New Hampshire affording abundance of ship-timber and resin, are favourable to ship-building as a branch of commerce. The manufactures subservient to naval purposes are much cultivated. Sail-cloth is made in large quantities, and the iron-works at Exeter are adequate to supply the consumption of the State. Small vessels are built in the neighbourhood of the woods several miles from the river. They are afterwards drawn on strong sledges, when the snow is deep, by 100 or 200 oxen, and laid on the ice, which melting in Spring, leaves them afloat. The white pines of the mountain forests furnish excellent masts, 150 feet in length.

The exports of the State are lumber,* ship timber, pot and pearl ashes, flax-seed, Indian corn, beef, pork, dried and pickled fish. The value of the average exportations for 10 years preceding 1812 was 451,297

* Lumber, in the American trade, includes stowage-wood and small timber, as spars, hoops, &c.

HAMP-
SHIRE,
NEW.

dollars. A few vessels are employed in the cod fisheries, but this branch of trade, as indeed the commerce of the State generally, does not augment in similar ratio to the population and agricultural produce. In 1816, the shipping engaged in foreign trade were 24,589 tons; 3281 tons were employed in the coasting trade, and 1920 in the fisheries, exclusive of small vessels under 20 tons. In 1806, the sum total of tonnage employed was 22,798. In 1823, there existed from 50 to 60 cotton factories, and above 33,000,000 yards were manufactured. The cotton cloth made in the State in 1810 did not much exceed 4,250,000 yards. The amount of capital engaged in commerce and manufactures has trebled since 1815, being at present two millions and a half of dollars.

Divisions.

New Hampshire is divided into six Counties; viz.

	Townships.	Chief Towns.
Cheshire, containing	35	Keene.
Coos	24	Lancaster.
Grafton	35	Haverhill.
Hillsborough	42	Amherst.
Rockingham	46	{ CONCORD.
		{ Portsmouth.
		{ Exeter.
Strafford	31	Dover.

In the census of 1820 it was found that slavery had totally disappeared from the State. The few slaves who previously existed here, were owned by merchants in Portsmouth, the labour of the field being always performed by whites.

Population.

The population of this State does not at present, perhaps, fall much short of 270,000 souls. This being one of the States towards which the tide of immigration is most steadily directed, the increase of population since the Peace has been proportionably great. The population of New Hampshire in the year

1790 was	141,885
1800	183,858
1810	214,460
1820	244,161.

Portsmouth.

Portsmouth is the most important place, and the only port in the State. It is a well built town in the Piscataqua, with many elegant mansions. The harbour has 42 feet of water. On Navy Island, opposite to the town, and belonging to the general Government, there is a Naval Arsenal and Dock-yard, on which great sums have been expended. The population of Portsmouth is about 8000. Longitude 70° 42' West, latitude 43° 5' North.

Concord.

Concord, the Capital of the State and seat of Government, is not one-third of the size of the preceding town. It occupies, however, a favourable situation at the head of the navigation of the Merrimac, and is likely to become the emporium of a great inland trade.

Character
and manners.

The character of the people of New Hampshire resembles that of the other New England States. They are grave, sober, and persevering, somewhat phlegmatic and austere. Marriage is so general, that it is hard to find in the country an unmarried man of thirty years of age. Instances of intoxication are very rare, cider being the common drink, and spirituous liquors but little used.

The arts employed by the Indians to take fish are still preserved by the inhabitants of this State. In the river Piscataqua lobsters and flat fish are taken chiefly in the night. They are attracted to the canoe by the flame of a knot of the pitch pine, which exposes them to the view of the fishermen, who are expert in lancing them with a spear. Salmon, eels, and other fish are taken in the river by nets, and baskets of Indian contrivance. Wolves, bears, and martens are taken by Indian log-traps. The flesh of animals is preserved during a considerable part of the year by stuffing and covering them with snow. In like manner, the Indian method of preparing leather by soaking it in the brains and marrow of the animal, with the various modes of dressing Indian corn, practised by the natives, are among the usages of the inhabitants of this State.

In conformity with the principle declared by the American Constitution, "that it shall be the duty of the legislators and magistrates to cherish the interests of Literature," 80,000 acres of land were allotted for the support of Dartmouth College. This Institution is situated in a fine elevated plain, about half a mile from Connecticut river. The number of students is nearly 200; the revenues of the establishment were 3500 dollars in 1816; but, from donations and the regular increase of rents, they are rapidly augmenting. There are also four endowed Academies in the State, viz. at Exeter, New Ipswich, Atkinson, and Amherst.

The legislative power of the State resides in a Senate and a House of Representatives, which occasionally unite to form a General Court, or Assembly. Money Bills originate with the Representatives. The Senators, 13 in number, are elected annually. The number of the Representatives increases with the population, according to a determined scale. The executive power is lodged with the Governor and five Councillors, all annually chosen by the people. For the administration of justice, the State has a superior Court, with four Judges, who make two circuits annually through the Counties; and an inferior Court in each County, with the same number of Judges. The police is intrusted entirely to the Townships, each of which may make what regulations it pleases to secure its internal tranquillity. The Militia of this State is about 25,000 men.

The coast of New Hampshire and the River Piscataqua were discovered in 1614 by Captain Smith, and the first settlements were formed in 1623 under the direction of a Company, associated by virtue of a grant to one Mason of all the lands lying between the rivers Neumreag, Salem, and the Merrimac, from their sources to the ocean, including all islands within three miles of the coast. Civil dissensions frustrated every attempt to establish a system of administration; and the colony, in consequence, renounced the right of self-government, and placed itself under the control of Massachusetts. But disputes relating to the property of lands purchased from the Indians, brought about the separation of the Province; and a Royal Government, established by a Commission of Charles II., existed till the Convention of 1775. For many years after the first establishments, the Indians had carried on an active war with the settlers, who were thus inured to military life, and were enabled to render important services in the struggle for independence. The first form of government adopted by the people, was established in the Provincial Congress at Exeter, on the 5th of January, 1776, which assumed the name and authority of a House of Representatives. Subsequently, in 1784, was adopted a more complete and perfect Constitution, similar to that of Massachusetts.

Bleknapp's History of New Hampshire, 2 vols.

HAMP-
SHIRE,
NEW.

HAMP- 1798; Morse's American Geography; Seybert's Statistics of America, 1818; Warden's Survey of the United States, 3 vols. 8vo, 1823.

SHIRE, NEW. HANCE, } i. e. Enhance, q. v. To raise, to ele-
HAND. HA'NCING. } vate.

They haunce her cause with false surquidrie.
Chaucer. Complaint of the Black Knight, fol. 272.

But sothly they change her almicanteras, for the haunsing of the pole, and the distance of the sunne.

Id. Of the Astrolabie, fol. 269.

HANCE.

HAND.

H A N D.

HAND, v. } Goth. handus; A.S. hand; D. hand,
HAND, n. } hant; Ger. hand, handt; Sw. hand;
HA'NDER, } from the A. S. hent-an; Ger. hend- HA'NDFUL, } en; Sw. hænta, capere, to take;
HA'NDLE, v. } Wachter is persuaded to prefer this HA'NDLE, n. } Etymology, quia manus in corpore
HA'NDLESS, } humano est naturale et unicum capiendi instrumentum: the verb (hend- HA'NDLING, } den) he derives from the Lat. hend- HA'NDY, } ere, (used only in composition,) which in Tooke's opinion is just the HA'NDILY, } reverse of the truth. See Diversions of Purley, ii. 299.
HA'NDINESS. } and 352

"Hand; that limb by which things are taken;

"Handle, or hand-del; a small part taken hold of."

Hand,—That which takes or holds,—is extended in its application, to that (generally) which acts or performs, guides or manages, any act or performance, any work or workmanship; and is transferred to that which is taken or held; to the act, or agency, or agent, the guide or guider, manager or management, worker or workmanship; and further, to the manner, or means, or measure, the state or condition, as compared with the relation of the hand to the body.

To hand, the verb,

To do any thing with, or which may be done with, the hand; to move any thing, or perform any motion, (sc. with the hand.) Applied met.

þou ne schalt (bi hym þat made me) of scapie so lyȝte, þe while þer ys in my ryȝht hond enȝ strengþe & myȝte;
And while y may þer wyt myn hond axe vp drawe,
Wher with ich habbe geandes mony on y s'lawe.

R. Gloucester, p. 25.

"Madame," he seyde, "vor Gode's loue, ys þys wel y do,"
"þat þou þys unclene lymes handlest & cust so?"

Id. p. 435.

Kýnewolf toke þe kyngdom (for better mot not falle)
& siþen toke þe feaute of þe kýnges alle,
As his ancestres had it befor hand.

R. Brunne, p. 9

Paul after is prechýnge. panȝers he made

And wan whith hus hondes. al þat hym neodýde.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 286.

But to Israel he seith, al dai I streighte out myne hondis to a peple that bileuyde not but aghenseide me.

Wiclif. Romaynes, ch. x.

And agaynste Israel he sayeth: all daye longe haue I stretched forthe my handes vnto a people that beleueth not, but speaketh againste me.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And on a wall this king his eyen cast,
And saw an hand armles, that wrote ful fast,
For fere of whiche he quoke, and siked sore.

Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 12009.

— These ladies weren nothing glad

To handle hire clothes wherein she was clad.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8252.

Which thinges as instrumentes ye vsen, as your hands apart to handale, feete to goe.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, book iii. fol. 317.

With hasty hondling of his hood.

Id. Dreame, fol. 363.

And glene my handfuls of the shedding after their hands.

Id. The Testament of Loue, book i. fol. 285.

They shall not regarde theyr king and prynces, the wayes of their doynges & handlings shal be in their power.

Bible, Anno 1551. Fourth Book of Esdras, ch. xv.

And thus thei left it out of honde

For lacke of grace, and it forsoke.

Gower. Conf. Am. Prologue, fol. 6.

I haue fedde the hougrie: I haue restored the one handed to bothe.

Udall. John, ch. x.

And among all these folke were seuen hundred lefte handed men, which euery one could flyng stoues at an hear breadth, and not mysse.

Bible, Anno 1551. Judges, ch. xx.

They executed his commaundement out of hande, and sente hym both his ful number of hostages, and also grayn for his army.

Golding. Caesar, book v.

Saubarzanes there made a challenge to fyght hande to hande, if anye man durste come fourth and proue his strength.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book vii. fol. 184.

You see, quod hee, our foes, with furious force at hand,

And in whose handes our handfull heere, vnable is to stand.

Gascoigne. Deuise of a Maske, &c.

Than Sõe sayd to the erle, sir, ye se yonder your enemyes, they be but a handefull of men, as to the regarde of your company, and sir, they can nat flye away.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. 399.

So muche the more miserable was he, because he was wont with hys handie labor, to fynde bothe hymselfe and also al his poore housholde.

Udall. Mark, ch. iii.

Amonge these exercises it shall be conueniente, to lerne to handle sondry waypōs, specyally the sword and the bataile axe.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. xvii.

He then should well decypher himselfe, and well declare thereby yt he would gladly catch holde of some small handell to kepe hys money fast, rather then help his frendes in their necessitie.

Sir Thomas More. The Supplication of Soules, fol. 330.

They left behinde them certain stauies so finely wrought that they were very beautiful to behold, considering how cunningly they were made with a handle and a corde to fling them.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 405. Francisco de Ulloa.

You are a counsellor, if you can command these elements to silence, and worke the peace of the present, wee will not hand a rope more, vse your authoritie.

Shakspeare. Tempest, fol. 1.

— Sooth, when I was yong,

And handed loue, as you do; I was wont

To load my shee with knackes.

Id. Winter's Tale, fol. 294.

— Come, my mates,

I hitherto have lived an ill example,

And, as your captain, led you on to mischief;

But now will truly labour, that good men

HAND.

May say hereafter of me, to my glory,
(Let but my power and means hand with my will,) His good endeavours did weigh down his ill.
Massinger. The Renegado, act iv. sc. 1.

What false Italian
(As poysonous tongu'd, as handed) hath preuail'd
On thy too ready hearing?
Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 381.

I'faith, I would faine see that Dæmon, your cutpurse, you talke of, that delicate handed Diuell.

Ben Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, act iii. sc. 5.

Now, O thou sacred muse, most learned dame,
Faire impe of Phœbus, and his aged bride,
The nurse of time, and euerlasting fame,
That warlike hands ennoblest with immortall name.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

He durst not for offending God & his owne conscience, (although he had occasion, and opportunity) once lay his hands on God's high officer the king.

Homilies. Sermon of Obedience, part ii.

About him exercis'd heroic games
Th' unarmed youth of heav'n, but nigh at hand
Celestiall armourie, shields, helmes, and speares,
Hung high with diamond flaming, and with gold.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 552.

There's 20 duckats in hand, at my return
I'll give you a 100.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Fair Maid of the Inn, act iv.

Because the work might in truth be judged brainish, if nothing but amorous humour were handled therein, I have interwoven matters historicall.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. To the Reader.

All vessels are best handled by their ansæ or ears, on what part soever they stand; he that handleth them otherwise, handleth them but aukwardly: so it is with men's minds: there are in every man's opinion or affections certain ansæ or ears, whereon a wise perswader should lay his hold, to draw men unto him.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture. Discourse 35.

Pursue and use your swiftest speed, that we may take for prise
The shield of old Neleides, which Fame lifts to the skies,
Euen to the handles, telling it, to be of massie gold.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book viii. fol. 108.

That my frayle eies these lines with teares do steepe,
To thinke how she through guyleful handeling,
Though true as touch, though daughter of a king,
Though faire as ever living wight was fayre,
Though nor in word nor deede ill meriting,
Is from her knight divorced in despayre.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 3.

At Ariminum, there were two infants both of free condition borne without eies and nose, and another in the Picene countrey handelesse and footelesse.

Holland. Livius, fol. 879.

So Artegall at length him forst forsake
His horses backe for dread of being drown'd,
And to his handy swimming him betake.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 2.

The lyre was engraved on the arms of the Thebans, because Amphion is said to have built their town by his skill in handling that instrument.

Lewis. The Thebaid of Statius, book vii. (note) 415.

In this text, 'tis evident it [Hell] cannot be understood in that signification, [the state of the damned.] For, that David was not condemned to that place of torment, is agreed on all hands.

Sharpe. Sermon 14. vol. v.

He shall have 50*l.* for such discovery aforesaid of the printer, or the publisher of it from the press, and for the hand of it to the press 100*l.* &c.

Thompson. Life of Marvell.

Yet grant they were
The handers-down, can they from thence infer
A right t'interpret.

Dryden. Religio-Laici.

Therefore it was fit to proceed slowly, that the world might see with what moderation as well as justice the matter was handled.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1529.

An olive's cloudy grain the handle made,
Distinct with studs; and brazen was the blade.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xiii.

Afterwards, his innocence appearing, he was delivered, and escaped those severe handlings that some of the duke's friends and retainers underwent.

Strype. Life of Sir Thomas Smith, ch. iv.

And so much for the explanation of my text, wherein I have been of necessity so large, that I have little time left me for the handling of the useful observations that may be drawn from it.

Bishop Bull. Works, vol. i. p. 131. St. Paul's thorn in the flesh explained.

Of all their treatises on this subject which the ancient ages furnished, and the succeeding ones have handed down to us, the best—without dispute, is that which Cicero wrote concerning the Offices or Duties of men.

Pearce. Sermon 15. vol. i.

I, for one, as a member of this House, and as a Bishop of this realm, lay my hand upon my heart, and say in the most solemn manner, That, in my judgment, we shall best promote these great ends by appointing his royal highness the Prince of Wales and heir apparent to the crown, regent, with full regal power.

Bishop Watson. Speech on the Regency Bill, Jan. 22. 1789.

A common smith, who, though accustomed to handle the hammer, has never been used to make nails, if, upon some particular occasion, he is obliged to attempt it, will scarce, I am assured, be able to make three hundred nails in a day.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. i.

A very learned and polite author, whose just esteem for Cicero's writings has betrayed him, perhaps, into some partiality towards his actions, acknowledges that "the defence of Vatinius gave a plausible handle for some censure upon Cicero."

Melmoth. Cicero to Lentulus, book ii. let. 17. (note 5.)

It will prove, that some degree of care and caution is required in the handling such an object; it will show that you ought not, in reason, to trifle with so large a mass of the interests and feelings of the human race.

Burke. On Conciliation with America.

A good man, who chances to be present, is often backward to rebuke him because he is at a loss about the manner of doing it, and fears to expose a good cause by his method of handling it.

Pearce. Sermon 15. vol. iii.

HAND, in Composition.

He for sok is wyf al out, and Astrild made quene.
He ne dradde noxt þo þat handaxe, as it was ysene.

R. Gloucester, p. 26.

On men of lawe wrong lokede. and largeliche hem profrede
And for to have of here help. handij-dandij payede.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 67.

And Mary seide, lo the hondmayden of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word.

Wiclif. Luke, ch. i.

And Mary said: beholde the handemayden of the Lord, be it vnto me euen as thou hast sayde.

Bible, Anno 1551.

All our drinckes were frozen in the vessels, and the yce through all the ships was aboue a hand-breadthe thicke, as well aboue hatches as beneath.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 226. Jaques Cartier.

But the ground underfoot being slipperie, with the snow on the side of the hill, they handfast fayled.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. fol. 64. M. Frobisher.

A mayde made handefast or sure to a mā in the howse of her father, myght well make a vowe of offerynge to the Lord, but she myght not perfourme it without the consent of her husbände, beyng ones hys wyfe afore God.

Bale. Apology, fol. 151.

A gentleman, being handfasted to a gentlewoman, and sure to her, as he thought; afterwards lost her, being made faster to an other man, than euer she was to him.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, fol. 144.

Three or foure complete harnesses that will abide the shot of a handgun with 10. or 12. targets of steele, being good.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 362. Arthur Edwards.

The handgunshot was innumerable and incredible.

Id. The Losse of Rhodes, vol. ii. fol. 78.

The townes be not only the ornament of the realme, but also the seate of merchaunts, the place of handicraftes.

Sir J. Cheke. Hurt of Sedition, sig. F. 1.

HAND.

HAND.

His death was most hinderance to handicraft-men, for he euer filled their shoppes with store of knackes.

Bale. Pageant of Popes, by Studley, fol. 166.

And often it chanceth that a handicraftsman doth so earnestly bestow his vacant and spare hours in learning, and through diligence so profiteth therein, that he is taken from his handy occupation, and promoted to the company of the learned.

More. Utopia, by Robinson, book ii. ch. iv.

God ought not to be beleued to dwell in temples of man's handiworkes, or in images made by any craft of man.

Udall. Actes, ch. xvii.

We read also that napkins and handkerchiefs were caryed from Paule vnto them that were sicke & possessed with vncleane spirites, and they receaued their health.

Frith. On the Sacrament, fol. 155.

And we hunted so litell for reward at your handes, that we wrought with oure handelabour daye and night, to get our lyuing withal, because we would be a burthen to none of you all.

Udall. 1 Thessalonians, ch. ii.

And yet I haue strawe and prouander for our asses, and breade and wyne for me & thy handemayde.

Bible, Anno 1551. Judges, ch. xix.

But when their cause should be discided with blowes & hand-strokes, their fury was assuaged & refrigerate.

Hall. Henry VII. The fourth Yere.

And ye whyche were deade in synne thorowe the vncircumcision of youre fleshe, hathe he quykened w^t him and hathe forgeuen vs al our trespasses, & hathe put out the hande-wrytyng that was againste vs.

Bible, Anno 1551. Colossians, ch. ii.

Albertus de modo significandi

And Donatus, be dryuen out of schole

Prisians hed broken, now handy-dandy.

Skelton. Speake Parrot.

And the poore vulgare people cleane to deuoure vnder the colour of goyng on pilgrimage to thys or that stocke of mannes handymaking.

Udall. Luke. Preface.

The Frenchmen strongly withstod the fearceues of Thenglishmen when thei came to handystrokes, so that the fight was very doubtful & perilous.

Hall. Henry V. The third Yere.

He used a great deal of exercise, on the score of his health; he played often at hand-ball, even after he was turned of seventy.

Life of Hobbes, prefixed to his Works.

For 'tis a misery to see how our fairest trees are defac'd, and mangl'd by unskillful woodmen, and mischievous bordurers, who go always armed with short hand-bills, hacking and chopping off all that comes in their way.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. xxviii.

His [Augustus] neece Julia had a little dwarfish fellow not above two foot and a hand-breath high, called Canopas, whome she set great store by and made much of.

Holland. Plinie, book vii. ch. xvi.

We saw him strutting in the temple, where

Broaching his most blasphemous pride, he cry'd,

This hand-erected house I down will tear,

And rear another where no hand shall guide,

Or help the building.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 13. st. 66.

And can it be, that this most perfect creature,

This image of his Maker, well squar'd man,

Should leave the handfast, that he had of grace,

To fall into a woman's easie armes.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Woman Hater, act iii.

ANT. If that sheheard be not in handfast, let him flye.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 297.

He that tooke him [Sir James of Desmond] was a smith, and seruant to Sir Cormac, who forthwith handfasted him.

Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, Anno 1580.

The which if the Scottes would most holilie and handfastlie promise, the English would forthwith depart with a quiet armie.

Id. History of Scotland, Anno 1546.

Many of them were slaine that came to close hand-fight, many likewise of those that ran away.

Holland. Livius, fol. 795.

From thence gathering the whole intention of the conceit, ye may as in a handful gripe al the discourse, which otherwise may happily seem tedious and confused.

Spenser. Explanation of his Faerie Queene.

If, says he, thou had'st said, thirty years for ten, thou mightest have been thought to have erred in hand-gesture of the account or number; leaving the fingers open which should have made a circle, that is, which should have met, (or clos'd.)

Holiday. Juvenal. Satire 10. Illust.

The Frenchmen stood manfully at their defence with handgunnes and pykes, but the Englishe men shot so wholly together that they drave the Frenchmen out of the towne.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The fifteenth Yere.

Oh how manie trades and handicrafts are now in England, whereof the common wealth hath no need?

Holinshed. Description of England.

John Speed was born at Farrington in this county, as his own daughter hath informed me. He was first bred to a handicraft, and as I take it to a taylor.

Fuller. Worthies. Cheshire.

Having gathered to them a multitude of artises and handicrafts-men, whom in hope of spoile they had called forth, they purpose and prepare to besiege the cittie also, which aforetime had been altogether unacquainted with the like sturres.

Holland. Livius, fol. 146.

And the words in Nehem. [in all the cities] seem to extend to the handy-crafts-men, for citizens commonly occupy not fields, or husbandry, which is rather proper unto the villages and country people.

Spelman. On Tythes, fol. 103.

IACH. As faire, and as good: a kind of hand in hand comparison, had beene something too faire, and too good for any lady in Britaine.

Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 372.

I have the knowledge of all the fowles of the ayre, the beauty of the field is my handy-workes, mine is the whole circuite of the world, and all the plenty that is in it.

Homilies. Sermon for Rogation Weeke, part ii.

And so covering his head, and holding an handkerchiefe before his face, to horseback hee went.

Holland. Suetonius. Nero Claudius Cæsar, fol. 205.

My Delia hath the waters of mine eyes,

The ready hand-maids on her grace t'attend;

That never fall to ebb, but ever dries;

For to their flow she never grants an end.

Daniel. Sonnets to Delia, son. 45.

He [Scipio] had also provision from the several towns; corn, iron, canvas for sails, axes, beed-hooks, hand-mills, and the like implements.

Raleigh. History of the World, book v. ch. iii. sec. 18.

BAYL. Cheese, that would break the teeth of a new hand-saw,

I could endure like an oastrich, or salt beef,

That Cesar left in pickel.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Pilgrimage, act ii.

TRA. If I fail you

Now I have found the way, use marshal law

And cut my head off with a hand-saw.

Id. The Tamer Tamed, act iv.

And Homer very well in his poem feigned that Teucer was an excellent archer, and became famous thereby, but his brother Ajax was best at close fight and hand-strokes, standing to it heavily armed at all peeces.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 151.

And when you see the battailes buckle together pell mell, and come to hand-strokes, whiles they are busied and occupied one way, fright them another way with your horsemen, ride among their ranks as they fight, and breake their arraies.

Id. Livius, fol. 224.

Though I am tame and bred up with my wrongs,

Which are my foster-brothers, I may leap

Like a hand-wolf into my wilderness,

And do an outrage: pray thee do not mock me

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Maid's Tragedy, act iv.

'Tis upon this foundation that physicians ordain the application of pigeons or puppies, or some other hot animals, to the soles of the feet, or the hand-wrists, or the stomachs, or navils of their patients.

Digby. Of the Power of Sympathy.

HAND.

HAND.

If y^e skin were parchment, and y^e blows you gave were ink,
Your owne hande-writing would tell you what I thinke.
Shakspeare. Comedy of Errors, fol. 90.

Alexander, who was shot at on every hand, from the towres, adjoining, (for no man durst come to handy-blows with him upon the wall) leapt off the wall down into the castle yard, and setting his back to a wall there, slew sundry that came to assault him with his own hand.
Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3678

Hearke in thine eare: change places, and handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the theefe?
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 303.

Look here, here's for him; handy-dandy, which hand will you have?
Ben Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, act iii. sc. 5.

Gobrias runne into a dark and secret room, together with one of the usurping tyrants of Persia, called Magi, whom he pursued hard, and at handy-gripes struggling, grappling, and wrestling close together.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 71.

The courage of that enemy is for ever conquered, who is forced to confesse that he was vanquished not by cunning, nor by venture, but in just and lawful warre by maine strength and close fight at handie-gripes.
Id. Livius, fol. 1143.

The castle being situated in an high place, and having a long prospect into all the parts about, gave them warning by a certain sign, when the enemies did issue forth, so as seldom they came to handy-strokes.
Spotswood. Church of Scotland, book v. Anno 1571.

For the French men strongly withstood the fiercenesse of the English men, when they came to handie-strokes, so that the fight was very doubtful and perillous.
Grafton. Henry V. The third Yere.

October 6th, was a Spaniard buried at Westminster in the Abbey, with singing performed both by English and Spaniards, and a hand-bell before ringing.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1554.

Our age is but an hand-breath in itself; but, compared to eternity, it is not an hair's-breadth, yea it is nothing, it bears no proportion.
Bishop Bull. Works, vol. ii. Sermon 20.

The enemy took here, and in the town, as also of those who pursued them in the night contrary to my orders, fourscore prisoners: and had taken more, if they had not received a cheek upon their first arrival in the town by a handfull of men.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 124.

Ovid, with all his sweetness, has as little variety of numbers and sound as he; he is always as it were upon the hand-gallop, and his verse runs upon carpet ground.
Dryden. Preface to the Second Part of Poetical Miscellanies.

His pills as thick as hand-granadoes flew.

Roscommon. An Essay on translated Verse.

At last with hand-granadoes, we obliged them to quit their work, and to leave their tools behind them, with their provisions for three or four days.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 70.

The Spaniards never came from behind the bushes where they first planted themselves; they having not above three or four hand-guns, the rest of them being armed with lances.
Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1684.

The men of the country are very cunning and ingenious in handicraft works; but withall very idle.
Spectator, No. 50.

They have seen several letters, all of them of the hand-writing of our royal father, to the said marquis.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 287.

A great many merchants constantly residing in the city besides shop-keepers, and handy-craftsmen in abundance.
Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1687.

Go bathe, and rob'd in white, ascend the towers;
With all thy hand-maids thank th' immortal powers.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book xvii.

We find and feel that colds, coughs, rheums, fevers, cholics, palsies, and other dangerous and mortal diseases, are begotten by the violence of damps, winds, or other contusing operations entering at the hand-wrists, pit of the neck, &c.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 347. Letters from several Persons.

Both parties now were drawn so close,
Almost to come to handy-blows.

Butler. Hudibras, part i. can. 2.

For now the mastiffs, charging home
To blows and handy-gripes were come.

Id. Ib. part i. can. 2.

"[Hang] me," says he, "if I won't walk in the rain rather than get into their hand-barrows again."

Fielding. The Foundling, ch. iii.

By the means of this gentleman, and of his associates of the same description, one of the most insidious and dangerous hand-bills that ever was seen, had been circulated at Norwich against the war, drawn up in an hypocritical tone of compassion for the poor.

Burke. Observations on the Conduct of the Minority.

See Bedlam's closetted and hand-cuff'd charge
Surpass'd in frenzy by the mad at large.

Cowper. Tirocinium.

Were they then to be awed by the super-eminent authority and awfull dignity of a handfull of country clowns, who have seats in that assembly, some of whom are said not to be able to read or write?

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

Neither of the statutes of Westminster had any effect on the decision in Beddingfield's case; nor was that of St. John at all influenced by the subsequent prohibition of hand-guns.

Sir William Jones. Works, vol. vii. p. 489. The Legal Mode of suppressing Riots.

And amongst their articles of handicraft may be reckoned small square fans of mat or wicker-work, with handles tapering from them of the same, or of wood; which are neatly wrought with small cords of hair, and fibres of the cocoa-nut coir intermixt.

Cook. Third Voyage, book iii. ch. xii.

It was desired by the aldermen, that the testimonials of churchwardens and overseers should be admitted; and that all hired servants, and all apprentices to handicraftsmen, should be considered as poor.

Johnson. The Life of Garth.

Men of science should leave controversy to the little world below them; and then we might see Rock and Franks walking together hand-in-hand, smiling onward to immortality.

Goldsmith. The Citizen of the World, let. 67.

When Burnet preach'd, part of his congregation hummed so loudly and so long, that he set down to enjoy it, and rubbed his face with his handkerchief.

Johnson. Life of Sprat.

Yet considering its vast power in morals, one cannot enough lament the ill destiny of this divine art, (painting,) which, from the chaste hand-maid of virtue, hath been debauched, in violence to her nature, to a shameless prostitute of vice, and procuress of pleasure.

Hurd. Works, vol. i. p. 377. Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

There are water-mills in Sky and Raasay; but where they are too far distant, the housewives grind their oats with a quern, or hand-mill, which consists of two stones, about a foot and a half in diameter; the lower is a little convex, to which the concavity of the upper part must be fitted.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

A good model once chosen, will lead them in the journey of life as a hand-post directs the traveller over a wide waste or forest.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 21.

But as we had always been able to keep it under with the hand-pumps, it gave us no great uneasiness till the 13th, about six in the afternoon, when we were greatly alarmed by a sudden inundation that deluged the whole space between decks.

Cook. Voyages, book vi. ch. i.

My muse with Lloyd alone contends;

Why then fall foul upon his friends?

Unless to show, like handy-dandy,

Or Churchill's ghost, or Tristram Shandy.

Lloyd. The Cobbler of Cripplegate's Letter.

They are, I think, the handy-work of some Jew or Christian, and a sorry imitation of the tenth commandment.

Jortin. Works, vol. i. p. 335. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

A HAND, by the statute 33 Henry VIII. 5., is four inches in breadth. Among jockeys, as the measure of a horse, it is four fingers in breadth, the measure of the fist when clenched: but this, from the variation of different hands, is plainly a very loose estimate.

HAND.

HAND-
SELL.HAND-SOME.

HANDSELL, v. } A. S. hand-selen, or sylen, man- HA'NDSSELL, n. } cipatio; a putting over into another's hand, or possession. Hence our handsell.
Somner. And Junius, that it is a word of Saxon origin, composed of hand and sellan, the latter signifying not only vendere but dare; and that handsell is equivalent to hand-gift. And see Jamieson, and Tooke, ii. 273.

A sale, gift, or delivery into the hand of another; a taking or receiving in hand; applied to the first delivery or receiving; to a first using; to a delivery or receiving as a pledge, or earnest, of something to follow.

Geuen Gloton with glad chere goud ale to ansele.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 106.

— Aeneas first the rusticke sort sets on For happy hansels sake, and Latynes layes the ground uppon. (stravit- que Latinos.)

Phaer. Virgil. Aeneidos, book x.

MOR. I reckon for the best still: this night then I shall enjoy her.

PETRO. You shall handsel her.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Tamer Tamed, act. ii.

For earst I had obseru'd this arte,

Delay giues men desier:

Yeat lothe to hurt my haste, and least

The hansell should retyer,

I was not ouer coye, nor he

To warme him at my fier.

Warner. Albion's England, book ix. ch. xlvii.

For consecrating after popes

They golden rites prefer,

And, hansling Rome with heresies,

In factious schismes did erre.

Id. Ib. book xii. ch. lxxv.

And Eutropius reporteth, that even unto this time, when a new Emperour came to be received of the Senate, among the cries of good handsell, and the wishes of good luck that were made unto him, one was, Happier be thou than Augustus, and better than Trajan.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch. Amiot to the Readers.

Neither as yet is it for certaine knowne, why he first and above all others was counted a meet man to take hansell, or take sey of this new dignitie and promotion.

Holland. Livius, fol. 188.

Lemon in his Dictionary, as cited in the notes on Brand's Popular Antiquities, (ii. 572.) explains HAND-SELL to be the first money received at market, which many superstitious people will spit on, either to render it tenacious that it may remain with them and not vanish away like a Fairy Gift, or else to render it propitious and lucky, that it may draw more money to it. Misson, who took refuge in England after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz, notices this custom (which still exists;) his words are:—Une espece de pourvoyeuse me disoit l'autre jour, que les Bouchères de Londres, (the Butcher-women, as Ozell strangely translates it; more probably the wives of the Butchers who served in their husbands' shops,) les femmes qui apportent de la volaille au marché, du beurre, des œufs, &c., et toutes sortes des gens font un cas particulier de l'argent qu'ils reçoivent de la première vente qu'ils font. Ils le baisent en le rece-vant, crachent dessus, et le mettent dans une poche apart.

HA'NDSOME,

HA'NDSOMING,

HA'NDSOMELY,

HA'NDSOMENESS.

D. handsaem; dexter, manu

promptus, dexterous or handy,

prompt or ready with the hand;

and thus

Clever, skilful; cleverly or skilfully done; and thus, further, suitable or well adapted, convenient or becoming; suiting the state, or condition, or rank; graceful, liberal, noble.

He is very desyrus to serve yo^r Grace, and seymes to me to be a very handsome man.

Lodge. Illustrations, vol. i. p. 178. Gresham to the Duke of North- umberland.

VOL. XXIII.

At theyr comming, forasmuche as they had not so handsome horses, he toke the horses frō the Marshals and Romane horsmen, and from such as he had raised vpon the sodeine, and distributed them among y^e Germanes.

Golding. Caesar, book vii. fol. 220.

But in making them (Engines of War) hereunto, they have chief respect that they be both easy to be carried, and handsome to be moved and turned about.

More. Utopia, by Robinson, book ii. ch. x.

Phanorinus the Philosopher (as Gellius telleth the tale) did hit a yong man ouer the thumbs very handsomely, for vsing ouer old, and ouer straunge words.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, fol. 3.

There are many townes and villages also, but built out of order, and with no hansomeness.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 248. Richard Chancellor.

Saying, "Him, whom I last left, all repute

For his device, in handsoming a suit,

To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut, and plait,

Of all the court to have the best conceit."

Donne. Satire 1.

But first I'll tell you, by this honest ale,

In my conceit this is a pretty tale;

And if some handsome players would it take,

It (sure) a pretty interlude would make.

Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

And his design there was plainly no other, than to reduce the civil and poetical theologies of the Pagans into some handsome conformity and agreement with that philosophical, natural, and real theology of theirs, which derived all the Gods from one supreme and universal Numen. Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. iv. fol. 498.

But the gravity which was usually found in the Lacedemonians, hinder'd them (perhaps) from playing their game handsomely against so nimble a wit.

Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. viii. sec. 6.

We met with one ship more loaded with linnen, China-silk, and China-dishes, amongst which we found also a faulcon of gold, hand- somely wrought with a great emerald set in the breast of it.

Sir Francis Drake. The World Encompassed, fol. 61.

Yet if there be a lady not competently stock'd that way, she shall not on the instant utterly despair, if she carry a sufficient pawn of handsomeness.

Carew. Cælum Britannicum.

The Romans were so fully convinced of the power of beauty, that the word fortis, strong or valiant, signifies, likewise, fair or handsome.

Fawkes. Ode 3. Cupid benighted, note.

We should never, at least with much earnestness, meddle with affairs more properly belonging to others, and which we do not, or may not, handsomely pretend to understand so well as others: such are affairs beside our profession.

Barrow. Sermon 21. vol. i.

By a life spent in abject servility, in courting a capricious world, in deceiving the credulous, in contriving schemes of advantage or pleasure, and in hardening his conscience, he has, at last, in his fiftieth year, obtained some promotion, and accumulated a handsome sum of money.

Knox. Essays, No. 102.

No more could Augustin, when upon second thoughts, but not the wisest, he contended for the doctrine of persecution, in some letters which Bayle has taken to pieces very handsomely, in his philosophical Commentary.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. i. p. 176. Preface.

HANG,

HA'NGBY,

HA'NGER,

HA'NGING,

HA'NGMAN.

Goth. hahan; A. S. hang-an, pen- dere, suspendere. D. and Ger. hang-en;

Sw. hanga. Junius derives from Goth.

hauh, high. Wilkins, speaking of the several kinds of actions or gestures, positions or postures of material substance, which do refer to the weight being incumbent upon something, first, below it, second, above it, classes hanging in the second division.

To append, depend, impend, or suspend; to fix or fasten to, in a dependent, a pendulous state or position;
to rest, or remain in a dependent state; in a pendulous, or hovering, or elevated state; as if incumbent upon,
or supported by, something above.

HAND-SOME.—
HANG.

HANG.

Vor hor wiues & hor dogtren the king ofte uor lay & hangede men gulties vor wraththe al longe day.
R. Gloucester, p. 509.

First was he drawn for his felonie,
& as a þefe þan slawen, on galwes hanged hie.
R. Brunne, p. 247.

And hope hongeþ aȝ þer on, to have þat treuthe deserveþ.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 241.

An haȝwarde and an heremyte. þe hangman of Tyborne
Dauwe þe dýker. with a dosen harlotes.
Id. Ib. p. 106.

————— And Claudius,
That servant was unto this Appius,
Was demed for to hange upon a tree.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Talc, v. 12205.

Their heare hanged about their eares.
Gower. Conf. Am. book i.

And the Sonday after Bartelmew daye, was one Cratwell hangman of London, and two persones more hanged at the wrestlyng place on the backesyde of Clerkenwell besyde Londō.

Hall. Henry VIII. The thirtieth Yere.

I am blacke (O ye doughters of Jerusalem) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes, and as the hagings of Salomon.
Bible, Anno 1551. Salomon's Ballettes, ch. i.

Me thinke if then their cause be rightly scande,
That they should more delight to follow drummes,
Than byde at home to come in hangman's thumbes.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

————— Thou chafes at me
For payring of my nayle
Amisse, at me thy frinde, and eke
An' hangeby at thy tale.
Drant. Horace. Epistle 1.

Show your sheepe-biting face, and be hung'd an houre.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 82.

Though he had lost his place, his pow'r, his pains;
Yet held his love, his friends, his title fast;
The whole frame of that fortune could not fail;
As that which hung by more than by one nail.
Daniel. History of the Civil Wars, book vii.

Lys. Hang off thou cat, thou bur; vile thing let loose,
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.
Shakspeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, fol. 155.

With that two sumpters were discharg'd,
In which were hangings braue,
Silke couerings, curtens, carpets, plate,
And all such turns should haue.
Warner. Albion's England, book viii. ch. xlii.

Being affrighted at the rumour of that murder, (Claudius) slyly crept forth and conueied himselfe into a Solar (solarium) next adioyning, and there hid himselfe betweene the hangings that hung before the dore.
Holland. Suetonius. Tiberius Claudius.

————— And though his face be as ill
As theirs, which in old hangings whip Christ, still
He strives to look worse, he keeps all in awe.
Donne. Satire 4.

Then will the whole number of them which followed Xerxes out of Asia into Greece, in all kinds, rise to the number of 2317610 thousand men, besides horse-boyes and other servants, hangers on, &c.
Usher. Annals. Anno Mundi 3524.

The most part of Nicias' riches was in ready money, and thereby he had many cravers and hangers on him, whom he gave money unto.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 452. Nicias.

LADY. They do slander him.

ORL. Hang them, a pair of railing hangbies.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Honest Man's Fortune, act iv.

AMO. Enter none but the ladies, and their hang-bies; welcome beauties, and your kind shadowes.

Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, act v. sc. 3.

He said: then nodding with the fumes of wine,
Dropp'd his huge head, and snoring lay supine.
His neck obliquely o'er his shoulders hung,
Press'd with the weight of sleep that tames the strong!
Pove. Homer. Odyssey, book ix.

So, in some well-wrought hangings, you may see
How Hector leads, and how the Grecians flee:
Here, the fierce Mars his courage so inspires,
That with bold hands the Argive fleet he fires.

Waller. To a Friend.

Though divers creditable witnesses deposed that Gregory Bandon, who was common hangman, had confessed and owned to have executed the King, yet the jury found him (Capt. Wm. Howlet) guilty of the indightment.
Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 74.

The nest of the Guira tangeima, the Icterus minor, and the Jupujuba, or whatever other name the American hang-nests may be called by, are of this kind.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xiii. note 10.

That thieves are hanged in England, I thought no reason why they should not be shot in Otaheite; because, with respect to the natives, it would have been an execution by a law ex post facto.

Cook. Voyage, book i. ch. xiv.

I'd hangings weave in fancy's loom,
For Lady Norton's dressing room.

Mason. Ode to Sir Fletcher Norton.

This indeed may be the height of the hangman's charity, who waits for your clothes; but it could never be St. Paul's.

Warburton. A Commentary on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man.

But now her wealth and finery fled,
Her hangers-on cut short all;
The doctors found, when she was dead,
Her last disorder mortal.

Goldsmith. Miscellanies, vol. ii. p. 101. On Mrs. Mary Blaze.

HANGER, (a weapon,) D. hangher, pugio de zonæ pendens: hangherken, gladiolus qui a femore suspendi-
tur. And Skinner,

"A short sword, so called because it is hanged to the side."

I hapned to enter into some discourse of a hanger, which I assure you, both for fashion and work-manship, was most peremptory-beautifull, and gentleman-like.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act i. sc. 5.

Finding himself attacked at the same time in the rear by Jowler, and fearing Cæsar might recover, he drew his hanger, and wheeled about, and by a lucky stroke severed Jowler's head from his body.

Smollett. Roderick Random, ch. iii.

HANK, Lye thinks may be from the Islandic hank, vinculum; Skinner, from to hang; and Tooke (who produces the examples of the verb from Hoper) that,
"to have a hank upon any one, is, to have a hold upon him; or to have something hank, *hanky*d, hanged, or hung upon him." To hantch, in the passage from the Bible, seems to be the same word, k softened into tch.
See HAUNCH.

And a hank of thread as much as is *hanky*d or hanged
together.

He *hanky*d not the picture of his body upon the crosse to teache them his deathe. Johan Hoper. Declaration of Christe, ch. v.

The same bodye that *hanky*d upon the crosse.

Id. Ib. ch. viii.

They shall roare, and hantche vp the praye, (lay hold of) and no man shall recover it or get it from them.

Bible, Anno 1551. Essay, ch. v.

LADY. But had I known this, had I but surmiz'd it, you should have hunted three trains more, before you had come to th' course, you should have hantk o' th' bridle, Sir, i' faith.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, act v.

Others had no certainty of their holds, which were wont to be let by copy for lives, or otherwise for years; so that their landlords might have them upon the hank at no time, nor in any thing, to offend them.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1549.

I love a friendship free and frank,
And hate to hang upon a hank.

Byrom. Careless Content.

HANKER, } Skinner says, hank, in Lincoln-HANKERING. } shire, is used for an inclination, or propensity of mind, from the verb to hang, q. d. to hang or hanker after. Met.

HANG.

HANKER.

HANK. To hang about, stay, or remain, hanging or loitering as in suspense, to loiter or linger, as unwilling to quit ; to long after or for, to keep or continue in a state of longing.

Besides the Scriptures, there hath been so full an attestation given to them [wizards and magicians] by persons unconcerned in all ages, that those our so confident exploders of them, in this present age, can hardly escape the suspicion, of having some hankring towards Atheism. Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 703.

Are these barbarians of man-eating constitutions, that they so hanker after this inhumane diet, which we cannot imagine without horror. Bentley. Sermon 1. p. 37.

And as for sensuality, though it cannot be supposed that a soul should retain the appetites of the body, after it is separated from it ; yet having wholly abandon'd itself to corporeal pleasures while it was in the body, it may, and doubtless will retain a vehement hankering after the reunion with it, which is the only sensuality, that a separated soul is capable of. Scott. Christian Life, part iii. ch. vi.

We shall be able to part both with it and them, without any great regret or reluctance, and to live from them for ever, without any disquieting longings or hankerings after them. Id. Ib. part i. ch. iii.

[He is] content to sit still, and let his train of thought glide indolently through his brain, without much use, perhaps, or pleasure, but without hankering after any thing better, and without irritation.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, vol. 1. p. 39. Human Happiness.

HANK.
—
HANO-VER.

HANOVER.

Boundaries. HANOVER, the Kingdom of, is bounded on the North by the German Ocean, on the East by Holstein, Mecklenbourg, and Prussian Saxony ; on the South by the Duchy of Brunswick and the Grand Duchy of the Rhine ; on the West by the Netherlands. It extends over a surface of 14720 English square miles.

Surface. From the borders of the sea to the Southern boundary of Hanover, the land rises gradually, until the acclivity terminates in the mountains of the Hartz, an independent granitic chain, the ramifications of which are for the most part comprised within this Kingdom. Next to the sea, and particularly in the Eastern part of the Kingdom, along the Elbe and Weser, the soil is in a great measure formed by the depositions of these great rivers. This part of the country is also exposed to violent inundations, the destructive effects of which are but imperfectly prevented by dikes. The great extent of the marshes likewise appears to indicate how recently this portion of the land has been recovered from the ocean. The same may be said of the Western region, through which the Ems has its course. The soil in these districts is generally unproductive, but the most sterile portions of the Kingdom are the heaths or deserts of Luneburg and of Verden, situated between the Elbe and the Weser, and those of Meppen, on the right bank of the Ems. The soil of these districts is gravel or light sand, unfit for agriculture, but covered in some places with pine forests, heath, and marshes. In the immediate neighbourhood of Bremen, some portions of this kind of morass have been brought into cultivation, but Ages must elapse, and an immense capital must be expended, before similar improvements can be made in the great wastes of Luneburg, which extend 25 leagues from East to West, and between Harburg and Zell, nearly an equal distance from North to South. On the left bank of the Vechte, which flows to the West of the Ems, the neighbourhood of Bentheim presents to the view on every side a sandy desert, diversified only by tracts of morass or stagnant pools.

Geology. Considered in its geological character, the country which we have just described belongs to the most recent, or tertiary formation. Hence it is, that the sea at every tide carries to the Town of Stade, not far from the mouth of the Elbe, fragments of wood, differing from any species growing at present on the earth. Blumenbach regards them, with reason, as fossils ; they are brown or black, and almost always bituminous. These are true lignites, and prove by their presence that the sea covers a soil more recent than the chalk which occurs on the shores of the Baltic. In ascending from the sea-coast, the secondary, or limestone formation occurs, stretching from West to East, between Osna-bruck and Hanover. This rests on the primary rocks of the Hartz.

The Elbe forms the North-Eastern boundary of the Kingdom, and receives supplies from about eight small rivers, the principal of which are the Schwinge and Oste, both navigable a short way, and capable of improvement. The Weser takes its name at Minden, where the Werra and Fulda unite, and flows through the Kingdom ; its tributaries are numerous, but only one of them, the Aller, is important. The Ems is another great river, navigable, however, only in that part called the Lower Ems : works are carrying on at present for the improvement of the remainder. The Aa, the Hase, and the Vecht, which are navigated by boats, with many small streams, flow into the Ems from Hanover. The only lakes in this Kingdom which deserve mention, are the Steinhundermeer and the Dumersee. The latter is well stocked with fish, and extends about two leagues in length and one in breadth.

The climate of Hanover is generally temperate ; the people boast of its salubrity, but the low swamps and stagnant marshes load the atmosphere with a humidity disagreeably perceptible to a stranger, and throughout the greater part of the Kingdom the temperature is at all times extremely variable. The winters are severe, and even in summer sudden chills are not unfrequent. The dews and vapours during the summer, at sunrise and sunset, prove extremely hurtful to some constitutions. The prevailing wind during the winter months is the North-West ; in Spring an Easterly wind blows for a short time, and in summer the South-West wind begins, which continues the greater part of autumn. Among the peculiar effects of the climate of Hanover on the human constitution, the early loss of the teeth is the most striking. The variableness and moisture of the climate give rise to many dangerous diseases. If the month of July be very warm, violent endemics are likely to ensue. The most usual maladies are nervous and intermittent fevers, consumptions, paralytic and apopleptic disorders.

The natural riches of Hanover consist in the produce of its fisheries, in the game which abounds in the wastes and forests, in its agriculture and pasturages, and, above all, in the mines of the Hartz.

Rivers.

Lakes.

Climate.

Productions.

HANO-VER.
Fisheries.

Since the encouragements held out by the late King, in 1792, for the promotion of the whale fisheries, a considerable number of Hanoverians annually frequent the Greenland Seas in adventures of this nature. The fishery on the coast of the Kingdom, also, is remarkably productive; that of the rivers supplies the inhabitants with abundance of delicious trout and all the more common kinds of fish, as well as with eels of extraordinary magnitude.

Timber.

The forests supply timber fit for boat-building, and for the rigging of large vessels. Wood for fuel is dear, but this inconvenience is remedied by the working of several coal-pits. In the pine woods, large groups of trees are often found dead without any external injury. This is generally ascribed to the ravages of an insect, the Bostrichus xylophagus of Fabricius, the destructive visits of which were of late years extended to England. In the neighbourhood of Zell, the old oaks are of a height and grandeur hardly to be surpassed in the woods of Holstein. Some of them measure 40 feet in the circumference of the trunk next the ground, and 25 feet immediately below the branches. These woods are stocked with red deer, roebucks, wild boars, hares, and rabbits; but fortunately for the interests of the farmer, the number of wild animals has diminished considerably within the last twenty years. The fens and marshes are frequented by a great variety of aquatic birds, and ortolans are numerous in the vicinity of Osnabruck. In the Hartz the wolves are formidable from their numbers and their strength.

Agriculture.

The agriculture of the Kingdom, it is allowed, has not by any means reached the perfection of which it is capable. The Provinces of Gottingen and Hildesheim alone are distinguished by skilful cultivation. The fat lands also, on the banks of the rivers and near the sea, are industriously tilled; but, on the other hand, there is an immense extent of marsh or of sandy waste, not altogether incapable of being reclaimed. Those who imagine that every improvement of mankind is derived immediately from their rulers, reproach the Government of Hanover with this neglect of the national resources; but the true cause of this supineness and want of enterprise may, perhaps, be more justly traced to an imperfect system of tenures, (metairie farms being very general,) to the national character, and to the operation of customary laws, which naturally cherish an attachment to old usages, and continually throw impediments in the way of improvement. It may be added, also, that even in the worst districts the quantity of land in cultivation has increased by more than one-third within the last twenty years. In Osnabruck and Calenberg, the people, instead of attempting the cultivation of their own soil, annually migrate into the Netherlands to perform the labours of the harvest. Nevertheless, the country produces sufficient corn for the inhabitants. Flax is grown in small patches for the material of domestic industry. The culture of tobacco is confined to narrow limits, the whole yearly produce not exceeding at the utmost 9000 ztr. Rape-seed, for oil, is cultivated to a considerable extent, and supplies to Bremen a chief article of its commerce. Horticulture has been but little attended to, and, with the exception of the apple, the fruits of Hanover are inferior to those of France. The vine is cultivated only in gardens, and chiefly for the tables of the rich, for it is rarely that the grape attains here a complete maturity.

The horned cattle of Hanover are of middling size, but the beef, as well as mutton, fed on the mountains, is of an excellent flavour. The best races of cattle are found in Bremen, Verden, Hoya, and in the Hartz, where, in some rich valleys, the dairy-farms resemble those of Switzerland. The swine also are of excellent quality near the woods, and better still in the country between the Ems and Weser, the original locality of the Westphalian breed. But among the animals of Hanover, the horses enjoy the highest reputation, and strangers are often surprised at the beauty and good condition of those which are yoked to the waggons of the poorest peasantry. There are two races of horses, however; that of Hoya, light and active, and the breed of Luneburg, or Friesland, numbers of which are annually exported for coaches and artillery. It is said, that the attempt to improve the breed of horses by the mixture of Arabian blood has never succeeded in Hanover. The wool of the native sheep is of a very inferior quality, but great improvement has taken place of late years, since the Government encouraged the introduction of the Spanish races: some proprietors are now able to export wool which can compete with that of Spain and England. Some districts of Hanover derive a considerable revenue from the exportation of geese; but the care of bees is an object of still greater importance. The extensive heaths of Luneburg and Hoya are more than sufficient for the support of the stocks belonging to the country, which are estimated at 75,000, and a considerable sum is derived from the summer feeding of the bees of the adjoining territories of Brunswick and Prussia. There are some villages whose entire population is employed during the early months of summer in the care of these industrious insects.

HANO-VER.
Stock.

There is but little manufacturing industry in this Kingdom, the peasantry being more disposed to wander into adjoining Countries to find agricultural employment, than to engage at home in sedentary occupations. Stein estimates at 16,000 the number of individuals who annually migrate into Holland. There are some manufactures, nevertheless, of soap, tobacco, leather, woollen cloths, and, above all, of iron and copper. The art of making fine wire, and of embroidering cloth with metallic threads, is here carried to perfection. The annual value of this business in the territories of Luneburg, Bremen, Osnabruck, Hoya, and Diepholz, is said to be five millions and a half of florins. Both sexes are engaged in it. The linen cloths of Hanover are very inferior to those of Prussia and Friesland. The trades of the jeweller and goldsmith are among the few in which Hanover displays superior workmanship.

Manufac-
tures.

Hanover seems destined by nature to engross the foreign commerce of Germany. With three great rivers flowing through it, some extent of sea-coast, and surrounded by Countries rich in natural productions, it appears as if commercial pursuits would be the natural resources of its inhabitants. But several causes, among which the disposition of the people is perhaps the chief, frustrate those facilities. The want of secure havens on the Elbe and Weser, may also be enumerated. The attempt to make a canal from Stade to the Oste, and from that to the Wumme, uniting the Elbe and Weser, has failed, and the improved navigation of the Weser has not yet had time to produce important results. Steam-boats at present ply on the Elbe, Ems, Weser, and Aller. The most important commercial place is Minden, where there arrive annually

Commerce.

HANO-VER.

about 370 small vessels by the Weser, by the Werra 110, and 130 by the Fulda. The roads in the low and sandy part of the Kingdom are unfavourable to the carriage of goods, yet the intercourse between Brunswick, Hamburgh, and Bremen, is carried on over these sands.

Population.

The population of Hanover, in 1822, was estimated by Hassel at 1,463,700, or nearly 100 individuals to the square mile. According to the calculations of the same writer, the number of Jews amounts to 6700, but Stein makes them amount to 15,000. The Reformed Religion is greatly predominant. The Lutherans are estimated at 1,100,000; the Calvinists at 120,000. The Roman Catholics do not exceed 230,000, and to these may be added 500 Mennonites. The Protestant Clergy are subjected to the Consistories of Hanover, Osnabruck, Aurich, Hildesheim, Stade, and Ottendorf. The Roman Catholics are under the direction of the Archbishops of Osnabruck and Hildesheim. The ancient Chapters have been restored in the Government of Hanover; and in that of Hildesheim are several monasteries and ecclesiastical estates, which escaped confiscation under the domination of the French. A special Board, or Committee, has been formed to manage those revenues, and to redeem, as far as possible, the domains which were alienated under the Westphalian Government. These funds are disposed of in the payment of pensions, the expenses of the Chapters, and in the costly decorations of Roman Catholic worship. This Committee has, since 1816, raised a loan on the credit of those mortgaged estates. The proprietors, who do not wish to part with their possessions, are allowed to retain them for a small yearly rent, which forms a revenue appropriated to the support of the Universities, the learned Societies, and Scientific Institutions of the Kingdom. By a Royal edict, in September, 1824, the article of the German Confederation which relates to Religious toleration, was expounded in such a manner as to do away with the notions of a ruling Church, a merely tolerated creed, or of any partiality whatsoever to a particular sect of Christians.

History.

Hanover is one of those Countries from which the Saxons issued to invade England. The Hanoverians still possess, in a high degree, the love of independence and great personal courage, which distinguished their ancestors. That remarkable people, of the Cimbri-Saxon branch, were divided into many nations or Tribes. The Longobardi and Vinuli occupied both banks of the Elbe; the Chauci dwelt at the mouth of the Weser; the Fusi possessed the country which at the present day comprehends the territory of Hildesheim; and the Cherusci, who were afterwards associated with the Franks, were scattered round the forests of the Hartz.

In the Xth century the four princely families of Brunswick, Nordheim, Billungen, and Supplingburg divided among them the patrimonial dominions of Hanover. Towards the close of the XIth century the heiress of the House of Billungen married Henry the Black, of the powerful Bavarian family of the Guelphs, originally from Este; and in the beginning of the XIIth century the offspring of this marriage, Henry the Proud, espoused the heiress of the other three Principalities; so that their son, Henry the Lion, whose dominions embraced nearly all that was afterwards comprised in the Electorate, was one of the most powerful of the German Princes. But these possessions were again divided among his immediate posterity; and his nephew Otho submitted to receive from the Emperor investiture of a small portion, with the title of Duke of Brunswick. Successive partitions of the estate among the sons weakened the power of the family, until at length, in the beginning of the XVIIth century, the law of primogeniture began to govern the succession. About the same time several branches of the Brunswick family became extinct, and all its possessions were divided between the two lines of Brunswick-Wolfenbittel and Brunswick-Luneburg. This latter, the younger branch, possessed at first but a small portion of Luneburg; but to this was added, in 1617, Grubenhagen, in 1634 Calenberg and Gottingen, and in 1642 the remainder of Luneburg. These possessions might have been again separated by descent, but for the marriage, in 1698, of George Duke of Calenberg-Gottingen with Sophia, heiress to the Duke of Luneburg-Grubenhagen. The dignity of Elector had been granted by the Emperor to the father of this Prince in 1692, and he himself succeeded to the Crown of England by the Act of Settlement, after the death of Queen Anne; since which time the British Sovereigns have continued to govern the ancient dominions of their family, increased, in 1715, by Bremen and Verden, in 1802 by Osnabruck, in 1814 and 1815 by Hildesheim and East Friesland, with some other territories. In return for these considerable acquisitions, part of Luneburg and some other scattered domains were given up to Denmark, Prussia, and Oldenburg. The object of the exchanges was, for the most part, the concentration of territorial possessions. Hanover was the point in which Napoleon first attempted to realize his designs against the North of Germany. As soon as the war of 1803 broke out, a French army, under Mortier, entered that Country. Resistance was vain; and a Convention was agreed on, in consequence of which the Hanoverian army was disbanded. Heavy impositions succeeded, but no attempt was made at dismemberment. In 1806, however, Hanover was given to Prussia, in lieu of some territories on the Rhine. In the following year it again came into Napoleon's hands, who gave a portion of it to the newly-created Kingdom of Westphalia. The amount of public debt incurred by those invasions between 1803-1808 was five millions of dollars. In 1810, the greater part of Hanover was added to the Westphalian Kingdom, and the rest was incorporated with the French Empire, being included in the Departments of the Hanse Towns. In this state affairs remained till the battle of Leipsic, which liberated the Country. In November, 1813, the native authorities resumed the duties of government.

Hanover was, by the Congress of Vienna, erected into a Kingdom, the Sovereign of which unites the prerogatives to the titles of Royalty. He holds the fifth place among the Princes of the German confederation, in the Diet of which the Kingdom has four votes. Hanover is the hereditary dominion of his Majesty the King of England; but, except the accidental union of the two Crowns in the same Prince, there exists no political connection between the two Countries. British subjects in Hanover, and Hanoverians in England, are aliens, without any especial right of citizenship. This total distinction of the two States in political relations was always admitted by the Courts of Europe; and the neutrality of the one was constantly respected during a war with the other Power, until Napoleon thought fit to violate this received principle of European State law,

HANO-VER.An Electorate.Made a Kingdom.

HANO-VER.

and turned against Hanover his hostility to Great Britain. The Crown of Hanover is hereditary in the House of Brunswick-Luneburg, according to the maxims of descent established by custom in that family, and which respect the right of primogeniture, but reject the female line. By the same law the heir is of full age at 18. In case of a failure of male issue, the succession of some of the Provinces devolves by regular descent on the other branch of the House of Brunswick; and as the various territories which composed the Electoral estates, and were held by different titles, have been united into a whole by the erection of the Kingdom, it is to be presumed that the House of Brunswick would, in such a case, succeed to the whole dominion. The Kingdom of Hanover is governed by a Prince of the Royal Family, (at present the Duke of Cambridge,) who, in matters of great importance, receives the orders of the King, assisted by a Council of Hanoverians resident at the Court.

Constitution.

The Government of Hanover is partly of a feudal and partly of a representative nature. The Countries composing the Kingdom are as follows: the Duchy of Bremen with the territory of Hadeln, the Principality of Luneburg, part of the Duchy of Lauenburg, the Duchy of Verden, the Principalities of Calenberg and Hildesheim, the Counties of Hoya and Diepholz. To the South-West of this last lie the Principality of Osnabruck, the Counties of Lingen and Bentheim, the Circles of Meppe and Emsbuh; and further to the North lies the Province of East Friesland. On the South, and separated from the rest of the Kingdom by the territories of Brunswick, lie the Principalities of Gottingen and Grubenhagen, with some Circles of Eichsfeld; to the East again lies a portion of the County of Hohnstein. All these various territories, and in some cases even minute portions of them, have separate Constitutions and tribunals; private rights and hereditary privileges everywhere interfere to prevent the uniform organization of the Kingdom. Different systems of taxation and different forms of administration existed till lately in the Provinces. The abolition of these discordant usages while Hanover was incorporated with the French Empire and the Kingdom of Westphalia, was of short duration. The ancient Constitutions were restored immediately on the retreat of the French in 1813. But when the hereditary dominions of Brunswick-Luneburg were combined into a whole as a Kingdom, an attempt was made not to abolish but silently to supersede the separate Constitutions of the Provinces, by a general representation by deputies from the several Estates, amounting in all to 85, who assembled for the first time in Hanover in December, 1814. This Assembly was chiefly engaged, during the years 1814, 1815, and 1816, in devising means of introducing uniformity into the various departments. Its labours, however, were only preliminary to the new Constitution promulgated in December, 1819.

By this Constitution the Provincial Estates are still allowed to remain, but their powers are confined to the arrangement of mere local interests. Instead of a National Assembly, however, composed of feudal lords and the proprietors of prescriptive rights, divided into a great number of Estates, the Assembly of 1819 admitted representatives of towns and property without feudal claims; and was divided into two Chambers, in the first of which sit the Mediatised Princes of Aremberg, Looz-Coswarem, and Bentheim, the Prelates and Nobility; in the second the deputies of the Towns, Consistories, and of the University. The Members of these Chambers must be 25 years of age, and profess the Christian Religion. The qualification in property is for the nobility of the first class, a yearly income of 6000 dollars; for the knights 600; and half that sum for the remainder. The two Chambers have equal rights. The introduction of a uniform mode of taxation has been the favourite object of the Hanoverian Chambers; and some progress has been made towards the attainment of that object by the purchase and abolition of immunities. Analogous changes have been made in the general administration. Previous to 1822, the Kingdom was divided into 11 Provinces, viz. Calenberg, Gottingen, Grubenhagen, Luneburg, Hoya, Bremen, Osnabruck, Hildesheim, East Friesland, Bentheim, and Hohnstein. But these Provinces being too unequal in extent for a uniform system of administration, a new division of the Kingdom into seven Governments was made in that year. These are 1. the Government of Hanover, composed of the Principality of Calenberg, the Counties of Hoya and Diepholz; 2. of Hildesheim, comprising the Principality of that name, those of Gottingen and Grubenhagen, and the County of Hohnstein; 3. of Luneburg; 4. of Stade, which comprehends the Duchies of Bremen and Verden, and the Country of Hadeln; 5. of Osnabruck, comprising the Counties of Lingen and Bentheim, with the Circles of Meppen and Emsbuhren; 6. the Government of Aurich, or East Friesland; and 7. that of Klausthal, the jurisdiction of which extends over the Hartz. This is a small jurisdiction, and has been erected, or rather permitted to exist, in favour of the privileges enjoyed for centuries by the miners. Previous to this division the Ministers had each a Province for the object of his care, instead of a particular department of affairs, as is now the case.

The administration of justice is still shared with the Royal Courts by the feudal jurisdictions possessed by the towns, by ecclesiastical and lay proprietors. The remedy of this evil is postponed, it is said, till such time as a complete code can be promulgated. At Zell is a High Court of Appeal, which determines in the last instance.

The Hanoverian army, in time of peace, is composed of 12,000 men; and the Landwehr, or militia, of 18,000. A law, passed in 1817, obliges every individual who has reached the age of 19, without distinction of rank, to serve with this corps. The only persons excepted are the infirm, the clergy, Professors in the Public schools, officers of government, those who have already served six years, and only sons whose brothers have fallen in battle. Students in the University have alone the right to find substitutes. The Landwehr is exercised in squadrons every Sunday, except during harvest-time, and is annually reviewed in regiments and brigades.

The revenues of Hanover amounted, in 1821, according to Hassel, to the sum of 11,700,000 florins, and the public expenses to 4,665,000. Half of the revenue is derived from the public domains, the remainder from taxes. The public debt amounts to 30,000,000 of florins, the interest of which amounts to 1,200,000. Thus it appears that the surplus revenue is barely sufficient to provide for the extinction of the debt, and the occasional demands of national undertakings. The discontented part of the population asserts that the King annually draws to England a considerable amount

HANO-VER.Division into Pro-vincesand Governments.Courts of justice.

Military.

Finances.

HANO-
VER.HANSE TOWNS.City of Hanover.

of net revenue; but it is more than probable that a little more publicity given to the public accounts would totally disprove this opinion.

HANOVER, the Capital of the Kingdom, in the Province of Calenberg, is situated in a wide sandy plain on the Leine, where that river, receiving the Ihme, first becomes navigable. It is divided by the river into the Old and the New Town. The houses are mostly built of brick, but those of modern construction are regular and handsome. The Old Town was a petty fortress in 1130, and first received in 1172 the rights and title of a city. The New Town contains about 350 houses; and the Fauxbourgs, in which the village of Linden is included, at least 450. The population of this Capital is about 25,000. The walls of the town are now converted into promenades. The neighbourhood of Hanover is remarkable for its rich meadows, artificial landscapes, and for the charming promenade of Linden. From a distance the city appears like a garden adorned with edifices and towers, their roofs glittering with copper. The lengthened course of the Leine, which winds exceedingly through the level plain, adds to the delusion; but a nearer approach shows the streets and houses agreeably shaded with limes and poplars, and a stranger is astonished at the activity which reigns in the streets and public places, and with the elegance of some of the edifices, which are strikingly contrasted with the gothic architecture of some of the ancient mansions. The most distinguished buildings are the ancient Castle, the vice-regal Palace, the Arsenal, and the Theatre. The monument erected to Leibnitz on the Parade, in 1787, is worthy of his reputation. There are no less than ten bridges across the rivers. The Scientific Cabinets and Institutions of this city reflect credit on the liberality of the Government. The Museums of Natural History and of Antiquities are excellent. The establishments which have instruction for their object merit equal praise. The School for the instruction of teachers is admirably conducted. In the Lyceum the useful Arts are taught conjointly with Literature. The Academy called the Georgianum, for the education of the young nobility, is organized on a military system; but the instruction given is calculated to prepare the youth for a Civil as well as military career. The Royal Library, containing about 24,000 volumes, is open to the Public. The commerce and manufactures of this city are only sufficient to supply the internal demand. Some sugar refineries, breweries, and manufactories of earthenware, subsist on a small scale. Embroidered cloths are also made here, which enjoy a high reputation throughout Germany.

The Royal Chateaux of Herrnhausen and Montbrillant, with the Gardens of Walmoden in the environs of the town, are much vaunted by the citizens. The pleasure grounds of Montbrillant are laid out in the English taste. The Botanical gardens of Herrnhausen are deservedly celebrated, as well as its Cabinet of antiquities and collection of pictures. Still more famous is the great jet d'eau, which rises to the same height as that of St. Cloud, (120 feet,) but with a body of water far more voluminous.

H. D. Sonne, Erdbeschreibung des Konigr. Hanover, 1817; Hassel, in Gaspari's Erdbesch. 1822; Henrich, Aperçu Statistique d'Hanovre, 1801; Mangourit, Voyage en Hanovre, Paris, 1803; Hodgskin, Travels in the North of Germany, 2 vols. 1820.

HANO-VER.HANSE
TOWNS.

HANSE TOWNS. In the middle of the XIIIth century the coasts of Europe were infested with pirates, who not only interrupted communication by sea, but even carried their audacity so far as to attack and plunder maritime places. Land journeys were at the same time as insecure as those by sea. The trade of the North of Germany flourished even during this reign of violence; although it became exposed to various accidents when the merchants were no longer permitted to travel with armed attendants, the convoy offered by Government having degenerated into a mere tax without yielding any protection. Hamburg and Lubeck, which, with Bremen, had at an early period become considerable from their commerce, had at the same time a powerful enemy in Waldemar, King of Denmark, to whom they made a resolute resistance. This circumstance, together with the necessity of securing the Elbe from the pirates, who were every day growing more formidable, and the insecurity of the roads, occasioned a Convention, in 1239, between Hamburg, Hadeln, and Dithmarsh, at that time independent towns; and a League, in 1241, between Hamburg and Lubeck, by which the associated towns bound themselves to mutual assistance and protection against all aggressions, particularly against those of the nobility or feudal lords. This alliance was joined, in 1247, by Brunswick, which served as a depot to both the last-mentioned towns; for while Italy was in possession of the trade with the Levant, the great road over Germany passing through Brunswick was the route by which Hamburg received Indian goods. Brunswick, of course, was associated in interest with the trading towns, and a great many other places soon followed the example. Some authors, however, ascribe the first formation of the League to Bremen, in 1164, to protect the trade carried on by that place with Livonia; and there are not wanting those who carry it back even to the Age of Charlemagne. This union assumed the name of Hansa, an old Teutonic word signifying a privilege or immunity. Some Etymologists point out, as the origin of the title, the old French word Hansa, an assembly; but the significations of these words were, no doubt, originally the same, and equally applicable in the present instance. Others derive the word Hanse from Aanzee, or An der ze, from the maritime situation of the allied towns; but this Etymology has no other merit than that of ingenuity, the old Historians of Germany being agreed that the word signifies a league. The number of towns in the Hanseatic League varied according to circumstances. They amounted, when most numerous, to 85. These were as follows: Anklam, Andernach, Aschersleben, Berlin, Bergen in Norway, Bielefeld, Bolsward in Friesland, Brandenburg, Braunsberg, Brunswick, Bremen, Buxtehude, Campen in Overijssel, Cologne, Cracow, Culin, Dantzic, Demmin in Pomerania, Deventer, Dorpat, Dortmund, Duisburg, Einbeck in the Hartz, Elbing,

HANSE
TOWNS.

Elbing in Gueldres, Emmerich in Cleves, Frankfort on the Oder, Golnow in Pomerania, Goslar, Gottingen, Greifswald, Groningen, Halle in Saxony, Halberstadt, Hambrugh, Hameln, Hamm in Westphalia, Hanover, Harderwyk in Gueldres, Helmstadt, Hervorden in Westphalia, Hildesheim, Kiel, Koesfeld, Kolberg, Konigsberg in Prussia, Lemgo in Westphalia, Lixheim in Lutheringia, Lubeck, Luneburg, Magdeburg, Minden, Munster, Nimeguen, Nordheim, Osnabruck, Osterburg, Paderborn, Quedlinburg, Revel, Riga, Rostock, Rugenwalde, Ruremond, Salzwedel, Seehausen, Soest in Westphalia, Stade, Stargard, Staveren, Stendal, Stettin, Stolpe, Stralsund, Thorn, Venloo in Gueldres, Uelzen in Luneburg, Unna in Westphalia, Warberg in Sweden, Werden, Wesel, Wisby, Wismar, Zutphen, and Zwooll in Gueldres. To this list of German towns may be added Antwerp, Dort, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Bruges, Ostend, and Dunkirk, in the Netherlands; Calais, Rouen, St. Malo, Bordeaux, Bayonne, and Marseilles in France; Barcelona, Seville, and Cadiz, in Spain; Leghorn and Naples in Italy; besides Messina, Lisbon, London, and other places which maintained a temporary connection with the League. After the Sovereigns of Europe began to view the Hanse Towns with jealousy, and to withdraw from the confederation the places subject to them, the League was still maintained by the towns in the North of Germany, with the additional principle of excluding from it all places which were not within the Empire; Dantzic, although subject to the King of Poland, was yet admitted, because it had been always represented in the German Diet. It was at this period that the Hanse Towns were divided into four Provinces, each with a chief town. The Capital of the first division was Lubeck, under which were arranged the Vandalic Towns, Hambrugh, Rostock, Wismar, Stralsund, &c. and the towns of Pomerania; Cologne presided over the Hanse Towns of Cleves, Gueldres, and Westphalia. The towns of Saxony and Brandenburg had Brunswick at their head, and finally Dantzic was the chief place of the League in Prussia and Livonia. The association had for protectors at one time the Grand Master of the Teutonic Order, the Kings of Denmark and Sweden, and even the King of Spain as Sovereign of the Low Countries. Since the XVIth century they have had no protector.

Depots or staple markets were established by the Hanse Towns at London, in 1250; at Bruges, 1252; Novogorod, 1272; and at Bergen in 1278. The staple place, to Antwerp, and afterwards to Amsterdam. The sanction and patronage of Kings and Princes gave solidity to the League, and in 1364 a formal Act of alliance was executed at Cologne. It was, indeed, in the XIVth century that the Hanse Towns enjoyed their highest consideration, and that the commercial spirit, of which the Princes of that day had so little apprehension, but which has since intruded itself into all political relations, first began to be developed. The declared objects of the League entered into at Cologne were, to protect merchandise from pirates and robbers, and to ensure the honour and safety of merchants abroad; to extend the foreign trade of the allied towns, and, as far as possible, to obtain a monopoly, or to exclude all other towns from a share in it; to maintain justice and order in every market; and to prevent fraudulence by properly constituted officers and Courts of arbitration. Among the internal arrangements of the League were the obligations to equip a certain number of armed vessels, or in the case of inland towns, to furnish a certain sum of money, and to pay with punctuality all duties and amercements. In case of disobedience the delinquents were visited with the greater or less Ban; those who were unfortunate enough to fall under this commercial interdict, were said, in the German idiom, to be verhansed, or expelled from the confederacy. The ordinary assemblies of the Hanse Towns were held every third year in Lubeck, which was the head of the League, and where the archives and treasury were kept. Deputies, who were not punctual in attendance, were fined 20 florins for every day of absence. Towns which neglected to send Deputies were severely amerced; and such delinquency was punished the third time with expulsion from the League. While a fine remained unpaid, all the citizens of the place so offending were liable to be arrested for its amount in the other confederate towns. The foreign factories were regulated with an exact monastic discipline, which went so far as to require celibacy in the factors, masters, and members of the Guilds. The rules prescribed to their agents by our Hudson's Bay and some other Companies, closely resembled those of the Hanseatic factories.

HANSE
TOWNS.

By this uniform system of good order, and still more by the persevering and consistent exertions which interest excited, the Hanse Towns acquired no small importance, notwithstanding that their confederation had never been formally sanctioned by the Empire. From their great wealth and resources, they seemed rather to command their Sovereigns than to be in subjection to them. In England they were exempted from duties on exportation, and in Denmark, Sweden, and Russia, from those on importation; privileges which no subject of those Countries had ever yet enjoyed. The great carrying trade of the Hanse Towns was the main source of their increasing wealth. There was scarcely a mart or manufactory in Europe which was not at length brought within the circle of their operation, their success being promoted by their great superiority in capital as well as by their arms. This mercantile alliance, set on foot for the purpose of defence, soon found itself in a condition to wage offensive wars. It overcame Eric and Hakon, Kings of Norway. The Hanse Towns declared war against Waldemar III. in the middle of the XIIIth century. The combined fleet sailed direct to Copenhagen; the King was obliged to fly, and obtained peace only on condition of ceding possession of the Island of Schonen for 16 years, by which stipulation the entrance of the Baltic was placed at the command of the confederacy. These merchant warriors deposed a King of Sweden, and transferred his crown to Albert Duke of Mecklenburg. They equipped, in 1428, a fleet of 248 ships, with 12,000 soldiers on board, against Copenhagen. Again, in 1615, they joined their forces to those of the Dutch, in order to assist the Town of Brunswick, besieged by its Duke, who was in consequence obliged to retire. A Burgomaster of Dantzic, named Niederdorf, relying on the protection of the Hanseatic League, had the boldness to declare war against Christian, King of Denmark. The desire of extending their foreign trade induced England, Denmark, and Holland to maintain close relations with the Hanse Towns. These undertook the control of the trade in the North Sea and in the East of Europe, effectually prevented piracy, and had the merit of

HANSE
TOWNS.
—
HAP.

HAP.

upholding fixed systems of maritime law. They also constructed some canals and harbours in the North of Europe; but the most appropriate mark of their influence was the general introduction of corresponding weights and measures.

The prosperity of the Hanse Towns depended on the continuance of those causes which had given birth to their alliance, and naturally fell away with the change of circumstances. As soon as the progress of maritime depredators was checked, and the establishment of Civil order guaranteed general security; as soon as the smaller towns found that their interests were sacrificed to those of the leading confederates; when the great towns ceased to be the only naval powers, and the European monarchs began to profit from their example in commercial enterprise; when, in fine, the discoveries of Vasco de Gama and Columbus had given quite a new direction to the channels of commerce; the Hanseatic League lost its preponderance, and as the monopoly which it had endeavoured to establish was gradually subverted, the confederation, being held together by no ties of interest, rapidly dissolved. In the year 1630, the last general assembly was convoked at Lubeck, at which the deputies from the greater number of the towns appeared merely for the purpose of renouncing the League. Hamburg, Lubeck, and Bremen, have alone continued to maintain the mutual relations, as well as to preserve the name of the Hanse Towns. With these Dantzic, also, is associated on peculiar terms, but without being included among the Hanse Towns. In the Treaty of 1803, the rights of the three Hanseatic confederates were acknowledged. In 1814, at the Congress of Vienna, they were again confirmed, and Frankfort on the Mayne was placed on the same footing with them in regard to the German Confederation. The term Hanse Town may now be considered as having virtually merged in that of Free City, the privileges of the places still retaining the designation being derived rather from their claims on the Empire, than from their ancient alliance. In 1826, the trade between Great Britain and the Hanse Towns was regulated on the principles of reciprocity, in the same manner as with Sweden and Denmark. On presenting those Treaties to the House of Commons, Mr. Huskisson declared that the Hanse Towns were the best schools of commercial policy. This praise, however, must be understood to apply only to the principles of free trade, by which they are at present governed; the Hanseatic League of former times having constantly aimed at an exclusive trade, and having finally yielded to those causes which are sure to undermine every scheme of monopoly.

Anderson's History of Commerce, vol. i.; Heiss, Histoire de l'Empire, chap. vi.

HAP, Skinner says, a very common word in Lincolnshire, from A. S. heapian, cumulare, q. d. stragulis cumulare: and Ray

To happe, to cover for warmth, from heap, I suppose, to heap clothes on me.

Happing, a coarse covering, a rug for a bed.

Hapharlat, a coarse covering made of divers shreds. Baret's Alvearie. Skinner doubts whether the word be nostræ linguæ civis. Hap-harlot, a coverling for a servant, is a very old word. Brocket.

There one garment will serve a man most commonly two years: for why should he desire more? seeing if he had them, he should not be the better hapt or covered from cold, neither in his apparel any whit the comlier. More. Utopia, by Robinson, book ii. ch. iv.

VOL. XXIII.

The second is the great (although not generall) amendment of lodging, for (said they) our fathers (yea, and we ourselues als) haue lien full oft vpon straw pallets, on rough mats couered onelie with a sheet vnder couerlets made of dagswain or hop-harlots, (I vse their owne termes) and a good round log vnder their heads in steed of a bolster or pillow.

Holinshed. Description of England, book ii. ch. xii.

HAP, v.

HAP, n.

HA'PLESS,

HA'PLY,

HA'PPEN,

HA'PPY,

HA'PPILY,

HA'PPINESS,

HA'PPIOUS,

HAP-HAZARD,

HA'PPY-MAKING.

Wachter has, happen, which he interprets contingere, accidere, bene vel male succedere; and remarks that the English preserve the word. The Ger. and D. have happeren, prendere, apprehendere, to seize or take in the hand. Fr. happer, to catch; which latter Menage derives from the Lat. capere. The suggestions of Skinner leave the English word quite uncertain. It may not improbably be the Goth. and A. S. hab-an, to have or hold; and consequently to take or catch hold: and thus, hap will signify any thing had; and (as luck also does) any thing caught.

Any thing, something, that comes or falls into our hold or possession, any thing caught; chance, accident, luck.

Happy, applied to those, to whom, or into whose hold or possession, good comes or falls; lucky, or having or causing good luck, successful, fortunate, or having or causing good success or good fortune.

Happy, in Prologue to Henry VIII., is equivalent to Lat. felix, i. e. propitious, favourable; q. d. causing happiness. In Cymbeline, happy, happily endowed; accomplished.

Happily, as haply, was used without reference to good or bad fortune; accidentally, perhaps.

He had bien in his courte, whan his happe was more hard.

R. Brunne, p. 59.

And whenne Brigheric was dede, as aboue is saide, by poyson happeliche I dronke, atte Warham his body was take to buriels.

Id. p. 13, note.

And hute after þe fende. happe hou hit myghte.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 310.

For whan a man hath overgret a wit,

Ful oft him happeth to misusen it.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16117.

For evermore mote we stand in drede

Of hap and fortune in our chapmanhede.

Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13167.

Certes (q. d. she) if any wight definish hap in this manner, that is to saine, that happe is betidyng ybrought foorth, by foolish mouing, and by no knitting of causes, I confyrme that hap nys right naught in no wise, and I deeme all vtterlie, that hap nis, ne dwelleth but a voyce, as who saieth, but an ydell woorde, without any significacion of thyng, committed to that voyce.

Id. Boecius, book v. fol. 235.

At sondrie seasons, as fortune requireth

Seuerally they came to see her welfare,

But ones it happened, loue them so fireth

To see their lady they all would not spare.

Id. The Remedie of Loue, fol. 322.

The happes ouer mannes hede

Ben honged with a tender threde.

Gower. Conf. Am. book vi. fol. 135.

For if the clerke beware his feith

In hapmanhode at such a feire,

The remnant more nedes empeire

Of all that to the worlde belongeth.

Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 44.

And this Pamphilus saith also; If thou be right happy, that is to sayn, if thou be right riche, thou shalte finde a gret number of felawes and frendes; and if thy fortune chaunge, and thou waxe poure, farewell frendshipe and felawshipe.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 115

R

HAP.

Imagining how to purchase
Grace of the quene there to bide
Till good fortune some happy guyde Me send might.

Chaucer. Dreame, fol. 357.

Not with vnstedfaste or happious thinge, but with rules of reason, whiche shewen the course of certaine thinges.

Id. The Testament of Loue, book i. fol. 294.

But the fortunes of warre be ryght peryllous, and so it happed to hym, for he was putte downe feersly with a glayue, so that he fell downe to the botome of the dyke, and with the fall brake his necke, and there he dyed.

Lord Berners. Croissart. Cronycle, c. 321.

Who would haue thought that my request
Should bring me furth such bitter frute?

But now is hapt that I feard least,

And al thys harme comes by my sute.

Vncertaine Auctors. When Adversitie is once fallen, &c.

Such happes which happen in such haplesse warres,
Make me to tearme them broyles and beastly iarres.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Thou wilt happely say: the subiectes euer chose the ruler and make hym sweare to keepe their law and to mainteine their priuilegies and liberties; and vpon that submit their selues vnto hym:
Ergo, if he rule amisse they are not bounde to obey.

Tyndal. Exposition on the Fifth Chapter of Matthew.

Besides these aduersities of the Carthaginienses, to the augmentation of their miserable calamities, it happed that their captain withal his army was vtterly destroyed in Sicil.

Golding. Justine, book xxii. fol. 102.

For thee I longde to liue, for thee nowe welcome death:

And welcome be that happie pang, that stops my gasping breath.

Gascoigne. In Trust is Treason.

Note therfore howe playniye y^e kinge here describeth his owne arrogācy) sayinge I kinge Nebucad. was blessed happye &c. he saith not) the God of heuene made me thus happye and so ful of prosperite and welthe) but I was happye quiete riche victoriouse sewer &c. and all thorowe my nowne wisdoms prudence & policye.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. iv.

Neuertheles it pleased God to bring the wind more westerly, & so in the moneth of May, 1592, we happily doubled Cape Comori without sight of the coast of India.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. part ii. fol. 105. James Lancaster.

Hic si quid nobis forte aduersi euenerit, tibi erunt parata verba,
If any thyng shall happily chaunce vnto vs in this matter otherwise than well, thou shalt percase heare of it.

Udall. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 138.

Yea, many a time the nymphs, which happ'd this flood to see,
Fled from him, whom they sure a satyr thought to be.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 18.

His bare thin cheekes for want of better bits,
And empty sides deceived of their dew,
Could make a stony hart his hap to rew.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 8.

And in the bosom of his courtly press
Vaunteth the hap of this victorious day,
Whilst the sick land in sorrow pines away.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, book 1.

Ensamble make of him your haplesse ioy,
And of my selfe now mated, as ye see;
Whose prouder vaunt that proud avenging boy
Did soone pluck downe, and curb'd my libertee.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 9.

What Troians then were to their deaths, by Teucer's shafts imprest:
Haplesse Orsilochnus was firste.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book viii. fol. 110.

Yet did he attain to no higher preferment in the church than the Deanry of Winchester; haply because he did not consent with the Church of England concerning some things indifferent.

Camden. Elizabeth, Anno 1589.

It often happeneth, althings commonlie from a good beginning fall into woorse estate.

Holinshed. History of Scotland, Anno 1219.

Ah, God help (quoth he) what a world is this; that Greeks should all of them know well enough what is good and honest; but the Lacedemonians only practice it! Some write, that the same happed in Athens also, at the festival solemnity called Panathenæa.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 390.

Why, the law makes a man happy, without respecting any other merit. a simple scholler, or none at all may be a lawyer.

Ben Jonson. Poetaster, act i. sc. 2.

And sure, had not his massie yron mace
Betwixt him and his hurt bene happily,
It would have cleft him to the girding place;
Yet, as it was, it did astonish him long space.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 8.

The thrusting of the Bible out of the house of God, is rather there to bee feared, where men esteeme it a matter so indifferent, whether the same bee by solemne appointment read publicquely, or not read, the bare text excepted, which the preacher happily chuseth out to expound.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, book v. fol. 216.

BAP. Not in my house Lucentio, for you know
Pitchers haue eares, and I haue manie seruants,
Besides old Gremio is hark'ning still,
And happilie we might be interrupted.

Shakspeare. Taming the Shrew, fol. 225.

What booteth it to haue beene rich alive?

What to be great? what to be gracious?

When after death no token doth survive

Of former being in this mortall hous,

But sleepes in dust dead and inglorious,

Like beast, whose breath but in his nostrils is,
And hath no hope of happinesse or blis.

Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

Him, to whose happy-making sight alone
When once our heav'nly-guided soul shall clime,

Then, all this earthly grossness quit,

Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,

Triumphing over Death, and Chance, and thee, O Time.

Milton. Ode on Time, l. 17.

And the hope that I conceive of this good opportunitie and effect thereof (my souldiours) ariseth not upon some fantastick imagination of mine owne braine, by hap-hazard and upon vain presumption, but grounded upon good reason and present experience.

Holland. Livius, fol. 578.

The gallies fought thus doubtfully together, hap-hazard, at the pleasure and will of Fortune.

Id. Ib. fol. 693.

To brandish it [tongue] wantonly, to lay about with it blindly and furiously, to slash and smite therewith any that happeth to come in our way, doth argue malice or madness.

Barrow. Sermon 17. vol. i.

Oft he resolves the ruins of the great,
And sadly thinks on lost Bavaria's fate,
The hapless mark of fortune's cruel sport,
An exile, meanly forc'd to beg support
From the slow bounties of a foreign Court.

Rowe. To the Earl of Godolphin.

Meantime for others of heroic note,
I waited in the lists of ancient fame
Enroll'd illustrious; and had haply seen
Great Theseus; and Pirithous his compeer,
The race of Gods.

Fenton. Homer. Odyssey, book xi. In Milton's Style.

In such cases, and by the help of such qualities as these, it is possible, I grant, and sometimes happens, that men have gone out of the world, as they lived in it, defying conscience, and the power of it, and deriding the flames of hell, 'till they were in the midst of them.

Atterbury. Sermon 4. vol. iv.

O Happiness! our being's end and aim!
Good, Pleasure, Ease, Content! whate'er thy name:
That something still which prompts th' eternal sigh,
For which we bear to live, or dare to die,
Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies,
O'erlook'd, seen double, by the fool and wise:
Plant of celestial seed! if dropp'd below,
Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow.

Pope. Essay on Man. Epistle 4.

HAP.

HAP. Her pencil drew what'er her soul design'd,
 And oft the happy draught surpass'd the image in her mind.
 — HAPALE. Dryden. Ode 2. To Mrs. Ann Killegrew.

Though the proposition (to be careful for nothing) be so worded as to seem to forbid all manner of carefulness, yet it means nothing less. Indeed it is impossible to live without caring, at least to live happily. Sharpe. Sermon 1. vol. iv.

With these fine fancies, at hap-hazard writ,
 I could make verses without art or wit.
 — Butler. Satire to a bad Poet.

Oh hear a hapless maid,
 That ev'n thro' half the years her life has number'd, Ev'n nine long years has dragg'd a trembling being Beset with pains and perils. Mason. Caractacus.

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
 Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn,
 Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
 To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.
 — Gay. Elegy written in a Country Church-yard.

When four different persons are called upon in a court of justice to prove the reality of any particular fact that happened twenty or thirty years ago, what is the sort of evidence which they usually give? why, in the great leading circumstances, which tend to establish the fact in question, they in general perfectly agree.

Porteus. Lecture 2. vol. i.

The word happy is a relative term; in strictness, any condition may be denominated happy in which the amount or aggregate of pleasure exceeds that of pain; and the degree of happiness depends upon the quantity of this excess.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, book i. ch. vi.

In your old states you possessed that variety of parts corresponding with the various descriptions of which your community was happily composed; you had all that combination, and all that opposition of interests, you had that action and counteraction, which, in the natural and in the political world, from the reciprocal struggle of discordant powers, draws out the harmony of the universe.

Burke. On the Revolution in France.

The above account of human happiness will justify the two following conclusions, which, although found in most books of morality, have seldom, I think, been supported by sufficient reasons. First, that happiness is pretty equally distributed amongst the different orders of civil society. Secondly, that vice has no advantage over virtue, even with respect to this world's happiness.

Paley. Philosophy, book i. ch. vi. Human Happiness.

One who knew him not so well as I do, would suspect this was done to serve a purpose. No such matter; 'twas pure hap-hazard. Warburton. Works, vol. vi. book vi. p. 157, notes. The Divine Legation.

HAPALE, from the Greek ἀπαλός, soft, Illig.; Ouistiti, Cuv. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Simiida, order Quadrupedia, class Mammalia.

Generic character. Incisive teeth nearly upright, close, and four in each jaw; the lower sometimes longer and narrower than the upper; cuspid teeth conical, longer than the incisive, to which they are contiguous in the lower, but from which they are distant in the upper jaw; molar teeth having a broad surface, studded with little points, five on a side in each jaw; face bare, nostrils separated by a broad septum, and expanded laterally; no cheek pouches; ears flat; buttocks hairy, tail long, and not prehensile; feet five-toed, the nails compressed and pointed, except those of the great toes of the hind feet, which are flattened; the thumbs of the fore feet hardly separated from the fingers.

This genus was long considered as forming part of the subgenus Pithecia, in the genus Cebus, to which these animals have a near resemblance; but they are distinguished from them by the upright position of the incisive teeth, by the approximation of the cuspid to them in the lower jaw, by the number of molars, which are only five instead of six on a side; by the flat ears, which in the Pithecia have the edge curled, and by the indistinct thumb of the hand, and the claw-like nails, whilst the other genus have the thumbs distinct and the nails flat. They are very docile, and are little, agreeably-formed animals, about the size of our Squirrels, with the rounded head and flat visage of all the American Monkey tribe.

a. Ouistitis with ringed tails.

H. Vulgaris, Illig.; Simia Jacchus, Lin.; Ouistiti, Buff.; Jacchus, Geoff.; Striated Ape, Pen.; Titi of Paraguay. General colour ashy, rump and tail marked with alternate rings of greyish brown and ash; a broad white spot on the forehead, and two large tufts of long, fine, ash-coloured hair before and behind the ears; the remainder of the head and shoulders brownish red; hands and feet brown. The Titi is a native of Guiana and Brazil, it walks on all fours, and cannot grasp with the fore hand, except by closing all five fingers, in consequence of the shortness of the thumb; it suffers much from cold and damp, but if taken care of will breed in Europe, having done so in France.

H. Penicillatus, Illig.; Jacchus Penicillatus, Geoff.; Pencilled Ouistiti. About the same size as the Titi; general colour ash; rump and tail ringed with brown and ash; white spot on the forehead, the rest of the head and upper part of the neck black, as are also the pencils of long hairs placed in front of the ears. Native of Brazil.

H. Leucocephalus, Illig.; Jacch. Leucoceph., Geoff.; White-headed Ouistiti. General colour, breast and head white, on the latter a tuft of long black hairs before, and another behind each ear; tail ringed alternately with brown and ash. Native of Brazil.

H. Auritus, Illig.; Jacch. Aur., Geoff.; Hairy-eared Ouistiti. General colour black, mingled with brown; forehead marked with a large white spot; inside of the ears covered with long white hairs. Supposed to be native of Brazil.

H. Humeralifer, Illig.; Jacch. Humeral., Geoff.; White-shouldered Ouistiti. General colour brownish black; top of the head deep brown, with a tuft of straight white hairs placed in front and behind each ear, projecting outwards and backwards; the neck and throat of an uniform reddish brown; tail black, with ashy grey rings far apart. Native of Brazil.

β. Ouistitis with tails not ringed.

H. Melanurus, Illig.; Jacch. Melan., Geoff.; Black-tailed Ouistiti. Face and back brown; back of the neck, chest, and belly greyish fawn colour; insides of thighs yellow, and legs deep brown; tail brownish black.

H. Argentatus, Illig.; Sim. Argent., Lin.; le Mico, Buff.; Fair Monkey, Pen.; Silvery Ouistiti. General colour white, glistening, and silvery; face, hands, and feet red; tail black. Native of the banks of the Amazon River.

γ. Ouistitis with large ears.

H. Rufimanus, Illig.; Sim. Mid., Lin.; Midas, Geoff.; le Tamarin, Buff.; Tamary of Guiana. Has a swarthy, flesh-coloured, naked face; forehead well marked by the projection of the upper margin of the orbits, and the hair on it upright and long; the ears very large, squarish, upright, and naked; the hair on the body shaggy, but soft and black. Native of the hotter parts of the South American Continent and the Island

HAPALE.
—
HA-
RANGUE.

Gorgona in the South Seas, south of Panama. According to Dampier, at low water they come to the sea-side to take muscles and periwinkles, which they dig out of the shells with their claws.

H. Ursula, Illig.; Midas Urs., Geoff.; le Tamarin Nègre, Buff.; Black Tamary. Probably a black variety of the preceding.

H. Labiatus, Illig.; Mid. Lab., Geoff.; White-lipped Tamary. Upper parts of the body black, under parts rusty red; the head black, but the nose and edges of the lips beset with close, short, white hairs. Native of Brazil.

H. Chrysomelas, Illig.; Yellow-faced Tamary. Has the coat black, with the forehead and the upper part of the tail golden yellow, and the sides of the head, the chest, the fore arms, and knees of a chestnut red colour. Native of Brazil.

H. Rosalius, Illig.; Sim. Ros., Lin.; le Marikina, Buff.; Silky Monkey, Pen.; Silky Tamary. Face dull purple, and surrounded by long, bright, bay-coloured hairs, which turn backwards, and give it somewhat the resemblance of a lion's countenance, whence it is frequently called the Lion-faced Monkey; the hair on the body very long, of a silky texture, and bright yellow colour; hands and feet dull purple; tail rather bushy at the tip. Native of Brazil.

H. Leoninus, Illig.; Mid. Leon., Geoff.; Leonine Tamary. General colour olive brown, the face black, and surrounded with long hairs of the same colour; mouth white; tail black above, and brown beneath. It is a very irritable animal, and often utters a cry similar to that of young birds. It is found in the Eastern part of the Cordilleras, on the banks of the Putumayo and Caqueta.

H. Œdipus, Illig.; Sim. Œdip., Lin.; le Pinche, Buff.; Red-tailed Tamary. Shoulders and back covered with long, loose, brown hairs; rump and half the tail deep orange; hair on the head white, long, and falling on the shoulders; face and throat black; breast, belly, and legs white; palms of the hands and soles of the feet black; tail, which the animal often walks with over its back, about twice the length of the body. Native of Guiana, Brazil, and the banks of the Amazon River.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Buffon, Histoire Naturelle; Illiger, Prodromus Mammalium et Avium; Pennant, History of Quadrupeds.

HA'RANGUE, v. } Skinner writes harang. It.
HA'RANGUE, n. } aringa, arringo; Fr. harangue;
HA'RANGUER. } Fr. verb haranguer. Skinner thinks it may be from the Eng. ring, because assemblies of auditors were held in rings or circles. "The word (says Tooke) is merely the pure and regular past participle, hrang, of the A. S. verb, hring-an, to sound, or make a great sound. (As hrino is also used.) And M. Caseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says, 'Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contention de voix.'" Diversions of Purley, ii. 274. And see Menage on the Fr. and It. nouns; and Junius, in v. rank. To harangue, then, is To speak aloud, in a loud, sounding voice.

The author of the Ecclesiastical Politie had in so many books of his own indeavoured to harangue up the nation into fury against tender consciences. Marvel. The Rehearsal Transposed, vol. ii. p. 307.

Anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mixt,
Assemble, and harangues are heard.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 663.

HA-RANGUE.
—
HAR-
BINGER.

And though amongst the antient Romans, men were not forbidden to deny, that which in the poets is written of the pains and pleasures after this life; which divers of great authority and gravity in that state have in their harangues openly derided; yet that belief was always more cherished than the contrary.

Hobbes. Leviathan, part i. ch. xii.

Which act is more instructive to the people, than any arguments drawn from the title of sovereign, and, consequently, fitter to disarm the ambition of all seditious haranguers for the time to come.

Id. Behemoth, part iv.

For he at any time would hang,
For th' opportunity t' harangue;
And rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than miss his dear delight, to wrangle.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 2.

There ought to be a difference of style observed in the speeches of human persons, and those of deities; and again, in those which may be called set harangues, or orations, and those which are only conversation or dialogue.

Pope. Postscript to the Odyssey, book xvi.

With them join'd all th' haranguers of the throng
That thought to get preferment by the tongue.

Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel.

I was then asked, How long I intended to stay? on my saying, Five days, Taipa was ordered to come and sit by me, and proclaim this to the people. He then harangued them in a speech mostly dictated by Feenou.

Cook. Voyage, &c. book ii. ch. v.

Having come pretty near us, a person in one of the two last stood up, and made a long harangue, inviting us to land, as we guessed by his gestures.

Id. Ib. book v. ch. xiii.

There be enthusiasts, who love to sit
In coffee-houses, and cant out their wit.
The first in most assemblies would you see,
Mark out the first haranguer, and that's he.

Byrom. Enthusiasm.

HARBINGER, prodromus, (an avantcoureur, or forerunner,) q. d. Ger. and D. herberger, i. e. qui alicui de hospitio prospicit, one who looks out for a harbour, or lodging for another. Skinner. Applied, generally, to

A forerunner, that which comes before; and by consequence, announces the approach of something else.

Souldiours behold, and Captaynes marke it well,
How hope is harbenger of all mishappe.

Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

A starr which did not to our nation
Portend her death, but her translation:
For when such harbingers are seene,
God crownes a saint, not kills a queene.

Corbet. Elegy on the Death of Queen Anne.

His father Antigonus perceiving that they had lodged his son Philip on a time in a house, where there were three young women, he said nothing to Philip himself, but before he sent for the harbinger, and said unto him, wilt thou not remove my son out of this straight lodging, and provide him a better?

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 740. Demetrius.

Light'ning and thunder (Heaven's artillery)
As harbingers before th' Almighty fly:
Those but proclaim his style and disappear;
The stiller sound succeeds; and God is there.

Dryden. The Character of a good Parson.

Think not, however, that success on one side is the harbinger of peace: on the contrary, both parties must be heartily tired to effect even a temporary reconciliation.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World. Letter 17.

Archdeacon Nares (ad v.) has given an extract from Hawkins's Life of Bishop Ken, from which it appears, that an officer by the name of HARBINGER was known in the English Court as late as the days of Charles II. On one occasion when that King passed the summer at Winchester, the Prebendal house of the above-named Prelate was assigned, with shameless effrontery, by the

HAR-
BINGER.
—
HAR-BOUR.

Harbinger, for the reception of one of the Royal Mistresses, the well-known Eleanor Gwynn. The Bishop with becoming spirit resisted the affront to his holy office, and the lady was in the end obliged to seek lodgings elsewhere.

HA'RBOUR, v. } Fr. herberge; It. albergo; HA'RBOUR, n. } Sp. alvergue; D. and Ger. her-
HA'RBOURAGE, } berg; Sw. herberge, herbergera;
HA'RBOURER, } Low Lat. herebergium. Vos-
HA'RBOURLESS, } sius derives from her, or heir,
HA'RBOROUGH, } exercitus, an army, and berg-en, HA'RBOROUS, } custodire, servare, continere. The HA'RBOUR-TOWN, } A. S. beorg-an, byrg-an, is to HA'RBOUR-WATER, } defend, to secure, to fortify.

"Here-berga is (Somner) statio, mansio, a station or standing where the army rested in their march," i. e. in security, protected; and herebyrig-an, to harbour, to abide, to lodge, to quarter. To harbour is, generally,

To secure or protect; to receive or take under protection; to stay, remain, or abide, in security; to shelter, to lodge; to afford or grant shelter or lodging.

Also charge Charity. a church to make
In þyn hole h'te. to herborghwen alle Treuthe
And fynde alle maner folke. foudre to hure soules.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 124.

For archa Noe, nemeþ hede. ys no more to mene
Bote holychurche. herbergh to alle þat ben blessed.
Id. Ib. p. 196.

I was herbarweles, and ye herboriden me.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxv.

I was herbourless & ye lodgid me.
Bible, Anno 1551.

Therefore he ledde them ynne and resseyuyde in herbore, and that nyght thei dwelliden with him.
Wiclif. Dedis, ch. x.

And the eleuenth day at sixe of the clocke at night we saw land which was very high, which afterward we knew to be Island: and the twelft day we harboured there, and found many people.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 109. John Davis.

Then went forth our pinnesse to seeke harborow, & found many good harbours, of the which we entered into one with our shippes.
Id. Ib. vol. i. fol. 235. Sir Hugh Willoughby.

For of an harbourer of deuils, was he sodainly made a disciple, and scholar of Jesus.
Udall. Luke, ch. viii.

Whether she haue to her smal power ben herberous to the saintes, lodged them and washen their fete.
Id. 1 Timothy, ch. v.

An other sorte promyseth their howse to be herbourouse to the household of fayth, and a great vowe do they make.
Bale. Apology, fol. 38.

If they wolde vse but a fewe nombre of houndes, onely to harborowe or rouse the game.
Sir Thomas Elyot. Governour, book i. ch. xviii.

Eke the vndaunted Numides compasse thee;
Also the Sirtes, vnfriendly harbroughe.
Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book iv

The ground we were on grewe to bee streight, and not aboue fiftie paces ouer, having the maine sea on the one side of it, and the harbour-water, or inner sea (as you may tearme it) on the other side.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 541. Sir Francis Drake.

There were many commodious havens and fair baies for ships to harbour, and ride in with safety.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 802

And all within were pathes and alleies wide
With footing worne, and leading inward farr:
Fair harbour that them seems: so in they entred are.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 1.

HAR-BOUR.

O, in what safety temperance doth rest,
Obtaining harbour in a sovereign breast!
Which if so praiseful in the meanest men,
In pow'ful kings how glorious is it then!

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. Matilda to King John.

————— Your king, whose labour'd spirits
Fore-wearied in this action of swift speede,
Craues harbourage within your citie walles.
Shakspeare. John, fol. 5.

————— She calls her barren jade,
Base quean, and rivel'd witch, and wish'd she could be made
But worthy of her hate, (which most of all her grieves)
The basest beggar's bawd, a harbourer of thieves.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 3.

Have a better eye and care to all suspicious and discontented persons, to their sayings and doings, to their false bruits and reports, to the places and corners of their haunt and resort, to their harborers, companyons, ayders, and maintayners.

Stow, Anno, 1586. Queene Elizabeth.

For I was hungry, and yee gave me meate, thirsty, and yee gave me drinke; naked, and yee cloathed me; harbourlesse, and yee lodged me.

Homilies. Sermon against Perill of Idolatry, part iii.

Those who would have ministers live of alms and benevolence, make their reason, that they must follow the example of Christ and the apostles; but by the example of Christ and the apostles they are taught to abound in all works of charity themselves; to feed the hungry, to cloath the naked, lodge the harbourless, &c. and how shall they perform this, living in want?

Spelman. On Tythes, ch. xii.

On the left hand the haven-lesse and harbourlesse coasts of Italie, and on the right, the Illyrians, Liburnians, and Istrians, fierce nations, and for the most part, reputed infamous, for roving and robbing by the sea side, put him in exceeding feare.

Holland. Livius, fol. 352.

Then if by me thou list aduised be,
Forsake thy soyle, that so doth thee bewitch:
Leaue me those hilles, where harbrough nis to see,
Nor holy-bush, nor brere, nor winding witch.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. June.

In which part there be very good hauens, and safe harbouroughes for shippes.
Stow. Description of England, &c.

————— Halos harbor-towne, that Neptune beats upon.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book ii. fol. 28.

Now stern Æneas waves his weighty spear
Against his foe, and thus upbraids his fear:
What farther subterfuge can Turnus find?
What empty hopes are harbour'd in his mind.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, book xii.

They judged, that all men who suspected any to have been in the rebellion were bound to discover such their suspicion, and to give no harbour to such persons: that the bare suspicion made it treason to harbour the person suspected, whether he was guilty or not.

Burnet. Own Times. Charles II. Anno 1682.

Nay more, when it has home return'd,
By some proud maid ill-us'd and scorn'd,
I still the renegade carest,
And gave it harbour in my breast.
Walsh. Loving one I never saw.

[Love] like the soul its harbourer,
Debarr'd the freedom of the air,
Disdains against its will to stay,
But struggles out, and flies away.
Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 1.

Geneva was famous for its religion and a great nurse of pious men, and harbourer of exiles for religion.

Strype. Life of Archbishop Grindal, Anno 1582.

In this, however, I acted contrary to the opinion of some persons on board, who in very strong terms expressed their desire to harbour for present convenience, without any regard to future disadvantages.

Cook. Voyage, book ii. ch. vii.

Upon the whole, Rio de Janeiro is a very good place for ships to put in at, that want refreshments; the harbour is safe and commodious, and provisions, except wheaten bread and flour, may be easily procured.
Id. Ib. book i. ch. ii.

HAR-BOUR.
—
HARD.

Yet here, ev'n here in this disastrous clime,
Horrid and harbourless, where all life dies;
Adventurous mortals, urg'd by thirst of gain,

Through floating isles of ice and fighting storms
Roam the wild waves, in search of doubtful shores.
Mallet. The Excursion.

HAR-BOUR.
—
HARD.

H A R D.

HARD, v.
HARD, adj.
HARD, adv.
HA'RDEN, HA'RDLY, HA'RDNESS, HA'RDSHIP, HA'RDY, v.
HA'RDY, adj.
HA'RDHEAD, HA'RDHOOD, HA'RDIMENT, HA'RDILY, HA'RDINESS.

Goth. harau; A. S. heard; D. hard; Ger. hart; Sw. heard; from the A. S. heard-ian, aheard-ian, ahyrd-an; durare, indurare, durescere, indurescere. "Hard, as applied to material substances, (says Locke,) is opposed to soft, that being generally called hard by us, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure by the pressure of any part of our bodies, and that, on the contrary, soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon any easy and unpainful touch.

Hardness consists in a firm cohesion of the parts of matter making up masses of a sensible bulk, so that the whole does not easily change its figure." On Human Understanding, book ii. ch. iv. sec. 4. Hence its numerous consequential applications, as opposing or resisting the motion of its own parts; generally, as opposing or resisting, bearing, suffering or enduring, and thus,

1. Difficult; or that can or may not (easily) be done, sc. be compressed, separated, penetrated, bent, broken, as, steel is hardest; met. impenetrable, insensible, stupid.

2. Difficult; or that cannot (easily) be done or performed by labour or skill; be understood, be learned, as Greek is hardest to come by: a hard task, a hard road or way;—difficult, laborious, toilsome.

3. Difficult; to be borne or suffered, as a hard saying, a hard season, a hard case; harsh, rough, rigorous, severe, unjust; hard-beer, harsh, rough; a hard trot, harsh, violent.

4. Difficult; to be moved, or acted upon; as a hard man, a hard heart; a man not easily acted upon or moved by kind or good feelings; and therefore, unkind, harsh, severe, austere, grinding, oppressive.

Hard is sometimes used as equivalent to hardy, or rather hardily, as he died hard, i. e. resolutely, obdurately; or, sometimes, with difficulty.

Hard by, joined hard to, i. e. close to.

To strive hard; i. e. laboriously, vehemently.

To harden; to confirm, to fortify, to strengthen.

Hardy, adj. enduring, or able to endure, firm, stout, strong, resolute, bold, daring, confident, assured; hence, hardily, assuredly, or as Mr. Tyrwhitt, certainly.

To hard, and to hardy; i. e. to harden, to encourage.

Corineus þer with harde smot and stured hym a boutē,
And made his wey bi eiþer syde, and percede þe route.

R. Gloucester, p. 17.

þo he com out ward with ys folk, þe emperour with stod,
And dredde of hys hardynesse, & þougte yt was not god.

Id. p. 64.

Vor me mýgte bere by hys dāye & lede hardelyche
Tresour aboute & oþer god oueral apertelyche
In wodes & in oþer studes, so þat non tyme nas þat pes bet ysustained, þat bý hys tyme was.

Id. p. 357.

Lucye, to hardye ys men, pryked her and þer.

Id. p. 218.

Vor he was strong man & hardy, þe strengoste of ys londe.

Id. p. 184.

Edward told William of Alfred alle þe case, & praied him of help, for he dred harder pase.

R. Brunne, p. 52.

& if he wild it wyne with dynt, als duke hardie
He suld fynd þerinne kýng Harald redie.

Id. p. 70.

Arme we vs I rede, & go we hardilie.

Id. p. 159.

þe gode bisshop Antoyn þer he bare þe pris,
His dedes here to alowe, for hys hardynesse.

Id. p. 281.

God shal take veniaunce. in alle swiche preestes
Wel harder & grettere.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 6.

— Honger was nat hardy. on hem for to loke.

Id. Ib. p. 137.

And to be cald conquerour. that comeþ of special grace
Of hardynesse of heorte. and of hendeness.

Id. Ib. p. 367.

And go honte hardiliche. to hares and to foxes.

Id. Ib. p. 129.

But he lepe vp on heigh, in hardenesse of herte.

Id. Crede, p. 21.

But he that hadde takun oo besaunt, came and seide Lorde Y woot that thou art an harde man, (durus homo,) thou repist where thou hast not sowe and thou gederist togider where thou hast not spred abroad.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxv.

Then he whiche had receaued the one talente came, and sayde:
Master, I considered that thou waste an harde man, which repest where thou sowedst not, and gatherest where thou strawdest not.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And Jhesus seyng him maad sorye seyde, how hard (quam difficile) thei that han money schulen entre into the kyngdom of God.

Wiclif. Luke, ch. xviii.

But moneste ghousilf bi alle daies the while to dai is named, that noon of ghou be hardned bi fallace of synne.

Id. Ebrewis, ch. iii.

But exhorte one an other daylye, whyle it is called to daye, least any of you waxe hardherted thorow the deceitfulnesse of synne.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Therfor manye of hise disciplis heringe, seiden, this word is hard,
who may here it?

Wiclif. John, ch. vi.

Many therfore of his disciples: when they hearde this, sayde:
this is an harde sayinge: who can abyde the hearynge of it?

Bible, Anno 1551.

An he seide to hem, for Moyses for the herdnesse of your herte suffride you leve youre wyues, but fro the begynnyng it was not so.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xix.

Moses because of the hardnes of youre hertes suffered you to put awaye youre wyfes: but from the begynnyng it was not so.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Therfore we ben hardi (audentes) algatis and witen, that the while we ben in this bodi we goon in pilgrimage fro the lord, for we walken by feith, and not bi cleer sight.

Wiclif. 2 Corinthians, ch. v.

O litel child, alas! what is thy gilt,
That never wroughtest sinne as yet parde?
Why wol thin harde father have thee spilt.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5277.

They speken of sondry harding of metall,
And speken of medicines therwithall,
And how, and whan it shuld yharded be,
Which is unknow algates unto me.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10557.

For loue me youe such hardiment
For to fulfill his commandement.

Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 124.

And hardily they dorsten lay hir necke,
The miller shuld not stele hem half a pecke
Of corn by sleighte, ne by force hem reve.

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4008.

HARD.

A wif is Goddes yefte veraily;
All other maner yestes hardely,
As londres, rentes, pasture, or commune,
Or mebles, all ben yestes of fortune.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9186.

She toke her leaue at hem ful thriftely
As she wel could, and they her reuerence
Unto the ful didden hardely.
Id. The third Book of Troilus, fol. 167.

O noble markis, your humanitee
Assureth us and yeveth us hardinesse,
As oft as time is of necessitee,
That we to you mow tell our hevinesse.
Id. The Clarkes Tale, v. 7969

Now cometh slouthe, that wol not suffre no hardnesse ne no penance: for sothly, slouthe is tendre and so delicat, as sayth Salomon, that he wol suffre non hardnesse, ne penance, and therefore he shendeth all that he doth.

Id. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 344.

And how asseged was Ipolita
The faire hardy quene of Scythia.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 884.

As steele is hardest in his kinde
Aboue all other, that men finde
Of metalles.

Gower. Conf. Am. fol. 5. Prologue,

For hys lady, whome he desyareth,
With hardnesse his herte fyreth,
And sent hym worde wythoute faile,
That he well take the bataile.

Id. Ib. book iv. fol. 74.

So yeneth it me the more feith,
And maketh me hardie soth to seie,
That I dare well the better preie
My lady, whiche a woman is.

Id. Ib. book iii. fol. 80.

I wolde haue hym lerne Greke and Latine authours bothe at one tyme, or els to begyn with Greke, for as moche as that is hardeste to come by.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. x.

But when the braine is cold and drie, things are therefore the faster holden, because it is the propertie of colde and drought, to thicken all things, and to harden them fast together.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 213.

And I wyl nowe onely speake of those exercises, apte to the furniture of a gentyll mannes personage, adapyng his body to hardnesse, strengthe, and agilitie.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. xvi.

My woundes are wide, yet seme they not to bleed,
And hidden woundes are hardly heald we see.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholmew of Bathe.

The Bactrians bee the most hardyest people amongst those naciōs vnciuill men, and much abhorring from the delicatenes of the Persians.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, book iv. fol. 66.

And he departed thence, & entred into a certayne mannes house, named Justus, a worshyper of God, whose house ioynd harde to the synagoge.

Bible, Anno 1551. Actes, ch. xviii.

Hee is a great adventurer (said hee)
That hath his sword through hard assay forgone,
And now hath vowd, till he avenged bee
Of that despight, neuer to wearen none.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 3.

Besides, the Briton is so naturally infus'd
With true poetic rage, that in their measures, art
Doth rather seem precise, than comely; in each part
Their metre most exact, in verse of th' hardest kind.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 6.

Besides,
I like you not; if you will know my house,
Tis at the tuft of Oliues, here hard by.
Shakspeare. As you like it, fol. 199.

Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarg'd
Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by hate;
Till good Josiah drove them thence to hell.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 422.

HARD

MIR. Alas, now pray you
Worke not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt vp those logs that you are enioyned to pile.
My father
Is hard at study; pray now rest your selfe.

Shakspeare. Tempest, fol. 10.

But victuals being very straight and scant at that time even to find the men, the poor geese were so hard handled and so little regarded, that they were in manner starved for lack of meat.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 124. Camillus.

Upon his crest the hardned yron fell;
But his more hardned crest was armd so well,
That deeper dint therein it would not make.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

And now his heart
Distends with pride, and hardning in his strength
Glories. Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. v. 572.

Enflam'd with fury and fiers hardyhed,
He seemd in hart to harbour thoughts unkind,
And nourish bloody vengeance in his bitter mind.
Id. Ib. book i. can. 4.

Where if he be,—with dauntless hardihood,
And brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground,
And seise his wand. Milton. Comus, l. 650.

Come, come, my Lords,
These oracles are hardly [hardily] attain'd,
And hardly vnderstood.
Shakspeare. Henry VI. Second Part, fol. 125.

At the first the Gaules and Spanyards, equall to their enemies both in force and courage, maintained the conflict right hardily, and kept their order and arraies.

Hollana. Livius, fol. 461.

But thank be God, and your good hardiment!
They have the price of their owne folly payd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 8.

He did confound the best part of an houre
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 51.

The wingd-foot god so fast his plumes did beat,
That soone he came whereas the Titanesse
Was striving with fair Cynthia for her seat;
At whose strange sight and haughty hardinesse *
He wondred much, and feared her no lesse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, can. 6. Of Mutabilitie.

And thus I hang a garland at the dore;
(Not for to shew the goodness of the ware;
But such hath beene the custome heretofore,
And customes vere hardly broken are.)
Ignoto. Verses to Spenser.

And eke that age despysed nicenesse vaine
Enur'd to hardnesse and to homely fare,
Which them to warlike discipline did trayne,
And manly limbs endur'd with little care
Against all hard mishaps and fortunelesse misfare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 8.

Still so hard-hearted? what may be
The sin thou hast committed;
That now the angry deity
Has to a rock congealed tnee,
And thus thy hardness fitted?
Brome. Songs. The Hard Heart.

[They] had such affection for their religion, and the rights and liberties of their country, that, pro aris et focis, they were willing to undergo any hardships or dangers, and thought no service too much, or too great for their country.

Whitelock. Memorials, Anno 1643.

It was to weet a wilde and salvage man;
Yet was no man, but onely like in shape,
And eke in stature higher by a span;
All overgrowne with haire, that could awhape
An hardy hart.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 7.

But Jove's minde hath evermore outstept
The minde of man; who both affrights and takes the victory
From any hardiest hand with ease.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xvi. fol. 231.

HARD.

Think not my judgment leads me to comply
With laws unjust, but hard necessity:
Imperious need, which cannot be withstood,
Makes ill authentic, for a greater good.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Lord Ranelagh died on Sunday morning; he died hard as their term of art is here to express the woeful state of men, who discover no religion at their death.

Swift. Letter to Dr. King, London, December 8, 1712.

For let the venal try
Their every hardening stupifying art,
Truth must prevail, zeal will enkindle zeal,
And nature, skilful touch'd, is honest still.

Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

They who were not yet grown to the hardiness of avowing the contempt of the king (whom they provoked) would sooner have been checked, and recovered their loyalty and obedience.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. i. part ii. book v. p. 465.

Whom when the Trojan hero hardly knew,
Obscure in shades, and with a doubtful view,
(Doubtful as he who runs through dusky night,
Or thinks he sees the moon's uncertain light)
With tears he first approach'd the sullen shade.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, book vi.

Of all hardnesses of heart, there is none so inexcusable as that of parents towards their children. An obstinate, inflexible, unforgiving temper, is odious upon all occasions, but here it is unnatural.

Spectator, No. 181.

To complete the sense of the words we must have recourse to the two precedent verses; which being compared with the text (Deut. xxix. 4.) present us with a description of such a brutish and irrational temper, such an invincible hardness, as is not to be found in any people mentioned throughout the whole book of God, or any history whatsoever.

South. Sermons, vol. viii. p. 364.

Heroes are always drawn bearing sorrows, struggling with adversities, undergoing all kinds of hardships, and having in the service of mankind a kind of appetite to difficulties and dangers.

Spectator, No. 312.

Juba commands Numidia's hardy troops,
Mounted on steeds unus'd to the restraint
Of curbs or bits, and fleetier than the winds.

Addison. Cato, act ii. sc. 1.

Have you been evil spoken of and your character injured? When you knew yourself innocent, this is hard to bear on worldly principles. But religion makes even calumny light.

Gilpin. Sermon 14. vol. i.

Tell such people of a world after this—of their being accountable for their actions; and of the gospel denunciations of damnation upon all who lead such ungodly lives, without repentance; they are hardened to every thing of this kind—it has no effect upon them.

Id. Sermon 5. vol. i.

My lords, I assert, confidently and hardily I make the assertion, and I challenge confutation; let any one, who will take the trouble to follow me in the calculations upon which I am about to enter, confute me if he can,—I do assert, my lords, that the healthiest of their ships are nothing better than pestilential galls!

Horsley. Speeches, p. 213.

Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies he would rove.

Gray. Elegy in a Country Church-yard.

Nor should it be forgotten, that he was the first who, in this dialogue, had the hardihood to displace Jonson from the eminence to which, by the unanimous voice of Dryden's contemporaries, he had most unjustly been elevated, and to set Shakspeare far above him.

Malone. Life of Dryden.

That domestick grief is, in the first instance, to be thanked for these ornaments to our language, it is impossible to deny. Nor would it be common hardiness to contend, that worldly discontent had no hand in these joint productions of poetry and piety.

Johnson. Life of Young.

Where works of man are cluster'd close around,
And works of God are hardly to be found.

Cowper. Retirement.

Divines, with the best intentions, have said more than the scriptures have said concerning repentance, and have thereby precipitated men into despair, and consequent impenitence and hardness of heart.

Anecdotes of the Life of Dr. Watson, vol. ii. p. 313.

He suffered persecution gladly for the sake of Christ and his truth: he stripped himself of all the comforts of this life, and yielded himself up to all the hardships and evils that man can suffer.

Sherlock. Discourse 60. vol. iii. part ii. p. 133.

Though it [the life of Benvenuto Cellini] was read with the greatest pleasure by the learned of Italy, no man was hardy enough, during so long a period, to introduce to the world a book in which the successors of Saint Peter were handled so roughly.

Johnson. Some Account of the Life of Benvenuto Cellini.

HARD, in Composition.

For I know wel that ye ben so hard-herted, that ye wol do nothing for me.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 122.

Who would not be harde-bounde and fastned in this so ryche and noble a cheyne.

Fisher. On Prayer, sig. C. 2.

They carry in their hands wooden stakes most sharpe & hard-pointed, as yf they were yron.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. fol. 57. Odoricus.

He [King Philip] was a man of stature conuenient, of countenance amiable and louely, of body somewhat crasse and corpulent, quicke witted, bold and hardy-stomaked.

Hall. Henry VII. The twenty-first Yere.

For maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
To aid a virgin, such as was herself,
In hard-besetting need.

Milton. Comus, l. 857.

Why, when the hard-edg'd iron did turn
Soft as a bed of roses blown,
When cruel flames forgot to burn
Their chaste, pure limbs, should man alone
'Gainst female innocence conspire,
Harder than steel, fiercer than fire.

Carew. Song 2, in an Entertainment by the Lord Chamberlain.

For some hard-favour'd groom of thine, quoth he,
Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee.

Shakspeare. Rape of Lucrece.

But in good faith, signior, for all this, the gentle-woman is a good, pretty, proud, hard-favour'd thing, marry not so peerlessly to be doted upon, I must confesse.

Ben Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, act iv. sc. 4.

From which, along the field
The poor foules make wing: this and that way yield
Their hard-flowne pinions.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book ii. fol. 341.

I'll live where are no fires, no fears by night:
Vcalegon my neighbour does half-fright
The street.

Holyday. Juvenal. Satire 3.

THES. What are they that do play it?

EGE. Hard-handed men, that worke in Athenes heere,
Which neuer labour'd in their mindes till now.

Shakspeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, fol. 159.

Daily there was such number of hard-heads printed, that the baseness thereof made all things exceeding dear; and therefore we were counselled by the wisest to stay the irons [of the Cowning house] while further order might be taken.

Knox. History of Reformation, fol. 157.

Chimistry is an ingenious profession, as which by art will force somewhat of worth and eminence from the dullest substance, yea, the obdurat'st and hardest-hearted body cannot but shed forth a tear of precious liquor, when urged thereunto with its intreaties.

Fuller. Worthies. The General Worthies of England.

Or if you be hard-heartedly bent, to appoint otherwise, which oh sooner let me die than know.

Sidney. Arcadia, book v.

Like the night he rang'd the host, and rov'd
(Apart the fleet set) terribly, with his hard-loosing hand,
His silver bow twang'd, and his shafts, did first the mules command,
And swift hounds.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book i. fol. 2.

HARD.

HARD. Againe, if thy parish be stout and hard-necked, and will not heare the word of God, nor passe for it, yet the curate doing that which pertaineth unto him to doe, hee is discharged before God, and their blood shall be upon their owne heads.

Latimer. Sermon on St. John the Evangelist's Day, fol. 285.

I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lye i' th' bosome of
Our hard-ru'd king.

Shakspeare. Henry VIII. fol. 220.

And now by plain dint of hard-spurring and whipping,
Dry-shod we came where folks sometimes take shipping.

Cotton. Voyage to Ireland, can. 3.

The Bard whom pilfer d Pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian Tale for half a crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains from hard-bound brains eight lines a year;

Pope. Epistle to Arbuthnot.

He that will use all liberties that the law allows him, for the making advantages to himself in his trade, or his dealings with other men; such a one will not be able to avoid the just imputation of being in many instances an oppressor, or a hard-conscienced man.

Sharp. Sermon 7. vol. i.

While sound and sound a different sense explains,
Both play at hard-head till they break their brains.

Dryden. The Hind and Panther

Hence the yeoman's powdered beef and rusty bacon sweetened and relieved with healthful sauces, hard-headed cabbages, and roots that give more vigour than beef itself.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 376. Letters from several Persons.

Let men pretend what they will, let them be never so orthodox in their belief, or regular in their conversation, or strict in the performance of those duties that relate to the worship of God, yet if they be hard-hearted and uncharitable, if God hath given them wealth, and they have not hearts to do good with it, they have no true piety towards God.

Sharp. Sermon 4. vol. i.

But it is no unusual hard-heartedness in such chief ministers, to sacrifice such instruments, how innocent soever, to their own dark purposes.

Clarendon. History of the Civil Wars, book x. vol. iii. p. 16.

To stuff thy skin with swelling knobs
Of cruel and hard-wooded drubs.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 1.

When the chiefs were removed, in order to go to the root, the whole party was put under a proscription so general and severe as to take their hard-earned bread from the lowest officers in a manner which had never been known before, even in a general revolution.

Burke. On the Cause of the present Discontents.

The pert ridiculers of religion and virtue are to be allowed abundance of wit in the silliest and grossest things they utter; and the most hard-hearted libertines must be held to have true good-nature, because they have superficial gaiety.

Secker. Sermon 19. vol. i.

How shall we account for the striking contrast between the insensibility and hard-heartedness of the ancient philosophers, and those professions of gentleness and philanthropy which their brethren in our own times so ostentatiously display in their writings and their discourses?

Porteus. Tracts. Beneficial Effects of Christianity.

Long-enduring chiefs,
Your efforts, now accomplish'd, may admit
Refecation due to this hard-labour'd train,
Due to yourselves.

Glover. Leonidas, book vi.

To fly for refuge from distracting thought
To such amusements, as ingenious woe
Contrives, hard-shifting, and without her tools—
O comfortless existence!

Cowper. The Task, book v.

HARDWICKIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx four or five leaved, leaves ovate, slightly cohering at the base; corolla none, style short; stigma peltate; pod lanceolate, one-celled, one-seeded, two-valved; seed pendulous at the apex of the pod.

Two species, trees, natives of Coromandel. Roxb.

HARE, to hare one, (says Skinner,) that is, to terrify, to throw into a consternation, to strike with terrour, from the Fr. harier, to harass; and this, perhaps, from the A. S. herg-ian, to harry, q. v.

But the poor creature was so hared by the council of officers, that he presently caused a proclamation to be issued out, by which he did declare the parliament to be dissolved.

Clarendon. History of the Civil Wars, vol. iii. book xvi. p. 660.

To hare and rate them thus at every turn, is not to teach them, but to vex and torment them to no purpose.

Locke. On Education, sec. 67.

HARE, n.

HARE-BRAIN,

HARE-BRAINED,

HARE-FINDER,

HARE-HUNTER,

HARE-HUNTING,

HARE-LIP,

HARE-MOUTHED.

A. S. hara; D. haas, haze; Ger. hase; Sw. hara. Junius suggests the A. S. hær, the hair, referring to the declaration of Pliny, that the hare is the hairiest creature of all other. Wachter, A. S. har, canus, hoary. Ihre, from Ger. har-en, clamare, to cry, quod hiberno tempore acutissimè clamat; from the shrillness of its cries during winter. It is not improbable that the noun is of the same origin as the verb to hare, q. v., and that the name was given to the animal from its terrours, when harried, or pursued by harriers.

Hare-brained, agreeably to the adage, As mad as a March hare; Skinner derives it from the verb to hare.

VOL. XXIII.

Hare-lip; labia fissa; a lip split or divided into two parts, like that of the hare.

Somerville, in the Argument to the second Book of The Chase, professes to give "A description of the hare-hunting in all its parts."

Mýd word he þretneþ mucche, & lute deþ in dede.
Hys mouþ ys as a leon, hys herte arne as an hare.

R. Gloucester, p. 457.

What man art thou? quod he,
Thou lokest, as thou woldest finde an hare,
For ever upon the ground I see the stare.

Chaucer. Prologue to Sire Thopas, v. 13627.

And than sodenly ther started an hare among the Frenchmen; and such as sawe her cryed and made gret brüt.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. xlii.

O painted fooles, whose hairbraine heades must haue
More clothes attones, than might become a kyng.

Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Fansie (quoth he) farewell, whose badge I long did beare,
And in my hat full harebrayndly, thy flowers did I weare.

Id. The Fruite of Fetters.

The hairiest creature of all other is the hare.

Holland. Plinie, vol. i. p. 347.

When hares use means to confound the scent and save themselves from the dogs that hunt them; we may observe, that they take therein the readiest ways, and the most obvious to sense, to avoid the evil they flie from.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

Lying at siege before the city of Corinth, he [Archidamus] marked how there were hares started even close under the walles thereof; upon which sight he said thus to those that served with him: Our enemies are easie to be surprised and caught, when they are so lazie and idle, as to suffer hares to lie and harbour hard under their city walls, even within the trench and town-ditch.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 375.

I meane it (saith the king) by that same hare-braine wild fellow, my subject, the Earle of Suffolke, who is protected in your countrie, and begins to play the foole, when all others are weary of it.

Bacon. Henry VII. fol. 223.

HARE.

If anie dare be so hardie, as to take one night his lodgings in any of these ins, which hath beene experimented by some rash and hare-braine aduenturers, streight these spirits claw him by the back.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, ch. iv.

Who hath such hollow eyes as not to see,
How those, that are hair-brain'd, boast of Apollo,
And bold give out the Muses do them follow,
Though in Love's library, yet no lovers be.

Drummond. Sonnet 2, for Galatea.

Tiribazus hereupon was in such a rage with the king, that he hated him to the death: not because he was any traytour or seditious man in nature, but a mad hare-brained fellow.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 798. Artaxerxes.

Their jumping to and fro, before they leap plumb in [their form], is to take their aim (not much unlike to dogs, turning about several times before they lie down); for hare-finders (who use to watch them) say they will do thus, though they be not pursued.

Digby. On Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

If some such desp'rate hackster shall devise
To rouse thine hare's-heart from her cowardice,
As idle children striving to excell
In blowing bubbles from an empty shell;
Oh, Hercules! how like to prove a man,
That all so rath thy warlike life began!

Hall. Satire 4. book iv.

Mal levorer, in Latin malus leporarius, or the bad hare-hunter.

Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

Never mole, hare-lip nor scarre,
Nor make prodigious, such as are Despised in natiuitie,
Shall upon their children be.

Shakspeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, fol. 162.

Hare-mouth'd, dog-nos'd, like mule thy teeth and chin.

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Thus Gay, the hare with many friends,
Twice seven long years the Court attends:
Who, under tales conveying truth,
To virtue form'd a princely youth.

Swift. A Libel on Dr. Delany, &c.

What in common life would denote a man rash, fool-hardy, hair-brain'd, opiniatre, craz'd, is recommended in this scheme as the true method in speculation. Bentley. Remarks on Free-Thinking, p. 42.

Well—one at least is safe. One shelter'd hare
Has never heard the sanguinary yell
Of cruel man, exulting in her woes.

Cowper. The Task, book iii.

But when at rising light
Our boat stood still, up starts a hair-brain'd wight,
With sallow cudgel breaks the bargeman's pate,
And bangs the mule at a well-favour'd rate.

Francis. Horace. Satire 5. book i.

There are, indeed, two officers in the stables which are sinecures. By the change of manners, and indeed by the nature of the thing, they must be so; I mean the several keepers of buck hounds, stag hounds, fox hounds, and harriers.

Burke. On Economical Reform.

The HARE has been a fruitful subject for superstitions. It was esteemed a melancholy animal, probably, as Johnson conjectures, in his note on 1 Henry IV. i. 2, from its solitary sitting on its form. The flesh therefore, even on the authority of Galen, was supposed to engender "melancholy blood," and accordingly it was often a diet prohibited by the Physician, although much esteemed by the Epicure. Pliny, however, (xxviii. passim.) has pointed out many counterbalancing advantages from feeding on it. It was a powerful soporific, and according to vulgar belief (for the general prevalence of which the Philosopher reasonably enough supposes there must have been at bottom some adequate cause) it made the body well-favoured for seven days after it was eaten; (Martial, v. in Gelliam;) and it was perhaps on this account that Alexander Severus had a Hare every day for dinner. (Lampridius, 37.) Its lungs, liver, dung, heart, burned hair, and blood, and even its unborn young torn from the mother, were applicable to many female complaints; and the wife who was anxious to present her lord with an heir, might obtain her wish by an appropriate leporine preparation scraped into her wine. Sextus Platonius (2.) is not content that this draught, repulsive as it must have been, should be administered to the wife singly, the husband also, to prevent the conception of an epicene progeny, must swallow the same nauseous mixture. Other medicines were framed from this animal for cancers, burns, epilepsy, the sting of a scorpion, the bite of a shrew mouse, ruptures, ophthalmia, stone, and toothache; moreover, if any gouty person would take the trouble of cutting off the foot of a Hare while alive, and carrying it perpetually about him, he would find it a certain and effective cure for his sufferings.

In Brand's Popular Antiquities, ii. 518. many authorities are collected for the superstition which regards a Hare crossing the path as an ill omen. Sir Thomas Brown has well explained the origin of this notion, "that a fearful animal passing by us portended unto us something to be feared." (Vulgar Errors, v. 22.) The belief is of very ancient date, and may perhaps have arisen from the retreat of Darius before the Scythians, when in the very face of his invading army they broke their own line, and rushed out in pursuit of a Hare which had been accidentally started. (Herod. iv. 134.) His son had more daring. After crossing the Hellespont he was not discouraged in his march by a still more marvellous portent, which the same Historian tells us was of easy interpretation, but which, without his assistance, would perhaps appear obscure to the moderns. A Mare foaled a Hare, which, according to the Father of History, plainly showed, "that Xerxes with great ostentation and arrogance was about to undertake an expedition against Greece, but that he would have to run back again for his life to the very spot from which he set out." (Id. vii. 57.) A Greek Proverb embodies the superstition, Φαυεῖς ὁ λαγὼς δυστυχεῖς ποιεῖ τρίβους; (Suidas, ad v. λαγὼς.—Adagia, 380. Ed. 1629) but we are by no means clear what date is to be assigned to this maxim, upon which Kuster only remarks, versus hic ad somniorum interpretationem pertinet qui legitur apud Astrampsychum. Plutarch has afforded two instances in which omens were drawn from the appearance of Hares; both are alike, and are easily explained, as referring to the want of vigilance, which permitted such animals to harbour on spots which ought to have been closely inspected. Archidamus, the son of Zeuxidamus, while besieging Corinth, predicted his success when he observed some Hares coming out from the neighbourhood of the walls; and Lysander derived like encouragement from a similar circumstance on the same spot. (Lacon. Apophth.) But neither of these anecdotes assist us in the origin of the evil omen.

On the alleged superfetation of Hares, and their double sex, Sir Thomas Brown has treated at much length. (iii. 17.) In the affirmative, he says, are Archelaus, Plutarch, Philostratus, the Jewish Rabbies, and many more; nevertheless, he himself believes that the first circumstance occurs but "sometimes, and not in that vicissitude or annual alternation which is presumed;" and that the second is possible in human subjects as well as in Hares; but the Chapter should not be mutilated by partial citation.

Cæsar mentions that the ancient Britons abstained from Hare's flesh, but that they bred these animals, for reasons which he does not explain, and which we do not

HARE.

HARE. profess to understand. Leporem et Gallinam et Anserem gustare fas non putant, hæc tamen alunt animi voluptatisque causâ. We cannot but think that the present free enjoyment of these three dainties by us their descendants, is among the many improvements upon good old times. Boadicea, (Βουνδοῦκα), after the spirit-stirring speech which has been recorded by Dion Cassius, (lxii. 6.) let loose a Hare from her bosom, in order to take an omen from it. It ran prosperously, and its course was hailed by the shouts of her armed countrymen. The Commentators, we know not why, deprecate the belief in any distinct λαγωμαντεία, and suppose, but without the slightest support from authority, that the Queen pursued the Hare, which was intended to be symbolical of the Romans, by British dogs, and that hence was derived the favourable presage.

Athenæus (ix. 14.) has preserved from Archestratus a poetical receipt for dressing a Hare. It is to be roasted, served up as hot as possible, and snatched as it were from the spit, not at all larded, and a little underdone, so that the guests are not to be shocked if they perceive the blood in it while carving.

HAREBELL, the English Hyacinth, (says Skinner,) so called, I believe, because its concave and pendulous flowers appear in shape to resemble a bell. The trivial name of the Hyacinthus non-scriptus of Linnæus.

The hare-belle for her stainlesse azur'd hue,
 Claims to be worne of none but those are true.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 3.

On Desmond's mouldering turrets slowly shake
 The trembling rie-grass, and the hare-bell blue.

Mickle. Sir Martyn, can. 1.

H A R E M.

Name. HAREM (in Arabic, *Hhare*m, i. e. "unlawful, prohibited," and thence, "sacred") is peculiarly used by Musulmâns to signify the Gynæcéum, or wife's apartments, which are forbidden to every man except her husband and children. The term Seraglio, substituted by Europeans for Hhare, though neither inapplicable to it, nor entirely dissimilar in meaning, is a corruption of the word Serâi,* i. e. Palace. "Serâi," says M. de Hammer, (Osmanischen Reichs Staatsverfassung, i. 70.) "is the Palace, the Court in its largest acceptation, without any reference to the women. *Hhare*m, i. e. the Sanctuary, is the apartment of the Ladies, who are served by female slaves, and guarded by black Eunuchs. The head of the latter is the Ckizlar Aghâ-si, (i. e. Aghâ of the Women,) also called Dâri se'âdet-Aghâ-si, (i. e. Aghâ of the Abode of Felicity.) Under his command are all the black Eunuchs, called Capû-oghlan, (Gate boys,) the senior of whom has the title of Kîyâ, (i. e. Ketkhudâ, or Deputy.) There are two Ckizlar Aghâs, one of the old and the other of the new Palace, each of which has its own Hhare. The one is occupied by the Ladies of former Sultâns, and those who have incurred the displeasure of the reigning Prince, the other by such as still enjoy his favour." The Dâri se'âdet, or Hhare, properly so called, is entered by the third Gate of the Palace, (Serâi), called Bâbi se'âdet, (the Gate of Happiness,) which must not be confounded with "the Porte" itself, Bâbi humâyûn, (the Imperial Gate,) or entrance into the first Court, from the area opposite to Sta. Sophia. Impenetrable to male visitors as the Hhare may be, when occupied by its fair inhabitants, it is sometimes possible to obtain a sight of it clandestinely, when they are away. Among the few who were fortunate enough to find an opportunity, and bold enough to encounter the risk of thus gratifying their curiosity, was that highly gifted and lamented traveller, Dr. Edward Daniel Clarke. The reader who wishes to be fully gratified must turn to his book itself, (Trav. iii. 20-37.) as a brief abridgement of his details is all that can find a place here.

A long gloomy avenue of cypresses between two high walls leads from the outer gate, near Seraglio Point, to the wooden folding doors which open into the Sultân's garden, where straight gravel walks, alleys of trellis-work, and paltry jets d'eau, are pleasing, solely from the contrast between them and the avenue just quitted. On the right hand is a splendid kiosk, (koshk,) or light open edifice, the Sultân's summer residence; and opposite to the entrance is the Hhare, properly so called, "a building not unlike one of the small Colleges in Cambridge, and enclosing the same sort of cloistered court." One side of this building looks into the garden. A gilt iron gate, opposite to it, opens into the upper garden, consisting of a terrace, with a few small parterres, till within a few years before Dr. Clarke saw it, the only plantation within the walls of the Seraglio. The Sultân's kiosk, mentioned above, overhangs the walls of the ancient Byzantium at Seraglio Point, and "commands one of the finest views the eye ever beheld, of Scutari and the adjoining Asiatic coast, the mouth of the canal, and a moving picture of ships and gondolas, with all the floating pageantry of this vast metropolis, such as no other capital in the world can pretend to exhibit." The central chamber of the kiosk opens into private apartments, richly furnished, and occupied on the left by the Sultân himself, on the right by the Vâlideh, (Sultânah-mother,) or other ladies in waiting; below, there are "two chambers paved with marble, and as cold as any cellar;" these are occupied in summer by the ladies and their female attendants. An English writing-box, furnished with reed pens (calams) and coloured paper, with abundance of labels for liqueur-bottles, found in these apartments, gave some idea of the occupations and solace of the inhabitants of this splendid prison. The internal court of the Hhare is a small quadrangle, filled with weeds, with an open corridor or cloister on one side. Every thing seemed neglected; but this is only the vernal residence of the women, and is probably in better order when inhabited. A long

* The process by which Seraglio was formed from Serâi, is perfectly natural and simple. The Italian nouns most commonly end in o or a; serâi, therefore, was changed into seraio; and as the liquid l (gl) is frequently dropped in the vulgar dialects, it was supposed to have been erroneously omitted here; seraglio, therefore, was adopted as being more correct than serraio. The liquid l is dropped, also, in some parts of France, and the Parisian cockneys say, châiot, souïer, &c. for chailot, souïller, &c.

HAREM. chamber below, filled with wooden couches, covered with mats, is the dormitory of the female slaves; similar chambers above, in some of which there were galleries, containing beds, small apartments for slaves of a higher rank, and a series of rooms looking towards the sea, lead to the "Great Hall of Audience," where the Sultánah-mother receives visits of ceremony. "It is exactly such an apartment as the best painters of scenic decoration would have selected to afford a striking idea of the pomp, the seclusion, and the magnificence of the Ottoman Court. Surrounded by splendid mirrors, the upper part forms a lofty platform, enclosed by latticed blinds, and approached by a flight of steps, covered with crimson cloth. This may be called the Sultánah's throne. Adjoining to this is the Sultán's Assembly room, furnished with vast mirrors and other costly ornaments, but presenting "that strange mixture of magnificence and wretchedness which characterise all the state chambers of Turkish grandees." At the extremity of the same passage are the Baths of the Sultánahs, constructed of white marble, small, but elegant, and fitted up with every degree of refined luxury. The "Chamber of Repose," which commands the most extensive view any where afforded from this point of the Seraglio, is supported towards the sea by twelve columns of verde antico, and was found to be in the state of an old lumber room. Large dusty pier-glasses, in heavy gilt frames, left leaning against the walls, neglected and broken, shabby bureaux of oak, walnut, or mahogany, and in the worst style of workmanship, inlaid cabinets, fragments of chandeliers, scraps of paper, rags of silk and empty sweetmeat boxes, were all that was to be seen in this spacious chamber, which is used, as the travellers were told, as a sort of theatre and music-room by the ladies of the Grand Signior's household. A suite of apartments, occupied by women of a lower rank, on an upper terrace, and on the opposite side of the court of the Hhareem, was found to correspond exactly with that already described, except in being in a more wretched condition. From the lower garden of the Seraglio, a paved ascent leads up to the Chamber of the Garden of Hyacinths, in which Selím was said to pass all his most private hours. The garden consists of oblong beds, edged with Dutch tiles, and planted solely with hyacinths. The Sultán's private apartment was surrounded on three sides (as Turkish state-rooms usually are) with a low sofa against the wall, (called by Europeans a diván), the cushions of which were of black embroidered satin. Opposite to the windows there was a fire-place, on each side of it a door covered with hangings of crimson cloth; between each of these doors and the fire-place, glass cases contained books, laid upon each other, with their titles written on the edge of their leaves, (as may be seen in Mouradgea's plates, Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman, pl. xxxv.) From the ceiling of burnished gold hung gilt cages, filled with artificial birds, which sang by mechanism.* An enormous gilt brasier, (mangál), supported by an ewer with gilt claws, like the coolers seen under sideboards in England, stood in the centre of the room, and an embroidered napkin, basin, and ewer stood on a bench opposite the entrance, over which was hung against the wall the large embroidered paper-case, which is carried before the Sultán in processions, to receive petitions. A pair of yellow boots and slippers stood in their proper places, as is the case in all His Highness's apartments. The floor was covered with Gobelin tapestry, and stars, with other figures formed by pistols, sabres, and poniards, were "disposed with singular taste and effect over the different compartments of the walls, their handles and scabbards being covered with diamonds of very large size, which, as they glittered around, produced a splendid effect in this most sumptuous chamber." In the upper walks, above the Garden of Hyacinths, there is an aviary of nightingales. These walks are small, in wretched condition, and laid out in worse taste than the fore-court of a Dutchman's house in the suburbs of the Hague; but they command a magnificent view of the entrance to the canal and the opposite coast of Scutari. In an old kiosk, an ordinary marble slab, supported on iron cramps, and exactly resembling the sort of sideboard seen in the poorest inn in England, was pointed out as a present to the Grand Signior from Charles XII.

"The women of the Harem," says M. de Hammer, (Osmanisch. Reich. ii. 67.) "are all slaves, generally Circassians or Georgians; for no free-born Turkish woman can be introduced into it as an o'dah-lic, or concubine. Their number depends solely on the pleasure of the Sultán; but when all the slaves of slaves, who are admitted to his bed, are included, the whole amount is very considerable. His mother, sisters, female relations, and grandees all strive to outdo each other in presenting to him the handsomest slaves, under the hope of perpetuating, by those means, their influence over him." Out of this vast number he chooses his seven wives; for Ibráhím added two to the five previously taken by the Sultáns, four being the number allowed by the Prophet. These favourites, called cádin, (for khátún, i. e. lady,) rank according to priority of election, as first, second, third, &c. have splendid appointments, but not the title of Sultán,* which is restricted to the Grand Signior himself, his mother, and the Princesses of the Blood; the cádin, however, who first presents him with a male heir, is styled Khássekí Sultán, i. e. Sultánah par excellence.

The life of the ladies in the Hhareem glides away in a wearisome succession of splendid idleness and enervating pleasures. Voluptuous dances performed by their slaves, the coarse buffoonery of the Ombres Chinoises, the luxury of the bath, sauntering in their gardens, or the etiquette of the Sultán's visits, who generally passes some hours in the day with them, form the ordinary routine of their occupations. The ladies of other Turks enjoy the society of their friends in the baths, or at each other's houses, appear in the public walks accompanied by their slaves and a few eunuchs, and enjoy a degree of liberty which increases as they descend in rank; so that at a distance from towns, the women of the lower orders are scarcely under more restrictions than those of our English peasants. But the ladies of the Sultán's Hhareem enjoy none of those pleasures. When transferred to the summer residences on the Bosphorus, they are removed at break of day, pass from the garden to the boats, a distance of only a few paces, between two screens of green linen, while

HAREM.

Condition of the women.

Wives.

Mode of living.

* This Dr. Clarke, probably, inferred from conjecture, as his party only saw the room through the window.

* Sultánah (with the feminine termination) is seldom, if ever, used; and, probably, not sanctioned by the authority of any correct writer.

HAREM. the eunuchs, for a considerable distance all round, warn off every one on pain of death. Each of the boats destined to carry them has a cabin in the form of a cage, covered with red cloth, and furnished with red or gilt blinds. They are surrounded when embarked by eunuchs, who keep their boatmen, the Bóstán-jis, at a distance; the Ckizlar-ághá-sí, with some boats full of black eunuchs, accompanies them, and they are landed with the same precaution as they were embarked; boats full of eunuchs being sent forward to warn off all vessels which might come in their way.

The ladies of the Hhareem are served by female slaves and black eunuchs. The latter, who, with the Ckizlar-ághá-sí and their other officers, are lodged close to the women's apartments, mount guard over them day and night. The white eunuchs, less completely entitled to that name than their sable brethren, are never admitted into the Hhareem, and form the body-guard of the Sultán merely when he is away from his women. They are lodged with their commander, the Cápú-ághá-sí, or Controller of the Household, in another part of the Palace. The Sultán's sleeping-room is adjoining to the Serái; and the Ckizlar-ághá-sí always receives notice of the o'dah-lic on whom his choice has fallen. Two eunuchs, with lights burning, mount guard at his chamber door, and make a report next morning of all that has passed, that the hour at which pregnancy has commenced may be determined.* Hence the predictions of the day on which a birth will take place in the Hhareem, so common at Constantinople. If the mother become a Khássekí, she has a right to select a Court of her own from the slaves in attendance; if she produce only female children, she may withdraw from the Hhareem after the Sultán's demise and marry again, if she please; but the mother of a male child must retire into the Eskí Serái, (Old Palace.) This rule admits of no exception. If her son mount the throne, the Sultánah-mother returns to the New Serái; and, having been received there with great respect and ceremony by the Sultán, takes possession of her apartments in the Hhareem, accompanied by a numerous suite. There she rules with almost undivided sway, and her son is obliged to consult her as to the lady on whom he fixes his choice. "The Sultán," says the writer quoted above, "is far from being so unrestricted a master of his Hhareem, as the cock is of his hens; for the latter has no Sultánah Válideh to tell him on which of them he shall fix his affections."

Seven holy nights.

During Ramazzán, and on the seven holy nights, no Moslim can hold any intercourse with his Hhareem. This law is binding on the Sultán, as well as his meanest slave. Those nights are 1. Leiletu-mevlúd, the night of the Prophet's birth, on the 12th of Rebí'u-l-evvel; 2. Leiletu-r-ragháib, the night of his conception, on the first Friday in Rejeb; 3. Leiletu-l-mi'ráj, the night of his journey to Heaven in a dream, on the 27th of the same month; 4. Leiletu-l-berát, the night of the heavenly diploma, on the 15th of Sha'bán, when the guardian angels deposit in Heaven their registers of the good and bad actions of men; 5. Leiletu-l-cadr, the night in which the Corán was sent down on earth, on the 27th of Ramazzán; and 6. and 7. the Vigils of the two Feasts of Baírám, on the 1st of Shewwál and the 10th of Zi'lhhijjah. The Sultán alone, on the Night of Destiny, (Leiletu-l-cadr) is allowed to enter his Hhareem. On his return from Ayá Sófiyá, (Sta. Sophia,) he is escorted by a multitude of coloured-lantern-bearers to the palace, where his mother is waiting for him with a virgin-bride, whose conception on that holy night, is deemed a national blessing of the greatest importance. A child born under such auspices is believed to be little less than an incarnation of the Divinity.

The Sultánah Válideh is the only woman in the Hhareem who is allowed to appear without a veil; this privilege distinguishes her at once from all the other ladies, none of whom, even when ill, can lay aside their veils in the presence of any one, except the Sultán. When visited by the physician, their bed is covered over with a thick counterpane, and their pulse must be felt through a thin gauze.*

The income of the Válideh, derived from Royal domains, and the farm of certain branches of revenue, is said to amount to half a million of piastres, (£25,000;) but, when she knows how to use her influence with her son, her power is almost unlimited, and her Kyayá, or Controller of the Household, is one of the most important personages in the Empire. Every Khássekí has an annual allowance of 500 purses, (= 250,000 piastres, £12,500,) called bashmaclíc, or slipper-money, besides the jib-kharjé, or pocket-money, given to her personally by the Sultán. Two or three only of the favourites were allowed to enjoy these appointments, till Ibráhim extended them to five; and by that and other acts of extravagance, did irreparable injury to the finances of the Empire.

Allowances to the ladies

The Eskí Serái is also the abode of the Sultán's younger brothers, who, since the time of Suleimán, the contemporary of Henry VIII., have been always kept prisoners there till released by death, or an unexpected succession to the throne. Their prison, for such it may justly be called, is termed cafás, or cage, a word applied generally to all buildings with grated windows. The Corán, and the pompous, inflated annals of the Historiographers Royal, are the only books put into their hands; their powers of body and mind are equally neglected. They learn no manly or martial exercises, receive little, if any, instruction as to the duties and dangers of Royalty, and are trained only in some mechanic Art, in compliance with a foolish text in the Corán, and a still more absurd tradition, according to which David was an armourer, and Solomon a basket-maker. But these ill-fated Princes are not debarred from sensual indulgences. Discarded favourites and slaves, whose age secures them from any danger of a family, are assigned to their use, and a more enervating, debasing state of existence, can hardly be imagined, than that to which the Princes of the Blood in Turkey are condemned. Their sisters, though not blessed with a better education, have a much more enviable lot. Betrothed, while yet in the cradle, to Vezírs and Beglerbegs, whose life hangs by a very

Eskí Serái

* This singular regulation is so inconsistent with the usual reserve of Musulmán's on such subjects, that no authority short of M. de Hammer's, or some competent native's, would have made it credible; however, when the belief in astrology, universally prevalent in Turkey, is considered, the object of such a custom is manifest, and its existence is satisfactorily explained.

* When the physician of the British embassy visited the mother of Selím III. a short time before her decease, he saw nothing but her hand, which was stretched out from beneath a thick and richly embroidered coverlet. He expressed a wish to see her tongue, but was told it was impossible. The apartment was so dark, that it was difficult to see any objects in it distinctly.

HAREM.
—
HARK.

slender thread, they are often widows before they cease to be infants. Their husbands are obliged to provide largely for their maintenance, and, when they are of age to assume the government of their household, these sons and brothers-in-law of Royalty are the most abject slaves of their consorts, to whom, whether young or old, handsome or ugly, they are indissolubly and exclusively conjoined. Those women who are married to old, decrepit husbands, are not indeed in so fortunate a condition; and those who give birth to male children are truly deserving of commiseration, for such children are required to be destroyed by a barbarous practice, immediately after their birth.

Different residences.

The Winter Palace, some account of which is given by Tavernier, (Voy. vi. 215. 232.) who collected it from renegadoes, has never, as M. de Hammer thinks, been entered by any European; (Osman. Reich. ii. 78.) but he, probably, had not seen the Travels of De la Motraye, (i. 173.) who got admission into a part of it by means of a French watchmaker. The Summer Palace, visited by Dr. Clarke, was not then built. It has also been described by M. Pouqueville, who confounds it with the part of the Seraglio mentioned by Tavernier. M. de Hammer and some of his friends, as well as M. Pouqueville, were also admitted into it by the kindness of M. Bosc, to whom Dr. Clarke was indebted for the same indulgence.

Adrianople.

The ladies of the Hhareem pass the hottest months of the Summer at Beshic tásh and Curú cheshmeh, on the European side of the Bosphorus; Kiat-háneh (Kághid-kháneh,) and Cará Agháj, near the Fresh Waters, (Les Eaux Douces), at the extremity of the Harbour of Constantinople, having now fallen into ruin. In Winter, the o'dah-lics and cádins inhabit the oldest or Winter Palace; in Spring and Autumn, that inspected by Dr. Clarke: but "next to the Serái at Constantinople, the most magnificent of all," says M. de Hammer, "is the old and new palace at Adrianople." Having had leisure to examine it thoroughly, it gave him a very sufficient idea of the structure and internal arrangement of the Hhareem. "Baths, parterres, basins, and kiosks, thrown together in a pleasing irregularity, convent-like galleries and passages, opening on one side into the apartments of the o'dah-lics, on the other into those of their attendants; ceilings richly gilt, walls adorned with parti-coloured arabesques, lofty chests inlaid with mother of pearl; scrolls in golden letters, on a deep azure ground, or embroidered on the tapestry covering the doorways; cypresses and marble fountains; courts and cloisters; halls and cabinets covered with rich carpets, and furnished with sofas and European mirrors; form the splendid and romantic assemblage of objects presented to the eye in the Hhareem of the O'smán Sultán, whose magnificence reminds the spectator of the Red Palace (Al Hhamrá) and Paradise of Love, (Jennetu-li'shc,) so gorgeously adorned by the Emírs of Granada."

A faithful representation of the interior of Turkish houses, their baths, costumes, &c., and even of some apartments in the Seraglio, will be found in Murádjah d'Ohsson's Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman; but the best delineations of the interior of a Hhareem are given by Valentyn in the Portraits of Padmaná, Núr Mahhall, Táj Mahhall, Núr jihán, Ráná Déví, Núr et-táj, Núr Bégum, Bégum Sáhhib, Hhámidah Mahhall, and especially in that of Mír Jumlah, Aurenzéb's celebrated Generalissimo, in the midst of his Hhareem, which is so true a picture of Asiatic manners, style, and habits, that every face in it may be considered as a portrait. (Valentyn's Beschryving van Oost Indien, iv. pl. L, K, P, N, M, A, B, H, I, and B. B. B.) It need hardly be added that these plates are accurate copies of Indian drawings, the background excepted, and that the last, (B. B. B.) in which nothing has been added by the European copier, is an admirable specimen of Indian art. So closely also do the Musulmán's in different parts of Asia resemble each other in costume and habits, that, excepting the turban of Mír Jumlah, there is scarcely an item of dress or decoration represented in this plate which would not find its counterpart in a Turkish Hhareem.

Hhareem, and Hharám, though nearly the same, and derived from the same root, must not be confounded with each other. They both signify "prohibited, forbidden," but the first is always used in a good, the last in a bad, sense; hence the Ka'beh, or most sacred Mosque at Mekkah, is called Hhareem-el-hharemeïn, which might be rendered Sanctum Sanctorum. A daughter and a concubine are also called hhareem, being both, in one sense of the word, "sacred;" but Hharám means "prohibited," as illegal; both, therefore, correspond to the Hebrew חָרָם, which signifies "devoted," i. e. consecrated, (Levit. xxvii. 28, 29. Numb. xviii. 14.) or "accursed," and therefore "devoted to destruction;" (Deut. vii. 26.) "a man whom I appointed to utter destruction;" (אֶת אִישׁ חָרָמִי, 1 Kings xx. 42.) "the people of my curse." (עַם חָרָמִי, Isaiah xxxiv. 5.) It is from this sense that the following compounds are derived.

Hharám-khór, one who eats what is unlawful; a worthless, unprincipled fellow.

Hharám-zádah, unlawfully born, a bastard; a rogue, an idle, good for nothing vagabond.

Hharám-kár, a fornicator and adulterer.

See Clarke's Travels; Von Hammer's Osmanischen Reichs Staatsverfassung; Tavernier's Travels; De la Motraye's Travels; Pouqueville, Voyage en Grèce; Valentyn's Oost Indien, Amsterdam, 1724-1726, 5 vols. folio; D'Ohsson, Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman, Paris, 1789-1825, 3 tom. folio.

HAREM
—
HARK.

HARK, v. See HEARKEN.

To hear, to listen; to take or receive at the ear.

— This king sit thus in his nobley,
Herking his ministralles hir thinges pley
Before him at his bord deliciously.

Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10392.

What I and all require of the
This for thy learning harke.

Drant. Horace. Arte of Poetrye.

His men below cryde out to him, and prayd

Him to retire, but he no whit could harke,
But boldly from the wall into the towne,
Which was thrise ten foote deepe, he leaped downe.

Harrington. Orlando, book xxxix. fol. 336.

But if you will vnto my counsell harke,
And that you haue (as you pretend) suc hast,
I will appoint for you a little barke,
That shall with oares conuey you safe and fast.

Id. Ib. book xliii. fol. 362.

HARK.
—
HARLE-
QUIN.

But heark ye, lady,
One thing I must entreat, your leave, and sufferance;
That these things may be open to my brother
For more respect and honour.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Pilgrimage, act iii.

For we find a certain singular pleasure in hearking to such as be returned from some long voyage, and do report things which they have seen in strange countries, as the manners of people, the natures of places, and the fashions of lives, differing from ours.

Sir T. North. Plutarch. Amiot to the Readers.

Nay raise no tempest with looks; but, heark you:
Remember, what your ladyship off' red me.

Ben Jonson. The Fox, act v. sc. 3.

Hark: from yon covert, where those towering oaks
Above the humble copse aspiring rise,
What glorious triumphs burst in every gale
Upon our ravish'd ears.

Somerville. The Chase, book ii.

The whistling ploughman stalks a-field; and hark!
Down the rough slope the ponderous waggon rings.

Beattie. The Minstrel, book i.

"Well, sir," says he, "e'en as you please, so then I'll never trouble you with plays again."

But hearkee, poet!—won't you though? says I.

Moore. Prologue to Gil Blas.

Then horse and hound fierce joy display,
Exulting at the hark-away.

Green. The Spleen.

HAR'LEQUIN, n. } A comedian, because he HA'RLQUIN, v. } much frequented the house of
M. de Harlai in the reign of Henry III. of France, is said to have first received this name. See Menage.

I believe that these general observations in things sensible, hold also in proportion in things insensible, and that one may say, in this respect, what harlequin says in the Emperor of the Moon; 'Tis there just as 'tis here.

Clarke. Mr. Leibnitz's fifth Paper, p. 175.

They [pantomimes] spoke only to the eyes; but with such art of expression, that without the utterance of a single word, they represented, as we are told, a complete tragedy or comedy in the same manner as dumb harlequin is exhibited on our theatres.

Johnson. General Conclusion to Brumoy's Greek Theatre.

Monkeys have been
Extreme good doctors for the spleen:
And kitten, if the humour hit,
Has harlequin'd away the fit.

Green. The Spleen.

Riccoboni, in his Histoire du Théâtre Italien, (i. ii.) has traced with great probability the dress of HARLEQUIN to the centunculus of those Roman Mimi, known as Planipedes. His description of the modern parti-coloured habit is so vivid, that we shall present it in his own words. La forme de l'habit d'Arlequin n'a jamais été d'aucune mode, ni d'aucune nation: ce sont des morceaux de drap rouge, bleu, jaune et verd, coupés en triangle, et arrangés l'un près de l'autre depuis le haut jusqu'en bas; un petit chapeau qui couvre à peine sa tête rasée; de petits escarpins sans talons, et un masque noir écrasé qui n'a point d'yeux, mais seulement deux trous fort petits pour voir. He supports his conjecture upon the particular meaning of centunculus, a word applied to the stage dress of the Mimi by Apuleius, in his Apologia; to the well-known customs of blackening their faces and shaving their heads; and to their playing with bare feet: in the first two particulars Harlequin exactly resembles them, and in the last, the imitation of his pumps is as close as convenience and the greater refinement of later days seem to permit.

Besides these coincidences, the Italian Harlequins, (and it is from Italy the name passed to the Theatres of other Countries,) were at first named Zanni, a word easily deduced from the Latin Sanniones, since z and s were frequently commutable; and the description which Cicero has given of those actors may be readily transferred to Harlequin. Quid enim potest tam ridiculum quam Sannio esse? qui ore, vultu, imitandis motibus, voce, denique corpore ridetur ipso. (de Orat. ii. 61.) Of these, also, Vossius mentions that they mimum agebant rasis capitibus. (Inst. Poet. ii. 32. 4.)

The Italian Comedians of the XIVth and XVth century for the most part represented Harlequin as a mischievous simpleton and marplot, with a taste for gourmandise, and a perpetual player of buffoon tricks called lazzi. The French taught him wit, and sometimes made him babble science; and in later times he was exhibited as a Moralist. With us in England he has become a lover and a magician, and in exchange for the gift of language, of which we have deprived him, he has been invested with a wonder-working wand; from the possession of which Mr. Douce pronounces him to be "the illegitimate successor to the old Vice." (On Shakspeare, i. 468.) We are not prepared in this place to trace the progress of his transition, but we believe that Harlequin Executed, the first Harlequinade, according to the present acceptation of the title, represented in England, was composed by Rich, and performed in Lincoln's Inn Fields, in 1717. Rich himself, under the name of Lunn, was the favourite motley hero of his day; and from his time this species of entertainment (a love for which we conceive to be an enviable privilege, and one which we should be most unwilling to surrender for a more refined and fastidious taste) has formed a very productive portion of the Theatrical stock, when produced in its annual Christmas Cycle.

HA'RLOT, v. } The learned Th. H. (Henshaw) HA'RLOT, n. } scitè, ut solet, dictum putat, quasi HA'RLOT, adj. } whorelet vel horelet, i. e. meretricula.
HA'RLOTRY, } And Tooke believes with Dr. Th.
HA'RLOTIZE. } Hickes (in Skinner, Doct. Th. H. i. e. Henshaw; see Skinner's Preface, sig. D.; the same person, probably, whose name repeatedly occurs in Evelyn's Memoirs, and to whom he dedicates his Translation of the French Gardner.) that harlot is merely horelet, the diminutive of hore; the common application of the word was to males, merely as persons receiving wages or hire. Hore, or, as now written, whore, is the past part. of hyran, to hire. See WHORE, and VARLET, and Tooke, ii. 142.

A hireling; a hired servant or attendant; a low or base person, male or female; now confined to females, who prostitute their bodies for hire.

Harlotries, Tyrwhitt interprets, ribaldries; sc. such as hirelings or low persons practise or delight in.

Dauwe þe dyker. with a dosen harlotes.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 106.

And harlotes for harlotrie. aren holpen er nedý poure.

Id. Ib. p. 184.

— Loven al treuthe

And hateu alle harlotrie.

Id. Ib. p. 96.

He was a gentil harlot, and a kind;

A better felaw shulde a man not find.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 649.

A sturdy harlot went hem ay behind,
That was hir hostes man, and bare a sakke,
And what men yave him, laid it on his bakke.

Id. The Somnours Tale, v. 7336.

The miller is a cherl, ye know wel this,
So was the reve (and many other mo)
And harlotrie they tolden bothe two.

Id. The Milleres Prologue, v. 3184.

HARLE-
QUIN.
—
HARLOT.

HARLOT.

My king of haroltes [harlotes] shalt thou be.
Chaucer. Romant of the Rose, fol. 144.

HARM.

And fornyacioun and al unclennesse or auarice be not named among ghou as it bicometh hooli men either filthe or foli speche or harlotrie. (scurrilitas.) Wiclif. Effesies, ch. v.

But as sone as this thy sonne was come, whiche hath deuoured thy goodes with harlotes, thou hast for hys pleasure kylled the fatted caulfe. Bible, Anno 1551. Luke, ch. xv.

Thou makest thine hie place in euery street, & hast not been as an harlot that despiseth a reward.

Geneva Bible, 1561. Ezekiel xvi. 31.

And hast not been as an harlot in that thou scornest hire.

Modern Version.

Our great clerks think that these men, because they have a trade, (as Christ himself, and St. Paul had) cannot therefore attain to some good measure of knowledge, and to a reason of their actions, as well as they that spend their youth in loitering, bezzling, and harlotting, their studies in unprofitable questions and barbarous sophistry, their middle age in ambition and idleness, their old age in avarice, dotage, and diseases. Milton. Animad. Remonst. Defence, sec. 1.

E. ANT. This day (great duke) she shut the doores vpon me,
 While she with harlots feasted in my house.
Shakspeare. Comedy of Errors, fol. 98.

Wouldst thou not spit at me and spurne at me,
 And hurle the name of husband in my face,
 And teare the stain'd skin of my harlot brow,
 And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
 And breake it with a deepe diuorcing vow?

Id. Ib. fol. 89

So rose the Danite strong
 Herculean Samson from the harlot lap
 Of Philistine Dalila, and wak'd
 Shorn of his strength, they destitute and bare
 Of all their virtue.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ix. l. 1060.

Then this harlotry sitting next beneth him, said, 'That she had never in al her life seen any man to cut ones head of, and it was a sigh:
 that of al other she would fainest see.

Holland. Livius, fol. 1051.

Malicious (for thy malice is Thy matter all in all)
 Is it to harlotize, thinkest thou,
 A goddess wrong too small.
Warner. Albion's England, book vi. ch. xxx.

On the 17th, [Dec. 1557] a young man and a young woman rode through London in a cart. And the bawd, the wife of John a' Badoo, was whipped at the said cart's tail; and the harlot did beat her; and an old harlot of three score did lead the horse.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1557.

In search of wisdom far from wit I fly;
 Wit is a harlot beauteous to the eye,
 In whose bewitching arms our early time
 We waste, and vigour of our youthful prime.

Philips. On Wit and Wisdom.

Deck'd by thee,
 The simple farm eclips'd the garden's pride,
 Ev'n as the virgin blush of innocence,
 The harlotry of art.

Mason. The English Garden, book i.

And, tho' true youth and nature have no part,
 Yet paint enlivens it, and wiles, and art;
 Colours laid on with a true harlot grace;
 They only show themselves, and hide the face.

Harte. The Vision of Death.

HARM. v. } A S. yrmian, jerman, hear-
 HARM, n } man, lædere, nocere; our modern HA'RMFUL, } (n.) harm was in the A. S. yrmth,
 HA'RMFULLY, } or jermth, i. e. whatsoever harmeth
 HA'RMLESS, } or hurteth; the third person sin-
 HA'RMLESSLY, } gular of the verb. See Tooke.
 HA'RMLESSNESS, } To hurt, to mischief, to injure, HARM-DOING. } to wrong; to cause loss or damage.

And smot þe kýng wýþ a knýf in þe breste depe ynou,
 And, to gret harm to al þys lond, þe gode kýng he slou.
R. Gloucester, p. 277.

And heo of scapýe harmýles þe gultes echon.
Id. p. 335.

And holý churche þorw. worþ harmed for evere.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 36.

Do þý neýheore non harme. ne þe selve noþer
 þan dost þow wel and wisliche.
Id. Ib. p. 248.

For much they disturbed me
 For sore I dradde to harmed be.
Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 123.

And Tullius sayth, that no sorwe, ne no drede of deth, ne nothing that may falle unto a man, is so muchel ageins nature, as a man to encrease his owen profite, to harme of another man.

Id. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 116.

Dispise and cast away her that playeth so harmefully, for shee that is now cause of so muche sorowe to thee, should be to thee cause of peace & of ioye. Id. Boecius, book ii. fol. 216.

But where a prince his lustes sueth,
 That he the warre not pursueth
 Whan it is tyme to ben armed:
 His countre stant full ofte harmed.
Gower. Conf. Am. book vii. fol. 167.

For who that loketh all tofore,
 And woll not see, what is behynde:
 He maie full ofte his harmes finde.
Id. Ib. book v. fol. 125.

Your studie and drifte is to kill me, a man that albeet I wer non other but a very man, yet wer I innocent and one that harme no man.
Udall. John, ch. viii.

No man is hurt but of himselfe, that is to say: aduersitie or wrong suffering is no harme to him that hatn a constant heart; and liues vpright in all his doings.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 120.

For he was for no other cause afflicted, beaten, spytte vpon, and crucified as an harmful person, where he was innocent and gyltlesse, but onely to pouge vs (who are in very dede hurtfull caytifes and sinners) from al oure sinnes and iniquities.

Udall. Hebrews, ch. iv.

They that long to be ryche, dooe fall into temptacion, and into the grynne of the deuyll, and into many desyres vnprofitable and harmefull.

Sir Thomas More. Of Comfort against Tribulacion, book ii. fol. 1203.

With gentle touche whoes harmlesse flame did shine,
 Upon his heare, about his temples spread.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

The kynge remoued his siege to a castell of the bisshop of Cam-bray named Thune, standyng upon the ryuer of Lestant, where the kyng lay longe tyme wythout harme-doyng vnto the sayde castell.

Fabyan. Chronicle, Anno 1377.

And the example of Tully ought in this point to be followed, who when it was in his power to harme and to spare (as himselfe affirmeth) sought for causes of forgiveness, and not occasions of punishment:
 which is the proper dutie of a discreet and considerate judge.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 142. Constantius and Julianus.

Flesh without blood, a person without spright,
 Wounds without hurt, a body without might,
 That could doe harme, yet could not harmed bee,
 That could not die, yet seem'd a mortall wight,
 That was most strong in most infirmitee;
 Like did he never heere, like did he never see.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 11.

And look, as arrows, by strong arm
 In a strong bow drawn to the head,
 Where they are meant, will surely harm,
 And if they hit, wound deep and dread;
 Children of youth are even so;
 As harmful, deadly, to a foe.

P. Fletcher. Psalm 127.

But a scholer, by myne opinion, is better occupied in playing or sleping, than in spending tyme, not onlie vainlie, but also harmfullie, in soch a kinde of exercise [paraphrasis.]

Ascham. The Schoolmaster, part ii.

HARM.
—
HAR-MONY.

And when sharp Winter shoots her sleet and harden'd hail,
Or sudden gusts from sea the harmless deer assail,
The shrubs are not of pow'r to shield them from the wind.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 2.

The deadly killing aspic, when he seeth
This world of creatures, sheaths his poison'd teeth,
And with the adder and the speckled snake,
Them to a corner harmlessly betake.
Id. Noah's Flood.

For when through tasteless flat humility
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.
Donne. Letter to the Lady Carey.

So good a lady, that no tongue could euer
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life,
She neuer knew har-me-doing.
Shakspeare. Henry VIII. fol. 214.

Though we obey laws, and comply with received customs, and avoid all occasions of contention, though our tempers be meek, our principles peaceable, and our conversations inoffensive, we may yet prove successless in our endeavours to live peaceably, and may be hated, harmed, and disquieted in our course of life.
Barrow. Sermon 30. vol. i.

As God hath thought fit to leave us exposed to the Devil's attempts, for the exercise of our virtue, so he hath taken care to order matters in such a way, that we may always do ourselves good, and improve both our virtue and rewards, by the assaults of the Devil, though he can do us no harm by them.
Sharp. Sermon 4. vol. iii.

There is nothing almost has done more har-me to men dedicated to letters, than giving the name of study to reading, and making a man of great reading to be the same with a man of great knowledge, or at least to be a title of honour.
Locke. Of the Conduct of the Understanding, sec. 23.

These, while they are afraid of every thing, bring themselves and the churches in the greatest and most harmful hazards.
Strype. Life of Archbishop Parker, Anno 1572.

Amidst his harmless easy joys
No anxious care invades his heath,
Nor love his peace of mind destroys,
Nor wicked avarice of wealth.

Dryden. Horace. The second Epode.

But I dare, sir, avow, that the har-melessness of our principles is not more legible in our profession, than in our practices and sufferings.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 285. The Martyrdom of Theodora.

That peace of mind, which we all enjoy under the shelter of the laws, is founded in a faith or belief, that they will either secure us from harm, or avenge us when we are injuriously dealt withal.
Pearce. Sermon 11. vol. i.

Yes, let me own,
To these, or classick deities like these,
From very childhood was I prone to pay
Harmless idolatry.

Mason. The English Garden, book iii.

Indeed were a design ever so well chosen, and harmlessly carried on, yet few things are so likely to hinder the success of it, as too great vehemence.
Secker. Sermon 5. vol. iii.

When the persecution is for modes of faith, their truth or falsehood comes in question: when for the common genius of religion, its harmlessness or malignity is the only matter of enquiry.
Warburton. Preface to the Edition of the Divine Legation, (1758.)

HA'RMONY, HARMO'NICAL, HARMO'NICK,
HARMO'NICKS, n.
HARMO'NICALLY,
HARMO'NIOUS,
HARMO'NIOUSLY, HA'RMONIST,
HA'RMONIZE.

Fr. harmonie; It. harmonia;
Sp. armonia; Lat. harmonia;
Gr. ἀρμονία. Musici ita dicitur
concentus; ac propriè ita vocatur apta omnis commissura ac com-pages, ab ἀρμόζω, quod ab ἀρμός, uti hoc ab ἀρῶ, apto. Vossius.

The fit or apt union or connection of parts; in concordant Proportion; in agreement or correspondence; in musical proportion or concord.

O (qd. she) there is a melody in heauen, which clerkes cleapen harmony, but that is not in breaking of voice, but it is a maner swete
VOL. XXIII.

thing of kindly werching, y^t causeth ioy out of number to reckon, and that is ioyned by reason and by wisdom, in a quantity of proportion of knitting.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, book ii.

And with the swete harmony, that he made on his harpe, he cōstrained the iuel spirite, that vexed kinge Saule, to forsake him, continuyng the tyme that he harped.
Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. vii.

God graunteth to some men prowess martiall
To a nother daunsinge, with song harmonical.
Id. Ib. ch. xx. from Homer.

Touching musicall harmonie, whether by instrument or by voyce, it being but of high and low sounds a due proportionable disposition, such notwithstanding is the force thereof, and so pleasing effects it hath in that very part of man which is most diuine, that some haue beene thereby induced to thinke that the soule it selfe by nature is, or hath in it harmony.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book v. sec. 38.

All men in shape I did so far excel,
(The parts in me such harmony did bear)
As in my model Nature seem'd to tell,
That her perfection she had placed here.
Drayton. The Legend of Pierce Gaveston.

No man is able so well to judge of song and harmonical measures, as the best and most experienced musician.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 581.

Thus much therefore may suffice, to shew that neither the harmoni- que, nor the rythmick, nor any one of these faculties of musick, which is named particular, can be sufficient of it self alone to judge of the affection, or to discern of other qualities.
Id. Ib. fol. 1026.

Oft in bands
While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk
With heav'nly touch of instrumental sounds
In full harmonic number join'd, their songs
Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to heaven.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 687.

Plato therefore intending to declare harmonically the harmony of the four elements of the soul, and the cause why things so divers accorded together; in each intervall hath put down two medieties of the soul, and that according to musicall proportion.
Holland. Plutarch, fol. 1022.

CLORIS. Nay that those sweet harmonious strains we hear,
Amongst the lively birds' melodious lays,
As they recording sit upon the sprays,
Were hovering still for music at thine ears.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymphal 4.

That this admirable engine of our bodies, whose functions are carried on by such a multitude of parts, and motions which neither interfere nor impede one another in their operations; but by an harmonious sympathy promote the perfection and good of the whole:
that this should be an undesign'd effect, is an assertion, that is more then melancholies hyperbole.
Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. v.

Probably either these [contrary qualities in Adam] were so har- moniously mixed, as that there was no tendency to a dissolution.
Hopkins. Sermons, fol. 25.

A king's name
Doth sound harmoniously to men at distance.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Coronation, act v.

By orderly disposing and harmonizing of them, he did by that means produce this most beautiful and perfect animal of the world.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, fol. 215.

We conclude therefore that Vrania or the heavenly Venus, was sometimes amongst the Pagans a name for the Supreme Deity, as that which is the most amiable being, and first pulchritude, the most benign and fecund begetter of all things, and the constant harmonizer of the whole world.
Id. Ib. fol. 489.

The composer should fit his musick to the genius of the people, and consider that the delicacy of hearing, and taste of harmony has been formed upon those sounds which every country abounds with:
in short, that musick is of a relative nature, and what is harmony to one ear, may be dissonance to another.
Spectator, No. 29.

T

HAR-MONY
—
HAR-NESS.

They will soon conclude, that this machine is the whole man; and that the harmonical soul, in the hypothesis of an harmonia præstabilita, is merely a fiction and a dream.

Clarke. Fifth Reply to Leibnitz.

How oft hast thou thy votaries beheld
At Crambo merry met, and hymnyng shrill
With voice harmonic each, whilst others frisk
In mazy dance, or Cestrian gambols show,
Elate with mighty joy.

J. Philips. Cerealia, (1706.)

Such Venus shines, when with a measur'd bound
She smoothly gliding swims th' harmonious round,
When with the Graces in the dance she moves,
And fires the gazing Gods with ardent love.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book xviii.

But the atheistical astrologer is doubly pressed with this absurdity. For if there was no counsel at the making of the world, how came the Asterisms of the same nature and energies to be so harmoniously placed at regular intervals?

Bentley. Sermon 3. p. 116

Of which obedience, his most precious death is, by our most excellent harmonist, declared to be the consummation and utmost completion; and to it are here ascribed the very greatest and highest things that it was even possible for him to express.

Nelson. The Life of Dr. George Bull, p. 76.

Now the soft hour
Of walking comes; for him who lonely loves
To seek the distant hills, and there converse
With Nature; there to harmonize his heart
And in pathetic song to breathe around
The harmony to others.

Thomson. Summer.

The victory was at last so complete, as none were found able to rally their forces in this cause against our judicious harmonizer.

Nelson. The Life of Dr. George Bull, p. 82.

These accessory sounds, which are caused by the aliquots of a sonorous body vibrating at once, are called harmonics, and the whole system of modern harmony depends upon them.

Sir William Jones. Essay on the Imitative Arts.

Musick belongs, as a science, to an interesting part of natural philosophy, which, by mathematical deductions from constant phenomena, explains the causes and properties of sound, limits the number of mixed, or harmonick, sounds to a certain series, which perpetually recurs, and fixes the ratio which they bear to each other or to one leading term.

Id. Works, vol. iv. p. 166. The Musical Modes of the Hindus.

As harmony is the end of poetical measures, no part of a verse ought to be so separated from the rest as not to remain still more harmonious than prose, or to show, by the disposition of the tones, that it is part of a verse.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 90.

It was their wish to see publick and private virtues not dissonant and jarring, and mutually destructive, but harmoniously combined, growing out of one another in a noble and orderly gradation, reciprocally supporting and supported.

Burke. On the Present Discontents.

From part to part alternately convey
The harmonizing gloom, the darting ray
With tones so just, in such gradation thrown,
Adopting Nature owns the work her own.

Mason. Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Books, my son, while they teach us to respect the interest of others, often make us unmindful of our own; while they instruct the youthful reader to grasp at social happiness, he grows miserable in detail, and, attentive to universal harmony, often forgets that he himself has a part to sustain in the concert.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, let. lxvi.

HA'RNESS, v. } Fr. harnois; It. arnése; Sp.
HA'RNESS, n. } arnés; Ger. harnisch; D. har-
HA'RNESS-BEARER, } nas; Sw. harnisk; Low Lat.
HA'RNESS-BEARING. } harnascha; which Hickes thinks means armour for the head or skull, from the Goth. Quarnei, the skull, (Gram. Franco. Theot. fol. 92.) Wachter, that it is either the A. S. iren, or Welsh haiarn, both signifying iron, the metal of which harness or armour is made: and supposes the word to have had its origin in the times when the Gauls and Germans began to cover the body with iron. The verb is used generally;

To dress or furnish, to arm: also to equip with harness, or the furniture used for draught horses.

By 7 Richard II. c. 13, Launce-gaies armors and other harnies whatsoever are prohibited upon paine of forfeiture, &c.

Norreis and Surreis, þat seruise auht þe kȳng,
With hors & herneis at Carlele made samȳng.

R. Brunne, p. 309.

Ich have seȳen hȳm mȳ self, som tȳme in russet
Bothe in greȳe and in greys. and in gylt herneis.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 282.

An on that other side a gaie daggere,
Harneised wel, and sharpe as point of spere.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 114.

And rise on morow up erly
Out of thy bed, and herneis the
Or euer dawning thou maist see.

Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 128.

And on the morwe whan the day gan spring,
Of hors and herneies noise and clattering
Ther was in the hostelryes all aboute.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2494.

Cesar sent ouer the Rhine into Germanye, vnto those cities which thother yeres before he had pacified, and demanded of them horsmen, and fotemen light harnessed (levis armaturæ) which were wont to feight amongst them.

Golding. Cæsar, book vii. fol. 220.

He [my father] was able, and did find the king a harnes, with himselfe and his horse, while he came to the place that he should receive the king's wages. I can remember that I buckled his harnes, when he went to Blackheath fielde.

Latimer. First Sermon preached before King Edward, fol. 32.

Where stand of old
Myriads between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harnest at hand,
Celestial equipage.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 202.

The citizens sent the king's grace one hundred tall men well harnessed, to furnishe his nauie, appoynted to kepe the narow seas.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The thirteenth Yere.

Thus when I plow my ground, my horse is harnessed and chained to my plough, and put in his track or furrow, and guided by my whip and my tongue.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, sec. i. ch. ii.

At least we'll dye with harnesse on our backe.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 150.

Great men should drinke with harnesse on their throates

Id. Timon of Athens, fol. 81.

Thus he concludes, and euery hardy knight
His sample follow'd, and his breth'ren twaine,
The other princes put on harnesse light,
As footmen vse.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, book xi. st. 25.

Venutius, a famous king of the Brigantes, and husband to Cartis-mandua, (a woman of an high and noble linage, but of a base and unsatisfied lust,) finding his bed abused by Velloctatus his seruant and harnesse-bearer, raised his power against her, and her paramour.

Speed. Great Britane, book v. ch. vi. sec. 12.

As when Iove's harnesse-bearing bird from hye
Stoupes at a flying heron with proud disdayne,
The stone-dead quarry falls so forcibly,
That it rebownds against the lowly playne,
A second fall redoubling backe againe.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 11.

When he was come home, being forgetful of his promises, he had raised much strife and contention, and had caused all his servants to be secretly armed and harnessed.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1548.

He spoke; and, at his word, the Trojan train
Their mules and oxen harness to the wain,

HAR-NESS.

HARNESS

HARP

Pour thro' the gates, and, fell'd from Ida's crown,
Roll back the gather'd forests to the town.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xxiv.

Wisely, therefore, did Plato advise us not to exercise the body without the soul, nor the soul without the body; but to let them draw together equally, like horses harnessed together in a carriage.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 25.

And yet (you) will voluntary run
To that confinement you will shun,
Content to drudge along the track,
With bell and harness on your back.

Lloyd. A Dialogue between the Author and his Friend.

HARONGA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyadelphia, order Polyandria, natural order Hypericineæ. Generic character: calyx five-leaved; corolla, petals five; berry drupaceous, five-celled, two and three seeded.

Five species, shrubs, natives of the Islands of Bourbon and Madagascar.

HAROW. "The curious reader (says Mr. Tyrwhitt) may consult Du Cange, (in v. haroep), and Hickes, Gr. Fr. Theot. p. 96. I rather believe it to have been derived from har, altus, and op, clamor, two Icelandic words, which were probably once common to all the Scandinavian nations." And see Todd's Spenser, vol. iii. p. 413, n.

Why let be, (quod she) let be, Nicholas,
Or I wol crie out harow and alas.

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3286.

Up sterten Alison and Nicholay,
And creiden, out and harow! in the street.

Id. Ib. v. 3823.

This John goth out, and fint his hors away,
And gan to cry, harow, and wala wa!

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4069

"Harrow! the flames which me consume," said he,
"Ne can be quencht, within my secret bowelles be."

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. ch. vi. sec. 49.

HARP, v.

HARP, n.

HARPER,

HARPING,

HARPIST,

HARPSICORD,

HARP-STAR,

HARP-STRING.

A. S. noun hearpe, earpa; A. S. verb hearpian; Ger. noun harpfe; D. harpe; Sw. harpa; Fr. harpe; It. and Sp. harpa; Low Lat. harpa.

To harp, to play upon the harp.

Met. to strike upon the same string, to touch repeatedly upon the same subject, to rest or dwell upon it, to touch or affect.

Menestral he was gode ynow, & harpere in eche poynthe.
To Aþelston pauylon myd ys harpe he wende,
And so wel wyþoute harpede, þat me after hym sende.

R. Gloucester, p. 272.

Moný hundrede of aungeles. harpeden þo and songen.

Piers Ploukman. Vision, p. 363.

For tho thingis that ben withouten the soule and ghyueth voicis, eithir pipe eithir harpe, but tho ghyuen distinccion of sowningis hou schal it be knowun that is sungun eithir that that is trumpid.

Wiclif. 1 Corynthians, ch. xiv.

Moreouer, when thynges wythout lyfe geue sounde: whether it be a pipe, or an harpe: except they make a distinccion in the soundes: howe shal it be knowen what is pyped or harped.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And in his harping, whanne that he hadde songe,
His eyen twinkled in his hed aright,
As donne the sterres in a frosty night.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 268.

And on this syde fast by

Sat the harper Orion

And Eacides Chirion

And other harpers many one.

Id. The third Booke of Fame, fol. 280.

HARP.

Lo, this is my sentence

Eke, whan men harpe-strings smite

Wheder it be much or lite

Lo, with the stroke the eyre it breketh.

Chaucer. The second Booke of Fame, fol. 178.

He takth the harpe, and in his wise

He tempreth, and of such assise

Synginge he harpeth forth with all,

That as a voice celestiall

Hem thought it sowned in her ere,

As though that it an angell were.

Gower. Conf. Am. book viii. fol. 178.

King Hery thereto would not condisceude, but still harped on thys stryng, that the virgyn, whych was lawfully combyned in matry-mony with Maximilian, kynge of Romans, shoulde not be compelled agaynste her wil and promes.

Hall. King Henry VII. The sixth Yere.

A harpe well playde on shewyth swete melody

A harper with his wrest may tune the harpe wrong

Mystuning of an instrument shal hurte a true song.

Skelton. Trouth and Information.

The helmed cherubim,

And sworded seraphim,

Are seen, in glittering ranks with wings display'd,

Harping in loud and solemn quire,

With unexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir.

Milton. Ode on the Nativity, l. 115.

Since you are so fullie minded and stifly bent (quoth hee) neither will I importune you, nor dull your eares with harping still upon this unpleasant thing, and do no good; (neque ego obtundam, sæpius eadem nequicquam agendo.)

Holland. Livius, fol. 54.

Our conqu'rors vaunting

With bitter scoffs and taunting,

Thus proudly jest:

Take down your harps and string them,

Recal your songs, and sing them,

For Sion's feast.

P. Fletcher. Psalm 137.

A mill sixpence of my mother's I loved as dearly, and a two-pence
I had to spend over and above; besides, the harper that was gathered amongst us to pay the piper.

Ben Jonson. Masques. The Gipsies Metamorphosed.

Many excellent harpers there were, and players of the lute.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 1037.

And can no lesse

Tame the fierce walkers of the wilderness.

Than that Ægrian harpist, for whose lay

Tigers with hunger pinde and left their pray.

Browne. British Pastorals, book i. song 5.

Also over night before the Nones of Februarie, (i. the fourth day of the same moneth) the harpe-starre Fidicula goeth downe, and is no more seene.

Holland. Plinie, book xviii. ch. xxvi.

Such were his intentions, and such his judgment about this practice; and we find him in effect true and answerable to them, every song of his, every meditation, every exercise of devotion chiefly harping upon this string; (the goodness of God.)

Barrow. Sermon 26. vol. iii.

I know, the party are perpetually harping upon it, that Christ and his apostles, and our first reformers, opposed establishments.

Waterland. A Defence of the Lord Bishop of St. David's, xvii.

Amongst the Roman emperors (the lords of a great part of the world) we find Nero at his harp, Domitian killing flies, and Com-modus playing the fencer; and all this only to busy themselves some way or other: nothing being so grievous and tedious to human nature, as perfect idleness.

South. Sermons, vol. iv. p. 508.

But beauty gone, 'tis easier to be wise;

As harpers better by the loss of eyes.

Parnell. An Elegy to an Old Beauty.

Their harpsichords set them so upon their round o's and minuits, that the form of their battle was broken, and three hundred thousand of them slain.

King. The Art of Cookery.

In yon deep bed of whispering reeds

His airy harp shall now be laid,

That he, whose heart in sorrow bleeds,

May love through life the soothing shade.

Collins. Ode on the Death of Mr. Thomson.

HARP

HARPA.

Muse, hang this harp upon yon aged beech,
Still murmuring with the solemn truths I teach;
And while at intervals a cold blast sings
Through the dry leaves, and pants upon the strings,
My soul shall sigh in secret, and lament
A nation scourg'd, yet tardy to repent.

Cowper. Expostulation.

And you, ye host of saints, for ye have known
Each dreary path in life's perplexing maze,
Tho' now ye circle yon eternal throne
With harpings high of inexpressive praise,
Will not your train descend in radiant state
To break with mercy's beam this gathering cloud of fate.

Mason. Elfrida.

If apostolic gravity be free
To play the fool on Sundays, why not we?
If he the tinkling harpsichord regards
As inoffensive, what offence in cards?
Strike up the fiddles, let us all be gay,
Laymen have leave to dance, if parsons play.

Cowper. Progress of Error.

The quills of ravens sell for twelve shillings the hundred, being of great use in tuning the lower notes of a harpsichord, when the wires are set at a considerable distance from the sticks.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Raven.

The HARP is probably the most ancient musical instrument known to us, and one of very general prevalence among nations the most widely separated from each other. A painting in the Egyptian Thebes, first noticed by Bruce, and since fully confirmed by later travellers, carries its invention in that Country to very remote antiquity. It is the name which has been always given by translators to the כנרת of David, and we find it among the Ancient British, the Irish, and the Saxons, as far back as investigation can proceed; though, as might be expected, not without diversity of form and construction. The triple Harp of the present day commands five octaves from double C in the bass to double G in alt. The bass has 36 strings played with the right hand; the middle has 35 for semitones, and the treble, played with the left hand, 26.

The HARPSICHORD may be considered as a horizontal Harp, in which the wires are struck by quills instead of immediately by the fingers. The invention is supposed to date from the early part of the XVIIIth century; and even the Piano Forte (which instrument, the strings being struck by hammers instead of quills, produces a much more delicate tone, so that the Harpsichord is now superseded by it) is described in the Giornale d'Italia for 1711, about which time it is believed to have been first manufactured at Florence. It was long, however, before it obtained that compass and accuracy of mechanism by which it has at length succeeded in rendering its predecessor almost forgotten.

HARPA, in Zoology, a genus of spiral, syphoned, univalve shells, belonging to the family Purpuridæ, established by Lamarck, but indicated by all the older authors.

Generic character. Animal,—operculum horny; shell oval, ventricose; spire short, whorl very rapidly enlarging, furnished with numerous concentric, sharply recurved varices; the mouth large, deeply cut in front; columella flat-pointed in front.

The Harpa lives in the seas of warm climates, and several species are found fossil in the strata above chalk.

Linnæus placed all the species of this genus under the name of Buccinum Harpa; and Lamarck, on the other hand, has divided them into many, by their colour, and the number and thickness of the varices. The medium between the two authors appears to be the most correct, as the genus seems to form three or four distinct species, each of which is subject to considerable variation, caused by the climate, and the roughness or smoothness of the water in which it has been found.

The type of the genus is H. ventricosa, Lamarck, figured by Martini, iii. pl. cxix. fig. 1090; of which H. costata of Lamarck, the many, or thirteen-stringed Harpa, (a species much sought after,) appears to be a variety.

HARPALUS, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous, Carnivorous, Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Carabidæ, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Outer palpi ending in an ovoid (and not a subulate) joint; middle of the upper edge of the chin with a simple tooth, or toothless; internal edge of the two inner legs deeply nicked; elytra entire, or only slightly nicked behind; the first of the four anterior tarsi of the male enlarged, and furnished below with a tuft of hairs.

These insects, which are commonly called Ground Beetles, live under stones, and in sheltered places, both in dry and moist places; they bury themselves by means of their strong fore legs, and run with great swiftness, especially when the sun shines with brilliancy. They also fly swiftly. Their larvæ live in similar places; they are conical, cylindrical; their head is large, and armed with two strong jaws like the perfect insects; the hinder extremity of the body has a membranaceous tube, ending at the vent by two jointed, long, fleshy appendages.

The type of the genus is Carabus ruficollis of Linnæus. There are many species found in England.

HARPALYCE, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx two-lipped, deciduous, lips lanceolate; standard of the corolla obovate, wings auriculate; pod compressed, four and five seeded.

One species, H. formosa, native of Mexico. De Candelolle.

HA'RPOON, } Lat. harpago; Fr. harpon;
HA'RPING-IRON, } Gr. ἄρπαγῆ, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀρπάσσειν, HA'RPOONER. } quia quicquid prehenderet, raperet.
The invention of the harpagon, harpoon, or grapple, is ascribed by Pliny to Pericles, not to Anacharsis, as is asserted by Vossius and Gesner. The name is now applied to

A javelin of iron with a sharp triangular point barbed like an arrow.

There were devised certain instruments wherewith they might pull downe the workes y^t their enemyes made, called harpagones, (harpagones vocant.)

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book iv. fol. 54.

At last the enemies from out the Carthaginian ships began to cast out certain loggets, with yron hookes at the end (which the souldiers call harpagones) [grapples] for to take hold upon the Roman ships.

Holland. Livius, book xxx. fol. 746.

The boat, which on the first assault did go,
Strook with a harping-ir'n the younger foe.

Waller. The Battle of the Summer Islands, can. 2.

Some fish with harpoons, some with darts are struck,
Some drawn with nets, some haug upon the hook.

Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love. book i.

The women, who commonly know their husbands' designs, prevent them from doing any injury to each other by hiding their lances, harpoons, bows and arrows, or any weapon that they have.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. Anno 1681.

HARPA

HAR-
POON.

HAR-
POON.
—
HARPY.

Though he struck the fish with a kind of harping-iron, and wounded him, I am convinced, to death, yet he could not possess himself of his body.
Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

Each sail is set to catch the favouring gale,
While on the yard-arm the harpooner sits.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book ii. l. 503.

They [the basking shark] will permit a boat to follow them without accelerating their motion till it comes almost within contact; when a harpooner strikes his weapon into them, as near to the gills as possible; but they are often so insensible, as not to move till the united strength of two men have forced in the harpoon deeper.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Basking Shark.

HA'RPY, } Gr. ἄρπυιαι; Lat. harpuia, so
HA'RPY-FOOTED. } called from their rapaciousness;
from the Gr. ἄρπάζειν, rapere.

For ilands in the salt sea great thei [Strophades] stand, wherein doth dwell,

Celeno foule mishapen bird, and harpies more right fell:
Lyke foules with maidens face thei ben, their paunches wyde defilde
With garbage great, their hooked pawes thei sprede, and euer pale
With hungry lookes.

Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book iii.

What resteth then but this?
Plucke downe those grating harpies that Seduce our king amis,
If worthles stil, set vp a king
Worthier than he that is.

Warner. Albion's England, book v. ch. xxviii.

With that
Both table and provision vanisht quite
With sound of harpies wings, and talons heard;
Only the importune tempter still remain'd.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book ii. l. 403.

Thither by harpy-footed Furies hail'd,
At certain revolutions all the damn'd
Are brought.

Id. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 596.

From secret haunts, aerial, unexplor'd,
Flights of devouring harpies vex my board;
Swift, instantaneous, sudden they descend,
And from my mouth the tasteful morsel rend.

Fawkes. Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, book ii. l. 296.

Contempt has driven out my love, and I am content to have purchased, by the loss of fortune, an escape from a harpy, who had joined the artifices of age to the allurements of youth.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 192.

The parents assigned to the HARPIES in the Theogonia of Hesiod, (267.) are Thaumás and Electra, the daughter of Oceanus. According to this Poet they were two only in number, Aëlló and Ocypete, abiding in Heaven, swift as the course of the winds, or (what savours of anticlimax) the flight of birds, and distinguished for the beauty of their hair. Iris, though not a Harpy, was their sister. In the Iliad (II. 150.) we read of a third Harpy, Podarge, who, playing with Zephyr in a meadow by the stream of Ocean, was filled with Xanthus and Balios, the horses of Achilles. The Homeric Harpies are also represented as powerful agents in effecting shipwreck. (Od. A. 241. E. 371. Y. 77.) These personages are not connected by either of the elder Poets with the history of Phineus. His crime and punishment, the guilt or the misfortune of his sons, the jealous fury of the father which deprived them of sight, his own subsequent blindness, and his visitation through Jove's anger by the Harpies, till, during the lucky voyage of the Argonauts, his persecutors were chased by Zetes and Calais to the Strophades, and the King himself was restored to the possession of his lost sense,—all these legends must be sought for in later writers; in the Bibliotheca of Apollodorus, (i. 9. iii. 13.) in the Fables of Hyginus, (19.) in the II^d Book of Apollonius Rhodius, and in the IVth of Valerius Flaccus. In these relations, however, the circumstances are not always alike; in some of them the Harpies assume a new parentage, and Typhon is named as their father. Like the Griffins and the Furies, they are sometimes termed the Dogs of Jupiter, and with as little explanation; for that given by Servius (in Æneid. iii. 209.) itself requires an Œdipus to resolve it: quod canes Jovis dicentur hæc ratio est, quia ipsæ Furie esse dicuntur, unde etiam epulas apud Virgilium abripiunt quod Furiarum est. We imagine that Ζηνὸς κύβες must be accepted as a general expression for any ministers of divine power.

Virgil (Æneid. iii.) has transferred the persecution of the Harpies to Æneas; and Celæno, who is substituted for Podarge, is the orator among the sisters. Ariosto, (xxxiii. 107.) yet later, has attached them to Sinapus, King of Æthiopia. The Italian Poet has increased the number of these unpleasant visitors to seven, and has gifted them with long tails, which they twist and knot like serpents. Baptista Mantuanus, with egregious bad taste, has dilated the offensive part of Virgil's description; and Aldrovandus, (Ornithologia, x. 2.) who, as is his custom, narrates every thing which has ever been written concerning them, gravely determines that their filthy incontinence of food resulted from the diseases which Physicians term a canine appetite, and the celiac passion. He expresses indignation, however, at certain figments which modern writers have appended to classical verity; such as that of the author of a book De naturâ rerum, that a Harpy kills the first man whom she finds in the desert, and then, as soon afterwards as she sees her own form in the water, is tormented with unavailing regret for the remainder of her life, in that she has slain her likeness; sed hæc (inquit Albertus) fabulosa videntur, tradita ab Adelino et Jorach. It seems also that the same author (Albertus) has stated that a Harpy, though an irrational bird, nevertheless, when tamed, has sometimes acquired human speech. As if it were not enough, remarks Aldrovandus, that a Poet should gift a single Harpy with this marvellous power, but that Philosophers also, of sound mind, who ought to be the guides of other men, should vent these insane and anile fables. Three figures of Harpies may be found in one of Aldrovandus's Plates. (Tab. 8.) The first has a female face with richly flowing locks; the second is Harpyia tetrapteros, and, together with the third, appears to be of Egyptian derivation. Virgil's description must have been sufficiently clear for all subsequent sculptors and painters; nevertheless, some of them have adopted helmets for their Harpies, and a shield and spear soon followed this unauthorized innovation. Heyne (Exc. vii. ad Æneid. iii.) has pointed out instances of these appendages. Two ancient monuments are noticed by Pausanias as enriched with the story of the Harpies. In one, the gorgeous throne at Amyclæ, the work of the Magnesian Bathycles, amid so profuse a mythology that we are lost in wonder as to the disposition of its various parts in such narrow compass, were represented Calais and Zetes putting these obscene Birds to flight. (iii. 18.) A similar group was carved also, among others, on the chest of Cypselus at Elis, the rich fabric of which was composed of cedar-wood, ivory, and gold. (v. 17.) But in neither of these examples are we informed under what figure the Harpies were represented.

HARPY.

HARPY.
HARRAGE

Numerous symbolical meanings have been attributed to the Harpies. From their pedigree in Hesiod, and their employment in Homer, they have been connected with the Winds; and of this assignment the later writers do not appear to have lost sight by affiliating them on Typhon, and engaging them in contest with the sons of Boreas. Not to wander too far into the endless labyrinths of allegory, we will confine our notice first to Bryant's hypothesis, that they formed a College of Priests in Bithynia, whose Temple was called Arpi, and that they were expelled on account of their violence and cruelty. The conjecture of Le Clerc is more probable, and Gibbon has remarked that there are very few so happy. He supposes that the Harpies were Locusts; and he supports his opinion upon certain very striking resemblances in the Syriac name of these insects, their noisy flight, their stench, the destruction which they bear with them, the contamination which they leave behind, and lastly, in the agency of the North Wind which drives them into the sea. (Bibliothèque Universelle, i. 248.) The Abbé Banier, in a Mémoire sur l'Histoire des Argonautes in the Acad. des Inscript. (xii. 113.) admits to the full the ingenuity of this resolution; but inclines to believe that instead of Locusts the Harpies of Phineus were Corsairs who infested that monarch's coasts. Perhaps there is little to choose between the two as to noise, stench, and devastation.

HA'RQUEBUSS, } See HACKBUT, and ARQUE-HA'RQUEBUSSIER, } BUSE, ante.
HA'RQUEBUSS-SHOT.

Then pushed souldiers with their pikes,
And holbarders with handy strokes,
The hargabushe in fleshe it lightes,
And dims the ayre with misty smokes.
Uncertaine Auctours. The Assault of Cupid, &c.

After came 16,000 Janizaries, called the slaues of the grand Signior, all a foote, euery one hauing his harquebush, who be his gard, all clothed in violet silke, and apparelled vpon their heades with a straunge forme.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. fol. 112. Anthony Jenkinson.

And when the Emperors maiestie was settled where he would be, and where he might see all the ordinance discharged and shot off, the harquebusiers began to shoot off at the banke of ice.

Id. Description of Russia, vol. i. fol. 317.

Hauing discharged our harquebuz-shot, suche a flocke of cranes (the most part white) arose vnder vs, with such a cry redoubled by many ecchoes, as if an armie of men had showed all together.

Id. The Voyage to Virginia, vol. iii. fol. 246.

In the third yeare of the reigne of James the sixth, this regent as he was riding through Lithgou, was shot at with an harquebus by one James Hamilton, and so wounded, that he died of the hurt the next day following.

Holinshed. History of Scotland, Anno 1570.

There were certeine wings and troopes of men of armes, demilances, and light horssemen, and also of harquebusiers, that attended vpon these three wards, garded with diuerse peeces of great artillerie.

Id. Ib. Anno 1547.

This how much it served for the framing of men meet for service, both for the harquebus and great ordnance, was easily perceived, in that a number of this corporation in a small time became perfect masters in this military skill.

Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. Anno 1548.

HARRAGE, perhaps intended for harrassed, or harried.

And to me it is a double wonder; first, that this archbishop would give; secondly, that he could give, living in a harraged land, (wherein so much misery and little money) so vast a sum.

Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

HA'RRASS, v. } Fr. hurasser. M. Lancelot HARRASS.
HA'RRASS, n. } (says Menage) derives from the HARROW HA'RRASSER, } Gr. ἀπάσσειν, pulsare. Skinner, HA'RRASSING. } perhaps, from the A. S. hergian;
Ger. herg-en; Sw. hæria; Fr. harier; to harry, q. v. A. S. herg-ian, (as Somner interprets,) is, "vastare, spoliare, diripere, depredari, to waste or lay waste, to spoile, to plunder, to harry." See Herry in Jamieson.

To lay waste, to plunder; and as the Fr. to tire, or toil out, to weary or wear out, to vex, to disquiet.

But meanwhile, to harrasse and wearie the English, they did vpon all aduantages set vpon them with their light-horse.

Bacon. Henry VII. fol. 63.

A popular government of sin, under a multitude of tyrants, which have, for so long a while, wasted and harrassed the soul.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 1.

Meanwhile the men of Judah to prevent
The harrass of their land beset me round.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 257.

Being unwilling to refuse any public service, though my men were already very much harrassed, I marched thither.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 102.

As if we did not suffer enough from the storm which beats upon us without, must we conspire also, in those societies where we assemble, in order to find a retreat from that storm, to harass one another.

Blair. Sermon 6. vol. i.

Unnumbered harassers
Of the Fleet and Scots
There to flee made were.

Ode on Athelstan's Victory, from the Saxon, in Lateral English. Ellis, i. 23.

Whilst they exercised their ministry under the harassings of frequent persecution, and in a state of almost continual alarm, it is not probable that, in this engaged, anxious, and unsettled condition of life they would think immediately of writing histories for the information of the public or of posterity.

Paley. Evidences of Christianity, part i. ch. viii.

HARRIDAN, Cotgrave says, "Haridelle, a poor tit, or lean, ill-favoured jade." It is from the verb harier, to harry; and it is quite as probable that harri-dan is formed immediately from the English harried, as mediately from the Fr. noun.

One harried; and thus, toiled or worn out.

In a translated suit then tries the town,
With borrow'd pins, and patches not her own,
But just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan.

Pope. Macer, a Character.

HA'RROW, v. } Skinner: By him that harowed
HA'RROW, n. } Hell (i. e.) Christ; from A. S. herg-
HA'RROWER, } ian, vastare, (to harry) verbatim, HA'RROWING. } per eum qui vastavit (i. e.) devicit inferos. And Lye observes that harrow, in Chaucer, is the same as harry; and hence, (he adds,) perhaps, the name was transferred to the tool or instrument with which land is broken into smaller parts. Mr. Steevens says, "To harrow is to conquer, to subdue. The word is of Saxon origin." As the verb, to harry, it is

To waste or lay waste, to spoil, to plunder; to disquiet, to disturb, to toil out, weary, or wear out; and, consequently, to overpower, to subdue; to vex, to disturb, to break, or tear to pieces.

Op^r shepe op^r kýne kepe
Eggen op^r harwen. op^r swýne op^r gees drýve.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 76.

HARROW.

Say what thou wilt, I shal it neuer telle
To child ne wif, by him that harwed helle.

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3512.

HARRY.

And it may bee iustly suspected, by the proceedings following, that as the king did excell in good common-wealth lawes; so neuerthelesse hee had (in secret) a designe to make vse of them, as well for collecting of treasure, as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

Bacon. Henry VII. fol. 144.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day,
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin:
And hauing harrow'd hell, didst bring away
Captiuitie thence captiue, vs to win.

Spenser. Sonnet 68.

BARN. Lookes it not like the king? Marke it Horatio.

HORA. Most like: it harrowes me with fear and wonder.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 152.

Moreover, they are of opinion, that all manner of raking and harrowing, is an enemie to vines when they be in flowre, and putting forth young grapes.

Holland. Plinie, book xvii. ch. xxii.

But O ere long
Too well I did perceiue it was the voice
Of my most honour'd lady, your dear sister.
Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.

Milton. Comus, l. 565.

O that a pot of siluer once would cracke
Beneath my harrow, by Alcides sent.

Beaumont. Persius. Satire 2.

That David made the people of the Ammonites to pass under saws and harrows of iron is not safely imitable by Christian souldiers; because it has so much cruelty.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. ii.

No raking or harrowing can alter the nature of a barren ground, though it may smooth and level it to the eye.

South. Sermons, vol. x. p. 348.

Every harrower was allowed a brown loaf and two herrings a day.

Blount. Ancient Tenures, p. 143.

While any dregs of this baneful system remain, you cannot justly boast of general freedom: it was a system of niggardly and partial freedom, enjoyed by the great barons only, and many-acred men, who were perpetually insulting and giving check to the king, while they racked and harrowed the people.

Sir William Jones. Works, vol. viii. p. 507. On the Reformation of Parliament.

Thy weedy fallows let the plough pervade,
Till on the top th' inverted roots are laid,
There left to wither in the noon-tide ray,
Or by the spiky harrow clear'd away.

Scott. Amæbean Eclogues.

Our version of this place would have been more accurate, and more strictly conformable to the original, if it had rendered the passage thus: he put them to saws and to harrows of iron, and to axes of iron, and made them pass by, or to the brick-kilns: that is, he put them to hard labour, with the tools, and in the places here specified.

Porteus. Sermon 5. vol. ii. note *.

HARRY, v. A. S. hergian; Ger. hæren; Sw. hæria; Fr. harier. Ihre interprets, bello aliquem infestare, deriving it from hær, an army. The A. S. hergian (see Somner) is "vastare, spoliare, diripere, deprædare, to waste, or lay waste, to spoile, to plunder, to harry." See Herry in Jamieson, and HARRASS, ante.

To lay waste, to plunder; and as the Fr. harier, to tire or toil out, to weary or wear out, to vex, to disquiet.

On the left side, mo Devils than any herte may thinke, for to hary and drawe the sinful soules to the pitte of helle.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 289.

King Richarde him-selfe [was] slain in the fieelde, hacked and hewed of his enmies handes, haryed on a horsbacke dead, his here in dispite torne and togged lyke a cur dogge.

Sir Thomas More. Works fol. 69. The Historie of K. Rycharde the Thirde.

CHAR. A proper man.

CLEO. Indeed he is so: I repent me much.

That I so harried him.

Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 353.

They entred against the Prouince, and in battle slew Duke Berthun, harrying the country miserably before him.

Speed. The West-Saxons, book vii. ch. vi. sec. 4.

But hee wading thorow these troubles, harried the prouince of the South-Saxons with inuasions and calamities.

Id. Ib. book vii. ch. vii. sec. 5. Anno 598.

[Parthia] was so weak, that with great difficulty they could defend themselves from the Armenians, that continually harried them out of their skins.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 442. Lucullus.

The Pharsalians harrying and troubling the rereward of Agesilaus' army, he put forth five hundred horsemen, which gave them so lusty a charge, that he overthrew them ny force.

Id. Ib. fol. 516. Agesilaus.

HARSH, } Sw. harsk. Anciently writ-
HA'RSHLY, } ten harryshe, and not impro-
HA'RSHNESS, } bably from the verb to harry,
HARSH-RESOUNDING, } to vex, to molest, to trouble.
HARSH-RUDE, } Troublesome or distressing;
HARSH-SOUNDING. } rigorous, rough, grating, austere, morose. See the Quotation from Hobbes.

Meates harryshe, lyke the taste of wylde frutes, do constipate and restrayne.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, fol. 18.

But melancholy settled in thy spleen,

My rhymes seem harsh to thy unrelish'd taste,

Thy wits that long replenish'd have not been,

Wanting kind moisture, do unkindly waste.

Drayton. Pastorals. Eclogue 2.

His [Eumenes] speech was not harsh nor churlish, but very mild and pleasant, as appeareth by the letters he wrote.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 503. Eumenes.

Confiding in the canon of the Council of Lyons, which forbad the clergy to pay any taxes to princes without the consent of the Pope, he [Robert Winchelsey] created much molestation to himself, King Edward the First using him very harshly, till at last he overcame all with his patience.

Fuller. Worthies. Sussex.

O, if thou die before,
My soul from other lands to thee shall soar;
Thy (else almighty) beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love,
Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness.

Donne. Funeral Elegy on his Wife.

Simple sounds please by equality, as the sound of a bell or lute: insomuch as it seems, an equality continued by the percussion of the object upon the ear, is pleasure; the contrary is called harshness, such as is grating, and some other sounds, which do not always affect the body, but only sometimes, and that with a kind of horror begining at the teeth.

Hobbes. Human Nature, ch. viii.

With harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadfull bray.

Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 26.

Thou old Adam's likeness, set to dresse this garden:

How dares thy harsh-rude tongue sound this vnpleasing newes.

Id. Ib. fol. 38.

To whom he sung in rude harsh-sounding rimes,

That ere the next Ascension day at noone,

Your highnes should deliuer vp your crowne.

Id. King John, fol. 15.

He who wishes honestly, is no more an enemy to the offender than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease.

Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel. To the Reader.

But it is not, perhaps he will pretend, for to assuage a private passion, or to promote his particular concernment, that he makes so bold with his neighbour, or deals so harshly with him; but for the sake of orthodox doctrine, for advantage of the true church, for the advancement of publick good, he judgeth it expedient to asperse him

Barrow. Sermon 18. vol. i.

HARRY

HARSH.

HARSH.

This [delight in beholding torments] has been the raging passion of many tyrants, and barbarous nations; and belongs, in some degree, to such tempers as have thrown off that courteousness of behaviour which retains in us a just reverence of mankind, and prevents the growth of harshness and brutality.

Shaftsbury. Inquiry concerning Virtue, book ii. part ii. sec. 3.

But their peculiarity is not excellence; if they differ from the verses of others, they differ for the worse; for they are too often distinguished by repulsive harshness.

Johnson. Life of Milton.

We might place in contrast those songs of praise and thanksgiving, which were chaunted to the honour of the God of Israel, accompanied by the cymbol, the sacbut, and the harp, with the harsh and discordant notes, by which savage nations make their earlier attempts at harmony.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. iv. p. 374. On the Jewish Dispensation.

With a smile
Gentle, and affable, and full of grace,
As fearful of offending whom he wish'd
Much to persuade, he plied his ear with truths,
Not harshly thunder'd forth, or rudely press'd,
But, like his purpose, gracious, kind, and sweet.

Cowper. The Task.

In rapid floods the vernal torrents roll,
Harsh-sounding cataracts responsive roar;
Thine angry billows overwhelm my soul,
And dash my shatter'd bark from shore to shore.

Lowth. Lecture 23. Paraphrase on the 42d Psalm, by Gregory.

HA'RSLET, } Fr. hastilles, the inwards of a HA'SLET. } beast; as an hog's-haslet, calf's gather, sheep's pluck, &c. Skinner is inclined to derive this
Fr. hastilles (Lye seems strangely to doubt the existence of the word) from the Fr. haste, a spit; because these intestines were usually fastened together, and in that state dressed or cooked upon a spit. And see Hatille in Menage.

Their haslets are equal to that of a hog, and the flesh of some of them eats little inferior to beef-steaks.

Cook. Voyages, book i. ch. iv.

The Romans came to that excess, that the laws forbade the usage of hogs-harslet, sweetbreads, cheeks, &c. at their publick suppers.

King. Art of Cookery, let. 9.

HART, } A. S. heort; Ger. hirsch; D. hart; HARTS-HORN. } Sw. hjord. Junius derives from heort, cor, and thinks it applied to the animal from the largeness and timorousness of its heart. Wachter, from κεραὸς, horned, from the size of its horns; and Ihre from A. S. heorod, a herd, because they feed or pasture in herds.

Hartshorn; see the Quotation from Pennant.

Ther saw he hartes with hir hornes hie,
The gretest that were ever seen with eie.

Chaucer. The Frankleines Tale, v. 11503.

Centaurus badde, that he [Achilles] ne sholde
After no best make his chas,
Whiche wolde fleen out of his place:
As bucke and do, and herte and hynde,
With whiche he maie no werre finde.

Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 74.

The harts likewise, in troupes taking their flight,
Raysing the dust, the mountains fast forsake.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book iv.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forrest, hart and hinde.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 189.

A strong solution of the volatile salt of harts-horn, or of blood, made with their own phlegm or spirit, after some time exhibits certain short flat prisms.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book i. ch. iii.

"And," as a great warrior said, "I had rather had an army of harts, their general being a lion, than an army of lions, their general being an hart."

Strype. Life of Smith, p. 192. Appendix

The Count Kinski, ambassador from the emperor to the treaty at Nimeguen, gave me a receipt of the salt of harts-horn, by which a famous Italian physician of the emperor's had performed mighty cures upon many others as well as himself.

Sir Wm. Temple. Of the Cure of the Gout.

They [the horns of the stag] abound in ammonia, which is the basis of the spirit of hartshorn; and the remains (after the salts are extracted) being calcined, become a valuable astringent in fluxes, which is known by the name of burnt hartshorn.

Pennant. British Zoology. Deer.

HARTOGIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Te-trandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rutaceæ. Generic character: calyx four-cleft; corolla, petals four, spreading; drupe ovate, nut two-celled.

One species, H. Capensis, native of the Cape of Good Hope.

HARTZ, the most Northern mountain chain in Germany, between which and the seas to the North and West are extended level plains, with only a few sand-hills to break their uniformity.

The Hartz mountains are an independent chain, stretching from East to West about 30 leagues, with 12 in breadth. They commence towards the East in Mansfeld, pass through Anhalt-Bernburg, the Counties of Stolberg, Hohnstein, and Wernigerode, a part of Halberstadt, and Blankenburg, Brunswick-Wolfenbittel, and Grubenhagen, where they terminate near the little town of Seesen. They cover a superficial extent of 1400 square miles, and include about 40 towns and numerous hamlets, with a population of 56,000 souls.

The Hartz mountains, with their thick pine forests, belong to the Sylva Hercynia of the Ancients, and indeed retain the name which the Romans, by a natural generalization, extended to all the woody hills from the Black Forest to the mountains of Silesia. The learned Etymologists of Germany have not been able to agree as to the meaning of the word Hartz; some suppose it to be derived from Hart, hard, or rugged, the signification of which agrees sufficiently well with the gloomy aspect of those mountains, and the manners of their old inhabitants; others find its origin in the name of Hertha, a divinity worshipped by the ancient Germans in elevated situations. According to this notion, the Germans would naturally apply the name of Hartz to all their elevated ranges, and thus the extent ascribed by the Romans to the Sylva Hercynia would follow of course. The same denomination given to different places, imposed on them the idea of a single continuous forest; and hence Julius Cæsar says, that it required nine days' march to cross the Hercynian Forest in its breadth, and that no German had been able to traverse its whole length in 60 days. But the etymology of the word most generally adopted is that which is derived from the quantity of pines which clothe the highest mountains of the group; for, in fact, the word Hartz at the present day signifies resin, and it is natural to suppose that the name was given to the forest which furnished that valuable article in the largest quantity. To these conjectures respecting the origin of the word Hartz, we will only add that which derives it from ard, or ards, an old Celtic term, signifying wood or mountain, (for those ideas were naturally associated in early times,) the root of the Latin arduus, and which occurs in Ardennes, and in many Irish names of places.

The Brocken, or Blocksberg, a name discernible in the

Accola Sylva
Bructerus Hercynia—

Claud.

the highest mountain of the Hartz, may be regarded as

HART.

HARTZ.

Extent.

Origin of the name.

HARTZ. the centre or nucleus of the whole group. Its summit is 3489 feet above the level of the sea, according to some; others make it only 3435. After this follow the Bruchberg, 2755, the Wormberg, 2667, and the Ackermannshöhe, 2605 feet in height. This portion of the Hartz immediately round the Brocken is of granitic formation; to these mountains succeed others composed of rocks of the second rank, or, as the Germans term them, greywacke. It is in these that are found the richest mineral treasures. Still further from the granitic centre, in a wider circle, are ranged the flötz rocks, followed by the sandstones, and finally by the calcareous formations. The Hartz mountains are in general most rugged and precipitous towards the South; on the Northern side they may be ascended by an easy slope. This district is divided into the Ober and Unter Hartz in a double sense. In the language of the miners, the Unterhartz contains only the Rammelsberg at Goslar, with the forges depending on it, and the salt-works at Harzburg. But according to the more general received acceptation of the terms, the Brocken forms the line of separation. The mountains which lie to the West of it form the Oberhartz, which is the more elevated region, more extensive, and better furnished with metallic riches. The hilly country to the Eastward of the Brocken constitutes the Unterhartz, which is superior to the other portion in natural beauties. The Brocken also divides the waters of the Elbe and Weser. All the streams to the Eastward of it, the Wipper, Eide, Bode, &c., run into the former river, while the Weser receives all those which flow from its Western side.

The Brocken.

The primary mountains of the Hartz do not present the sharp summits and acuminate aspects which occur so often in the Alps and other granitic chains. They have, on the contrary, a flattened appearance. Thick forests of pine cover them in general to their summits; but on the Brocken, the growth of timber ceases within three or four hundred feet of the top, only a few birch trees, reduced to the most dwarfish dimensions, being found above the line of pines. Thus, as the Brocken is a flat ridge, a large plain, covered with lichens and Iceland moss, is left open on its summit, from which the whole adjacent country may be surveyed. The Hartz, viewed from this height, appears like a great rocky island, emerging from the sandy level which surrounds it, and which is interrupted only on the South-West towards Gottingen by some low hills, which connect the Hartz with the Thuringer Wald. This wide plain on the summit of the Brocken is the place in which, according to popular superstition, the witches and spirits of Germany hold their annual congress, of which Goethe has made such noble use in his terrific Faust. It is on the Brocken, also, that the wild huntsman of the Hartz is supposed to dwell. With respect to this demon, Behrens, the author of the Hercynia Curiosa, informs us, that although he saw no apparition on the summit of the mountain, yet being afterwards benighted not far from the Blocksberg, he had reason to be convinced of the wild huntsman's presence. About 20 feet below the highest point of the Brocken, is a spring, called the Witches' Well, Hexen Brunnen, which furnishes an extraordinary quantity of water. Every remarkable spot in this country is connected with some superstitious legend. The belief in witches, whose head-quarters were always in the Hartz, prevailed even among the learned of Germany till the middle of the last century; their revelries on the Brocken are minutely described by Gerhard, one of the most learned of the Reformers. After the Brocken, the Rosstrapp, Horse-shoe, at the East end of the chain, is the most renowned of these mountains. The river Bode, a violent torrent in wet seasons, foams down its concave side, among immense blocks of granite, which seem themselves to be the ruins of a great mountain. Round the bases, indeed, of all the hills in the neighbourhood of the Brocken, these boulder stones are strewed in such abundance, that Smieder, a member of the Society of Halle, ventured to announce, as the result of his calculations from them, that the Brocken had once the height of 20,000 feet. Among the curiosities of the Hartz may be reckoned the Herdhouse, on the summit of the Brocken, erected by the Count Stolberg-Wernigerode. It is 130 feet in length, built of large granite blocks, and named, from its founder, the Frederickshöhe.

VOL. XXIII.

In the calcareous hills which rest immediately on the granite, are numerous immense caves, regarded by the inhabitants with superstitious awe, and attracting the curiosity of the traveller from the great quantity of organic remains which they contain. They may indeed be considered as immense catacombs, enclosing the skeletons of a generation of animals differing from any that at present exist on the earth.

Caves.

The most remarkable of these caverns are those of Licorne and of Baumann. The former is situated at the foot of the Castle of Schartzfels. It is composed of five grottoes, communicating with one another by numerous sloping sinuosities. The cave of Baumann, of much greater extent, is likewise composed of five grottoes on different levels. From the first to the second of these cavities there is a descent of 30 feet; in order to reach the third it is necessary to climb through a narrow passage, nearly perpendicular. A long and difficult descent conducts to the fifth grotto, placed under the others, and nearly filled with water. This gallery, which is but seldom visited, contains an immense quantity of bones, belonging in general to tigers, hyenas, and a species of bear nearly as large as a horse. The skeletons of some extinct species of rhinoceros have also been found in the Hartz.

The climate of this country is extremely cold, particularly in the Oberhartz. Frosts continue without intermission till the end of May, and severe returns of them even in June are by no means rare; in September snow begins to fall. What may be properly called summer, hardly lasts six weeks, the snow on the heights being rarely melted before June. The weather in the Unterhartz is more changeable, although the cold is less severe.

Climate.

The vegetation is of course regulated by the climate. In the Oberhartz there is no tillage. Though this is the more bleak and barren portion of the whole, yet owing to its mines, it at least equals the Unterhartz in population. Corn and provisions are carried into the mountains on the backs of men or mules, the produce of the woods and mines, cattle and game, affording the means of purchase. The low hills of the Hartz are covered with fine oaks, beech, and birch, but the central and lofty mountains yield only pines. The proportion which the woods bear to the whole surface of the Hartz is very great, the share of Hanover alone being 286,363 acres of forest.

Vegetation.

The line described by the limits of the Hartz is very nearly circular, the Brocken being in the centre. On the East, however, the boundary of the Unterhartz

The Unter-
hartz.

HARTZ. expands a little. A narrow portion on the margin of this division, to the North of Wernigerode, is called the Vorhartz. The Unterhartz having a milder climate than the country to the Westward of the Brocken, is superior to it in vegetation; the highest of its hills do not exceed 1000 feet, and are covered with a considerable variety of timber trees. The whole of this country, especially near Wernigerode, is a woody maze, a labyrinth of winding valleys, each of which is terminated by a town; some portions also, as the Golden meadow near the Vorhartz, are remarkably fertile; the ruins of baronial castles and ancient fortresses crown the brows of many of the hills. Here, as in the Oberhartz, the woods are well stocked with game, stags, roebucks, and wild boars. The wolves are still formidable from their strength and numbers, though of late years they appear to have rapidly decreased.

The Hartz has been for Ages celebrated for its mines, and there are few parts of Europe in which the science of mining is equally perfect. The metals procured are various; gold is found in the Rammelsberg in very small quantities; from the rarity of this metal here, it was formerly the custom to coin ducats from it with the inscription, Ex auro Hercyniæ. The veins of silver are chiefly in the dominions of Hanover. They are disseminated in the greywacke rock, which contains also vegetable remains and marine exuviae. The mines of Clausthal could at one time supply 900,000 rix-dollars in one year. The other metals are iron, lead, copper, zinc, arsenic, and manganese. Besides these, the quarries of marble, alabaster, slate, porphyry, &c. are at least equally profitable. The gross produce of all these works in Hanover, by far the most important portion, is about one million of dollars, a sum which is generally supposed barely adequate to cover the expenses. The produce of the mines has been rapidly declining of late years, so as to create serious alarms among the people, whose whole subsistence depends on the continuance of the works. The excess of the expenditure above the returns was so great in 1817, that the Government was obliged to close several of the mines, and restrict its operations in every way. There were formerly reckoned 110 capital mines; those which retain their preeminence, are the mines of the Rammelsberg at Goslar, of Clausthal, Cellerfeld, Andreasberg, Lauenenthal, and Altenau. The Rammelsberg, rising to the height of 1810 feet, the mines of which have been worked from the most remote antiquity, presents, perhaps, the most remarkable mineral mass on the surface of the earth. It contains a parallelopiped of metal, 300 fathoms long, and 40 broad, dipping rapidly downward. There are 12 pits sunk in it, eight of which belong to Brunswick and Hanover conjointly, the other four to the town of Goslar. The prodigious extent of the galleries in these mines has given rise to the saying, that there is more wood underground in the Rammelsberg, than in the town of Goslar. Copper and zinc are the chief produce of the Rammelsberg, and about seven marks annually of gold. The mineral springs of the Hartz are not numerous; those of Limmer and Pyrmont are the most frequented. There are also some salt springs in the Unterhartz, near Salzberg and Reustadt.

A small portion of the Unterhartz, including, however, the Vorhartz and the Brocken, belongs to Prussia. The Oberhartz is now wholly in the dominions of Hanover, and the remainder of the Unterhartz is governed by that Power jointly with Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel; the former State, however, taking four-sevenths, the latter three-sevenths of the revenues. The Northern portion of the Oberhartz was shared in similar terms by those two Governments till 1789, when the whole was ceded to Hanover.

The Oberhartz differs totally in its Constitution from the other Hanoverian Provinces. It is governed altogether as a feudal domain, and (although a part of the Province of Grubenhagen) is not represented in the Hanoverian Chamber by Deputies, but by the Berg-hauptman, or Director of the Mines, who unites in himself every branch of administration, exercising the functions of judge and engineer. The Oberhartz is not subject to any taxes, nor does it yield any revenues but the profits of the forests, mines, and quarries. The inhabitants are free of the mountains, that is, may cut all necessary timber; they may likewise exercise all trades without paying duties, are exempted from military service, and from the quartering of troops. The clergy are subject to the Consistory at Hanover, which appoints them; all other appointments in the Hartz belonging to the Berghauptman. The population of the Oberhartz is about 22,500. The chief places are Clausthal, a well-built town, at the elevation of 1740 feet above the sea, and with a population of 7100 souls. Cellerfeld, with 3200 inhabitants, is separated from it only by a small stream. The forges of these places furnish annually about 15,600 marks of silver, 21,000 of lead, and 7500 cwt. of litharge. Altenau, 1368 feet high, is remarkable for the number of its forges, which, besides lead and silver, prepare a considerable quantity of copper and iron. Andreasberg, at the height of 1884 feet, with 3000 inhabitants, furnishes about 5270 marks of silver; the forges in its neighbourhood prepare about 28,000 cwt. of iron annually.

The Unterhartz, governed jointly by Hanover and Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, comprises the Rammelsberg, the iron mines of Iberg, and the salt springs of Julius-hall. The revenue arising from the tenths of the mines annually received at Goslar, the seat of the Government, is 142,800 dollars, and the gold from the mines of the Unterhartz, which falls to the share of Hanover alone, that is four-sevenths of the whole, is said to amount to 44,500 dollars.

The whole population of the Hartz may amount to about 56,000. The miners, who form the most interesting portion of it, are said to have been a colony of Franconians, first introduced into this country by Charlemagne, and increased in the XIth century, to work the newly-discovered mines of the Rammelsberg.

The mountaineers of the Hartz owe much of the peculiarity of their demeanour to the curious organization of their society. Like soldiers they are arranged in regiments, and obey Generals and officers of inferior grades. Every profession attached to the mines has its separate ensign. The general uniform of these Cyclops is black, with red ornaments. The leather apron is among them what the cockade or feather is among soldiers. Their chiefs would no longer meet with respect if they neglected to wear the apron, nor could their judges appear at the tribunal without the same decoration. The various grades and ranks of society among the miners are distinguished by their aprons.

The submission paid to the orders of the Chief and of the Director-General is implicit, for it is founded on

HARTZ.

Chief placesCharacter of the inhabitants.

HARTZ. the opinion the miners entertain of his knowledge and abilities. They have the greatest veneration for science, nor are they without a good practical knowledge of Mechanics, Hydraulics, and Metallurgy. Towards strangers, who visit the mines from curiosity, and view them with interest, and who have the prudence to abstain from ridiculing the superstitions of the place, they are remarkably civil and attentive. They are strongly attached to the pleasures of the chase and to music. A company of these mountain minstrels spent a short time in England at the Court of George III., who was pleased with their talents, and pressed them to prolong their visit; but they excused themselves by urging that his Majesty's commands could not justify them to the Berghauptman for being absent beyond the time he had allowed.

Behrens, Hercynia Curiosa; Rohr, Merkwurdigkeiten des Hartz, 1736; Schröder, Das Hartz, 1798; Mangourit, Voyage en Hanovre, 1803; Gottschalk, Taschenbuch für Reisende in den Hartz, Magd. 1817.

HA'RVEST, v. A. S. hærfest, which Wachter derives from the Goth. ar, annona, and A. S. fon, capere. Th. H., (Henshaw,) in Skinner, from Hertha, whom the ancient Germans worshipped pro Vesta, and feast, q. d. Vestæ seu Terræ, festivitas, seu dies festi. Skinner himself is inclined to herba and festum, q. d. Festum seu festivitas herbarum.—The A. S. har-ian, canescere, to grow or become hoary, and westmian, fructificare, to bear or produce fruit, (expressing by their composition, the whitening, and, consequently, the ripening of the fruits of the earth,) seem to present a plain and satisfactory etymology. Harvest, then, will first be used to signify, Ripened corn; and be, then, applied to the season for the ripening and reaping of corn; to the gathering of any produce, of any thing produced or gained; to the produce or gain itself.

So þat þýs duc adde azen heruest al gære
Hýs barons & hýs knýgtes, mýd hým vorto fare.

R. Gloucester, p. 358.

Heruest trees without fruyt, twies deed, drawn up bi the roote.
Wiclif. Judas, v. 11.

And yet what parson or uicar is there that will forget to haue a pygin house to pecke vp somewhat both at sowing tyme, and at haruest whē corne is ripe. They will forget nothing.

Tyndall. The Obedience of a Christian Man, fol. 136.

Next him September marched eeke on foote;
Yet was he heavy laden with the spoyle
Of harvests riches, which he made his boot,
And him enricht with bounty of the soyle;
In his one hand, as fit for harvests toyle,
He held a knife-hook.

Spenser. Faerie Queene. Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, can. 7.

And from him, much apart,
His harvest-bailiffes, underneath an oke, a feast prepar'd:
And having kild a mighty oxe, stood there to see him shar'd.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xviii. fol. 265.

The Mantineans (according to the expectation of Epaminondas) were scattered abroad in the country; far more intent upon their harvest-business, than upon the war.

Raleigh. History of the World, book iii. ch. xii.

For he that opes the pleasant sweetes of May,
Beyond the noonstead so farre drove his teame,
That harvest-folkes (with curds and clouted creame,

With cheese and butter, cates and cakes ynow,
That are the yeoman's from the yoake or cove)
On sheafes of corne were at their noonshun's close,
Whilst by them merrily the bagpipes goes.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 1.

Came there a certaine lord, neat, trimly drest;
Fresh as a bride-groome, and his chin new reapt,
Shew'd like a stubble land at haruest-home.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 51.

And thus of all my harvest-hope I have Nought reaped but a weedie crop of care.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. December.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two
To call on his fellows the better to do.

Tusser. August's Husbandry.

South and South-Eastern, dry and healthy, delighteth so much in rain, that it can well digest (save in harvest-time) one shower every day, and two every Sunday.

Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

His bloody brow
With his mail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes
Like to a haruest-man, that task'd to mowe
Or all, or loose his hyre.

Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 4.

The husband-man (saith St. Hierome) at the plough-tail may sing an Hallelujah, the sweating harvest-man may refresh himself with a Psalm, the gardiner, whilst he prunes his vines and arbors, may record some one of David's sonnets.

Hale. Remains, p. 153.

And harvest-queenes of yore would chaplets make
To crowne their scalps that couth most sweetly sing.

Browne. Eclogue addressed to him by Master Davies.

Think, oh, grateful think!
How good the God of harvest is to you;
Who pours abundance o'er your flowing fields;
While those unhappy partners of your kind
Wide hover round you like the fowls of heaven,
And ask their humble dole.

Thomson. Autumn.

Ill it befits thee, oh, it ill befits
Acasto's daughter, his whose open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ampler heart,
The father of a country, thus to pick
The very refuse of those harvest-fields,
Which from his bounteous friendship I enjoy.

Id. ib.

But tell me who's the charmer of your eye?

BATTUS. Old Polybuta's niece, the gay, the young,
Who harvest-home at Hypocoon's sung.

Fawkes. Idyllium 10. Theocritus.

Thirdly, they were to declare the articles lately set forth for the abrogation of some superfluous holy days, particularly in harvest-time
Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1536.

The harvest-treasures all
Now gather'd in, beyond the rage of storms,
Sure to the swain.

Thomson. Winter.

And [Chaundler did relate] that the gentleman's servants at Lyn went abroad and killed poor men in their harvest-work, and also killed women with child.

Strype. Memorials. Edward IV. Anno 1549.

I have seen a stock of reeds harvested and stacked, worth two or three hundred pounds.

Pennant. Tour in Scotland.

Fancy, with prophetic glance,
Sees the teeming months advance;
The field, the forest, green and gay,
The dappled slope, the tedded hay;
Sees the reddening orchard blow,
The harvest wave, the vintage flow.

Warton. Ode 10. The first of April.

In harvest-time he had helped to pitch both glebe and tithe wheat in the field into the waggons.

Horsley. Speeches, p. 113.

The HARVEST is every where a season of joy, and Ceres and Vacuna, under different names, though with HARVEST.

HAR-
WICH.

similar rites, and much the same attributes, have universally called forth the gratitude of the husbandman, at the time in which the chief labours of his year are brought to a close. In the Feasts of Harvest and of Ingathering, (Exodus, xxiii. 16.) the Jews returned thanks to God for the fruits of the earth then housed; and it has been supposed, that the particular Psalms entitled על החרית, were composed by David as fitting the joyhood of these celebrations. Cecrops is said by Philochorus to have raised an altar in Attica to Saturn and Ops, and to have instituted a common festival for the farmer and his labourers, when the corn was carried and the vintage gathered; and the reason assigned by Macrobius, who records this fact, (Sat. i. 10.) is pleasing and benevolent, delectari enim Deum honore servorum, contemplatu laboris.

Many of our English Harvest customs are elaborately collected by Brand; (Pop. Ant. i. 442.) and they are the more interesting, because most probably, even in very remote districts, they are gradually wearing away, and ere long may be wholly forgotten. Hentzner, in his Journey into England in 1598, mentions that while at Windsor he met a Harvest home; the last load of corn was crowned with flowers, and "an image richly dressed, by which perhaps they would signify Ceres," was kept moving about. Hutchins, in his History of Northumberland, mentions a similar custom. In that County the image was known as a Harvest Doll, or Kern (Corn) Baby, and we have conversed with those who yet remember to have seen a similar pomp (the Hawkie) paraded in an inland County, not more than 50 miles from the Capital. In Devonshire it was usual to twist the last few ears of corn into a sort of wreath, provincially termed a knack, and this was hung up over the farmer's table, and carefully kept, not without fears for its loss, which would have been considered ill-omened, till the following season. These last blades in Hertfordshire are called a Mare, and are used differently; the reapers throw their sickles at them, and, whoever cuts the knot by which they are tied, wins a prize. In another part of the same County, at Hitchin, each farmer drives home furiously with his last load of corn, and is pursued by a shouting crowd, endeavouring to throw water over it. The last load is called the Hockey (Hawkie) Cart, and a cake made for the supper bears the same name. In the Northern Counties a festivity was celebrated, called a Kern, or Churn Supper, from a huge churn of cream which formed part of it; and a Meal Supper, from meal, or mell, a pestle, wherewith corn formerly was ground. These etymologies are given by Eugene Aram, in an Essay on the Mell Supper and shouting the Churn, printed with his Life.

HARUSPICES, see ARUSPEX.

A little after the civil war between Cæsar and Pompey, the haruspices ordered the temples of the deities to be demolished.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. iv. p. 195.

HARWICH, a Seaport, Market, and Borough Town, in the North-Eastern extremity of the County of Essex, stands on a point of land, bounded on the East by the sea, and on the North by the estuaries of the Stour and Orwell, both of which are navigable 12 miles above the town, the one to Ipswich, the other to Manningtree. Considerable remains of a very extensive Roman station may be traced in its neighbourhood, and its name, plainly compounded of the two Saxon words here, an army, and wic, a castle, sufficiently speaks its military importance to that people. But it was not till after the Conquest that the town assumed much distinction, when Orwell, which is believed to have stood upon a shoal called the West Rocks, at present nearly five miles from the shore, was overwhelmed by the sea, and a large tract of land was swept away together with it. Harwich dates as a Borough from the reign of Edward II., A. D. 1318; but the Charter was materially enlarged in 12 James I., when the right of returning two Members to Parliament, which had been suspended since the 17th of Edward III., was restored.

The town consists of three principal streets, paved with indurated clay from a neighbouring cliff. It was once walled, and protected by a castle and some block-houses; but these are now covered by the slow but constant encroachments of the sea. On the land side it is defended by some more recent fortifications. The Chapel (for the town belongs to the Parish of Dover Court) is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and was founded about the beginning of the XIIIth century. The other chief buildings are a Town-Hall, Gaol, School, and Custom-House. Ship-building and maritime employments occupy most of the inhabitants, and the ship-yard, which is convenient and well provided, has produced several third-rates. The harbour is deep and spacious, and the anchorage good. Two lighthouses are built near its entrance. Vessels, altogether amounting to a burthen of more than 3000 tons, and manned by upwards of 500 seamen, are employed in the North Sea Fishery; and the port is the established station for Packets from Holland and Germany. Immediately opposite the town, on the South-Eastern extremity of Sussex, but in civil distribution included within Essex, is Landguard Fort, a strong fortification, erected in the reign of James I. on a peninsula, which at high water is completely surrounded by the sea. The mother village of Dover Court stands about a mile to the South-West of Harwich, and contains a population of 390. That of Harwich, in 1821, was 4010. Distant 11½ miles from Manningtree, 72 East North-East from London.

HASH, see to HACK, ante.

To hack or chop, to cut in pieces; to cook or dress meat so cut.

A hash, met. applied to stale things cut and dressed up anew.

The entertainment [at the Portugal Ambassador's] was exceeding civil, but besides a good olio, the dishes were trifling, hash'd and condited after their way, not at all fit for an English stomach, which is for solid meate. Evelyn. Memoirs, Dec. 4. 1679.

I ask my readers to no treat
Of scientific hash'd-up meat,
Nor seek to please theatrick friends,
With scraps of plays, and odds and ends.
Lloyd. A Dialogue between the Author and his Friend.

Old pieces are revived and scarcely any new ones admitted; the public are again obliged to ruminate over those hashes of absurdity, which were disgusting to our ancestors even in an age of ignorance. Goldsmith. Miscellaneous Works, vol. i. p. 263. Of Polite Learning.

HASK. The Glossarist to Spenser says, "A haske is a wicker ped (basket) wherein they use to carry fish." Mr. Todd, in his note upon the passage, cites an instance of the usage of the word from Davison's Poems. Dr. Jamieson thinks it may be from the Sw. hwass, a rush.

But nowe sadde winter welked hath the day,
And Phœbus, wearie of his yearly taske,
Ystabled hath his steedes in lowly lay,
And taken up his ynn in fishes haske.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. November.

HAR-
WICH.
HASK.

HASLE-
MERE. HASLEMERE, a Borough and Market Town in the South-West angle of the County of Surrey, bordering upon Sussex and Hampshire. It is a Chapelry to the Parish of Chidingfold or Chiddingfold, and has returned two Members to Parliament since the reign of Edward IV. The Chapel of St. Bartholomew stands on a rising ground at the North of the Town, to which of old there are said to have belonged five Churches. Besides this edifice there is no other public building. Population, in 1821, 887. Distant from Godalming 9 miles North-East, from London 42. Population of Chidingfold 999. Distant from Godalming 6 miles South, from London 36.

HASP, v. } A. S. hæps, a lock, a haspe. Hæpsian, HASP, n. } to Locke, to haspe. Somner. Ger. hespe;
Sw. haspe; Low Lat. haspa, which Spelman calls retinaculum quod post ostium annectit. Skinner and Junius from the Gr. ἄπτειν, nectere. Wachter from the Ger. verb heb-en, (Goth. hab-an; A. S. habban.) tenere, to hold or keep.

His knave was a strong carl for the nones,
And by the haspe he haf it of at ones;
Into the flore the dore fell anon.

Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3470.

Besides these jewels, you must get
Cuff buckles, and an handsome set
Of tags for palatine, a curious hasp
The manteau 'bout her neck to clasp.

Evelyn. A Voyage to Marry-land

Haspt in a tombril, awkward have you shin'd,
With one fat slave before, and none behind.

Garth. The Dispensary, can. 5. v. 86.

Which may for some uses be a little more commodious if the cover be joined (as it may easily be) to the rest of the frame, by two or three little hinges and a hasp, by whose help the case may be readily opened and shut at pleasure.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 221. New Experiments touching the Spring of the Air.

Upon landing two little trunks, which was all we carried with us, we were surprised to see fourteen or fifteen fellows all running down to the ship to lay their hands upon them; four got under each trunk, the rest surrounded, and held the hasps.

Goldsmith. Miscellaneous Works, vol. i. fol. 90. Goldsmith to Sir Joshua Reynolds.

HASSELQUISTIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Umbelliferae. Generic character: corolla radiate, florets of the disk abortive, petals incurved, two-cleft; seeds of the exterior of the umbel orbicular, those of the interior hemispherical.

Two species, natives of Egypt.

HASSOCK. Serenius suggests the Sw. hwass, juncus, a rush, and saeck, a sack. Fulcrum pedum stramineum, says Skinner, a support for the feet made of straw, (or hay, q. d. hay-stack.)

Buy a mat for a bed, buy a mat,
A hassock for your feet.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Night-Walker, act v.

HASTE, v. } Ger. hasten; Dutch, haasten; Sw.
HASTE, n. } hasta; Fr. haster. The A. S. verb is HA'STEN, } written efstan, efstian, "accelerare, festinare, contendere, to hasten, to make
HA'STENER, } speed, to speed or make haste to go,
HA'STY, } to strive, to endeavour earnestly."
HA'STILY, } Somner. The Ger., D., Sw., and Fr.
HA'STINESS, } appear to be the same word, with the HA'STINGS. } omission of f and addition of the aspirate, and the change of e into a.

To move or act speedily or swiftly; to accelerate, to add to, to increase, the speed or swiftness, the velocity; to quicken.

Hasty, met. having the feelings or passions quickly excited; passionate, precipitate, rash.

Hastings; Fr. hastiveau, hastivel, "an hasting apple or pear, a soon-ripe apple;" more commonly applied to peas, as green-hastings.

þo þe messenger wyþ þe tydýng to kyng Howwel com,
Hys conseyl wel hastelyche in such nede he nome,
Vor to helpe ys neuwe, and ys kynedom.

R. Gloucester, p. 169.

His eyen pýkeled and simple as coluer's, while he is of plesede wýlle, but thourgh stourbelyng of hert as sperkelyng fuyre, as light-nýng with hastenesse.

Id. p. 482, note.

Renable (ready) nas he nozt of tonge, ac of speche hastýf.

Id. p. 414.

Southward þe Scottis hasted, bfore þam bare alle down.

R. Brunne, p. 114.

To Gascoýn bihoued him go, & þat hastilie.

Id. p. 244.

If any man maa pleynt of clerk for hastiuennesse,
Or if þei were atteynt in oþer wikkednesse,
Thomas suffred nouht cleke [clerke] to be alle schent,
Ne to þe lay courte be brouht to tak þer jugement,
But tille holy kirke.

Id. p. 129.

þi manace drede þei more, in hastines suorn,
þan if þi reame alle wore in poýnt for to be lorn.

Id. p. 256.

Richard was hastif, & ansuerd þat stund,
Certes þou lies cheitiff, & as a stinkand hund.

Id. p. 177.

And whanne sche was come yn anoon with haaste to the kyng sche axide and seide Y wole that anoon thou geve to me in a disch the heed of Jon Baptist.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. vi.

Therefore more hastili I sente him, that whanne ghe han seien him ghe haue ioie eft, and I be withoute heuynesse.

Id. Filipensis, ch. ii.

The proverbe sayth; He hasteth wel that wisely can abide; and in wikked hast is no profite.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 79.

Praying the chambereres for Goddes sake
To hasten hem, and faste swepe and shake.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8854.

And from his courser, with a lusty herte
Into the grove ful hastily he sterte.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1516.

This Palamon answered hastily,
And saide: Sire, what nedeth wordes mo?
We have the deth deserved bothe two.

Id. Ib. v. 1716.

And, sire, ye must also drive out of your herte hastinesse: for certes ye ne moun not deme for the best a soden thought that falleth in your herte, but ye must avise you on it ful ofte: for as ye have herde herebeforn, the commune proverbe is this: He that sone demeth, sone repenteth.

Id. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 86.

Now understond that wicked ire is in two maners, that is to say, soden ire or hasty ire without avisement and consenting of reson.

Id. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 326.

And he with spore in horse side,
Him hasteth faste for to ride,
Till all men be lefte behynde.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 21.

For eche of hem in hastihede
Shal other slea with deathes wounde.

Id. Ib. book v. fol. 102.

Loe formost of a route, that follow'd him,
Kindled Laocoon hasted from the toure,
Crieng far of: O wretched citezens,
What so great kind of frensie freteth you.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

To oʳ verry good lorde th' Erle of Shrewsberie, the kinge's mates lieutenant generall in the North. Hast post, hast, hast w^t diligence.

Lodge. Illustrations, vol. i. p. 58.

HASTE.

These tidynges anon came to Sir Loyes of Spaine; than he drewe togyder all his company, and withdrew hacke towarde hys shyppes in great hast, and encountred one of y^e three batayls.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. lxxxiv.

I found a sayinge of Socrates to be most trewe, "that ill men be more hastie, than good men be forwarde, to prosecute their purposes."

Ascham. The Schole-master.

Thus ye see the time of mariage was not so hastely looked for, as it is nowe.

Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol. 58.

The vndiscrete hastinesse of themperor Claudius, caused hym to be noted for foolyshe.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book ii. fol. 113.

But at these things the Muse must only glance,
And Herckley's treasons haste to bring to view,
Her serious subject sooner to pursue.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, book iv.

Wherefore he hasted away towards Utica, to assist with his presence in this needful case.

Ralegh. History of the World, book v. ch. iii.

Therefore let's hence,
And with our fair intreaties haste them on.

Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 26.

Her golden lockes, that late in tresses bright
Embreaded were for hindring of her haste,
Now loose about her shoulders hong undight,
And were with sweet ambrosia all besprinkled light.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 6.

Sorowe ne neede be hastened on,
For he will come without calling, anone.

Id. Shepherd's Calendar. May.

Zelots took upon them to be the saviours and preservers of the city, but as it prov'd, the hastners and precipitators of the destruction of that kingdom.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 5.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work some praise
And some the architect.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 730.

Thus as he spake, lo! far away they spyde
A varlet running towards hastily,
Whose flying feet so fast their way applyde,
That round about a cloud of dust did fly.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 4.

To be patient in afflictions:—and longanimity is referred hither, or long-sufferance, which is the perfection and perseverance of patience, and is opposed to hastiness and weariness of spirit.

Taylor. Holy Dying, sec. 8. On the Decalogue.

As for that heat and hastinesse (quoth he) which was in him misliked and offensive, age and time would daily diminish, and bereave him of it: grave and sage counsell which now was wanting, would come on apace everie day more than other.

Holland. Livius, fol. 96.

Proverb. He is none of the Hastings. Men commonly say they are none of the Hastings: who, being slow and slack, go about business with no agility.

Fuller. Worthies. Sussex.

See Nature hastes her earliest wreaths to bring,
With all the incense of the breathing Spring.

Pope. Messiah, l. 23.

With winged haste the swift destruction flies,
And scarce the soldier sickens ere he dies.

Rowe. Lucan, book vi.

The two Houses finding things in this posture, hastened the departure of their commissioners to the Isle of Wight, with powers and instructions to treat with the king.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 228.

To purchase hasty wealth, his force applies,
And overwhelm'd beneath his burthen lies.

Francis. Horace. Epistle 16. book i.

I should rather imagine the great fallacy to be in this, that we too often mistake our conceptions for the things themselves, and too hastily put an imagination for intuitive knowledge.

Law. Enquiry. Of Space, ch. i.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated, as the poverty of our language and the hastiness of my performance would allow.

Dryden. Prose Works, vol. iii. p. 35. Preface to Second Miscellany.

When I show you the library, you shall see in her own hand (allowing for the difference of language) the best receipt now in England both for an hasty-pudding and a whitepot.

Spectator, No. 109.

As loud as one that sings his part
T' a wheel-barrow, or turnip-cart,
Or your new nick-named old invention,
To cry green-hastings with an engine.

Hudibras. An Heroical Epistle to Sidrophel, v. 23.

But haste to Ascalon, and seek the shores,
Where to the sea a stream its tribute pours:
There shall a sage, the Christian's friend, appear;
Attend his dictates, and his council hear.

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, book xiv.

Homer himself, as Cicero observes above, is full of this kind of painting, and particularly fond of description, even in situations where the action seems to require haste.

Goldsmith. Miscellaneous Works, vol. iv. p. 408. Essay 15.

I arrived in this province on the last of July, and, as the season of the year rendered it necessary for me to hasten to the army, I continued only two days at Laodicea, four at Apamea, three at Synnada, and as many at Philomelum.

Melmoth. Cicero to Marcus Cato, book v. let. 1.

Nor did Statius, when he considered himself as a candidate for lasting reputation, think a closer attention unnecessary, but amidst all his pride and indigence, the two great hastenings of modern poems, employed twelve years upon the Thebaid, and thinks his claim to renown proportionate to his labour.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 169.

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.

Gray. Elegy written in a Country Church-yard.

But Epiphanius was made up of hastiness and credulity, and is never to be trusted where he speaks of a miracle.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. p. 44.

HASTINGS, a Borough and Market Town in the County of Sussex, and a Member of the Cinque Ports. It stands in a beautiful valley, sloping to the sea on the South, and bounded by lofty hills on the East and West. The old Town consists chiefly of two parallel streets, running North and South, and separated by a small stream, the Bourne, but the buildings towards the West, of recent growth, have very largely extended and improved this district. The foundation of Hastings is of great antiquity. During the reign of the Saxon Athelstan, in A. D. 924, it was of sufficient importance to possess a Mint, and among the original Cinque Ports it held precedence before the others. It has returned two Members to Parliament since 42 Edward III. The remains of a Castle, of very ancient date, crown a lofty cliff on the West of the Town, and beneath, yet more Westward, are some fragments of the walls of a Priory of Black Canons, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and founded in the reign of Richard I., now occupied as a farm. Hastings, of old, was divided into three Parishes, St. Clement's, All Saints, and St. Mary's in the Castle. Only the first two at present retain Churches, which have been united into one Rectory. Besides these, there formerly were two other Churches, St. Michael's and St. George's, the latter of which stood on the Eastern hill. A wooden pier, which once formed a harbour, was destroyed by a storm in the reign of Elizabeth, and the trade at present is confined to fishing. The beauty of the surrounding country, and the softness of the climate, have rendered Hastings the most HASTE.

HASTINGS

HAS-TINGS.
HATCH.

favourite Southern English watering-place. Population, in 1821, 6085. Distant from London 64 miles South-East. Moss, History and Antiquities of Hastings, 1824.

HAT, } Wachter from Ger. hüten, tegere.
HA'TTER, } Ihre from A. S. hydan, to hide. Skinner says; A. S. hæt; Ger. hut; D.
HA'TTED, } hoed; Sw. hatt; from the Ger. huten;
HAT-BAND, } D. hoeden; to guard, to protect; be-HAT-CASE, } cause it protects from wind, sun, and HAT-CROWN. } rain. Hoved, or hov'd, the past participle of heave, (A. S. heaf-an,) has, in Tooke's opinion, formed howve, or hood, hat and hut. And thus hat will be the past tense, or past participle, of the same verb, as head itself is: and mean as head does, something, any thing heaved or raised, as the head upon the shoulders, the hat upon the head.

Something raised or heaved; sc. upon the head; a cover for the head.

Ac yf þe marchaunt make hus way overe menne cornne
And þe haywarde happe. with hym for to mete
Oþr hus hatt oþr hus hed. oþere elles hus gloves
The merchaunt mot for go.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 217.

And fro the benche he drove away the cat,
And laied adoun his potent and his hat,
And eke his scrip, and set himself adoun.

Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7358.

The prouost then assembled a great nombre of commons of Parys, suche as were of his opynion, and all they ware hattes of one colour, to thentent to be knowen.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. 179.

When hattes vse, to bye none olde cast robes.

Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Oh! monstrous, superstitious puritan
Of refin'd manners, yet ceremonial man,
That, when thou meet'st one, with inquiring eyes
Dost search, and, like a needy broker, prize
The silk and gold he wears, and to that rate,
So high or low, dost raise thy formal hat.

Donne. Satire 1.

These men erre not by chance, but knowingly and willingly; they are like men that affect a fashion for themselves, have some singularity in a ruffe, cloake, or hat-band.

Ben Jonson. Discoveries.

It is as easy way unto a dutchess,
As to a hatted dame, if her love answer.

Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy, act i.

After it was cut, and laid aside flat upon a level ground, Sam. Stanforth a keeper, and Ed. Morphy, both on horse-back, could not see over the tree one another's hat-crowns.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. xxix. sec. 14.

The Chinese have no hats, caps, or turbans; but when they walk abroad, they carry a small umbrello in their hands, wherewith they fence their head from the sun or rain, by holding it over their heads

Dampier. Voyages, &c. Anno, 1687.

Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband show his quality.

Stepney. Imitation of Juvenal.

I might mention a hat-case, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain.

Addison.

He [Charles Collins] drew a piece with a hare and birds and his own portrait in a hat.

Wulpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. ch. iii.

Whether he [Lord Hervey] or Pope made the first attack, perhaps, cannot now be easily known: he had written an invective against Pope, whom he calls "Hard as thy heart, and as thy birth obscure;" and hints that his father was a hatter.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

HATCH, v. } Minshew from Ger. hacken, to cut
HATCH, n. } or hack to pieces; because birds, when they exclude their eggs, hack and break the shells with their beaks. Junius says, to hatch chickens, est excludere pullos, because the hen breaks the shell, (sc. to set the chick at liberty.) Skinner and Wachter from Ger. hecken, fætificare, incubare; and this from A. S. eg, ovum, with the addition of the aspirate. Egg and hatch may both be from the A. S. egg-ian, to sharpen, to quicken; to foster, to cherish:

To quicken (sc. into life) by incubation; to foster, to cherish; to brood over; to give birth to.

Other mennes swette hatched vp you. Other mennes hunger and thurst made you fatte.

Udall. James, ch. v.

Be ready euery man lawefully in his vocation, to beate downe blasphemie againste God, and to suppress the broode of sedition in the shell before it be hatched readye to flye.

Bale. Pageant of Popes by Studley, fol. 198.

For the seas wil not for that tyme of these birdis [halcyons] sitting and hatching de cease her geistis.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel. Epistle Dedicatory.

They lay their eggs, they sit upon them, they hatch them, they feed their young ones, and they teach them to flie, all which they do with so continueate and regular a method, as no man can direct or imagine a better.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvii.

But fayling of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shamelesse desperate, open'd (in despight
Of heauen, and men) her purposes: repented
The euils she hatch'd, were not effected: so Dispayring, dyed.

Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 395.

'Tis not thy happiness that breeds my smart,
It is my loss, and cause that made me lose thee;
Which hatching first this tempest in my heart,
Thus justly rages.

P. Fletcher. Eliza.

There's something in his soule?
O're which his melancholly sits on brood,
And I do doubt the hatch, and the disclose
Will be some danger.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 266.

O my sweet soul, I have brought thee golden birds home,
Birds in abundance: I have done strange wonders:
There's more a hatching to.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Spanish Curate, act iii.

The calme time in winter affords the sea-fowles, called alcyones, a safe cooving, sitting and hatching of their eggs.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 505.

The same yeare, whiles the Samnites warre of it selfe alone, besides the suddaine revolt of the Lucanes, together with the Tarentines the hatchers thereof, held the senators of Rome in care and perplexitie ynough.

Id. Livius, fol. 302.

Open your bee-hives, for now they hatch.

Evelyn. Kalendarium Hortense. April.

But so may he live long, that town to sway,
Which by his auspice they will nobler make,
As he will hatch their ashes by his stay,
And not their humble ruines now forsake.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, st. 289.

Behold a fourth; a man ever in haste, a great hatcher and breeder of business, and excellent at the famous art of whispering.

Swift. Tale of a Tub. A Digression concerning Madness.

In the same ode, celebrating the power of the muse, he gives her prescience, or, in poetical language, the foresight of events hatching in futurity; but, having once an egg in his mind, he cannot forbear to show us, that he knows what an egg contains.

Johnson. Life of Cowley.

Insects which do not sit upon their eggs, deposite them in those particular situations, in which the young, when hatched, find their appropriate food.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xviii.

HATCH, v. } "A. S. hæca, pessulus, a barre or bolt HATCH, n. } of a door; whence hatch, as buttery hatch: because usually barred or bolted. Belgis, heck." Somner. The D. heckten, apprehendere, tenere; to hold fast. The hatches of a ship, (Minshew,) so called, "because they fall to like the hatch of a door." Hatch is commonly applied to

HATCH.

HATCH. The fastened half or part of the door, the other part being thrown open: the door (which shuts down) in the deck of a ship, communicating from deck to deck, or deck to hold.

To be under hatches; met. to be put down low, under cover

He poureth peesen upon the hatches slider.

Chaucer. The Legend of Cleopatras, fol. 200.

But shall directly saile and come to the port of the citie of London, the place of their right discharge, and that no bulke be broken, hatches opened, &c.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. Articles for the Agents in Russia, &c. vol. i. fol. 261.

If in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep the door hatched.

Shakspeare. Pericles, act iv. sc. 3.

Dogs leapt the hatch, and all are fled.

Id. Lear, fol. 299.

The briny seas, which saw the ship infold thee,
Would vault up to the hatches to behold thee.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. William De La Poole to Queen Mary.

At the same time there were two armadaes set out of Asia, the one conducted by king Attalus, consisting of foure and twentie saile of quinqueremes: the other were of Rhodians and stood of twentie covert ships with decks and hatches, commanded by Agesimbrotus the admirall.

Holland. Livius, fol. 818.

Yielding at length the waters wide gave way
And fold her in the bosom of the sea;
Then o'er her head returning rolls the tide,
And covering waves the sinking hatches hide.

Row. Lucan. Pharsalia, book iii.

We hoysed out our boat, and took up some of them; as also a small hatch, or scuttle rather, belonging to some bark.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1688.

He assures us, how this fatherhood began in Adam, continued its course, and kept the world in order all the time of the patriarchs, till the flood; got out of the ark with Noah and his sons, made and supported all the kings of the earth, till the captivity of the Israelites in Egypt; and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches, till "God, by giving the Israelites kings, re-established the ancient and prime right of lineal succession in paternal government."

Locke. Of Government, book i. ch. ii.

If by the dairy's hatch I chance to hie,
I shall her goodly countenance espy;
For there her goodly countenance I've seen,
Set off with kerchief starch'd and pinners clean.

Gay. Pastoral 5. v. 55.

HATCH, v. } Fr. hacher, to hack, or cut.
HATCH, n. }
HA'TCHING. } To cut or carve, to grave.

And such againe
As venerable Nestor (hatch'd in siluer)
Should with a bond of ayre, strong as the axletree
In which the heauens ride, knit all Greekes eares
To his experienc'd tongue.

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 82.

When thine own bloody sword, cryed out against thee,
Hatcht in the life of him? yet I forgave thee.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Custom of the Country, act v.

Why should not I
Doat on my horse well trapt, my sword well hatcht?

Id. Bonduca, act ii.

To discern an original print from a copy print (not to speak of such plates as have been retouch'd and therefore of little value) is a knack very easily attain'd; because 'tis almost impossible to imitate every hatch, and to make the stroaks of exact and equal dimensions.

Evelyn. Sculptura, ch. v.

Therefore hatchings express'd by single strokes are ever the most gracetul and natural; though of greater difficulty to execute, especially being any wayes oblique; because they will require to be made broader and fuller in the middle, then either at their entrance, or exit.

Id. Ib.

HATCHEL, } Also written hetchel and hit-
HA'TCHELLING, } chell. See HACKELL, ante.
HA'TCHEL-TEETH. }

The Russians do spin and hachell it, and the English tarre it in threed and lay the cable.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 364. Distances of Places.

But what shall bee done with the hard refuse, the long brins of the stalkes, the short shuds or shives, which are either driven from the rest in the knocking, or parted in the hetchelling?

Holland. Plinie, book xix. ch. i.

And yet the same must bee better kembed with hetchell-teeth of yron, (pectitur ferreis hamis) untill it be cleansed from all the grosse barke and rind among.

Id. Ib.

HATCHET, } Fr. hachette; Ger hatsche;
HA'TCHET-WORK, } Brunne has the old word hache, from A. S. haccan, to hack or cut. See to HACK.

That which (a tool, which) hacks, cuts, or chops.

per he slouh Colibrant with hache Daneis.

R. Brunne, p. 32.

The Indian sayde vnto vs, if wee would see them, wee should giue him some hatchets, and he would bring vs of those eagles.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. Sir Walter Raleigh, vol. iii. fol. 665.

Moreover, there ought a little hatchet to hang evermore fast to the plough beame before, therewith to cut through roots within the ground, that might breake or stay the plough.

Holland. Plinie, book xviii. ch. xviii.

After supper we agreed with one of the Indians to guide us a day's march into the country, towards the north side; he was to have for his pains a hatchet, and his bargain was to bring us to a certain Indian's habitation, who could speak Spanish.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. Anno 1681.

This their digging or hatchet-work they help out by fire; whether for the felling of the trees, or for the making the inside of their canoe hollow.

Id. Ib. Anno 1683.

Next morning I made the natives another visit, accompanied by Mr. Forster and Mr. Hodges, carrying with me various articles which I presented them with, and which they received with a great deal of indifference, except hatchets and spike nails; these they most esteemed.

Cook. Second Voyage, book i. ch. iv.

HATCHMENT, see ATCHIEVEMENT, or ACHIEVEMENT, of which word hatchment is a corruption; and is applied to Any sign, ensign, or monument, of achievements performed; and commonly to the coat of arms suspended in the front of a deceased person's house.

No trophee, sword, nor hatchment, o're his bones,
No noble rite, nor formall ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heauen to earth.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 275.

Let there be deducted out of our main potation
Five marks in hatchments to adorn this thigh,
Crampt with this rest of peace, and I will fight
Thy battels.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, act ii.

For as I am condemn'd, my naked sword
Stands but a hatchment by me; only held
To shew I was a souldier.

Id. Valentinian, act iv.

Here, in a heap of confus'd waste, I found
Neglected hatchments tumbled on the ground.

Otway. Windsor Castle.

HATE, v. } Goth. hatjan; A. S. hat-an,
HATE, n. } hat-ian; D. haeten; Ger. hagsen;
HA'TEFUL, } Sw. hata; which some Etymolo-
HA'TEFULLY, } gists derive from the Lat. od-isse.
HA'TEFULNESS, } Junius says, "from hat, (hot,) calidus, (whence I think hat-ian formed,) the A. S. have taken HA'TELESS, } their hete, odium, rancor, malitia, HA'TER, } and also hatheort, iracundus, and hatheortnys, iracundia, excandescencia." By the same metaphor, are HA'TRED. }

HATCHEL
—
HATE.

HATE. the words incense, inflame, &c. applied to the human passions. It is applied as the Fr. hair,
 "To loath, detest, abhor, spight, malice, repine at, bear ill-will unto." Cotgrave.

And þo he ssolde kyng be, þys god man Seýn Dunston
Hatede muche to crouny hym, ȝyf he yt myȝte vergon (forego.)
R. Gloucester, p. 290.

Of þe toun of Wýnchestre feaute had he at wille,
 Siþen he went to London, þat hated he fulle ille.
R. Brunne, p. 43.

Hatred before was, S. Bede herd I say,
 Biten þe kyng of Kent, & þe kyng of Lyndsay.
Id. p. 10.

And ȝut ich have hated hure, al my lyf tyme.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 109.

If the world hatith ghou, wite gne that it hadde me in hate rather than ghou.
Wiclif. John, ch. xv.

If the world hate you, ye know that he hated me before he hated you.
Bible, Anno 1551.

Greet Babiloyne is maad the abitacioun of deuēlis, and the keping of ech uncleene spirit, and the keping of ech uncleene foul and hateful.
Wiclif. Apocalips, ch. xviii.

Greate Babylon is become the habitacion of deuils, and the holde of all fowle spirytes, and a cage of all vnclane and hateful byrdes.
Bible, Anno 1551.

This hete draweth the herte of man to God, and doth him hate his sinne.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 284.

And Goddes peple had he most in hate,
 Hem wold he sleen in turment and in peine,
 Wening that God ne might his pride abate.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14506.

To ben a murther is an hateful name.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8608.

It were no token of no brothered
 But a signe rather of hatred
 To interrupt my possession
 Of this little poore region.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, fol. 380.

For he with God hym selfe debateth,
 Wherof that all the heuen hym hateth.
Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 121.

The cruell hate which boyles within thy burning brest,
 And seekes to shape a sharpe reuenge, on them that loue the best;
 May warne all faithfull friendes, in case of ieopardie,
 Howe they shall put their harmless hands, betweene the bark and tree.
Gascoigne. The Fruite of Foes.

Not Helen's beantie hatefull unto thee,
 Nor blamed Paris yet, but the gods wrath
 Reft you this wealth, and ouerthrew your town.
Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

For yf this were treue, that they reporte of me, that I preache, and set furth circuncision, what cause is there then whye vntyl this daye
 the Jewes so maliciously and hatefully persecute me.
Udall. Galathians, ch. v.

Hannibal being as yet skarse manne growen, was made captaine of Carthage, not because there was skarsity of men of more yers and experience, but for the natural hatred that was known to be rooted in him, againste the Romanes, euen from his verye childhode.
Golding. Justine, book xxix. fol. 119.

Whom mortally he hated evermore,
 Both for his worth, that all men did adore,
 And eke because his love he wonne by right.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 1.

But cruelty and hardnesse from you chace,
 That all your other praises will deface,
 And from you turne the love of men to hate.
Id. Ib. book vi. can. 8.

———— Their malice hath no end,
 But t' end us all, and to undo the land;
 (For which the hateful French gladly attend,
 And at this instant have their swords in hand.)
Daniel. History of the Civil War, book vii.

But Ulysses not only bridleed and repressed his own choler when he was chafed, but also perceiving by some words of Telemachus his son, that he was angry and hatefully bent against lewd persons, he laboured to appease and mitigate his mood.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 34.

But Amphialus perceiving it, and weighing the small hatefulness of their quarrel, with the worthiness of the knight, desired him to take pity of himself.
Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

Phalantus of Corinth, to Amphialus of Arcadia, sendeth the greeting of a hateless enemy.
Id. Ib.

The Jews were so great haters of swine upon pretensions of the Mosaick rites, that they would not so much as name a swine.

Taylor. Sermon 1. part iii.

FRED. A month or two, it shall be carried still
 As if she kept with you, and were a stranger,
 Rather a hater of the grace I offer.
Beaumont and Fletcher. A Wife for a Moneth, act iv.

What shall the ashes of my senselesse urne
 Need to regard the raving world above?
 Sith afterwards I never can returne,
 To feel the force of hatred or of love.
Hall. Satire 1. book iv.

But I, who all punctilios hate,
 Though long familiar with the great,
 Nor glory in my reputation,
 Am come without an invitation.
Swift. Verses by Dr. J. Sican to the Dean.

Strange rules for constancy your priests devise,
 If love and hate must vary with your skies,
 From such vile servitude set reason free.
Landsdown. The British Enchantress, act i. sc. 2.

Want is a bitter and a hateful good,
 Because its virtues are not understood.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

There was not the pains taken to inform the people of the hateful- ness of vice, and the excellency of holiness, or of the wonderful love of Christ, by which men might be engaged to acknowledge and obey him.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1542.

And therefore, they wished any man, who did withdraw, and hide himself in such a debate and controversy, to consider, whether he were or not a hater of his bretheren, against Christian and common charity; an hater of himself and his posterity, against the law and light of nature; an hater of the king, and his kingdoms, against loyalty, and common duty; a hater of God, against all religion, and peace.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, book vii. vol. ii. p. 445.

Hatred being too active and mercurial a passion to lie still, never takes up with the bare theory of mischief, with sluggish thoughts and secret grudges, but, as opportunity serves, will certainly be doing; and till such opportunity falls in with it (which frequently it does not) it must needs afflict, and grate, and feed upon the man himself, and make him as miserable, as he wishes others.

South. Sermons, vol. v. p. 371.

Indeed the affection of hatred is of so unpleasant a nature, that the being who could hate every thing, would be his own tormenter.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. p. 34. Hatred.

He can't a foe, though most malignant, hate,
 Because that hate would prove his greater foe.
Young. The Complaint. Night 8.

His Court, the dissolute and hatefull school
 Of wantonness, where vice was taught by rule,
 Swarm'd with a scribbling herd, as deep inlaid
 With brutal lust as ever Circe made.

Cowper. Table Talk.

The true object of hatred is alone some particular and partial evil, which we experience or dread; some incidental interruption to the usual tenour of our feelings; or some pernicious quality which may threaten this interruption.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. p. 32. Hatred.

HAUBERK, see HABERGEON, ante.

þo kyng Arture yt yuelde, (felt) and ysey al so ys blod
 Vp ys haubert & ys sselde, he was ney vor wrappe wod.
R. Gloucester, p. 185.

HATE.
 —
 HAU-
 BERK.

HAU-
BERK.
—
HAVE.

For ge ben men beter y tagt to schouele and to spade,
To cartestaf and to plowstaf, and a fischyng to wade,
To hamer and to nedle, and to marchandise al so,
þan with swerd or hauberk eny batail to do.

R. Gloucester, p. 99.

And more encense into the fire he cast,
With other rites mo, and at the last
The statue of Mars began his hauberke ring.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2433.

And on the hauberk strooke the prince so sore,
That quite disparted all the linked frame,
And pearced to the skin but bit no more,
Yet made him twice to reele, that neuer moou'd afore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 8.

It hit the knight the buckels rich among,
Wherewith his precious girdle fast'ned was,
It bruised them and pierc'd his hawberke strong,
Some little bloud downe trickled on the grasse.

Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, book vii. st. 103.

Hauberks and helms are hew'd and many a wound
Out spins the streaming blood, and dies the ground.

Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
Blade with clattering buckler meet,
Hauberk crash, and Helmet ring.

Gray. The Fatal Sisters.

HAVE, } Goth. haban; A. S. habban, hæban;
HA'VELESS, } Ger. haben; D. hebben; Sw. hafwee;
HA'VEN, } Fr. avoir; It. avere; Sp. haber. All HA'VING. } (say the Etymologists) from the Lat.

habere: Tooke that the Lat. is from the Gothic.

Hath contraction of haveth.

Had contraction of haved.

Han contraction of haven.

To hold or keep; to possess or obtain; to enjoy the tenure or possession; to take or receive it; to attain or procure the possession; to seek or require.

Have after him, at him, with him; are elliptical expressions, equivalent to I will have, or let us have or keep after him; i. e. follow, pursue. I will have, or let us have,—a blow, a hit, an aim, a trial at him or it.
I will have, or let us have, or keep (in company) with him; attend him.

For my god heo louede me, & now he habbeþ euery del,
He nul not geue me of myn owne mid god herte a mel.

R. Gloucester, p. 35.

Cole was a noble mon, & gret power hadde on honde,
Erl he was of Colchestre here in þis londe.

Id. p. 82.

Knotite of his body gatte sonnes þre
Tuo bi tuo wives, þe þrid in jolifte.
Bi þe first had he Suane, he was eldest broþer.

R. Brunne, p. 50.

The conquerour is laid at Kame dede in graue,
þe Courthose befor said Normundie salle haue.

Id. p. 85.

And bere hit in þy bosom, abowte wer þu wendest
Shal never barne be abaissed. þat hath þis a boutte.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 251.

He that hath eeris of heryng; here he.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xi.

He y^t hath cares to heare let him heare.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Moyse seide if any man is deed, not havyng a sone: that his brother wed his wyf and raise sed to his brothir.—The firste weddide a wyf and is deed and hadde no seed.—In the risynge agen to lyf, whos wyf of the sevene schal sche be? for alle hadden hir.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxii.

Moses bade, yf a man dye hauynge no children, that the brother mary his wyfe, and reyse vp sede vnto his brother.—The first married and deceased without issue.—Nowe in y^e resurrection whose wyfe shal she be of the seuen? For al had her.

Bible, Anno 1551.

HAVE.

HAVEN.

And whanne wijn failide, the modir of Jhesus seide to him, thei hau not wijn.

Wiclif. John, ch. ii.

And when the wyne fayled the mother of Jesus sayde vnto him:
They haue no wyne.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And therfore, sire, the best rede that I can,
Despeire you not, but haveth in memorie,
Paraventure shey may be your purgatorie.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9548.

This maketh Emelie han remembrance
To don honor to May, and for to rise.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1048.

Now sith ye han so holy and meek a wif,
What nedeth you, Thomas, to maken strif?

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7581.

And therof cometh it, that if thou see a wight that would gotten y^t hee may not getten, thou maiest not dout that power ne faileth him to hauen that he would.

Id. Boecius, book iv. fol. 230.

And eke he set an ordinaunce
Upon a lawe of Moyses,
That though a man be haueles,
Yet shall he not by theft stele.

Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 121.

And if I se some have their most desired sight,
Alas! thinke I, eche man hath weale, save I, most woful wight.
Surrey. The Faithful Lover declareth his Paines, &c.

It is held

That valour is the chiefest vertue,
And most dignifies the hauer.

Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 11.

But I pardon you for that, for simply your hauing in beard, is a yonger brother's reuennew.

Id. As you like it, fol. 197.

The gentleman is of no hauing, hee kept companie with the wilde
Prince, and Pointz.

Id. Merry Wives of Windsor, fol. 49.

MAT. Lye in a water-bearer's house! A gentleman of his havings!
Well, I'll tell him my mind.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act i. sc. 4.

HOR. He waxes desperate with imagination.

MAR. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

HOR. Haue after, to what issue will this come.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 157.

And he that will caper with mee for a thousand markes, let him lend me the money, and haue at him.

Id. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 77.

What, shall we toward the tower? the day is spent.

HAST. Come, come, haue with you.

Id. Richard III. fol. 188.

We are in thus holding, or thus spending, truly πλειονεκται, not only covetous, but wrongfull, or havers of more than our own, against the will of the right owners.

Barrow. Sermon 31. vol. i.

HAVEN,

HA'VENET,

HA'VENET,

HA'VEN-LESS,

HA'VEN-MOUTH,

HA'VEN-TOWN.

D. haven; Ger. hafen; Fr.
havre; A. S. hæf-en; from hæb- ban; to have or hold, to contain:
quod (says Junius) ingentem na-
vium numerum capiat ac teneat.
That which holds or contains;

sc. ships: a port, a harbour.

Býuore Lammasse þe tuelfte day at an hauene þer bý Souþe
Mýd hýs ost he aryuede, þat me clupeþ Portesmouþe.

R. Gloucester, p. 423.

þei failed of þer pray, to hauen gan þei hie,
& hired þam a schip.

R. Brunne, p. 304.

Where I sought hauen, there found I hap,
From danger unto death.

Uncertaine Auctours. The Loner disceiued by his Loue, &c.

HAVEN.

HAUGHT.

Where is there haven found, or harbour, like that road,
Int' which some goodly flood his burthen doth unload?
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 15.

Rest, royal dust! and thank the storms that drove,
Against its will, you to your haven above.
Brome. Epistle on the Death of King Charles.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers as receiver, havener, and customer. Carew. Survey of Cornwall.

From Langunda to Fischard at the Gwerne mouth foure miles, and here is a portlet or hauenet also for ships.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, ch. xiv.

On the left hand the haven-lesse and harbourlesse coasts of Italie, and on the right, the Illyrians, Liburnians, and Istrians, fierce nations, and for the most part, reputed infamous, for roving and robbing by the sea-side, put him in exceeding feare.
Holland. Livius, fol. 352.

As for mee, my intent and purpose was, to goe against Ephesus with the whole armada, and thither to bring with me the vessels of burden charged with heaue ballace of gravell and sand, and to sinke them in the verie hauen-mouth, for to choke it up.
Id. Ib. fol. 953.

Having now found a haven-town, the soldiers were desirous to take shipping, and change their tedious land-journeys into an easy navigation. Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. x. sec. 13.

And now the surrender of Dorchester (the magazine from whence the other places were supplied with principles of rebellion) infused the same spirit into Weymouth, a very convenient harbour and haven.
Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. ii. p. 335.

Bear up, my friend,
Serenely, and break through the stormy brine
With steady prow; know we shall once arrive
At the fair haven of eternal bliss,
To which we ever steer.

Watts. True Courage.

HAVERFORDWEST, a Borough and Market
Town in the County of Pembroke, and from its extent and population the chief town of that County. It stands on a very steep declivity, and the streets being very narrow and crooked, are difficult of passage. By 27 Henry VIII. it was constituted a County of itself, and entitled to return one Member to Parliament. The River Cleddau is navigable as high as the bridge of this town, but it has little either of commerce or manufacture. There are three Churches within its precincts, St.
Mary's, St. Thomas's, and St. Martin's, and near the banks of the river stand the remains of a Priory of Black Canons, once of great extent, and comprising a large and handsome church. The Castle, on a commanding eminence above the river, once occupied a large space.
The keep, which still remains entire, is now converted into the County Gaol. Population, in 1821, 4065.
Distant 10 miles North from Pembroke, 7½ from Milford, and 251 West from London.

HAVERSACK, Fr. havre-sac, a bag of strong coarse linen, used mostly to carry provisions on a march.

A long sword lay by him on the grass, with an havesack, of which he had unloaded his shoulders; and though he was poorly clothed, he discovered a good shape and mien.

Smollett. Gil Blas, book ii. ch. 8.

HAUGHT, } Written anciently hautein
HAUGHTY, } and hautain. Fr. hautain,
HAUGHTILY, } hautain; It. altiero; Sp. al-
HAUGHTINESS, } tivo; from Fr. haut, haut; HAUGHTY-MINDED. } It. and Sp. alto: and these from the Lat. altus, high.

High; lofty; high-minded, proud, disdainful.

Vor he was somdel hayt, as hys herte was best,
He wende hym vorþ an honteþ to þe nýwe forest.
R. Gloucester, p. 418.

x 2

þe fader hem louede alle ynoz, ac the gongost mest:
For heo was best and fairest, & to hautenesse drow lest.
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

þe erle's sonnes wer hautejn, did many folie dede.
R. Brunne, p. 219.

Lordings, quod he, in chirche whan I preche,
I peine me to have an hautein speche,
And ring it out, as round as goth a bell,
For I can all by rote that I tell.
Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12264.

For they are cruel and hautain.
Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 144.

The spirite of the deuil, and the worlde maketh and loueth such myndes as are haute, puffed vp with pryde, and suche as are fierce;
but that heauenly spyrite loueth those which are lowlye, meke, and peasible. Udall. Mark, ch. i.

In her estate there sate the noble quene
Of Fame, perceyuyng howe that I was cum
She wondred me thought at my laurell grene:
She loked hautely.
Shelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

If yelding feare, or cancred villanie,
In Cæsar's haughtie heart had tane the charge;
The walles of Rome had not ben rearde so hye,
Nor yet the mightye empire left so large.
Gascoigne. Memories.

The which were so planted in his person, that in hautinesse of courage, in knowledge of philosophy, and in strength of body, he farre excelled all them by whom the East was conquered.

Golding. Justine, book xv. fol. 77.

His courage haught
Desir'd of forraine foemen to be knowne,
And farre abroad for strange adventures sought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 6.

NORTH. My lord.

RICH. No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man;
No, nor no man's lord.

Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 40.

Attend me lords,—the proud insulting queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their feather, many moe proud birds,
Haue wrought the easie-melting king, like wax.
Id. Henry VI. First Part, fol. 153.

Thou drov'st out nations, proud and haut,
To plant this lovely vine.
Milton. Psalm lxxx. v. 35.

Who thereat wondrous wroth, the sleeping sparke
Of natiue vertue gan eftsoones reuiue,
And at his haughtie helmet making mark,
So hugely strooke, that it the steele did riue,
And cleft his head.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 2.

But bootlesse on a ruthles god
I see my prayers spent,
As haughtely doest thou reuenge
As humbly I repent.
Warner. Albion's England, book iii. ch. xvi.

The pride and peevish haughtiness of some factious people that contemn their bishops is the cause of all heresie and schism.

Taylor. Polemical Discourses, fol. 149.

But herein appeared his true hautinesse (sublimitas) of mind indeed, and that unmatched spirit of his, that when upon the battell at Phar-salia, as wel the cofers and caskets with letters and other writings of Pompey, as also those of Scipio before Thapsus, came into his hands, he was most true unto them, and burnt al, without reading one script or scroll.
Holland. Plinie, book vii. ch. xxv.

Had he [Daniel] been sharp and peremptory, Belshazzar, a prince of that haughty and arrogant spirit, would never have sent him out of his presence clothed with scarlet, and with a gold chain about his neck.
South. Sermons, vol. vii. p. 148.

Shall she, that very Parthia, see thee now,
A poor, dejected, humble suppliant bow?
Then haughtily with Rome her greatness mate,
And scorn thy Country, for thy groveling fate?
Rowe. Lucan, book viii.

HAUGHT.

HAUGHT.

HAUL.

Prosperity does not only shut the earth against counsel. by reason of the dulness that it leaves upon the senses; but also upon the account of that arrogance and untutor'd haughtiness that it brings upon the mind.
South. Sermons, vol. iv. p. 90.

This won my love, a love for ever true,
Nor will the haughty-minded Pelias rue
His flagrant crimes, till you propitious deign
To speed my Jason to his Greece again.

Fawkes. Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius, book iii.

[Leontius] sent word to the Empress Eusebia, who is said to be haughty, that he would not comply with her request, and pay her a visit, unless she would promise to bow down before him and receive his blessing, and then to stand up, whilst he sat, till he should give her leave to sit down; which put the lady into a violent rage.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. i. p. 296.

Those high and haughty sentiments, which are the great support of independence, were to be let down gradually.

Burke. On the Present Discontents.

Vice has many advocates on her side within our own bosoms, and when she finds wit and ridicule called in as her auxiliaries, she no longer hides her head in shame, but walks in the broad sunshine, and haughtily triumphs over the modesty of virtue.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. liv.

As many more can discover that a man is richer than that he is wiser than themselves, superiority of understanding is not so readily acknowledged as that of fortune; nor is that haughtiness, which the consciousness of great abilities incites, borne with the same submission as the tyranny of affluence.

Johnson. The Life of Savage.

I had a sword—and have a breast
That should have won as haught a crest
As ever waved along the line
Of all these sovereign sires of thine.

Lord Byron. Parisina.

HAVIOUR, i. e. behaviour, (q. v.) manner of having, holding, or keeping; conduct; consequentially, good conduct, good manners.

Some other persones, whiche were of small hauoure,
Shuld be fyned by discreccion of the Kynges counsaile.

Fabyan, Anno 1267.

Tell me, have ye seene her angelike face,
Like Phœbe fayre?
Her heavenly haveour, her princely grace,
Can you well compare?

Spenser. The Shepherd's Calendar. April.

One Stafford of a noble house,
A courtiour of good hauor,
A friend, and fast to Mandeuil,
And in the prince his fauor.

Warner. Albion's England, book xi. ch. lxiv.

Their artificers wrought their occupations in their shops, the men of haviour and honest citizens walked in the market place in their long gowns, and the officers and governors of the city went up and down to every house.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 129. Camillus.

For to that seminary of fashion vain
The rich and noble from all parts repair,
Where grown enamour'd to the gaudy train,
A courteous haviour gent and debonair.
They cast to imitate such semblaunce fair.

West. On the Abuse of Travelling.

See, while his friend entreats and urges still,
See how, with side long glaunce and haviour shy,
He steels the look to lead his lemman's will Watchfull the dawn of an assent to spy.

Mickle. Sir Martyn, can. 1.

HAUL, i. e. to hale (q. v.) or pull.

Haul appears to have been used as a noun in some editions of Thomson. Autumn, v. 547.

Then we halled into the shoare, within two English miles of Don John's towne, and there ankered in seven fadome water.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. part ii. fol. 32. William Towrson.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon; while romp-loving miss
Is haul'd about, in gallantry robust.

Thomson. Autumn, v. 529.

I immediately hauled up for it, and found it to be an island of an oval form, with a lagoon in the middle, which occupied much the larger part of it.

Cook. First Voyage, book i. ch. vii.

HAUNCE. See HANCE, and ENHANCE.

Udall seems to apply this word to the raised or upright post of the door.

He ordeyned the annual vse or ceremonie to eate the Paschall Lambe, with whose bloude they sprynkeled the thrasholde and haunse of the dore.

Udall. Hebrues, ch. xi.

HAUNCH, Fr. hanche; It. and Sp. anca; D. hancke. Junius says, from the Gr. ἀγκών, which signifies any flexure or bend of the limbs; and Menage, ἀγκή for ἀγκών. Tooke, that it is the past participle of hang-an, to hang; meaning, simply, hanged, and applied to

That part by which the lower limbs are hanked or hanged upon the body or trunk. Used, as in Shakespeare, met.

I Wood. That's a firker I'faith boy: there's a wench will ride her haunces as hard after a kennel of hounds, as a hunting-saddle.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Philaster, act iv.

Brother, why are women's hanches only limited, confin'd, hoop'd in, as it were with these same scurv'y vardingales.

Id. The Martial Maid, act ii.

Each man I met hath filled up his panch,
With my red-deere, onely I was no ghest,
Nor ever since did tast of side or haunch.

Sir J. Harrington. Epigram 51. book ii.

KING. O Westmerland, thou art a summer bird,
Which euer in the haunch of Winter sings
The lifting vp of day.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 93.

I fret to death when I hear him find fault with a dish that is not dressed to his liking, and instructing his friends that dine with him in the best pickle for a walnut, or sawce for an haunch of venison.

Spectator, No. 483.

The haunches of the goat are frequently salted and dried, and supply all the uses of bacon; this by the natives is called coch yr wden, or hung venison.

Pennant. British Zoology. Goat.

HAUNT, v.

HAUNT, n.

HA'UNTER,

HA'UNTING.

Fr. hanter. Junius, from the English verb, to hunt. Skinner from the A. S. hent-an; to pursue, to hunt. To pursue, to follow after, to keep in the steps of or in company with, to keep in or frequent the same place; by habit or custom; and thus to habituate, to accustom, to practise.

Haunt, n. (in Chaucer,) practice, practical skill.

Errid mýslýuýng, haunted Maumetrie.

R. Brunne, p. 320.

Lordes. þat lecherije haunten.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 40.

And þay hadde non oþer haunt.

Id. Ib. p. 267.

We haunten no tauernes.

Id. Crede, p. 5.

Haunte thisilf (exerce) to pitee.

Wielif. 1 Tymo. ch. iv.

For sothly, a prentis, a revelour,
That hanteth dis, riot and paramour,
His maister shal it in his shoppe abie,
Al have he no part of the minstralcie.

Chaucer. The Cokes Tale, v. 4390.

In Flandres whilom was a compaignie
Of yonge folk, that *haunted*eden folie,
As hasard, riot, stewes, and tavernes.

Id. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12398

HAUL.

HAUNT.

HAUNT.

HAVOCK.

Of cloth making she hadde swiche an haunt,
She passed hem of Ipres, and of Gaunt.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 449.

Tell in what place is thine haunting.

Id. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 144.

Four famous wayes there be spoken of to those fruitfull and wealthie islands, whiche we do vsually call Moluccaes, continually haunted for gaine, and daily trauell'd for riches therein growing.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 24. North-West Passage.

For every daie laied they him forth for their owne aduantage at the Temple gate, which the vulgare people call Beautifull (for that was most haunted) to the entent that he shoulde there aske, as in a place most frequented, mennes almes, whiche wente into the Temple.

Udall. Actes, ch. iii.

I do not meene, by all this my taulke, that yong gentlemen should alwaies be poring on a booke, and by using good studies, should leave honest pleasure, and haunt no good pastime: I meane nothing lesse.

Ascham. Works, p. 238. The Schole Master.

Me Utopie cleped antiquity,

Void of haunt and harbour

Now am I like Plato's city,

Whose fame flieth the world through.

More. Utopia, by Robinson. Specimen of the Language.

Whether he be a gamester, an alehouse haunter, or a companion among ruffians.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 93.

And thou Camill knowest well, not beyng content with thin owne nacion, but by reason of the greatte haunting that thou hadst with straungers, thou canst speake all maner of languages.

Golden Boke, Sig. Ll. viii.

Who thenceforth fared as the knight

That did for her distraught,

Stil haunted of the ghost, and haunts

The place where they had faught:

Vntil of her despayring life

Her selfe the period wraught.

Warner. Albion's England, book vii. ch. xxxvi.

Chaste maids, which haunt fair Aganippe's well,

And you, in Tempe's sacred shade who dwell,

Let fall your harps, cease tunes of joy to sing.

Drummond. Tears on the Death of Mæliades.

We have argument enough at this day to conclude the ancient Grecians an ingenious people; of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theaters, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristo-phanes.

Wotton. On Education.

It [true happiness] loves shade and solitude, and naturally haunts groves and fountains, fields and meadows; in short, it feels every thing it wants within itself.

Spectator, No. 15.

Me, to thy peaceful haunts, inglorious bring,

Where secret thy celestial sisters sing,

Fast by their sacred hill, and sweet Castilian spring.

Rowe. To the Earl of Godolphin.

O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,

To whom both heaven, and earth, and seas are seen.

Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Know, mighty prince, those venerable woods,

Of old, were haunted by the Silvan gods,

And savage tribes, a rugged race who took

Their birth primeval from the stubborn oak.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book viii.

The malignant passions of pride, envy, and revenge estrange man from man, and convert the haunts of human creatures into dens of foxes and wolves.

Knox. Christian Philosophy, sec. 46. Of a Good Heart.

HA'VOCK, v. } Skinner and Junius, from "that HA'VOCK. } cruel and rapacious bird," the Hawk, (q. v.) in A. S. called hafoc. The words may have a common origin.

To destroy, to desolate, to waste or lay waste.

When to muche hauocke hath them cloyde,

Then gyn they sore to longe

For rapes and helicampane roote,

And do the beggars wrong.

Drant. Horace. Satyre 2. book ii.

For there can no concorde nor quietnes possibly be, where all is hauocke without ordre.

Udall. Ephesians, ch. vi.

The weazell (Scot)

Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely egges,

Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,

To tame and hauocke more than she can eate.

Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 71.

See with what heat these dogs of hell advance

To waste and havoc yonder world, which I

So fair and good created.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 617.

Then to the rest his wrathfull hand he bends;

Of whom he makes such havocke and such hew,

That swarmes of damned soules to hell he sends.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can 8.

So doth he intende by colour of the same to subdue the laws to his will, and to geue skope to all raskall and forlorne persones to make generall hauock and spoyle of your goodes.

Grafton. Queen Mary. The First Yere.

From realms of light, th' immortal pow'rs inclin'd

Their eyes, and mourn the havoc of mankind!

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book x.

If their first charge could be supported, they [elephants] were easily driven back upon their confederates; they then broke through the troops behind them, and made no less havock in the precipitation of their retreat, than in the fury of their onset.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 21.

HAUSRUCKKREIS, or HAUSRUCKVIERTEL, a circle of Austria in the Province above the Ens, and in its present compass the smallest of the Austrian Circles, forms a triangle, having the Danube for its boundary on the North, the Traun on the East and South, and the circle of Innviertel on the West. It has a superficial extent of about 360 square miles, with 76,000 inhabitants. The land is diversified throughout, hills and low mountains alternating with narrow plains and fertile valleys; and is well watered, although the Danube and Traun, which constitute its limits, are the only navigable rivers it can boast of. The people are wholly agricultural, and no manufactures are known among them, but such as are indispensable to rural economy. The chief town is Wels, on the Traun, with about 3700 inhabitants.

HAUTBOY, Fr. hautbois; an hobois, or hoboy, Cotgrave. Skinner, hoboies, a musical instrument, from the Fr. hautbois, q. d. ligna alta, vel altum, sonantia;
and Salmasius is to the same effect. See in Menage.
The natural treble (in music) to the bassoon, as their names imply, haut bois, high wood, bas son, low sound. The compass of the Hautbois is from C natural (one tone lower than the German flute) to D in alt.

The hautboy [tibia], not as now with latten bound,

And rivall with the trumpet for his sound,

But soft, and simple, at few holes breath'd time

And tune too, fitted to the chorus rime.

Jonson. Horace. The Art of Poetrie.

In the Ovation Triumph, the party to whom it is granted doth march on foot with a pair of slippers on his feet, having flutes and howbowes playing before him, and wearing a garland of fir-tree upon his head.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 265. Marcellus.

For the Parthians do not encourage their men to fight with the sound of a horn, neither with trumpets nor howbowes, but with great kettle-drums hollow within, and about them they hang little bells and copper rings, and with them they all make a noise every where together.

Id. Ib. fol. 477. Crassus.

Besides those ornaments, that are kept in the churches;—pipes, hautboys, drums, vizars, and perrukes, for their recreation at solemn times.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1676.

A boxen hautboy, loud and sweet of sound,

All varnish'd, and with brazen ringlets found,

I to the victor give.

Philips. Pastoral 6.

HAVOCK.

HAUT-BOY.

HAUT
GOUT.
—
HAW.

HAUT-GOUT, a word, says Skinner, lately bestowed upon us, from the Fr. un haut goust, sapor altus, i. e. vehemens; a high or strong taste or savour, accompanied by an odour ascending from the palate to the nose.

Sure I am, our palate-people are much pleased therewith [garlick], as giving a delicious haut-gust to most meats they eat, as tasted and smelt in their sauce, though not seen therein.

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

We cannot tell, indeed, whether they were so treated and accommodated for the most luxurious of the Cæsarean tables, when that monarchy was in its highest strain of Epicurism, and ingross'd this haut-gout for their second course.

Evelyn. Acetaria. Appendix.

The French by soups and haut-gouts glory raise,
And their desires all terminate in praise.

King. Art of Cookery.

HAW, } A. S. hagan. The fruit or berry of HAW-THORN. } the haw-thorn tree, (A. S. hæg-thorn,) so called, says Somner, from its usually growing in hedges, or its use in the making of hedges. From the A. S. heg-ian, sepire, to hedge, or enclose with a hedge.

A haw is also a place hedged round, or enclosed, (So also a hay, q. v.) and is applied by Chaucer to a farm-yard, a church-yard.

But all for nought, I sette not an hawe
Of his proverbes, ne of his olde sawe.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6241.

And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe,
That as he seyde, his capons had yslawe.

Id. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12789.

Spiritual theft is sacrilege, that is to say, hurting of holy thinges or of thinges sacred to Crist, in two maners; by reson of the holy place; as chirches or chirches hawes.

Id. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 356.

By aventure his way he gan to hold,
To maken him a gerlond of the greves,
Were it of woodbind or of hawthorn leves.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1510.

In somer he lyveth by hawys,
That on hawthorne growth by schawys.

Sir Orpheo, l. 241. In Ritson, vol. ii. p. 258.

And in the drye I set fyrrer trees, elmes, and hawthornes together.
Bible, Anno 1551. Essaye, ch. xli.

I sely haw, whose hope is past,
In faithful, true, and fixed minde,
To her whom that I served last,
Have all my joyfulness resign'd.

Uncertaine Auctors. The Testament of the Hawthorne.

It is an observation amongst countrey people, that years of store of hawes and hips do commonly portend cold winters; and they ascribe it to God's providence, that, as the Scripture saith, reacheth even to the falling of a sparrow; and much more is like to reach to the preservation of birds in such season.

Bacon. Natural History, sec. 737.

WIL. Seest thou not thilke same hawthorne stude
How bragly it begins to budde,
And utter his tender head?

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. March.

Giues not the hawthorne bushe a sweeter shade
To shepheards, looking on their sillie sheepe,
Then doth a rich imbroidered canopie
To kings, that feare their subjects' treacherie?

Shakspeare. Henry VI. Third Part, fol. 156.

The hawthorn whitens; and the juicy groves
Put forth their buds.

Thomson. Spring.

The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade,
For talking age and whisp'ring lovers made.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

HAW-HAW, said to be a reduplication of haw, a hedge or fence, though none is visible. Walpole gives the following account of the origin of the word.

The capital stroke, the leading step to all that followed, was (I believe the first thought was Bridgman's) the destruction of walls for boundaries, and the invention of fossés, an attempt then deemed so astonishing, that the common people called them Ha! Ha's! to express their surprise at finding a sudden and unperceived check to their walk.

Walpole. Works, vol. ii. p. 535. On Modern Gardening.

HAWK, v.

HAWK, n.

HA'WKER,

HA'W KING,

HAWK-LIKE,

HAWK-NOSE,

HAWK-TRIBE,

HA'W KING-POLE.

A. S. haf-oc; D. havick; Ger. habich; Sw. hoek. It seems (says Wachter) to have its name from having or holding, ut accipiter ab accipiendo, and thus to be from the A. S. habban; Ger. hab-en; to have or hold. Vossius (in v. accipiter) derives the

Ger. habbik, from happen, arripere, apprehendere, to seize, to seize hold. To hawk,

To hold, or seize hold, (as the hawk does,) to hunt with the hawk.

And haukes and hondes, as mony as he wolde.

R. Gloucester, p. 275.

Haukyng op' hontyng. yf eny of hem hit usie
Shall lese þ' foxe hus lyve lode.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 61.

But on his lust present was all his thought,
And for to hauke and hunt on every side.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7957.

With empty hand, men may na haukes tull. (allure.)

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4132.

And thus he loketh on his flesshe,
Right as an hauke, which hath a sight
Upon the fowle, there he shall light.

Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 123.

The kyng had a xxx faukoners a horsbacke, with haukes, and a lx couple of houndes, and as many greyhounds, so that nere every daye he hunted or hawked at the ryuer, as it pleased hym: and diuers other of the great lordes had houndes and haukes as well as the kyng.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. 210.

As for haukyng, I can finde no notable remembrance, that it was used of auncient tyme amonge noble pryncis.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. xviii.

Crokyng or bowyng inwarde, like as the bil of an egle, or of an hauke, and such we call in scorne or derision haukenoses.

Udall. Flowers of Latine Speakyng, fol. 192.

In all that long space of 300 yeares, they intermingled very few French-Norman words, except some termes of law, hunting, hawking, and dicing.

Camden. Remains. Languages, p. 30.

STE. Nay, looke you now, you are angrie, uncle: why yo know, an' a man have not skill in the hawking and hunting languages now a dayes, I'll not give a rush for him.

Ben Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, act i. sc. 1.

Ne is there hauke which mantleth her on pearch,
Whether high tow'ring or accoasting low,
But I the measure of her flight doe search,
And all her pray and all her diet know.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 2.

Thus flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book vi. ch. xi.

On the other side, the hawkers and foulers when they have caught the foule, divide the bootie with the hawkes.

Holland. Plinie, book x. ch. viii.

Now during that ninth yeare (whiles the inundation of the lake continueth) these canes prove so bigge and strong withall, that they serve for hawking-poles, and fowlers' pearches.

Id. Ib. book xvi. ch. xxxvi.

He fled in feare the hand
Of that feare master, who hawk-like, ayres swiftest passenger,
That holds a timorous dove in chace, and with command doth beare

HAW-
HAW.
—
HAWK.

HAWK. His fierie onset: the dove hastes, the hawke comes whizzing on, This way, and that, he turnes and windes, and cuffes the pigeon; And till he trusse it, his great spirit lays hot charge on his wing.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xxii. fol. 301.

But if it should prove (as I find some men think) that we live only by the day; and content ourselves to patch up things as they break out, and to fly at the game as it rises; it is at the best but like birding or hawking, which may furnish a dish or two, but can never keep the house.

Sir William Temple. To my Lord Arlington.

I remember at one time the taking of tobacco, at another the drinking of warm beer, proved for universal remedies; then swallowing of pebble stones, in imitation of falconers curing hawks.

Id. Of Health and Long Life.

At that rate your pretensions would parallel his mirth, who boasted a descent from the first Cæsars barely upon his being (like the most of them) almost deformedly hawk-nosed, deriving his interest in their blood, only from his sympathy with their defects.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 14. A Discourse against Customary Swearing.

The Earl of Pembroke hath been forgotten, who abhorred the war as obstinately as he loved hunting and hawking, and so was like to promote all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. i. p. 122.

In the 34 of Edward III. it was made felony to steal a hawk; to take its eggs, even in a person's own ground, was punishable with imprisonment for a year and a day, besides a fine at the King's pleasure.

Pennant. British Zoology. Falconry.

The hooked beak of the hawk-tribe separates the flesh from the bones of the animals which it feeds upon, almost with the cleanness and precision of a dissector's knife.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xii. Comparative Anatomy.

HAWK, v. } Hawkers (says Skinner) are so
HA'WKER. } called, because like hawks, wandering about, they hunt for gain or prey. The Ger. hoker, Wachter calls propola, a retailer, and derives it from Ger. auchen; A. S. eacan, augere, to increase, because he sells for more than the first traders, or venders. As hawkers carry their wares from place to place, and cry them for sale, to hawk is, consequentially,

To carry about, from place to place; to expose to sale; to public view.

To hawker is used by Butler.

That [Act] against pedlars and hawkers, &c. will have its second reading to-morrow.

Marvell. Letter to the Corporation of Hull, let. 151.

He calls it a seditious paper,
Writ by another patriot Drapier;
Then raves and blunders nonsense thicker
Than aldermen o'ercharg'd with liquor;
And all this with design, no doubt,
To hear his praises hawk'd about.

Swift. A Friendly Apology.

But was implacable and awkward
To all that interlop'd and hawker'd.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 3. v. 620.

They seem, indeed, to have been a very poor mean set of people, who seemed to travel about with their goods from place to place, and from fair to fair, like the hawkers and pedlars of the present times.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book iii. ch. iii.

These people are like the hawkers in the street, they disperse whatever comes to their hand, good or bad; if it be but news, it is all one to them, by which means they often do a great deal of mischief, without being chargeable with any formed malice or design to injure.

Sherlock. Discourse 36.

HAWK, } Hawk, Skinner thinks from the Ger.
HA'WKING, } haucken, spirare, which he and Wachter
HA'WING. } agree is, vox a sono ficta. A word formed from the sound.

To force or eject any thing noisily from the throat.

I PA. Shal we clap into 't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the onely prologues to a bad voice.

Shakspeare. As you like it, fol. 205.

As, when shall I enjoy God as I used to do at a conventicle? when shall I meet with those blessed breathings, those heavenly hummings, and hawings, that I used to hear at a private meeting, and at the end of a table.
South. Sermons, vol. i. p. 307.

HAWK.
HAY.

HAWORTHIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Asphodeli. Generic character: calyx petal-formed, straight, mouth revolving into two lips, the base stamiferous; ribs of the capsule very prominent.

This genus, divided from Aloe, contains the smaller stemless herbaceous species, as the Pearl Aloes, &c.

HAWSE. See HALSE.

HAY, Fr. haye; D. haeghe; A. S. hæg; (g softened into y) a hedge or haw, q. v. Fr. hayer; A. S. heg-ian; Ger. haeghen, sepire, to enclose, to surround.

That which hedgeth, encloseth, or surroundeth.

A net, by which rabbits or other animals were enclosed, and thus caught, was also called a hay. See Minshew.

The roser was withouten dout
Closed with an hedge without,
As ye to forne haue herd me saine,
And fast I besieged and would faine
Haue passed the hay, if I might Haue gotten in.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 129.

None of you all there is, that is so madde
To seke for grapes on brambles, or on bryers,
Nor none I trow, that hath a wit so badde,
To set his hay for conies ouer riuers.

Wyatt. The Meane and Sure Estate.

And if it chaunced that they whipt off, or snapt any asunder, yet the steele and truncheon thereof being sharp still at the point (headlesse though it were) among the other pikes that were headed, served to make a fense as it were an haie or palaisade.

Holland. Livius, fol. 819.

Said commonly it is, that if a man do set an hedge or hay thereof round about a grange or ferme house in the countrey, there will n kites nor hawks, nor any such ravening birds of prey, come neare.

Id. Plinie, book xxiii. ch. i.

SUR. O, I looked for this.

The hay is a pitching.

Ben Jonson. The Alchemist, act ii. sc. 3.

HAY,
HA'YING,
HAY-COCK,
HAY-GRASS,
HAY-LOFT,
HAY-MAKING,
HAY-MOW,
HAY-RICK,
HAY-SEED,
HAY-TIME,
HAY-WARD.

Goth. hau; A. S. heg, hig; D. houwe, haw; Ger. heu; Sw. hoe. Casaubon from eia, gramen Junius, says Ihre, and a great number of followers, from the D. houwen; Ger. hauen, secare, to cut. Quid enim est fœnum, nisi gramen sectum. Wachter. A. S. heaw-ian, to hew, or cut.
Grass cut.

Vitaile inouh at weld, þei fond of corn and hay.

R. Brunne, p. 160.

Oþ have an horne and be hayward and ligen out a nyghtes.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 76.

And he comaundide to hem that thei schulden make alle men sitte to mete by cumpanyes on grene hey.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. vi.

For if ony bildith ouer this foundement gold, siluer, precious stoonys, stickis, hey or stobil eueri mannys werk schal be open.

Id. 1 Corinthians, ch. iii.

If onye man bylde on thys foundacion, golde syluer, precious stones: tymbre, haye, or stobbe: euery mannes worcke shall appere.

Bible, Anno 1551.

SIL. Prethee content thy self, we shall scout here, as though we went a *hay*ing.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Coxcombe, act i.

HAY.

Whereby a man may see how manie bloudie quarels a bralling shbuckler maie picke out of a bottle of haie, namelie when his braines are forebitten with a bottle of nappie ale.

Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, Anno 1528.

And his men, and his other prouision came from all partes, and arrayed in Flaundys, both wyne, salt, fleshe, fishe, otes, hay, onyons, &c. Grafton. Richard II. The tenth Yere.

Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tann'd haycock in the mead.

Milton. L'Allegro, l. 50.

The latter part being always fixt, did so hinder hay-seed and har-vest following, that either the course of it must be shortned, or it must still usurp upon the time allotted by nature to collect the fruits of the earth.

Spelman. The Original of the Four Terms, ch. xiv.

As soon as he knew one of them, he easily concluded in what condition they both were; and presently carried them into a little barn full of hay; which was a better lodging then he had for himself.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. iii. p. 414.

The sides and top of the house are filled up with boughs coarsely wattled between the poles, and all is covered over with long grass, rushes, and pieces of hides; and the house at a distance appears just like a hay-cock.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1691.

That Careless should presently be gone; and should within two days, send an honest man to the King, to guide him to some other place of security; and in the mean time his Majesty should stay upon the hay-mow.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. iii. p. 414.

A rustic in Germany, being accidentally covered with a hay-rick, slept there for all the autumn, and the winter following, without any nourishment.

Wilkins. The Discovery of a New World. Proposition 14.

There is not a single article of provision for man or beast, which enters that great city (Paris) and is not excised; corn, hay, meal, butcher's-meat, fish, fowls, every thing.

Burke. Observations on a late State of the Nation.

Our ever verdant lawns, rich vales, fields of hay-cocks, and hop-grounds, are neglected as homely and familiar subjects.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. ch. iv. p. 141.

And crown'd with bearded grain,
And hay-grass breathing odours bland,
Bold summer comes in manhood's lusty prime.

Mickle. Vicissitude. Ode 3.

This species [White Owl] is almost domestic; inhabiting for the greater part of the year, barns, hay-lofts, and other out-houses; and is as useful in clearing those places from mice, as the congenial cat.

Pennant. British Zoology. White Owl.

In the summer, they took a journey into Kent, and procured a precarious livelihood by hay-making, harvest work of all kinds, and picking of hops.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 31.

The shrew inhabits old walls, heaps of stones and holes in the earth; is frequently found near hay-ricks, dunghills, and necessary-holes.

Pennant. British Zoology. Fetid Shrew.

The demand for country labour is greater at hay-time and harvest than during the greater part of the year; and wages rise with the demand.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. x.

HAY, to dance the hay, (says Skinner,) from the Fr. hay, a hedge, (or hay,) in orbem ad figuram sepi cho-reas ducere: to dance in a circuit to the form or figure of a hedge or hay. See HEYDIGYES. The French have a dance which they call Olivettes, because performed after the gathering of the olives; the Hay may take its name from a similar custom upon getting up the hay-harvest.

Mr. Douce observes on the passage cited below from Shakspeare, that the Hay was a dance borrowed from the French, and that it is classed among Brawls in the Orchesographie of Thomas Arbeau.

JEN. No; we'll have "the hunting of the fox."

JACK SLIME. "The hay! the hay!" there's nothing like "the hay."

Heywood. A Woman kill'd with Kindness.

DULL. I'll make one in a dance or so, or I will play on the taber to the worthies, and let them dance the hey.

Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 137.

HA'ZARD, v. } Fr. hazarde; It. azarro, zara;
HA'ZARD, n. } Sp. azar; Low Lat. azardum.
HA'ZARDABLE, } Menage from the Lat. tessara, q. d.
HA'ZARDER, } tessara, tsara, zara, azara az-HA'ZARDOUS, } zardo.
HA'ZARDRY. } To hazard (as commonly applied) is

To put or place at risk, sc. at risk of danger or loss; to risk, to expose to chance; to venture rashly; to game.

Her ydelnesse hem ssal brynge to synne lecherye,
To tauerne, and to sleupe, and to hasarderje.

R. Gloucester, p. 195.

Sendeth som other wise embassadours,
For by my trouthe, me were lever die,
Than I you shuld to hasardours allie.

Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, 12550.

And whan he came, it happed him par chance,
That all the gretest that were of that land
Yplaying at husard he hem found.

Id. Ib. v. 12542.

And now that I have spoke of glotonie,
Now wol I you defenden hasardrie,
Hasard is veray mother of lesinges, (lying.)

Id. Ib. v. 12524.

Amongst whom there were a great many that did desire our gene-rall to set them on land, making their choise rather to submit them-selves to the mercie of the sauages or infidels, then longer to hazard themselves at sea.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 473. Miles Philips.

At the first he was sore encountred, and put in great hasarde of repulse, but at length he vanquished and ouerthrew his enemies.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book ii. fol. 17.

Suspition of friend, nor feare of foe,
That hazardeth his health, had he at all,
But walkt at will, and wandred to and fro,
In the pride of his freedome principall.

Spenser. Muioptomos.

These mighty actors, sons of change,
These partizans of factions often try'd,
That in the smoke of innovations strange
Build huge uncertain plots of unsure pride;
And on the hazard of a bad exchange,
Have ventur'd all the stock of life beside.

Daniel. History of the Civil War, book ii.

How to keep the corps seven dayes from corruption by anointing and washing, without exenteration, were an hazardable peece of art, in our choicest practise.

Sir Thomas Brown. Urne-Buriall, ch. iii.

Live, and alleagaunce owe
To him, that gives thee life and liberty;
And henceforth by this daies ensample trow,
That hasty wroth, and heedlesse hazardry,
Do breede repentaunce late, and lasting infamy.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 5.

* Perhaps thou lingrest in deep thoughts detain'd
Of the enterprize so hazardous and high.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iii. l. 228.

Lycurgus was in his nature hazardous, and by the lucky passing through many dangers, grown confident in himself.

Sidney. Arcadia, book i.

These fight like husbands, but like lovers those:
These fain would keep, and those more fain enjoy.
And to such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, 1666, stan 29.

HAY.

HAZARD

HAZARD. Hence passionate and unreasonable men ignorantly call it courage, to hazard their lives in their own private quarrels; where contempt of danger is, on the contrary, neither reasonable nor just; because, neither is the danger at all needful to be run into, nor is the benefit proposed to be obtained by it, in any manner equal to the evil hazarded.

Clarke. Sermon 17. vol. iii.

I would plead a little merit, and some hazards of my life from the common enemies; my refusing advantages offered by them and neglecting my beneficial studies, for the King's service; but I only think I merit not to starve.

Dryden. To the Earl of Rochester.

Too vast and hazardous the task appears,
Nor suited to thy strength, nor to thy years.

Addison. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book ii.

I am always willing to run some hazard of being tedious, in order to be sure that I am perspicuous.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. v.

Ev'n daylight has its dangers; and the walk
Through pathless wastes and woods, unconscious once
Of harmless flocks, is hazardous and bold.

Cowper. The Task, book iv.

The mysteries of the Game of HAZARD, which has become a by-word of abomination, are by no means clearly explained in the following extract from Hoyle; but we have not any thing better to offer, nor indeed is the subject one on which we regret our incapacity to afford fuller information.

"Any number of persons may play. The person who takes the box and dice throws a main, that is to say, a chance for the company, which must be above four, and not exceed nine, otherwise it is no main, consequently he must keep throwing till he brings five, six, seven, eight, or nine; this done, he must throw his own chance, which may be any above three, and not exceeding ten; if he throws two aces, or trois-ace, (commonly called crabs,) he loses his stakes, let the company's chance, called the main, be what it will. If the main should be seven, and seven or eleven is thrown immediately after, it is what is called a nick, and the caster (the present player) wins out his stakes: also if eight be the main, and eight or twelve is thrown immediately after, it is also called a nick, and the caster wins his stakes. The caster throwing any other number for the main, such as is admitted, and bringing the same number directly afterwards, that is likewise termed a nick, and he then also wins whatever stakes he has made."

HAZE, v. Ray says, It hazes, it misles, or HAZE, n. rains, small rain. Skinner, hazy wea-HA'ZY, ther, aer nebulosus et caliginosus, a HA'ZINESS. cloudy and gloomy atmosphere, and suggests the Ger. hassen, to hate; from the disagreeableness of such weather. It is not improbably from the A. S. has-ian, to be hoarse, (the r has not been intruded either into German, Dutch, or Swedish,) hoarse being applied to the thickness of the voice, and haze, to the thickness of the atmosphere. To haze, then, will mean,

To thicken, to become cloudy or gloomy; sc. threatening rain; to misle, to drizzle.

In the morning hazy weather frequently, and thick mists.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1684.

But instead of encouraging us to trust ourselves to the haze and mists and doubtful lights of that changeable week, on the answerable part of the opposite page, he [Rider] gives us a salutary caution.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

From all these fears we were relieved at six in the morning, by the arrival of Mr. Morrison, who acquainted us that he was sure he beheld land very near; for he could not see half a mile, by reason of the haziness of the weather.

VOL XXIII.

Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

Indeed the sky was, in general, so cloudy, and the weather so thick and hazy, that he had very little benefit of sun or moon.

Cook. Voyage, &c. vol. iii. book i. ch. iv.

HA'ZEL,
HA'ZELLY,
HA'ZEL-BOWER, HA'ZEL-COPSE, HA'ZEL-EYED,
HA'ZEL-GOAD, HA'ZEL-GROVE,
HA'ZEL-GROUND,
HA'ZEL-NUT,
HA'ZEL-PLANT,
HA'ZEL-TWIG.

A. S. hæsl, hæsl-nutu; D. haseler; Ger. hasel; Sw. hassel. Wachter, with less truth than ingenuity, in the opinion of Ihre, asserts that hazel is met. the calyx of the nut, from A. S. hæsl, galerus, a hat: and that from the calyx the fruit and the tree receive their name. The A. S. hæsl, he seems to consider as a derivative (or diminutive) of hæt, a hat, q. v.

Hazel, hazelly, (applied to colour,) the colour of the hazel-nut, that is, brown, of a light brown.

A ring (qd. he) ye hasel wodes shaken.

Chaucer. Troilus and Cressida, book iii. fol. 171.

As for other nuts, their meat is solide and compact, as we may see in filberds and hazels, which also are a kind of nut, and were called heretofore Abellinæ, of their native place, from whence came good ones at first.

Holland. Plinie, book xv. ch. xxii.

The willows and the hazel-copses green,
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.

Milton. Lycurgus, l. 42.

They their holly whips have brac'd,
And tough hazel-goads have got;
Soundly they your sides will baste,
If their courage fail them not.

Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

It may manifestly appear, how much more congenial some soil is then other, to yield the best cider-fruit from the kernel; and the hazle-ground, or quicker mould, much better then the more obstinate clay or ranker earth.

Evelyn. Pomona, ch. i.

Why does the world report that Kate doth limpe?
Oh sland'rous world! Kate like the hazle-twigg
Is straight, and slender, and as brown in hue
As hazle-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels

Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew, fol. 216.

With hazel Phyllis crowns her flowing hair;
And while she loves that common wreath to wear,
Nor bays, nor myrtle boughs, with hazle shall compare.

Dryden. Virgil. Pastoral 7

Among the roots
Of hazel, pendent o'er the plaintive stream,
They frame the first foundation of their domes,
Dry sprigs of trees, in artful fabric laid
And bound with clay together.

Thomson. Spring.

Close in the covert of an hazel-copse,
Where winded into pleasing solitudes
Runs out the rambling dale, young Damon sat.

Id. Summer.

He [Marvel] was of a middling stature, pretty strong set, roundish faced, cherry cheeked, hazel-eyed, brown haired.

Grainger. Biographical History of England.

Two hazel-nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd.

Gay. The Shepherd's Week. Pastoral 6.

The playful lamb, the distant water-fall
Now faintly heard, now swelling with the breeze,
The sound of pastoral reed from hazel-bower.

Warton. The Enthusiast.

When Daphnis fell by fate's remorseless blow,
The weeping nymphs pour'd wild the plaint of woe;
Witness, O hazel-grove, and winding stream,
For all your echoes caught the mournful theme.

Beattie. Pastoral 5.

HAZEL.

HE.

Here then suspend the sportsman's hempen toils,
And stretch their meshes on the light support
Of hazel-plants, or draw thy lines of wire
In five-fold parallel; no danger then
That sheep invade thy foliage.

Mason. The English Garden, book ii.

The superstitious use of HAZEL-NUTS alluded to in the above extract from Gay, is practised with many others on Allhallow Even, which in the North (from this custom) is known as Nutcrack Night. Whether this matrimonial divination by Nuts is derived from their Epithalamic use among the Romans, is a question which may very fairly be raised, and some remarks upon it may be found in a note in Brand's Pop. Ant. i. 301. We must here content ourselves with offering the brief account given of the custom by Burns (one of the συγγοι) in his Halloween. "Burning the Nuts is a favourite charm. They name the lad and lass to each particular Nut as they lay them in the fire, and accordingly as they burn quietly together, or start from beside one another, the course and issue of the courtship will be."

HE, Goth. ha; A. S. he; Ger. hee; D. hy; Sw. han. As the pronoun it (q. v.) so he is, by our old writers, applied to the feminine and neuter, as well as to the masculine, and to the plural as well as to the singular. He is no doubt from a similar, if not from the same, source with it, or hit, or het, (for so was the word anciently written,) and had, as it had, one uniform meaning, warranting the usages to which it has been applied. Tooke has shown it, the, and that to have such uniform meanings; and from the principle he has established, a necessary consequence is that the other pronouns had one also. The and that he contends to be parts of the same word, the A. S. the-an, to the, to get, to take, to assume; the first being the imperative, the second the past participle of that verb. It, or hit, or het, he considers to be the past participle of the A. S. hæt-an, nominare, and to mean, nominatum, the said; a meaning perfectly corresponding with every use of the word it in our language. A conjecture, at least, may be admitted, that he may have been formed from some part of the same word, as their application and usage were precisely the same, and the difference between them now is no more than what arises from their being restricted grammatically, he to words masculine, and it to words neuter. Mr. Tyrwhitt has noticed some of the (to modern ears) peculiar usages of he;—that it is frequently used in all its cases for it.

From Souþ to Norþ he [it, viz. England] ys long eigte hondred mýle.
R. Gloucester, p. 1.

Wateres he [it] haþ eke gode ynow.

Id. p. 2.

þe see goth hym [Engelond] al a boutte, he stont as an yle.

Id. p. 1.

First lord he [Bruyt] was in Engolond, of wham me spekeþ zet.

Id. p. 11.

And nuste wat folk it was, to hem he sende hys sonde,
To wyte, weþer he [they] wolde pes, oþer heo nolde non.

Id. p. 16.

& fro þien he went vnto þe courte of Rome,
For to take his penance & of his synnes dome.
Whan he was asoýled of þe pape Sergie,
He died & was biried in Rome solemplicie.

R. Brunne, p. 1.

This was preued in a yonglyn of the kynges which he muche loued, which heo [she, the queen] with her poysen sloughe.

Id. p. 12, note.

Thenne Charles, of he [her, the queen] answeved, saide thus.

Id. Ib.

A suýnhird smote he [him, Sibriht] to dede vnder a thorn busk.
R. Brunne, p. 9.

Nowe he [Peter] lofte with love. as oure Lorde wolde
Amonges four vertues. most vertuose of vertues
That cardinales ben callid.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 7.

And he seide to hem come ye after me, and I schal make ye to be maad fisheris of men. And anoon thei leften the nettis and sueden hym.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. iv.

At every cours in came loude minstralcie
That never Joab tromped for to here,
Ne he Theodomas yet half so clere
At Thebes, whan the citee was in doute.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9594.

For every labour somtime moste han reste,
Or elles longe may he [it] not endure.

Id. Ib. v. 9737.

For all reason wolde this,
That vnto him, whiche the head is
The membres buxome shall bowe,
And he shulde eke their trouthe alowe
With all his herte.

Gower. Conf. Am. The Prologue.

And every day dame Triamour
Sche come to syr Launfal bour,
A day when hyt was nyght,
Of all that ever wer ther tho
Segh he [she] non but they two,
Gyfre and Launfal the knyght.

Launfal, v. 503. in Ritson, vol. i. p. 191.

Bot yette hir to the chirche-dore,
And on knes she sat adoun,
And seid wepeand her orisoun:
"O Lord, he [she] seyde, Jesu Crist."

Lay Le Freine, v. 161. in Weber, i. 363.

The maiden turned oyain anon,
And tok the waye he [she] hadde er gon.

Id. Ib.

If thou beest he: but O, how fall'n! how chang'd
From him, who, in the happy realms of light,
Cloth'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads though bright!

Milton. Paradise Lost, book i.

He can requite thee; for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.

Id. Sonnet 8.

Ev'n now, she [the Muse] shades thy ev'ning-walk with bays,
(No hireling she, no prostitute to praise,)
Ev'n now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day,
Thro' fortune's cloud one truly great can see,
Nor fears to tell, that Mortimer is he.

Pope. Epistle to the Earl of Oxford.

Nor second he, that rode sublime
Upon the seraph wings of ecstasy,
The secrets of the abyss to spy.
He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and time:
The living throne, the sapphire-blaze,
Where angels tremble while they gaze,
He saw; but blasted with excess of light
Clos'd his eyes in endless night.

Gray. The Progress of Poetry.

HEAD, v.

HEAD, n.

HE'ADED,

HE'ADER,

HE'ADFUL,

HE'ADLESS,

HE'ADLONG,

HE'ADY,

HE'ADINESS,

HE'ADSHIP.

Goth. haubith; A. S. heafod, hoo- fod, heafud, heafd; D. hoofd; Ger. haufet; Sw. hufwud. Junius derives from the Gr. κεφαλή. Wachter derives the Ger. haubt, pars hominis
sublimis, from the verb heben, levare, erigere, tollere in altum. Ihre, the
Sw. hufwud, from haf, high; hæfwa, to raise on high. Tooke; head is heaved, heav'd, the past participle of

HEAD. the verb to heave, (as the A. S. heaf-od was the past participle of heaf-an,) meaning,

That part (of the body, or any thing else) which is heav'd, raised, or lifted up, above the rest. It was anciently written heved. See HEAVE.

It is used emphatically, as being the chief or principal part, for the whole body or person; also, for the contents of the head; sc. the brains, the powers of the mind, the thoughts; consequentially,

The chief or principal person or thing, the leader, guider, director, commander; the leading, guiding, directing, or commanding place or station; the highest place, the first place, forepart, front, height. To head is,

To lead, guide, direct, or command; to make head, to keep head forward, to front or face, to advance. To gather head,

To gather means to make head; force or power to front, or face, or advance. To give head,

To give up the restraint upon the head; to give liberty to advance at speed. To head is also

To behead; i. e. to take off, cut off, strike off, the head. To head up; to put on the head; sc. of a cask or vessel.

Headlong; (anciently also written headling;) head forwards; sc. without care or caution, precipitate; heedless.

Heady, heedless, giddy, precipitate; rash, violent, acting upon the head, causing giddiness, dizziness, stupor.

Head, i. e. chief, principal; is much used in composition.

Corineus was þo somdel wroþ, ys axe on hey he drow
And smot hym vpon þe hed mid god earnest y now,
And for clef al þat hed, & the bodi a non to grounde.

R. Gloucester, p. 17.

Heo sleþ & destruyeh al, þat þer nys noþing bi leued,
Warbi men mow libbe, & al for defaut of heued.

Id. p. 101.

Sebrygt and þe kyng of Kent, þo al þys was y do,
At Londone of Seyn Poul an heued chýrche gonre rere.

Id. p. 232.

I rede we chese a hede, that us to werre kan dight
& to that ilk hede I rede we us býnd
For werre withouten hede is not well, we fynde.

R. Brunne, p. 2.

Ion said, þei suld hedeles hop.

Id. p. 211.

For ich am hefd of lawe
And ge ben bote membris.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 391.

And Jhesus seide to him, foxis han dennes, and briddis of hevene han nestis: but mannes sone hath not where he schal reste his hed.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. viii.

And Jesus said vnto him: the foxes haue holes, and the byrdes of the ayer haue nestes, but the sonne of man hath not where on to rest his hed.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And he seid to hem, go ye; and thei geden out and wenten into the swyn, and lo in a gret bire al the drove wente heedlyng in to the see: and thei weren dede in the watris.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. viii.

And he said vnto them, go your waies: Then went they out, and departed into the heerd of swyne. And beholde the whole heerd of swyne was caried with violence hedlyng into the sea, and peryshed in the water.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And at a stert he was betwix hem two,
And pulled out a swerd and cried, ho!
No more, up peine of lesing of your hed.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1709.

And as he wolde haue passed by,
She cleped hym, and bad him abide,
And he his hors head aside
Tho torned, and to hir he rode.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 16.

Duryng his reygne there was hedyd & put to dethe by jugement vpon xxviii. baronys and knyghtys, ouer ye noble men that were slayne in Scotlande by his infortunyte.

Fabyan. Anno 1326.

Boniface the thyrd of that name bishop of Rome, toke vpon hym to be the head bishop of all the worlde, and God's only vycar in earthe.

Bale. Image, part i. sig. L. 1.

And as for their headnesse, see whether they be not prone, bold and runne headlög vnto al mischief, without pitie & compassion or caryng what misery and destruction should fall on other men, so they may haue their present pleasure fulfilled.

Tyndall. Answer to M. More's first Boke, fol. 290

Here Mercury with equal shining winges
First touched; and with body headling bette [bent]
To the water thend took he his descent.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book iv.

Then the earle began to repent him of his headie rashness, but it was too late.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. fol. 35. Wil. Longespee.

Nor William Duke of Suffolke, who,
Exilde, on seas was met
And, hated, headed.

Warner. Albion's England, book ix. ch. xlv.

They have compelled him to lay his hand upon the helme, for to set all streight and upright againe in security, rejecting in the meane while green headed generals of armies, eloquent oratours also.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 521.

Who, thrusting boldly twixt him and the blow,
The burthen of the deadly brunt did beare
Upon his shield, which lightly he did throw
Over his head, before the harme came neare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 8.

He was ten thousand foot and a thousand horse strong, and had five and thirtie tall ships of war, headed with brasen pikes before.

Holland. Livius, fol. 717.

And this is the onely cause why all the statues and images of him [Pericles] almost, are made with a helmet on his head; because the workmen, as it should seem, (and so it is most likely) were willing to hide the blemish of his deformity. But the Attican Poets did call him Schinocephalos, as much as to say, headed like an onion.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 133. Pericles.

England endured (by God's iust iudgements) many bitter and heauie stormes through some headnesse, ambition, or other sicknesses of minde in the princes thereof.

Speed. Edward II. Anno 1308. book ix. ch. xi. sec. 1.

But Timias him lightly overhent,
Right as he entring was into the flood,
And strooke at him with force so violent,
That headlesse him into the foord he sent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 5.

— This would surpass
Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion, and our joy upraise
In his disturbance; when his darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original, and faded bliss,
Faded so soon.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 375

— The monstrous sight
Strook them with horror backward, but far worse
Urg'd them behind; headlong themselves they threw Down from the verge of heav'n.

Id. Ib. book vi. l. 864.

Now they began much more to take stomacke and indignation, in case that after Tarquinius, the kingdome should not returne to them and their line, but should still run on end, and headlongwise fall into such base varlets.

Holland. Livius, fol. 29.

I can see no ground, why his [Aristotle's] reason should be textuary to ours; or that God, or Nature, euer intended him an universal headship.

Glanvil. Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xv.

HEAD.

HEAD.

Will the ministerial headship infer any more, then that when the church in a community or a public capacity should do any act of ministry ecclesiasticall he shall be first in order?

Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, sec. 7.

The moles may be taken in traps as every woodman knows: it is certain they are driven from their haunts by garlick for a time, and other heady smells buried in their passages.

Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. xxvi. sec. 16.

At this good time now, if your lordship were not here,
To awe their violence with your authority,
They would play such gambols.

Gov. Are they grown so heady?

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Pilgrim, act v.

The other party I headed myself.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 119.

Though if that assertion could be supposed to be true, yet even still 'twould unavoidably follow, that the self-existent being must needs be intelligent; as shall be proved in my fourth argument upon this present head.

Clarke. On the Attributes, p. 52.

True religion requires both a warm heart and a cool head; good service in his function.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 377. Regeneration stated and explained.

And Henry Lord Stafford, to shew his compliance with these times, translated two Epistles of Erasmus, wherein was undertaken to be shown the brain-sick headiness of the Lutherans.

Styrie. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1554.

It is also very necessary for preserving the unity and communion of the parts of the catholic church; seeing single persons are much fitter to maintain correspondence, than headless bodies.

Barrow. Sermon 24. vol. iii.

Here on pois'd pinions stoop'd the panting God;
Then, from the steep, shot headlong to the flood.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book iv.

If there was any found to be in the least tainted, as sometimes happened, it was separated from the rest, which was repacked into another cask, headed up, and filled with good pickle.

Cook. Voyages, vol. iv. book iii. ch. viii.

A reform proposed by an unsupported individual, in the presence of heads of houses, public officers, doctors, and proctors, whose peculiar province, it would have been urged, is to consult for the academic state, would have been deemed even more officious and arrogant than a public appeal.

Knox. Works, vol. iv. p. 256. Liberal Education.

When now Gradasso on the field display'd
The headless trunk of Agramant survey'd,
(What ne'er till then befel) a sudden dread
Benumb'd his veins, his shifting colour fled.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xlii.

What slave so passive, what bigot so blind, what enthusiast so headlong, what politician so hardened, as to stand up in defence of a system calculated for a curse to mankind.

Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

Both ways deceitful is the wine of Power,
When new, 'tis heady, and, when old, 'tis sour.

Harte. The Charitable Mason.

HEAD, in Composition.

I would shee should knowe remedies for such diseases as come often, as the cough, the murre, and gnawing in the bellie, the laske, costifnes, the worme, the headache, &c.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, sig. X. 8.

The Minion was made redie to auoide, and so leeing her hedfasts and hayling away by the sternefasts, she was gotten out.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 524. M. John Hawkins.

From this island, wee set ouer to the other side of the bay, and went Southwest, and fell with an headland called Foxenose, which is from the said island 25 leagues.

Id. Ib. vol. i. fol. 311. M. Anth. Jenkinson.

In y^e meane while y^e wicked priestes, phariseis & headmen of the people, freatted at the mattier, but the simple people easie to be instructed, cried ioifully vpon him.

Udall. Mark, ch. xi.

Your blankettes shall be of fustyane,
Your shetes shall be of clothe of rayne,
Your head-shete shall be of pery pyght,
With dyamondes set, and rubyes bryght.

The Squyr of Lowe Degre, in Ritson, vol. iii. p. 180.

These are the things worthy of relation from the head-springs of this riuier Tlacamama vnto the sea.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 497. The Port of Tecuanaha.

And what is the common welth worth, when the lawe which is indifferent for all men shall be wilfully and spitefully broken of head-strong men.

Sir John Cheke. Hurt of Sedition, sig. C. ii.

Let not a puppet abuse thy sprite, kings' crowns do not help them
From the cruel headach, nor shoes of gold do the gout heal.

Sidney. Arcadia, book i.

Oh how miserable was the estate of our countrie vnder the French and Normans, wherein the British and English that remained, could not be called to any function in the commonwealth, no not so much as to be constables and headburowes in smal vilages, except they could bring 2. or 3. Normans for suerties to the lords of the soile for their good behaiour in their offices!

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, ch. iv.

From the utmost ends of the head-branches [of the Indian fig-tree] there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a chord or sinew, and within a few months reacheth the ground.

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. iv. sec. 2.

That the king should have the head-city of the kingdome, Dublin, with the adjacent cantreds, with all the coast townes and castles.

Speed. Henry II. Anno 1171. book ix. ch. vi. sec. 59.

Oh, monstrous! Why I'll undertake, with a handful of silver, to buy a headful of wit at any time.

Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, act. i. sc. 2.

Sir, shall we sowe the head-land with wheate?

SHAL. With red wheate Dauby.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 96.

Josephus understands Ophir to be one of those great head-lanas in India, which by a general name are called Chersonesi or Peninsulæ.

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. viii. sec. 3.

What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd?

A father, and a gracious aged man,

Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,

Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you madded.

Shakspeare. Lear, act iv. sc. 2.

Sir George Ascough, with nine of his head-most ships, charged through the Dutch fleet, and got the weather-gage of them, and charged them again.

Baker. Charles II. Anno 1652.

For if their [the English] heads had any intellectual armour, they could never weare such heauie head-pieces.

Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 82.

Both armies rendezvous'd on the 24th of May at Blewbury in Berkshire, and kept their head-quarters that night at Abington within five miles of Oxford.

Baker. Charles I. Anno 1644.

That you at such time seeing me, neuer shall
With armes encombred thus, or this head-shake;
Or by pronouncing of some doubtfull phrase;
As well, we know, or we could and if we would.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 258.

CLE. We linger time; the King sent for Philaster and the heads-man an hour ago.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Philaster, act. v.

Come headesman, off with his head.

Shakspeare. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 251.

That see is the headspring of our belief.

Stapleton. Fortr. of the Faith, (1565) fol. 149. b.

Another, that would seeme to have more wit,

Him [the horse] by the bright embrodered hedstall tooke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 3.

This speech all Trojans did applaud; who from their traces losde
Their sweating horse; which severally with headstalls they reposde,
And fastned by their chariots.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book viii. fol. 115.

Such was the furie of these head-strong steeds,
Soon as the infant's sunlike shield they saw,
That all obedience both to words and deeds
They quite forgot, and scorn'd all former law.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 8.

Others seldom hurt themselves any further than to gain weak eyes and sometimes head-aches.

Spectator, No. 54.

HEAD.

HEAD.

Farm'd out all cheats, and went a share
With th' headborough and scavenger.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 3.

It was given out among all the gay people of this place, that on the Tuesday following, several damsels, swift of foot, were to run for a sute of head-clothes at the old wells.

Tatler, No. 36.

This holy man travelled from place to place to preach down this monstrous commode; and succeeded so well in it, that as the magicians sacrificed their books to the flames upon the preaching of an apostle, many of the women threw down their head-dresses in the middle of his sermon, and made a bonfire of them within sight of the pulpit.

Spectator, No. 98.

So when some beauteous dame, a reigning toast,
The flower of Forth, and proud Edina's boast,
Stands at her toilet in her tartan plaid,
In all her richest head-gear trimly clad,
The curious hand-maid, with observant eye,
Corrects the swelling hoop that hangs awry.

Somerville. To Allan Ramsay.

Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry,
Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry.

Prior. Alma, can. 2.

The greater islands, as Hispaniola, Jamaica, and Cuba, have only some particular capes or headlands, expos'd to currents.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. part iii. p. 101. Of Tides and Currents.

The Spaniards came away quartering on us; and our ship being the headmost, the Taro came directly towards us, designing to board us.

Id. Ib. Anno 1667.

Ulysses preferred him [Diomedes] before Ajax, when he chose him for the champion of his nightly expedition; for he had a head-piece of his own; and wanted only the fortitude of another, to bring him off with safety.

Dryden. Dedication to the Æneis.

What are our separatists and purity-pretending schismatics, but the tame brood and successors of the Donatists? only with this difference, that they had their head-quarters in Meridie, in the Southern parts of the world, whereas ours seem to be derived to us from the North.

South. Sermons, vol. vii. p. 296.

For if after the mizan is halld up and furled, if then the ship will not wear, we must do it with some head-sail, which yet sometimes puts us to our shifts.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. vol. ii. p. 364. Of Storms.

And though St. Peter had been head of the apostles, yet as it is not certain that he was ever in Rome, so it does not appear that he had his headship for Rome's sake, or that he left it there; but he was made head for his faith, and not for the dignity of any see.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1534.

He drew the dragging body down with haste,
Then cross a rower's seat the neck he plac'd;
There, awkward, haggling, he divides the bone,
(The headsman's art was then but rudely known.)

Rowe. Lucan, book viii.

Ev'n I their headstrong fury scarce restrain,
When they grow warm and restive to the rein.

Addison. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book ii.

In one instance of expence, however, the modern ladies seem to exceed the ancient, and though there appears an infinite variety of head-dresses upon busts, statues, and medals, yet it is learnedly debated among the antiquaries, whether the Roman ladies were so costly in that point as the English.

Melmoth. Pliny to Calvisius, letter xx. book ii.

Annigait having with these sentiments consoled his grief, and animated his industry, found that they had now coasted the headland and saw the whales spouting at a distance.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 187.

The corporation was to pay the head-master thirty pounds a year, and the usher twenty.

Pennant. London, p. 246.

The carving upon the stern and head ornaments of the inferior boats, which seem to be intended wholly for fishing, consists of the figure of a man, with a face as ugly as can be conceived.

Cook. Voyage, vol. ii. book iii. ch. i.

This and several head-pieces in the same book were designed by Holbein, and probably some of them cut by him; one has his name.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. p. 156.

Mr. Thrale took him to his house at Streatham; and Johnson from that time became a constant resident in that family. He went occasionally to the Club in Gerard Street, but his head-quarters were fixed at Streatham.

Murphy. Life of Johnson.

HEAL, v. or

HELE,

HEAL, n.

HE'ALER,

HE'ALING,

HEALTH,

HE'ALTHFUL,

HE'ALTHFULLY,

HE'ALTHFULNESS,

HE'ALTHLESS,

HE'ALTHLESSNESS,

HE'ALTHSOME,

HE'ALTHY,

HE'ALTHILY,

HE'ALTHINESS.

whole." To heal,

To cover; to be or caused to be whole or sound; to close up, to cure, to recover. See To HILL.

Heal, or hele, is used as a noun by Chaucer, Gower, &c.

þe kyng hoped wel to hym, and lette hym helie faste.

R. Gloucester, p. 151.

This kyng was but of mene stature. his other eye lede hangyd so myche a doun, that hit heled half the blake of his eye.

Id. p. 521, note.

And nom with hym spicery, þat to fysik drow,
And wende hym to Wynchestre quoyntoliche y now,
And seyde þe kynges þat he wold hym to hele brynge.

Id. p. 151.

þo ilk fiue sorowes he calles fiue woundes,
þat ere not git haled, ne salle be many stoundes.

R. Brunne, p. 7.

Menye of þe bryddes
Hudden and heleden. durnelyche here egges
For no foul sholde hem fynde.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 223.

In an hote heruest. wenne ich hadde myn hele.

And lymes to labore with.

Id. Ib. p. 75.

Zut hit [poverty] moder of myȝth. and of mannes helth.

Id. Ib. p. 270.

And Jhesus seide to the centurien go, and as thou hast bileeved so be it doon to thee, and the child was heeled fro that our.

Wiclif. Mattheu, ch. viii.

Then Jesus said vnto the centurion, go thy waye, and as tho beleuest so be it vnto the. And his seruant was healed the selfe houre.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Whethir alle men han grace of heelyngis.

Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xii.

Haue all the gyftes of healynges?

Bible, Anno 1551.

To a nothir grace of heelthis in oo spirit.

Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xii.

Parde we women connen nothing hele,
Witnesse on Mida; wol ye here the tale.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6532.

And fell in speche of Telephus the king,
And of Achilles for his queint spere,
For he coude with it bothe hele and dere.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10554.

And songen with o voice, heale and honour
To trouth of womanhede.

Id. The Legende of Gode Women, fol. 198.

Cupides sonn, ensample of goodlihede
Oswerde of knighthode, sours of gentillesse,
How might a wight in turment and in drede
And healelesse you send, as yet gladnesse.

Id. The fifth Booke of Troilus, fol. 192.

The great clerkes were assent,
And come at his commaundement
To trete vpon this lordes hele.

Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 45.

HEAL.

HEAL.

Y am he that sche gaf the ryng,
For to be oure tokenynge,
Now heyle hyt for the rode.
The Erle of Tolous, l. 1038. In Ritson, vol. iii. p. 136.

But the healinge agayn of this mortal wounde is like to mar all, and make the last errour worse than the first.

Bale. Image, part ii. sig. G. 6.

The egall frend; no grudge, no strife;
No charge of rule, nor governaunce
Without disease, the healthful life;
The household of continuance.

Surrey. The Meanes to attaine Happy Life.

Their dinners be very short; but their suppers be somewhat longer, because that after dinner followeth labour; after supper, sleep and natural rest; which they think to be of more strength and efficacy to wholesome and healthful digestion.

More. Utopia, by Robinson, vol. ii. book ii. ch. v.

And they are suche, as ascrybe al their perfightness, vertue, and godlynes, not vnto their owne workes, nor yet vnto their owne fulfylling of the lawe, wherein they must nedes knowledge themselves gyltye and synful: but all together vnto the merites of the healthsome passion of Christ.

Udall. Reuelacion, ch. viii.

Where when she came, she found the faery knight Departed thence; albee (his woundes wyde
Not throughly heald) unready were to ryde.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 5.

Plantaine is a great healer of any sore whatsoever, but principally of such ulcers as bee in the bodies of women, children, and old folke.

Holland. Plinie, book xxvi. ch. xiv.

To heal, to cover, Sus. Hence in the west, he that covers a house with slates, is called a healer or hellier.

Ray. South and East Country Words.

There Alma, like a virgin queene most bright,
Doth flourish in all beautie excellent;
And to her guesstes doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attempted goodly well for health and for delight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 11.

It was an iland, (hugg'd in Neptune's armes,
As tending it against all forraigne harmes)
And Mona hight: so amiably fayre,
So rich in soyle, so healthfull in her ayre.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 1.

Then as a snake, benumb'd and fit t' expire,
If laid before the comfortable fire
Begins to stir, and feels her vitals beat
Their healthful motion, at the quick'ning heat:
So my poor Muse.

Brome. Answer to the Epistle to C. C. Esq.

We ought, in the choice of a situation, to regard above all things the healthfulness of the place, and the healthfulness of it for the mind, rather than for the body.

Cowley. Essays in Prose and Verse, ess. 8.

If men would imitate the early rising of this bird [the lark], it would conduce much unto their healthfulness.

Fuller. Worthies. Bedfordshire.

And yet after all this, sickness leaves in us appetites so strong, and apprehensions so sensible, and delights so many, and good things in so great a degree, that a healthless body and a sad disease do seldom make men weary of this world, but still they would fain find an excuse to live.

Taylor. Holy Dying, ch. iii. sec. 3.

It [fasting] is the best in many respects, and remains such, unless it be altered by the inconveniences of healthlessness of the person.

Id. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii. rule 8.

And truly as the bodily meate cannot feed the outward man, unlesse it be let into a stomacke to be digested, which is healthsome and sound; no more can the inward man be fed, except his meate be received into his soule, and heart, sound and whole in fayth.

Homilies. Sermon on the Sacrament, part i.

So loathly flye that lives on galled wound,
And scabby festers inwardly unsound,
Feeds fatter with that poys'nous carrion,
Than they that haunt the healthy limbs alone.

Hall. Satire 3. book iii.

But Vane opposed this with much zeal: he said, would they heal the wound that they had given themselves, which weakened them so much? The setting them at quiet could have no other effect, but to heal and unite them in their opposition to their authority.

Burnet. Own Times, vol. i. p. 75. Before the Reformation.

Ah Sylvia! thus in vain you strive
To act a healer's part,
'Twill keep but ling'ring pain alive,
Alas! and break my heart.

Otway. The Complaint.

Oh, fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
The lover and the love of human kind,
Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience clear,
Because he wants a thousand pounds a year.

Pope. Essay on Man, epist. v. l. 191.

In the latter end of the month of July, I find our archbishop at his house at Bokesbourn, near Canterbury, a place of retirement, healthfully and pleasantly seated, which he took a great deal of delight in.

Strype. Life of Parker, Anno 1653.

That learned author, who writ Historiam Naturalem Brasilie, to prove not only the habitableness, but healthfulness, of that climate and country, exhibits the account of every day's weather, observed by him for many years together, and so the agreement of it to that temper which we account healthful.

Boyle. The General History of the Air, vol. v. p. 643.

He [Charles of Sweden] is of a very vigorous and healthy constitution, takes a pleasure in enduring the greatest fatigues, and is little curious about his repose.

Burnet. Own Times. Queen Anne, Anno 1709.

If by his stripes we are healed, we may surely avoid censorious quarrels about the particular manner in which the effect is produced.

Cogan. On the Passions, sect. 2. The Mediatorial Office of Christ.

Among the innumerable follies by which we lay up in our youth repentance and remorse for the succeeding part of our lives, there is scarce any against which warnings are of less efficacy than the neglect of health.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 48.

Begin the song, and let it sweetly flow,
And let it wisely teach thy wholesome laws:
"How blest, the fickle fabric to support
Of mortal man; in healthful body how
A healthful mind the longest to maintain."

Armstrong. Of Preserving Health, book i.

A few cheerful companions in our walks will render them abundantly more healthful: for, according to the ancient adage, they will serve instead of a carriage, or, in other words, prevent the sensation of fatigue.

Knox. Essays, No. 100.

This Pythagoric regimen, though it be generally represented, and even by Jambichus himself, as a superstitious practice, yet, by reason of its healthfulness, he will have to be a course of physic.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 3.

It is but a little while before we shall all, the strongest and healthiest amongst us, certainly be convinced that the best thing we can have done in this world, was to prepare our souls for a better.

Gilpin. Sermon 3. vol. iii.

I must now observe that all these advantages were greatly enhanced by the healthiness of its climate, by the almost constant breezes which prevail there, (Tinian) and by the frequent showers which fall there.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book iii. ch. ii.

HEAP, v. } A. S. heap-ian; Ger. heaff-en; D.
HEAP, n. } hoop-en; which Junius derives from HE'APING, } the A. S. heaf-an, and Wachter from HE'APV. } the Ger. heb-en, to heave or raise up.

To throw up, to lay up, in heaps, or raised and elevated masses; to accumulate, to pile.

An hep of eremites. henten hem spades.

Piers Ploughman. Vision, p. 137.

Now is not that of God a ful fayre grace,
That swiche a lewed mannes wit shall pace
The wisdom of an hepe of lered men?

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 577.

Fortune heaped together that one day the chaunces of a whole world.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 100

HEAP. And so all these gentylmen strangers with them of the country assembled togyder, and dyde sette on these people wher they might fynde the, and slewe and hanged them vpon trees by heapes.
 HEAR. Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, ch. 183.

And thou beeing fallen in despayre of thy selfe, doest thou neither addresse to hang thyself as Judas did, or els art thou an heaper of sinnes vpon sinnes.
 Udall. Luke, ch. xxiii.

That geauntesse Argantè is behight,
 A daughter of the Titans which did make Warre against Heven, and heaped hils on hight
 To scale the skyes and put Jove from his right.
 Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 7.

The lists were closed fast, to barre the rout
 From rudely pressing on the middle center;
 Which in great heapes them circled all about,
 Wayting how fortune would resolve that dangerous dout.
 Id. Ib. book v. can. 5.

Sandius has gone yet much farther; labouring to heap up all the scandal that was possible against this councill.

Nelson. Life of Bull.

I have seen two volumes in folio, written with his own hand (Cranmer), containing, upon all the heads of religion, a vast heap both of places of scripture, and quotations out of ancient fathers, and later doctours and schoolmen.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1534.

THYR. With heapy fires our cheerful hearth is crown'd;
 And firs for torches in the woods abound.

Dryden. Pastoral 7.

Where'er the weaker banks opprest retreat,
 And sink beneath the heapy waters' weight,
 Forth gushing at the breach, they burst their way,
 And wasteful o'er the drowned country stray.
 Rowe. Lucan, book vi.

The whole performance is not so much a regular fabrick, as a heap of shining materials thrown together by accident, which strikes rather with the solemn magnificence of a stupendous ruin, than the elegant grandeur of a finished pile.

Johnson. The Life of Savage.

In the text to God does particularly signify, to trust and rely upon his providence for our life and support, in opposition to relying on treasures of our own heaping up, or large barns of our own building and filling.

Sherlock. Discourse 29. vol. i.

HEAR, v. } The verb to hear (differing from the HE'ARER, } noun ear, only in the aspirate) is, in the HE'ARING, } Goth. haus-jæn; A. S. hyr-an; Ger.
 HE'ARSAY. } horen; D. hoor-en; Sw. hoera; Fr. ouir;
 Sp. oyr; It. udire; and Lat. audire. See EAR.

To have or receive feelings or sensations by the ear;
 to feel or be sensible of sounds; to use the ear, to hearken, to listen, to attend to sounds made, to what is spoken.

To hear ill or well, (B. Jonson,) like the Latin malè aut benè audire, and the Gr. εὖ, ἢ κακῶς ἀκούειν, to hear a good or ill character of themselves, to have a good or bad character, to be well or ill spoken of.

To hym he wende hastelyche, and by þe wey ȝwys
 He hurde angles syng an heȝ by the lyste þys:
 "þe kyng Edred nou aslepe in oure Louerd ys."
 R. Gloucester, p. 279.

He brouht þe kyng Anlaf arȝued vp in Humbere,
 Seuen hundreth schippes & fiftene, so fele were þe numbere.
 Athelstan herd say of þer mykelle oste,
 He & Edmunde his broþer dight þam to þat coste.
 R. Brunne, p. 31.

Reuthe hit is to huyre.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 261.

And we witen that God herith not synful men: but if ony be a worschipere of God, and doith his wille, he herith him.

Wiclif. John, ch. ix.

For we be sure that God heareth not synners. But yf any man be a worshipper of God and do his wyl, him heareth he.

Bible, Anno 1551.

For if ony man is an heerer of the word, and not a doer, this schal be lickened to a man that biholdeth the cheer of his birthe in a myrrour.
 Wiclif. James, ch. i.

And treuli thei schulen turne awei the heeryng fro treuthe, but to fablis thei schulen turne.
 Id. 2 Timothy, ch. iv.

And with that word we riden forth our way;
 And he began with right a mery chere
 His tale anon, and saide as ye shul here.
 Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 860.

And yet he geueth almesse,
 And fasteth ofte, an hereth messe.
 Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 12.

They by a vertue inexplicable, do drawe vpon them the myndes and consent of the herers, being therewith eyther persuaded, meued, or to delectation induced.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book i. ch. xiii.

JOHN. I will lay oddes, that ere this yeare expire,
 We beare our ciuill swords, and natue fire
 As farre as France. I heare a bird so sing,
 Whose musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the king.
 Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 100.

Hence is it, that I now render my selfe gratefull, and am studious to justifie the bounty of your act: to which, though your mere authority were satisfying, yet, it being an age, wherein poetry, and the professors of it, heare so ill, on all sides, there will a reason be lookt for in the subject.
 Ben Jonson. The Fox. Dedication.

They are these make mee heare so ill, both in towne and countrey, as I doe; which, if they continue, I shall be the first shall leave 'hem.
 Id. Masques. Love restored.

It is enough that I in silence sit,
 And bend my skill to learne your layes aright;
 Nor strive with you in ready straines of wit,
 Nor move my hearers with so true delight.
 Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 3.

It hath been anciently held, and observed, that the sense of hearing, and the kinds of musick, have most operation upon manners: as to encourage men, and make them warlike; to make them soft and effe-minate; to make them grave; to make them light; to make them gentle and inclin'd to pity, &c. The cause is, for that the sense of hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses.

Bacon. Natural History, sec. 114.

We may note heere, that a preacher may speake by hearesay; as St. Paul doth here. I speake unto you since I came into this country by hearesay. For I heard say that there were some homely theeves, some pickers in this worshipful house.

Latimer. Sermon on the Gospel on St. Andrewe's Day, fol. 243.

Hear, all ye Trojans, all ye Grecian bands!
 What Paris, author of the war, demaunds.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book iii.

In a word, the apostle's preaching was therefore mighty and successful, because plain, natural, and familiar, and by no means above the capacity of their hearers; nothing being more preposterous, than for those, who were professedly aiming at men's hearts, to miss the mark by shooting over their heads.

South. Sermons, vol. v. p. 436.

Who can assure himself or any one else, upon his own personal sight, hearing, or the report of any other of his senses, that the whole matter of a dissolved body passes successively into other living bodies?

Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 247.

He [Thomas] would not (it seems) take a miracle upon hearsay, nor resolve his creed into report, nor in a word see with any eyes but his own.

Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 158.

The eye is not that which sees; it is only the organ by which we see. The ear is not that which hears; but the organ by which we hear; and so of the rest.

Reid. Of the Organs of Sense, essay 2. ch. i.

But Oronthea, with a mother's love,
 Reply'd, and, every hearer's mind to move,
 Such reasons urg'd, that most, with one consent,
 Their suffrage yielded for the queen's content.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xx. l. 402.

In some cases, (as in proof of any general customs, or matters of common tradition or repute) the courts admit of hearsay evidence, or an account of what persons deceased have declared in their life-time.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iii. ch. xxiii.

HEAR.

HEARK-EN.

HEARSE.

HE'ARKEN, } See HARK. A. S. heorcnian; D.
HE'ARKENER. } harcken, horcken, auscultare, to give ear to.
To hear, to give or lend ear, to listen (sc.) to sounds,
 to words spoken.

Ful litel wote Arcite of his felaw,
 That was so neigh to herken of his saw,
 For in the bush he sitteth now ful still.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1528.

My good sonne it shall be do
 Now herken and lay an eare to.
Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 27.

And Moses told the children of Israel euen so: but they herkned not vnto Moses, for anguyshe of sprete and for cruell bondage.
Bible, Anno 1551. Exodus, ch. vi.

Now they are not onely ydle, but also babling tale-tellers & curious herkeners. Udall. Timothy, ch. v.

Almyghte God that made mankyn,
 He schilde his servandes out of syn,
 And maynteyne tham, with might and mayne,
 That herkens Ywayne and Gawayne.
Ritson. Metrical Romances, vol. i. p. 1. Ywayne and Gawin.

Thence, forth she past into his dreadfull den,
 Where nought but darksome dreriness she found,
 Ne creature saw, but harkned now and then
 Some little whispering and soft groning sound.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 7.

A prince when wrong'd should not vile traitours wooe,
 But when entreated (hearkning to their cares)
 Is (if he graunt of grace that they may live)
 Milde if he doe forgive, just not to give.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The sixth Houre.

CLE. Yes, why thou art a stranger, it seemes, to his best trick, yet
 He has imployd a fellow this halfe yere, all over England, to harken him out a dumbe woman.

Ben Jonson. The Silent Woman, act i. sc. 2.

SUR. Must I needs cheat my selfe,
 With that same foolish vice of honestie?
 Come let us goe, and harken out the rogues.
Id. The Alchemist, act v. sc. 5.

But here she comes; I fairly step aside
 And hearken, if I may, her business.
Milton. Comus, l. 168.

Being by custom captivated and enslaved to sin, they are resolved beforehand not to hearken to any thing, that will oblige them to forsake their accustomed vices.

Clarke. Sermon 8. vol. viii.

We should contemplate with care every dispensation of providence, that may warn us against so fatal a mistake, (seeking our happiness where God hath not placed it) and hearken diligently to the voice, which God hath appointed that every thing on earth shall cry aloud to us: Arise ye, and depart: for this is not your rest.

Secker. Sermon 3. vol. v.

HEARSE, v. } Hearse, in Tooke's opinion, is HEARSE, n. } the past participle of the A. S.
HE'ARSE-CLOTH, } verb hyrstan, ornare, phalerare, HE'ARSELIKE. } decorare. At present only applied
 to

"An ornamented carriage for a corpse," formerly, as Minshew says, a monument or emptie tombe erected or set up at the moneth's or yeere's end, for the honourable HEARSE memorie of the dead. Cockeram and Bullokar call it, a burial coffin, covered with black. To hearse,

 To lay, to bury, in a hearse.

Adowne I fel, whan I say the herse,
 Dead as a stone.
Chaucer. How Pitie is Dead, fol. 249.

What should I more hereof reherse
 Comen within, come see her herse,
 Where ye shall see the piteous sight
 That euer yet was shewed to knight.
Id. Dreame, fol. 363.

For whome, Phraortes made a royal herse, & dyd exequies after the maner of Prynces.
Arthur Goldyng. Justine, book xxxviii. fol. 149.

Oh, answer me,
 Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
 Why thy canoniz'd bones hearsed in death,
 Haue burst their cerements.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 257.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the iewels in her eare; would she were hearsed at my foote, and the duckets in her coffin.
Id. Merchant of Venice, fol. 173.

The house is hers'd about with a black wood,
 Which nods with many a heavy headed tree:
 Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good.
Crashaw. Steps to the Temple.

When she with flowres lord Arnold's grave shall strew,
 And hears why Hugo's life was thrown away,
 She on that rival's hearse will drop a few;
 Which merits all that April gives to May.
Davenant. Gondibert, book i. can. 5.

And some flowers, and some bays,
 For thy herse, to strow the ways,
 Sent thee from the banks of Came,
 Devoted to thy virtuous name.
Milton. Epistle on the Marchioness of Winchester.

Or were you enamoured on his copper rings?
 His saffron jewell, with the toad-stone in't?
 Or his imbroydered sute, with the cope-stitch,
 Made of a herse-cloth?
Ben Jonson. The Fox, act ii. sc. 5.

Yet, even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harpe, you shall heare as many herselike ayres, as carols.
Bacon. Essay 5. On Adversitie.

Oh! might I paint him in Miltonian verse,
 With strains like those he sung on Glo'ster's herse;
 But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
 And wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme.
Smith. To the Memory of Mr. John Philips.

There was an herse after the fashion of Spain, with black, and a goodly mass of requiem; the chapel wherein he was enterred hung with black, with a banner of arms, and coat of arms, all in gold; a target and an helmet, and many escutchions, and a fair herse-cloth of black, and a cross of crimson velvet down to the ground.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1554.
 Worth may be hearsed but Envy cannot die.
Churchill. Epistle to Hogarth.

A dream is nothing without the completion: Lodge died at Leeds;
 but as the herse passed by Harwood, the carriage broke, the coffin was damaged, and the dream happily fulfilled, the corpse being interred in the choir there, August 27, 1689.

Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v. p. 101.

H E A R T.

HEART.

HEART, v.

HEART, n.

HE'ARTEN,

HE'ARTENER,

HE'ARTLESS,

HE'ARTEDNESS,

HE'ARTY,

HE'ARTILY,

HE'ARTINESS,

HE'ARTIST.

Goth. hairto; A. S. heorte; Ger. herz; D. hert. Sw. hierta. Stiernhelmus (says Wachter) deduces all from the Swedish verb hyra, (or horra, or huera,) movere, to move; (to hurry;) on account of the perpetual motion and agitation of the heart. Wachter adds, that he finds no such root apud Saxones et Francos. See Wachter in vv. herz, and horen, agere. Junius tells us,—some think that heart is derived from herd, i. e. hard, durus, because we owe the duration of life to the continued motion of the heart. Wachter remarks, that the Gr. ἡτορ, and the A. S. heorte, are by metathesis interchangeable. Heart, the noun, is applied to

The seat or source of the passions, feelings, thoughts, affections; to these themselves; to the being in whom they exist; to the vital part;—vitality, life, spirit, courage, strength; to the central, or chief, or principal part; the seat or source of good and ill. To heart, or hearten, is To encourage, to animate, to invigorate; to give or add life, spirit, courage, strength.

Hearted; seated, deeply fixed, stored, treasured in the heart.

Heart is much used in composition.

Kyng Locryne's herte was al clene vp hire y went,
And tok hire forþ with hym mid gret honour y nowȝ,
And þogte hire to spouse, so ys herte to hire droȝ.

R. Gloucester, p. 24.

Ac þ' love and leautte ys. hit lykeþ nat here hertes.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 65.

He is lowe as a lombe. and loveliche of speche

And helpeth herteliche. alle men of þat he may aspare.

Id. Ib. p. 170.

Ye generacioun of eddis: hou moun ye speke gode thingis whanne ye ben yeve? for the mouth spekith of plente of the herte.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xii.

O generaciō of vipers, how can you say well, when ye your selues are euel? For of the aboudaunce of y^e hert, the mouth speaketh.

Bible, Anno 1551.

For many a man so hard is of herte,

He may not wepe although him sore smerte.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 229.

Avoy [quod she] fy on you herteles.

Id. The Nonnes Prestes Tale, v. 14914.

Ey maister, welcome be ye by Seint John,
Sayde this wif, how fare ye hertily?

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7383.

For nowe a daie is many one,
Which speketh of Peter and of John,
And thynketh Judas in his herte.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 12.

Lo what might any man deuise
A woman shewe in any wise,
More hertely loue in any stede,
Than Media to Jason dede?

Id. Ib. book v. fol. 106.

To whom (although he were a childe) he gaue both pleasaunt and faire wordes, with hartie thankes, and many gratificacions, to the great admiration of the Frenche people.

Hall. King Henry VI. fol. 119. The tenth Yere.

So am I he, that among other his graces faithful subiectes, his highnes being in possession of his mariage, wil most hartely pray for y^e prosperous estate of his grace, longe to continue to the pleasure of God.

Sir Thomas More. Workes, fol. 1426. Letter to Mayster Thomas Cromwell.

VOL. XXIII.

And this speaking did ferthermore also declare the lustie freashnes & hertinesse of spirit in him.

Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

I haue told thee often, and I retell thee againe, and againe, I hate the Moore. My cause is hearted, thine hath no lesse reason.

Shakspeare. Othello, fol. 315.

Arise blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell
Yield vp (O Loue) thy crowne, and hearted throne
To tyrannous Hate.

Id. Ib. fol. 326.

Gov. Down with him low enough, there let him murmur,
And see his diet be so light and little,
He grow not thus high hearted on't.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Island Princess, act ii.

Ye gentle ladies, in whose souveraine powre
Love hath the glory of his kingdome left,
And th' hearts of men, as your eternall dowre,
In yron chaines, of liberty bereft,
Delivered hath unto your hands by gift.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 8.

Rise therefore with all speed and come along,
Where I shall see thee heartn'd and fresh clad
To appear as fits before th' illustrious lords.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1317.

Till, seeing them through suffrance hartned more,
Himselfe he bent their furies to abate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 10.

But as a coward's hart'ner in warre,
The stirring drumme, keepes lesser noise from farre,
So seeme the murmuring waves tell in mine eare,
That guiltlesse blood was never spilled there.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song 1.

Is there
Ever a good heartist, or a member-percer, or a Small-gut man left in the town, answer Me that?

Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Pilgrimage, act iv.

I wont to raunge amid the maziethicket,
And gather nuttes to make my Christmas-game,
And ioyed oft to chace the trembling pricket,
Or hunt the hartlesse hare till she were tame.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. December.

If euer man for heartie loue
Deserued honest meede,
Erickmon might beleuee himselfe
To be belou'd indeede.

Warner. Albion's England, book vii. ch. xxxvi.

Where leisurely doffing a hat worth a tester,
He bade me most heartily welcome to Chester.

Cotton. Voyage to Ireland, can. 2.

An authority enabling princes to put them to death who are accused of accidental and consecutive blasphemy and idolatry respectively, which yet they hate and disavow, with much zeal and hearti- ness of perswasion.

Taylor. Liberty of Prophecyng, sec. 20.

Cromwell having acquainted the king with his danger, protesting to him, that it was not in his power to undertake for his security in the place where he was, assuring him of his real service, and desiring the Lord to deal with him and his according to the sincerity of his heart towards the king, prepared himself to act his part at the general rendezvous.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 185.

Nothing exposes men more to the wrath and vengeance of God, nor provokes him more to leave a people to their own counsels, than false heartedness in religion and hypocrisie do.

Stillfleet. Sermon 4. vol. ii.

Thus hearten'd well, and flesh'd upon his prey
The youth may prove a man another day.

Dryden. Prologue to Circe, by Dr. Davenant, 1675.

Can you live without any sense or feeling that you have need of communion with God? and satisfy yourselves, if now and then you put up a few cold, formal, heartless prayers to him?

Sharp. Sermons, vol. vi. p. 106.

Z

HEART.

Though the saving of our souls be the great business of life, and what, it is to be hoped, we have most of us a real and heartly concern for in our secret retirements; yet it must, I am afraid, be owned, that there is too little mention made of it, even when it might be proper; and too general a silence and reserve about it.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 420. A Sermon preached before the Sons of the Clergy.

Now let no man think that he has prayed heartily against any sin, who does not do all that he can, who does not use his utmost diligence, nay, his best art and skill, to undermine and weaken his inclination to that sin. South. Sermons, vol. viii. p. 362.

Upon the prince's [of Orange] coming, the king, in a very obliging way, said to him; "Nephew, it is not good for man to be alone, I will give you a help meet for you." And so he told him he would bestow his niece on him, and the duke, [of York] with a seeming heartiness, gave his consent in very obliging terms.

Burnet. Own Times. Charles II. Anno 1677.

Where, after all the heart-burnings and blood-sheddings occasioned by religious wars; where is the true church of Christ, but in the hearts of good men; the hearts of merciful believers, who from principle, in obedience to and for the love of Christ, as well as from sympathy, labour for peace, go about doing good, consulting, without local prejudice, the happiness of men, and instead of confining their good offices to a small part, endeavour to pour oil into the wounds of suffering human nature. Knox. Antipolemus. Preface.

I may be unable to lend an helping hand to those who direct the state: but I should be ashamed to make myself one of the noisy multitude to halloo and hearten them into doubtful and dangerous courses. Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Scarce had the tortur'd ear dejected heard
Rome's loud anathema, but heartless, dead
To every purpose, men nor wish'd to live,
Nor dar'd to die.

Shenstone. The Ruined Abbey.

The labourer and mechanic chant over their daily toil; and though they pause only to wipe the sweat from off their brow, return to their work, after a short but heartly meal; or sweet slumbers on a bed of straw, not only without a murmur, but with alacrity.

Knox. Christian Philosophy, sec. 58.

But, it may be, you have doubts about religion: and therefore you do not set heartily to practise it: seek for information properly then, and hearken to it fairly. Secker. Sermon 17. vol. ii.

Deign to receive the nation's public voice,
Of heartiness unfeign'd, who gleeful stand
In meet array, and thus express their joys
In peals of loud acclaim, and mirth's confused noise.

Thompson. Epithalamium on the Royal Nuptials.

HEART, in Composition.

The sleer of himself yet saw I there,
His herte-blood hath bathed all his here.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2008.

I thought mete to forewarne you hereof, that when these discommodities falleth upon you, ye may the more pacientely and with lesse hert-breaking beare them. Udall. John, ch. xvi.

It is also good for him that is hart-burned, and hathe moche spittel. Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iii. ch. iv. fol. 55.

And that veray poynt was euen now already a great hert-burning to the Phariseis, that Jesus vtterly refusing them, tooke vnto him publicanes. Udall. Luke, ch. v.

Theis twayne were at continual debate among them selues, whyche of them should be preferred before other, and at all times striued with great conteneion and hart-burning whyche of them should be placed hyghest.

Arthur Goldyng. Caesar. Commentaries, book v. fol. 135.

So than as often as any earnest occasion pricketh him, immediately dooeth that same semblaunce and shew of cloked holinesse vanishe quite away, and than dooeth it vtter it self, that laie vp hidden afore in the botome of the heart-strings. Udall. Luke, ch. vi.

By a sleepe, to say we end
The heart-ake, and the thousand naturall shockes
That flesh is heyre too? 'Tis a consummation
Deuoutly to be wish'd.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 265.

Oh deep despair! O heart-appalling grief!
When that doth woe increase should bring relief.

Drummond. Daphnis.

It shall then be upbraided to them by the Judge, that himself was hungry, and they refused to give meat to him that gave them his body and heart-bloud to feed them and quench their thirst. HEART.

Taylor. Sermon 2. part i.

And th' heart-bred lustre of his worth
At each corner peeping forth
Pointed him out in all his ways,
Circl'd round in his own rays.

Crashaw. Mr. Herrys. His Epitaph.

But 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, then a great deale of heart-breake.

Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, fol. 59.

Enforced hee was to put her away; and foorthwith to wed Julia, the daughter of Augustus: not without much griefe and heart-breake. Holland. Suetonius, fol. 91. Tiberius Nero.

We observe the threnes and sad accents of the prophet Jeremy, when he wept for the sins of his nation; the heart-breakings of David, when he mourned for his adultery and-murthier; and the bitter tears of St. Peter, when he washed off the guilt and baseness of his fall, and the denying his Master.

Taylor. Sermon 5. part ii.

For what greater heart-breaking and confusion can there bee to the one, then to haue all their secret faults layd open, and the sentence of condemnation passed vpon them in the presence of them whom they derided and vilified.

Hakewill. Apologie, book iv. ch. xiv.

BEATRICE. How tartly that gentleman lookes, I neuer can see him, but I am heart-burn'd an houre after.

Shakspeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, fol. 104.

Besides, there were inveterate grudges and heart-burnings betwixt the Netherlanders and the French.

Camden. Elizabeth, Anno 1575.

On th' other side on one consort there sate
Cruell Revenge, and rancorous Despight,
Disloyall Treason, and hart-burning Hate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 7.

We must beware also of the slanderer's mouth and backbiter's tongue, whose lying reports and malicious tales, if they get in, would sow in thine heart the seeds of heart-burning spight and mental murthier, which in that sinfull soil will fructifie very rankly.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture, book i. disc. 33.

Two from th' heart-city bend their silent pace.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 2.

Bid her that heart-confounding reason tell,
Why looks so sweet such cruel wiles disguise;
Why in a cherub's lips deceit should dwell,
Or murd'ring lightning flash from angel's eyes.

Id. Piscatory Eclogues, ecl. 3.

Fair day to her seems nothing but a mist
Through which no hopes can dawn on her desire:
Still night, which to all others sealeth rest,
Wakes and alarms her heart-consuming fire.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 1. st. 218.

The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it, then now,
When your owne Percy, when my heart-deere
Threw many a northward looke, to see his father Harry Bring vp his powres; but he did long in vaine.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 81.

Who mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
Begins to talk.

Id. Rape of Lucrece.

They live solitary, alone, sequestred from all company, but heart-eating melancholy.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 153.

In such disquiet and heart-fretting payne
He all that night, that too long night, did passe.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 5.

But Radigund, full of heart-gnawing griefe
For the rebuke which she sustain'd that day,
Could take no rest, ne would receive reliefe.

Id. Ib. book v. can. 4.

HEART. For it was a violent example and a mightie motiue to the people to maligne the Jewes; as also a heart-greefe to them in respect of their reiection, when the prince gave them so discourteous a repulse.
Holinshed. England. Richard I. Anno 1189.

Whilst yet this deep heart-goring wound is green.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, book i.

My (sometime) Generall,
I haue seene thee sterne, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardning spectacles.
Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 20.

By so much the more shall I to morrow be at the height of heart-heauinesse, by how much I shall thinke my brother happie, in hauing what he wishes for.
Id. As you like it, fol. 204.

From whence in most delicious drops did fall
Down to the floor heart-melting tears.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 3. st. 42.

Fly, O Pyrochles, fly the dreadful warre
That in thyselfe thy lesser partes do move;
Outrageous Anger, and wee-working Jarre,
Direfull Impatience, and heart-murdring Love.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 5.

And for my selfe, foe as he was to me,
Might liquid teares or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-consuming sighes recall his life;
I would be blind with weeping, sicke with grones.
Shakspeare. Henry VI. Second Part, fol. 133.

This great heart-quaking dolour wail and mourn,
Ye that long since him saw by might of faith,
Ye now that are, and ye yet to be born.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son upon you smile.
Spenser.

Heart-rending grief did pull
Her from herselfe, and she abandon'd all
To cryes and teares, fruits of a funerall.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song 1.

Drawne with the powre of an heart-robbing eye,
And wrapt in fetters of a golden tresse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 8.

MIR. It shall be heart's-ease, Eustace, ere I have done.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Elder Brother, act v.

Alexander hasteth to their succour, and presents himself with thirty thousand foot, all old soldiers, and three thousand horse, before the city, and gave the inhabitants some days to resolve, being even heart-sick with the desire of passing into Asia.

Raleigh. History of the World, book iv. ch. ii. sec. 1.

Turning upon her heart-side, which, with vehement panting, did summon her to consider her fortune, she thus bemoaned herself.
Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

VAL. To be in loue; where scorne is bought with grones:
Coy looks, with heart-sore sighes: one fading moment's mirth,
With twenty watchfull, weary, tedious nights.
Shakspeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, fol. 20.

Wherever he that godly knight may find
His only heart-sore and his only foe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene.

BUC. You clowdy-princes, and heart-sorowing peeres,
That beare this heauie mutuall loade of moane,
Now cheere each other, in each other's loue.
Shakspeare. Richard III. fol. 184.

These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.
Id. Rape of Lucrece.

Both Telephus
And Peleus, if they seeke to heart-strike us
That are spectators, with their miserie,
When they are poore, and banish'd, must throw by
Their bombard-phrase, and foot and halfe-foot words.
Ben Jonson. Horace, Art of Poetrie.

KENT. But who is with him?
GENT. None but the foole, who labours to out-iest
His heart-strook iniuries.
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 296.

HEART. He added not, for Adam at the news
Heart-strook with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 264.

I sing of deadly dolorous debate,
Stirr'd up through wrathfull Nemesis despight,
Betwixt two mighty ones of great estate,
Drawne into armes, and prooue of mortall fight,
Through proud ambition and heart-swelling hate.
Spenser. Muipotmos.

Is thy honour wrong'd? Forgive, and it is vindicated. Ay, but this kind of heart-swelling can brook no poultice but revenge! Take heed, my soul; the remedy is worse than the disease.
Quarles. Judgment and Mercy. Revengeful Man.

He smote his courser in the trembling flank,
And to him threatned his heart-thrilling speare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 3.

And there did him the heart-trew king
Most kindly intertayne,
And thence dismiss with gifts, when he
No longer would remayne.
Warner. Albion's England, book xi. ch. lxxviii.

It may be said of him that Cupid hath clapt him o'th' shoulder, but Ile warrant him heart-hole.
Shakspeare. As you like it, fol. 200.

Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;
When he most burnt in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.
Id. A Lover's Complaint.

Vein-healing veruen, and head-purging dill
Sound savory, and basil heartly-hale.
Spenser. Faerie Queene.

They want the care of man, their want they know,
And dress to please with heart-alluring show.
Parnell. The Rise of Women.

Our most gracious Saviour, for our sake, hath voluntarily sustained most bitter pains, and shameful contumelies; having sacrificed his dearest heart-blood to redeem us from intolerable slaveries, and from extremities of horrible misery.

South. Sermon 3. vol. iii.

Can he [a sinner] take any satisfaction from the cringes of the people, or the compliments of his friends, when his mind is ruffled with a great many secret and almost heart-breaking disappointments.
Sharp. Works, vol. vi. Sermon 3.

Whilst men will forsake the merits of the cause, and unmanly fall to railing and disparaging men's persons, and scraping together all the ill that can be said of them, they blow the coals of contention, they so imbitter and envenom the dispute, that it rankles into incurable disasters and heart-burnings.
Id. Ib. vol. i. Sermon 11.

Heart-bury'd in the rubbish of the world!
Young. The Complaint. Night 2.

None ever yet did, or ever shall, go to heaven, whom God does not vouchsafe these heart-changing impressions of his Spirit more or less to.
South. Sermons, vol. vi. p. 287.

O'er the pale corse we saw him gently bend;
Heart-chill'd with grief.
Shenstone. Elegy 15.

Yet let not grief and heart-consuming care
Prey on your soul; but let your constant mind
Bear up with strength and manly hardiness.
Edward. Sonnet 38. Canons of Criticism.

To have a large task enjoyned, and but a poor pittance of time to discharge it in, to have a large tale of brick required, and a small allowance to prepare it with, cannot but be a great heart-discouraging disadvantage.
South. Sermons, vol. vii. p. 322.

Proudly prefer them to the servile pomps,
And to the heart-embitter'd joys of slaves.
Thomson. Liberty, part iv.

Adieu! the heart-expanding bowl,
And all the kind deceivers of the soul.
Pope. Horace, book iv. ode 1.
z 2

HEART.

When in large bowls fair boys produce
The heart-exhilarating juice,
Then all our sorrows are resign'd,
They fly, and mingle with the wind.
Fawkes. Odes of Anacreon, ode 41. line 12.

If I solicit still in vain the sky,
Nor power, nor all the wealth this globe contains,
Can never mitigate my heartfelt pains.
Grainger. Elegies of Tibullus, book iii. elegy 3.

Of the violet, daisy, and rose,
The heart's-ease, the lily, and pink,
Did my fingers a garland compose,
And crown'd by the rivulet's brink.
Rowe. Reply to Colin's Complaint.

When from the highest angel, to the lowest saint, they are all so tied together by the heart-strings, that every one is every one's dear friend, what inexpressible content and complacency must they needs take in one another!

Scott. Christian Life, part i. ch. iii.

There through the pensive dusk
Strays in heart-thrilling meditation lost
Indulging all to love. Thomson. Spring.

Then he turns every tale, and applies it with art,
But constant and heart-whole young Gyges appears,
And deafer than rocks the tale-teller hears.
Francis. Horace. Ode 7.

We are to remember that I shew at first that the subjects of these excessive heart-wounding troubles were both the elect and the reprobate, both the godly and the wicked.

South. Sermons, vol. ix. p. 30.

Thrice happy Collinet, who can relieve Heart-anguish sore, and make it sweet to grieve!
Philips. Pastoral 4.

Fill my eyes with heart-felt tears,
Fill my breast with heart-born fears,
Half-utter'd vows and half suppress'd,
Part look'd and only wish'd the rest.
Hamilton. Ode 1.

The Helots of Laconia, the Regardants to the Manor in Russia and in Poland, even the Negroes in the West Indies, know nothing of so scorching, so penetrating, so heart-breaking a slavery.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

Be grief my share;
But, if your Heav'n has mercy, pour it there
On yon heart-broken king, on yon distracted fair.
Whitehead. Alys and Andrastus.

I was truly happy to find one good effect of our civil distractions, that they had put an end to all religious strife and heart-burning in our own bowels.

Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

These are the themes of simple, sure effect,
That add new conquests to the boundless reign
And fill with double force her heart-commanding strain.
Collins. An Ode to Mr. John Home.

But what shall we say of the multitude of all ranks constantly engaged in pleasure pursuits, or in anxious, heart-corroding quest of gain and advancement in life?
Knox. Works, vol. vii. p. 478. Considerations on the Lord's Supper.

But Celia scorn'd the plaintive moan,
And heart-dissolving show'r;
With flashing eye, and angry tone
She best maintain'd her power.
Jago. Female Empire.

Methinks the train
Of fair Euphrosyne, heart-easing smiles,
Hope, and her brother Love, and young Delight,
Come to invite me to ambrosial feasts.
Cooper. The Power of Harmony, book ii.

And, whilst the Theban bard to thee
Shall yield the heart-elating lyre,
Horace shall hear attentively
Thy finger touch his softer wire
To more familiar harmony.

Cooper. The Call of Aristippus. Epist. 4.

Let it not, however, be supposed that any thing here said is meant to depreciate that most heavenly virtue, charity, or to rob those that exercise it of that fair fame, that heartfelt satisfaction, and those glorious rewards hereafter, which, through the merits of their Redeemer, cannot fail to recompense their generous labours.

Porteus. Sermon 6, vol. ii.

Source undiminish'd of all chearing light
Of roseate beauty, and heart-glad'ning joy.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book iii. l. 211.

Whence he [Pythagoras] learnt
From that celestial number [the number of the planets] how to form
The lyre heart-melting, and the vocal shell.

Cooper. The Power of Harmony, book i.

Then turning towards the knight, with scoffings lewd,
Heart-piercing insults, and revilings sore,
Loud bursts of laughter vain, and hisses rude,
As through the throng he pass'd, his parting steps pursued.
West. Education.

Me, heart-rejoicing goddess, lead
To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
Warton. Odes. On the Approach of Summer.

It branches considerably, with large heart-shaped leaves, and jointed stalks.

Cook. Voyage, vol. v. book ii. ch. viii.

In vain, a friend his mind disturbs,
In vain a childish trouble gives,
When sage physicians to the couch,
Of heart-sick love-lorn wight, he brings.

Jones. An Ode of Jami, (in the Persian form and measure.)

Every man, who has been placed in a situation to observe it, is surprised with the change which has been wrought in himself, when he compares the view which he entertains of death upon a sick-bed with the heart-sinking dismay with which he should some time ago have met it in health.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xxvi. The Goodness of the Deity.

Ah! Muse, forbear that last sad scene to draw,
This homage, due to virtue, let me pay,
These heart-sprung tears, inspir'd by filial awe,
These numbers warbled to the silver Cray.

Fawkes. Aurelius. An Elegy.

But there is one loss, which I confess is almost too grievous to be borne with patience; I mean the loss of those we love, the loss of children, dear relatives, or any others closely allied by friendship or consanguinity. It is a separation which rends the heart-strings.

Knox. Works, vol. vi. p. 20. Hope in God.

To try the heart-subduing strains,
Anon the vernal scenes impel,
O'er lofty rocks and rilly plains
Soft warbled from th' Eolian shell.
Hamilton. To a Young Lady on her Singing.

The vessel rides sublime in air,
High on the surging billows, or again
Precipitous through yawning chasms descends,
Heart-thrilling plaints, and hands uprear'd to heaven,
Speak well their anguish, and desire to live.
Harte. Psalm 108th paraphrased.

See Phœbus' self two happy bards atween;
See how the god their song attentive hears;
This Spenser hight, that Milton, well I ween!
Who can behold unmov'd sike heart-tormenting scene?
Lloyd. The Progress of Envy.

When fell Oppression in his harpy-fangs
From Want's weak grasp the last sad morsel bears,
Can ye allay the heart-wrung parent's pangs,
Whose famish'd child craves help with fruitless tears?
Beattie. The Triumph of Melancholy

HEART.

HEARTH.
HEAT.

HEARTH,

HEARTH-MONEY,

HEARTH-PENNY,

HEARTH-TAX.

A. S. heorthe, heorth-pening.—Hertha, or Herthus, i. e. Terra, Earth, was worshipped as a Goddess byour Northern ancestors, (see Tacitus, de Moribus Ger.) and in honour of her, her name was given not only to the place on which the family fire was kindled, but to the whole house. The Roman Lar was used in a similar manner. See Junius and Wachter, (in vv. Hearth and Herthe;) and also Spelman, (in v. Harthpenny.)

The place or spot upon which the fire was kindled; now, under and immediately before the grate or stove in which the fire is kindled.

He [Jehudi] cut the boke in pieces with a penne knyfe, and cast it into y^e fire upō the hearth, untill the boke was all brente in the fyre upon the hearth. Bible, 1551. Jeremye, ch. xxxvi.So blyth and bonny now the lads and lasses are,
That ever as anon the bag-pipe up doth blow,
Cast in a gallant round about the hearth they go.Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 27.For me if e'er I had least spark at all
Of that which they poetic fire do call,
Here I confess it fetched from his hearth;
Which is gone out, now he is gone to earth.

Mr. R. B. In Memory of Dr. Donne.

W. R. His Majesty having been informed that the revenue of the hearth-money is very grievous to the people, is therefore willing to agree either to a regulation of it, or to the taking of it wholly away, as this house shall think most convenient.

Parliamentary History. William and Mary, Anno 1688-9.

In the mean time to gratify the people the hearth-tax was remitted for ever.Evelyn. Memoirs, March 8, 1689.Let us imagine that we behold a great dictator giving audience to the Samnite ambassadors, and preparing on the hearth his mean repast with the same hand, which had so often subdued the enemies of the Commonwealth, and borne the triumphal laurel to the Capitol.Bolingbroke. Reflections upon Exile.

The HEARTH-MONEY, or Chimney-money, mentioned in the above citation, was a duty to the Crown, first imposed by Parliamentary authority, by 14 Car. II. c. 10. of 2s. upon every Hearth in each house paying to Church and Poor. By a subsequent statute, certain persons were empowered, once every year, to view the inside of every house, to secure the more regular assessment of this odious impost. By the statute 1 William and Mary, c. 10., following the above-cited Declaration, Hearth-money was admitted to be, "not only a great oppression to the poorer sort, but a badge of slavery upon the whole people; exposing every man's house to be entered into and searched at pleasure, by persons unknown to him; and therefore, to erect a lasting monument of their Majesties' goodness in every house in the kingdom, the duty of Hearth-money was taken away and abolished." These duties, however, are still levied in Ireland under the same name, and in England they are only disguised under the window tax, and the poundage on inhabited houses.—In Domesday Book a similar rate is mentioned, called Fumage or Fuage, and known vulgarly as Smoke-farthings: and Edward the Black Prince imposed a florin upon every Hearth in his French dominions, in imitation of the English custom.

HEAT, v.

HEAT, n.

HE'ATER,

HE'ATING,

HE'ATLESS,

HE'AT-OPPRESSED.

A. S. hæt-an; D. heet-en;Ger. heitzen; Sw. hetta, cale-facere. See the Quotation from Locke; and see Hor.

To cause the sensation of heat; to warm; to inflame; tokindle; met. to inflame, to give or cause ardour, or fervour; to enkindle, to animate, to agitate, with warm or burning feelings or passions. Heat, the noun, is also applied toAny continued violent effort or exertion; as a heat at a race.This yere [Ao. xxxvi. H. III.] was a gret hete and droughthe in Engeland, that fro the first day of Marche anon to the Assumcion of our Lady non rayne felle on erthe.

R. Gloucester, p. 520, note.

For with that one, encreased all my feare,
And with that other gan my hart to bolde,
That one me het, that other did me colde.Chaucer. The Assemblie of Foules, fol. 245.The dewe also like siluer in shyning
Upon the leaues, as any Baume swete
Til fire Titan with his persant hete
Had dried vp the lustie licour newe.Id. The Complaint of the Blacke Knight, fol. 270.The cheles bothe, and eke the hetes.Gower. Conf. Am. book vii. fol. 145.All these burne in aduoutrye, as it were an ouen that the baker heateth, when he hathe lefte knedyng, tyll the dowe be leuenedBible, Anno 1551. Oseas, ch. vii.[Therefore] he charged and commanded that they shulde heate the fornace at once seuen times more then it was wonte to be heate.Geneva Bible, 1561. Daniel, ch. iii. v. 19.For the outrageous encrease of their hope, is no very right hope, though it be a greater hope then it should be, no more then the heate of a feuer is a right natural heate, though the body be more hote then it was in helth.Sir Thomas More. Workes, book iv. fol. 572. The Second Parte of the Confutacion of Tyndale.GRATI. Let me play the foole,
With mirth and laughter let old wrinckles come,
And let my liuer rather heate with wine,
Then my heart coole with mortifying grones.Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice, fol. 163.Loe, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harme me.HUB. I can heate it, boy.Id. King John, fol. 14.Let Brontes, and black Steropes, Sweat at the forge, their hammers beating;
Pyramon's houre will come to give them ease,
Though but while mettall's heating.Jonson. The Vnder-wood. Ode to the Earle of Desmond.The iron of itselfe, though heate red hot,
Approaching neere these eyes, would drinke my teares,
And quench this fierie indignation,
Euen in the matter of mine innocence.Shakspeare. King John, fol. 14.And fury ever boyles more high, and strong,
Heat with ambition, than revenge of wrong.Ben Jonson. Sejanus, act iii. fol. 351.It is certain, that of all powers in nature heat is the chief; both in the frame of nature, and in works of art.Bacon. Natural History, sec. 99.But he them all from him full lightly swept,
As doth a steare, in heat of sommer's day,
With his long taile the bryzes brush away.Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 1.One made answer, that he affirmed not universally, that wine did cause heat; and a little after, (for it seemeth that wine is not universally a heater;) but rather, that such a quantity of wine may be said to enchafe and set such an one in heat.Holland. Plutarch, fol. 909.But heeres yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the ouen, and the baking.Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 78.MEM. My blood lost, and limbs stiff; my embraces Like the cold stubborn bark, hoarie, and heatless.Beaumont and Fletcher. The Mad Lover, act iii.

HEAT.
—
HEATH.

Art thou not, fatall vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the minde, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed braine?
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 136.

Thus camphire swallowed, is, in the dose of a very few grains, a great heater of the blood.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 104. Of the Reconcilableness of Specific Medicines to the Corpuscular Philosophy.

What power unknown my course still upwards guides
Where Mars is seen his ruddy rays to throw
Through heatless skies that round him seem to glow,
And where remoter Jove o'er his four moons presides?
Hughes. The Ecstasy.

Alcibiades having revealed the origin of Polytheism and the doctrine of the unity to his companions, nothing was more natural than for men heated with wine, to run forth, in a kind of religious fury, and break the statues of their idols.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iii. notes, p. 36. (G.)

The writers of books in Europe seem to think themselves authorized to say what they please; and an ingenious philosopher among them has openly asserted, that he would undertake to persuade the whole republic of readers to believe that the sun was neither the cause of light nor heat, if he could only get six philosophers on his side.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World. Letter 16.

HEATH, } Of uncertain Etymology. Goth.
HE'ATHER, } haithya; A. S. hæth; Ger.
HE'ATHY, } heide; Sw. hed. Junius suggests, that it may mean, campus
HEATH-CLAD, } gramine ac floribus nitens, from HEATH-COCK, } heyder, clarus, coruscus, resplendens.
HEATH-HEN, } Stiernhielmus (see Wachter) from hæd, i. e. high, q. d.
HEATH-KEEPER, } terra palustribus locis eminentior. It is applied to HEATH-POULT. }

A plain or tract of land on which the plant called heath grows; to the plant itself; and generally, as in Bacon, to tracts of land covered with plants, as heaths with the heath, or Erica.

Whan Zephirus eke with his sote brethe
Enspired hath in every holt and hethe
The tendre croppes.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 6.

The destroyers come ouer the heeth euerye waye.
Bible, Anno 1551. Jeremie, ch. xii.

As when heaven's fire
Hath scath'd the forest oaks, or mountain pines,
With singed top their stately growth though bare
Stands on the blasted heath.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 615.

It is true, that some woods of oranges, and heaths of rose-mary, will smell a great way in the sea, perhaps twenty miles.

Bacon. Natural History, sec. 834.

Whereas, many inconveniences are observed to happen in divers counties of this realm, by moore-burnings, and by raising of fires in moorish grounds and mountaneous countries, for burning of ling, heath, hather, fures, gorsse, &c.

Evelyn. Fumifugium, part i.

The next morning, the King put his army into battalia. Prince Rupert, who was now declared general, led the van, and got possession of the heath, on the back side of the castle; from which a small party might have kept him, the entrance into it being very steep, and the way narrow.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, book viii. p. 551.

Betuwe signifies in the old German, fat earth, as veluwe (a great heathy country on the other side of the Rhine) does coarse or barren earth.

Sir William Temple. Memoirs from 1672 to 1679, vol. ii. ch. ii. p. 350.

O'er the trackless waste
The heath-hen flutters, pious fraud! to lead
The hot pursuing spaniel far away.

Thomson. Spring.

In the peak of Derbyshire was found an eagle's nest made of great sticks, resting one end on the edge of a rock, the other on two birch trees; upon which was a layer of rushes, and over them a layer of heath, and upon the heath rushes again; upon which lay one young one, and an addle egg; and by them a lamb, a hare, and three heath-poults.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Black Eagle.

[Buccinum Whelk] inhabits heathy ground, upon the roots of grass and under moss on Barham downs.

Id. Ib. The Buccinum Whelk.

Not a leaf has leave to stir,
Nature's lull'd—serene—and still!
Quiet e'en the shepherd's cur,
Sleeping on the heath-clad hill.

Cunningham. Day, a Pastoral.

The next were the heath-keepers, who attended to the right of the beam-heath, anciently called the creach; and took care to preserve it from all incroachments, or trespassers.

Pennant. Journey from Chester, p. 33.

HE'ATHEN, n. } Goth. haithnai; A. S. hæth-
HE'ATHEN, adj. } ne; D. hedninge; Ger. heyde-
HE'ATHENISH, } nen; Sw. hedning; Gr. ἔθνικος; Lat. ethnicus, from the Gr.
HE'ATHENISHLY, } ἔθνος, a nation; applied empha-
HE'ATHENISHNESS, } tically to the ἔθνεα, or nations, HE'ATHENISM, } not Jews. But Vossius would HE'ATHENIZE. } give the word a Northern origin, (in v. Pagus), viz. the Ger. heydenen, loca agrestia imprimis quæ ericis plena; places overgrown with heath. Because when the Christian Religion was prevailing in cities, the rites of the Ethnici continued in locis agrestibus. And see PAGAN: also the Quotation from Bentley. The Heathens were

The nations, or Gentiles, as distinguished from Jews; from believers; and, thus, a Heathen,

A Gentile, or Pagan; a worshipper of heathen gods; an unbeliever in Christ.

þis noble erl with þe Britones ageyn ys fou went biliue,
And fast, and slow faste, and þe heþene al so god,
Ac naþeles þe heþene folker faster a gen stod.

R. Gloucester, p. 162.

Constantyne þis vnderstod, heþene þai he were.
A crois, in stude of ys baner, ys men bi fore hym bere.

Id. p. 86.

And the scripture seyng after that God iustifieth the hethene (gentes) of bileue toolde tofore to Abraham, that in thee alle the hethene (gentes) schulen be blessed.

Wiclif. Galathies, ch. iii.

For the scripture sawe afore hande, that God wolde iustifie the hethen thorow faith, and therefore shewed before hande glad tydynges vnto Abraham: in the shall all nacions be blessed.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Jhesus sente these twelve and commaundide hem, and seide, go ye not in to the wei of hethen men, and entre ye not in to the citees of Samaritans: but rathir go ye to the schepe of the hous of Israel that han perischid.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. x.

Almighty God, that saved all mankind,
Have on Custance and on hire child som mind,
That fallen is in hethen hond eftsone
In point to spill, as I shall tell you sone.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5328.

Jesus had affirmed vnto them that a time should come, whan sucne as by the Jewes estimacion wer reputed for heathen and for sinners, should through the commendacion of feith be receiued vnto the dignitie of the nacion of Israel.

Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

The other that haue no religion at all but liue as brute and heathenish people, without God in the worlde, they cal Dikoy Lapary, or the wilde Lappes.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 592. The Laps, &c.

CHOR. Go, and the Holy One
Of Israel be thy guide
To what may serve his glory best, and spread his name
Great among the heathen round.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1430.

HEATH.
—
HEATH-
EN.

Nor that, which that wise King of Jurie framed
With endlesse cost to be th' Almightyes See;
Nor all, that else through all the world is named
To all the heathen gods, might like to this be clamed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 10.

Redwald's religious sons; who for their Saviour dear,
By cruel heathenish hands unmercifully slain,
Amongst us evermore remember'd shall remain.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11.

MAR. 'Tis heathenishly done of 'em in my conscience, thou deserv'st it not.

Beaumont and Fletcher. A King and no King, act i.

The obscenity, ribaldry, amorousnesse, heathenishnesse, and prophanenesse of most play-bookes, Arcadias, and fained histories that are now so much in admiration, is such, that it is not lawful for any so much as once to reade them.

Prynne. Histriomatrix, p. 913.

Hence, therefore, we see the desire of children is honest and pious; if we be not less zealous in our Christianity, than Plato was in his heathenism; who, in the sixth of his laws, counts offspring therefore desirable, that we may leave in our stead sons of our sons, continual servants to God.

Milton. Of Nullities in Marriage.

It has always been my thought, that heathens who never did, nor without miracle could, hear the name of Christ, were yet in a possibility of salvation.

Dryden. Preface to Religio Laici.

Who [the living God] in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways: Παῖτα τὰ ἔθνη, not all nations, but all the heathen, (the word heathen comes from ἔθνη) all the Gentiles, distinguished from the Jews, as the same words are translated Rom. xv. 11. and 2 Tim. iv. 17. and ought to have been so, Rom. i. 5. and 16. 26. but much more in our text [Acts xiv. 15. &c.] which according to the present version seems to carry a very obscure, if not erroneous meaning.

Bentley. Confutation of Atheism. Sermon 6.

All religions, whether true or false, not only those of Moses and Christ, but even the heathenish superstitions of every kind, have, at their first setting out, endeavoured to countenance themselves by real, or pretended miracles.

Atterbury. Sermon 8, vol. iii.

For the other sort of new converts, they were such as had been converted from heathenism and idolatry, and consequently looked upon every thing in use among these heathens with a suspicion and a jealousy so strong, that, considering the wickedness of human nature, it was impossible presently to remove it.

South. Sermons, vol. iii. p. 193.

The continuance of these unscriptural terms, without an exact application of them in sermons and catechisms, heathenizes all the common people, nay and great numbers of not unlearned persons.

Account of Mr. Firmin's Religion, 1698, p. 63.

A professed Christian preacher, addressing a professed Christian audience, should remember, that, however beautiful his discourse, if it is no more than a moral discourse, he may preach it, and they may hear it, and yet both continue unconverted heathens.

Knox. Essays, No. 174.

It was a custome among the Jews when they travelled into any foreign country, to shake the dust off their feet when they returned home, lest they should pollute their own holy ground with the soil of a heathen country.

Gilpin. Sermon 29, vol. iv.

They [certain passages of scripture] have been forcibly detached from the connections, which rendered them peculiarly applicable; have been made the subjects of disputation; have been converted into fundamental articles of faith: and that moral preaching, which they were adduced to enforce, has been stigmatized as a heathenish deviation from Christianity.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. v. p. 485. Conclusion.

He [Enoch Wyat] altered and covered the King's statues, which during the troubles were thrust into Whitehall-garden, and which, it seems were too heathenishly naked to be exposed to the inflammable eyes of that devout generation.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. p. 249.

When Julian attempted to set up preachers of heathenism, in opposition to those of Christianity, it was immediately foretold him, and one event verified the prediction, that what had proved so effectual to establish truth, would only serve to expose and ruin error.

Secker. Sermon 21, vol. i.

HEAVE, v.

HEAVE, n.

HEAVING,

HEAVE-OFFERING.

To lift, to raise, to throw up, to elevate, to rise or swell out.

Our herten hebbeþ vp, & in our strong myȝte
Opup, & eke in God, & eke in our ryȝt.

R. Gloucester, p. 455.

He was short shuldered brode, a thikke gnarre,
Ther n'as no dore, that he n'olde heve of barre.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 552.

But thereon was to heauen and to done
Considering al thing, it may nat be
And why? for shame, and it were eke to sone
To graunten him so great a liberte.

Id. Troilus, book ii. fol. 164.

This is the heave-offryng that ye shall geue to be heaved.

Bible, Anno 1551. Ezechiel, ch. xlv.

Heave-offringes, because they were houen vp before the Lord.
Tindall. Table expounding certaine Wordes of the Second Booke of Genesis. (Exodus.)

For, as his hand was heaved up on hight,
The villaine met him in the middle fall,
And with his club bet backe his brond-yrone bright.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 8.

And indeed my lord
The wretched animall heau'd forth such groanes
That their discharge did stretch his leatherne coate
Almost to bursting.

Shakspeare. As you like it, fol. 190.

Lift vp thy brow (renowned Salisbury)
And with a great heart heave away this storme.

Id. King John, fol. 19.

NORF. If it doe, Ile venture one haue [heave] at him.

Id. Henry VIII, fol. 214.

KING. There's matter in these sighes.

These profound heaves

You must translate: 'Tis at we understand them.

Id. Hamlet, fol. 272.

'Tis such as you
That creepe like shadowes by him, and do sighe
At each his needlesse heauings: such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking.

Id. Winter's Tale, fol. 284.

A heave-offering was a tribute of thankfulness unto God, and withall of acknowledgement of his supreme lordship and dominion over all.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture, book i. disc. 45.

Back to th' assembly roll'd the thronging train,
Desert the ships, and pour upon the plain.
Murmuring they move, as when old Ocean roars,
And heaves huge surges to the trembling shores.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book ii.

Amid the lungs was fix'd the winged wood,
And quivering in his heaving bosome stood.

Id. Ib. book iv.

Thus they continued heaving down, and often righting the ship from a suspicion of their careening tackle, till the 3d of March, when, having compleated the paying and sheathing the bottom, which proved to be every where sound, they, for the last time, righted the ship, to their great joy.

Anson. Voyage round the World, book iii. ch. vii.

The ship also was so leaky that I doubted it would be necessary to heave her down at Batavia, which was another reason for making the best of our way to that place.

Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. book iii. ch. vii.

HE'AVEN,

HE'AVENLY, adj.

HE'AVENLY, adv.

HE'AVENLINESS,

HE'AVENIZE,

HE'AVEN-KISSING.

From the verb heaf-ian, to raise, (to heave, q. v.) because it is placed on high, or because we raise our eyes to contemplate it, Skinner. And Tooke, heaven, subaud. some place,

HEAVE.

HEAVEN.

HEAVEN. any place; Heaven, or heaved. See the Quotation from Verstegan. Applied to

The regions raised above us; the mansion or abode of God and his angels; of holy persons. Also to the Sovereign or Supreme God: in the plural, to the Gods. Heaven is much used in Composition.

To Kȳng Cadwallad an angel auȳsyon broȳte
Fram hevene, and bad hȳm wyȳdrawe of þat he þoȳte.
R. Gloucester, p. 254.

And broughte þȳne blessedde fro þennes. in to þe blȳsse of hevene.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 117.

And he saw the Spirit of God comyng down as a dowve and comynge on him. And lo a voice fro hevenes seiynge, This is my loved sone in whiche I have plesid to me.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. iii.

And John saw the Spirite of God descēde lyke a doue, and light vpon hym. And lo, there came a voice frō heauen sayinge: Thys is my beloued sonne in whom is my delyte. Bible, Anno 1551.

The firste man of erthe is ertheli, the secunde man of hevene is heuentli, such as the ertheli man is, such ben the ertheli men, and such as the heuentli man is, such ben also the heuentli men, therefore as we han born the ymage of the ertheli man, bere we also the ymage of the heuentli.
Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xv.

The fyrst man is of the earth, earthly: The secunde man is the Lord from heauē. As is the earthy, such are they that are earthy. And as is the heauēly, such are they that are heauenly. And as we haue borne the ymage of the earthy, so shall we beare the ymage of the heauenly.
Bible, Anno 1551.

But natheles by God our heven king,
I thoughte not to axe of him no thing.
Chaucer. The Shipman's Tale, v. 13323.

This Chanon was my lord, ye wolden wene;
Sire hoste, in faith, and by the heven quene,
It was another Chanon, and not he,
That can an hundred part more subtiltee.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16557.

These thynges than forsooth much bringen vs to the full knowledg-yng soothe, and to the parfyte loue of the maker of heauenlye thynges. Id. Testament of Loue, fol. 285. The Prologue.

And forth with all out of his sight
Thei passen vp in to the heuen.
And he awoke out of his sweuen.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 46.

So that he thorough know aright,
What is the heuenlyche might,
And be made humble to the wille
Of him, which maie all saue and spille.
Id. Ib. book i. fol. 23.

But the blessed creatures in heauen geue honour to Christ for man's redempcion, for that ioy and pleasure that their charitie taketh in the societie and felowship of saued soules.
Sir Thomas More. Workes, book ii. fol. 320. The Supplicacion of Soules.

That musike with his heauenly harmonie,
Do not allure a heauenly minde from heauen,
Nor set men's thoughts, in worldly melodie.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

The birds with heavenly-tuned throats,
Possess woods' echoes with sweet notes;
Which to your senses will impart
A music to inflame the heart.
Raleigh. Imitation of Marlowe.

Wherefore in case he would haue them; being menne farre aboue the common sorte, or as you woulde saye, heauenlyke felowes, to belieue in hym, they requyred hym to shewe some sygne from heauen.
Udall. Marke, ch. viii.

The name of heauen, albeit it was of our ancestors written heofen, yet carried it like sence or signification as now it doth, being as much as to say as heaven, or heaved up, to wit, the place that is elevated.

Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii.

Love, lift me up upon thy golden wings
From this base world unto thy heaven's hight,
Where I may see those admirable things
Which there thou workest by thy souveraine might,
Farre above feeble reach of earthly sight,

That I thereof an heavenly hymne may sing
Unto the God of Love, high heaven's king.
Spenser. Hymne 3. On Heavenly Love.

Goddess of women, sith your heavenliness
Hath now vouchsaf'd itself to represent
To our dim eyes.

Sir John Davies. Orchestra.

But, O my soul, if thou be once soundly heaveniz'd in thy thoughts and affections, it shall be otherwise with thee.
Hall. Soliloquy 80.

I say again, let no man deceive you with vain words, or with vain hopes, or with false notions of a slight and suddain repentance: as if heaven were an hospital founded on purpose to receive all sick and maimed persons, that, when they can live no longer to the lusts of the sinful pleasures of this world, can but put up a cold and formal petition to be admitted there.
Tillotson. Sermon 54.

To Jove th' eternal (power above all powers!
Who wings the wind, and darkens heaven with showers,)
The flames ascend: till evening they prolong
The rites, more sacred made by heavenly song.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book xiii.

In the night the Aurora Australis made a very brilliant and luminous appearance. It was seen first in the East, a little above the horizon; and in a short time spread over the whole heavens.
Cook. Voyages, vol. iii. book i. ch. iii. p. 49.

Were a man, say they, to stop the course of the heavenly bodies, which is above the reach of all the powers of his nature; this would be a miraculous operation: but were a superior being, who had power equal to such a work, to suspend the motion of the heavenly bodies; this would be no miracle at all.
Farmer. On Miracles, ch. i. sec. 1.

HEAVEN, in Composition.

The staring wizzard never yet could by
His mumbling charms, his heav'n-affronting wand,
His barbarous words and figures, form a Lye
Able against the face of Truth to stand.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 10. st. 6.

————— Pour your blessing on these streams,
Which rolling down from heaven-aspiring hills,
And now united in the fruitful vales,
Bear all before them, ravish'd with their joy,
And swell in glory, till they know no bounds.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Masque of the Gentleman of Gray's Inn.

————— So these the late
Heav'n-banish't host, left desert utmost Hell
Many a dark league, reduc'd in careful watch
Round their metropolis, and now expecting
Each hour their great adventurer from the search
Of forrein worlds.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 437.

And free there's none from all this worldly strife
Except the shepherd's heaven-blest happy life.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 2.

He gaue to all, the blest Phaeacian's lawes;
And, like a heaven-borne powre in speech, acquir'd
The people's eares.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book vii. fol. 98.
And thus through all th' unfruitfull ayre, an iron sound ascended
Up to the golden firmament, when strange effects contended
In these immortall heaven-bred horse of great Æacides.
Id. Homer. Iliad, book xvii. fol. 245.

He whose heav'n-daring looks proclaim him fit
Not to request and sue, but to disdain.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 5. st. 73.

What heaven-entreated heart is this?
Stands trembling at the gate of bliss,
Holds fast the door, yet dares not venture
Fairly to open it and enter.
Crashaw. To the Countess of Denbigh.

Where all yet left of that revolted rout
Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 535.

Satan from hence now on the lower stair
That scal'd by steps of gold to heaven-gate
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world at once.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iii. l. 541.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits; if I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out,
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters under task
With this heav'n-gifted strength?

Id. Samson Agonistes, l. 36.

For, both in minde, and soule, I know, that there shall come a day,
When Ilium, Priam, all his powre shall quite be worne away;
When heaven-inhabiting Jove shall shake his fierie shield at all
For this one mischiefe.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book iv. fol. 54.

The people met, the rites and prayers all past,
Behold! the heaven-instructed lot is cast.
'Tis taught by heaven its way, and cannot miss;
Forth Benjamin, forth leaps the house of Cis.

Cowley. Davideis, book iv.

A station, like the herald Mercurie
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 271.

But oh why didst thou not stay here below
To bless us with thy heav'n-lov'd innocence.

Milton. Ode on Death of a Fair Infant, stan. 10.

But what owe I to his commands above
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound
To sit in hateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nlie-born.

Id. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 860.

Of him, t' whose happy-making sight alone
When once our heav'nly-guided soul shall clime,
Then all this earthly grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over Death, and Chance, and thee, O Time.

Id. Ode on Time, l. 19.

Making such difference betwixt wake and sleepe,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The houre before the heavenly-harneis'd teeme
Begins his golden progresse in the East.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 62.

His grandame's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Drawes those heaven-mouing pearles frō his poor eies.

Id. King John, fol. 4.

Alas what will they do
When stubborn rocks shall bow,
And hills hang down their heav'n-saluting heads
To seek for humble beds.

Crashaw. On the Name of Jesus.

Altho' thus smartly check'd, heaven-spurred, he Dreads not his second dream to represent;
Yet wisely takes the opportunity
Of Jacob's presence.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 1. stan. 94.

You sun-bred ayry, whose immortal birth
Bears you aloft beyond the sight of earth,
The heaven-touch'd feathers of whose sprightly wings
Strikes (from above) the palaces of Kings.

Drayton. The Owl.

——— [God] them beholding soon,
Comes down to see their city, ere the tower
Obstruct heav'n towers, and in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit to rase
Quite out their native language, and instead
To sow a jangling noise of words unknown.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xii. l. 52.

——— Where is then that flame
That added warmth and beauty to thy frame?
Fled heaven-ward to repaire, with its pure fire,
The losses of some maim'd seraphick quire?

Habington. Castara, part iii.

None among the choice and prime
Of those heaven-warring champions could be found
So hardie as to proffer or accept
Alone the dreadful voyage.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 424.

A heaven-born soul would scarce think it worth while to fly here below, if its work must be, not to employ the body, but to tend it.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 458. Occasional Reflections, reflec. ix. sec. 6.

Patroclus, cease! this heaven-defended wall
Defies thy lance, not fated yet to fall.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xvi.

O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence,
Sole dread of folly, vice, and insolence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd,
The Muse may give thee, but the Gods must guide.

Id. Epilogue to the Satires of Donne. Dialogue 1.

But the design of Christianity is to make men as good as they can possibly be: as devout, as humble, as charitable, as temperate, as contented, as heavenly-minded, as their natures will allow of in this world.

Sharp. Works, vol. i. Sermon 7.

With how much difficulty may we imagine a man to get humility or heavenly-mindedness, while all the appetites, and the very nerves of his soul, strive against it, and endeavour to pull down as fast as he can build up.

South. Sermons, vol. vii. p. 54.

Can you renounce a fortune so sublime,
Such glorious hopes your backward steps to steer,
And roll, with vilest brutes, thro' mud and slime?
No! no!—Your heaven-touch'd heart disdains the sordid crime!

Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

I do not deny but that those heats of passion are good opportunities to begin our religion in, and if wisely improved will very much contribute to our voyage heaven-wards, and, like a brisk gale of wind, render it much more expedite and easy.

Scott. The Christian Life, part i. ch. iv.

But ye, most impious heaven-abandon'd villains,
What and whence are ye, that so proudly dare
The lists to enter with the mighty Gout,
Whose power not Jove himself can overcome?

West. Triumph of the Gout.

Let every generous youth his praise proclaim;
Who, wand'ring through the world's rude forest wide,
By him hath been taught his course to frame
To Virtue's sweet abodes, and heaven-aspiring Fame.

Id. Education, can. 1.

Popes, Emperors, and Kings courted his [Erasmus] favour; and through dread of his heaven-bestowed power paid him a sincerer and more reverential homage than they ever extorted from their myrmidons.

Knox. Preface to Antipolemus, vol. v. p. 412.

The hero stood, transported in his mind
To times, when God held converse with mankind,
When simple Virtue taught her heaven-born lore,
And Truth commanding bad e'en Kings adore.

Lloyd. The Henriade.

God was his guide, and 'mid the tempest's roar,
The tossing vessel reach'd the neighbouring shore,
Where Jersey rises from the ocean's bed,
There, heaven-conducted, was the hero led.

Id. Ib.

These passages are to be found only in St. John's gospel, and whoever reads them with attention will discover in them plain indications not only for a heaven-directed hand, but for a feeling and grateful heart.

Porteus. Sermon 18. vol. i.

The authors of such poems must be content with the approbation of those heaven-favoured geniusses, who, by a similarity of taste and sentiment, are enabled to penetrate the high mysteries of inspired fancy, and to pursue the loftiest flights of enthusiastic imagination.

Langhorne on Collins. Ode on the Poetical Character.

——— He her proffer'd hand
In hue, in purity like snow, receiv'd.
A heav'n-illum'd dignity of look
On him she fixed.

Glover. Leonidas, book vii.

That the bishop (Lowth) thought proper to select a trivial ballad to show the force of poetry, when he was to treat of heaven-inspired poetry, evinces that he deemed ballads capable of producing wonderful effects on the human heart.

Knox. Winter Evenings, even. 7.

HEAVEN.

HEAVY.

Society! our being's noblest end!
To thee, with claims unequal, all pretend:
From angels or the heaven-instructed man
To the wild Tartar's unconnected clan.

Cambridge. Learning, a Dialogue.

Hail, golden Lyre! whose heaven-invented string
To Phœbus and the black-hair'd Nine belongs;
Who in sweet chorus round their tuneful King,
Mix with thy sounding chords their sacred songs.

West. Pythian Odes. Decade 1.

Yet great numbers of them [our Ecclesiastics] did, notwithstanding, preserve themselves pure and undefiled from the vices of the Age, and were exemplary in their manners, temperate, charitable, meek, and heavenly-minded.

Porteus. Sermon 7. vol. ii.

How was I late by his indulgence blest,
Cheer'd with his smiles and by his precepts taught!
My fancy deem'd him some angelic guest,
Some heaven-sent guide with blissful tidings fraught.

Fawkes. Aurelius, an Elegy.

And, forces new
Gathering from toil, and ardour from the throng
Of rival youths, outstripp'd the labouring crew,
And to the true Parnasse and heaven-throng'd glory flew.

West. Education.

Hither descend from yonder orient sky,
Cloath'd in the heav'n-wove robe of harmony.

Mason. Ode 1. For Music.

HE'AVY, v.

HE'AVY, adj.

HE'AVILY,

HE'AVINESS,

HE'AVY-ARMED,

HE'AVY-HANGING,

HE'AVY-HARNESSED,

HE'AVY-HEADED,

HE'AVY-LOADED,

HE'AVY-SKIRTED.

A. S. heaf-ig, hef-ig, gravis,
met. tristis. Heavie or waightie, says Minshew, because heavie things must be heaved up.
See HEAVE.

Weighty or of great weight;
ponderous, cumbrous, oppressive; met. weighed down, sunk, depressed, dejected, sad,
or sorrowful; loaded, burthened, burthensome, troubled or troublesome; oppressive, not easily moved; sluggish, dull, stupid, inanimate.

þe kȳng fro ðaȳ to ðaȳ he heuyed more and more,
Nerhand his endȳng sekenes greued him sore.

R. Brunne, p. 65.

He felt him heuy & ferly seke his body wexe alle seere,
His childre he wild auance, till he o lyue were.

Id. p. 18.

Take to stronge men. and in Temese cast hem
And boþe naked as anelde. here noþr heuyjour þan oþer.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 285.

And eftsone he gede and preide and seide the same word. And turnede agen eftsoone and foound hem slepinge for her yghen weren heuyed and they knewen not what they schulden answer to him.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. xiv.

But Jhesus seyde suffre ye hir what ben ye hevy to hir? Sche bath wrought a good werk in me.

Id. Ib.

But there weren summe that boren it hevyly withynne hemsilf and seiden, wherto is this losse of oynement maad?

Id. Ib.

And whanne he was risen fro preier, and was comun to hise disciplis: he foound hem slepyng for heuynesse.

Id. Luke, ch. xxii.

Hire frendes, which that knew hire hevy thought,
Comforten hire in all that ever they may:
They prechen hire, they telle hire night and day,
That causeles she sleth hireself, alas!
And every comfort possible in this cas
They don to hire, with all hir besinesse,
All for to make hire leve hire heuynesse.

Chaucer. The Frankleines Tale, v. 11134

And said: O good father dere,
Why make ye thus heuy chere.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 25.

My good sonne yet there is
A vice reuers vnto this,

Whiche enuious taketh his gladnes
Of that he seeth the heuynesse
Of other men.

Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 28.

From God these heuy cares ar sent for our unrests,
And with suche burdens for our welth he frauteth well our brestes.

Surrey. Ecclesiastes.

Our mariners complained heavily against the people, and said that my lenitie and friendly vsing of them gave them stomacke to mischiefe.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 105. M. John Davis.

He did choose out sixe thousand horsemen, & added to them iii. C. called Dimichas y^t were footemen, heauye-harnised, but yet rydyng on horsebacke.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book v. fol. 133.

Moreover, his colleague Arbetio, under a faire shew of counterfeit courtesie, and by calling him many times a valiant warriour, (as hee was passing skilfull in laying traines for to entrap a man of plaine and simple conversation, and withall in those daies of great authoritie) proved his heavie friend, and set himsele sore against him.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 30. Constantius.

The stroke upon his shield so heavie lites
That to the ground it doubleth him full low.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 8.

So by him Cæsar got the victory,
Through great bloodshed and many a sad assay,
In which himsele was charged heavily
Of hardy Nennius, whom he yet did slay.

Id. Ib. book ii. can. 10.

The ioyous nymphes and lightfoote faeries
Which thether came to heare their musick sweet,
And to the measure of their melodies
Did learne to move their nimble shifting feete:
Now, hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went.

Id. The Teares of the Muses.

And all that els was wont to worke delight
Through the divine infusion of their skill,
And all that els seemed faire and fresh in sight,
So made by nature for to serve their will,
Was turned now to dismall heaviness,
Was turned now to dreadfull ugliness.

Id. Ib.

But let thy spiders, that suck vp thy venome,
And heauie-gated toades lye in their way,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete,
Which with vsurping steps do trample thee.

Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 34.

For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes.

Id. Rape of Lucrece.

The heavie-headed plane-tree, by whose shade
The grasse growes thickest, men are fresher made.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book i. song 2.

He was fain to force and compell some that had taken their load of wine, and were heavie-headed and sleepeie, to arme themselves, and to bridle their horses.

Holland. Livius, fol. 735.

Howere it be
I cannot but be sad: so heavie sad, &c.

Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 30.

Entellus wastes his forces on the wind;
And thus deluded of the stroke design'd,
Headlong and heavy fell.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, book v.

If he be above Virgil and is resolved to follow his own verve (as the French call it) the proverb will fall heavily upon him: Who teaches himself, has a fool for his master.

Id. Dedication to the Æneis.

He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
That seiz'd his eyes; and slumber, which forgot
When call'd before to come, now came unsought.

Id. Sigismonda and Guiscardo.

Listning to these admonitions, and tempering the vivacity of youth with a proper mixture of serious thought, you may ensure cheerfulness for the rest of life; but by delivering yourselves up at present to giddiness and levity, you lay the foundation of lasting heaviness of heart.

Blair. Sermon 11. vol. i.

HEAVY.

HEAVY. Kerns are light-armed and gallow-glasses heavy-armed soldiers.
Johnson. Observations on Macbeth, note 2. sc. ii.

HECATEA

Nought around
Strikes his sad eye, but deserts lost in snow,
And heavy-loaded groves.

Thomson. Winter.

And then, of sadder hue,
Emerg'd the deepen'd indigo, as when
The heavy-skirted evening droops with frost.

Id. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

HE'BDOMAD, } Lat. hebdomas; Gr. ἑβδομας, HEBDO'MADAL, } from ἑβδομος, the seventh. Used, HEBDOMA'TICAL. } by Ecclesiastical writers especially,
to denote

A week or space of seven days.

But in that tyme I Daniel was so heuey by thre hebdomads of dayes that I ate no delicate meatis and nether flesh nor wyne came into my mouthe.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, ch. x.

Those of creation being concluded within the first hebdomade, accordingly as is exprest in the history, that God on the seventh day rested from all his works.

Glanvil. Præ-Existence of Souls, ch. ii.

As for hebdomadal periods or weeks, although in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews, yet it is not apparent.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book iv. ch. xii.

Far from the conceit of a deambulatory, hebdomatical, or peradventure, ephemeral office.

Bishop Morton. Episcopacy asserted, p. 142.

All this from listening to variable, hebdomadal politicians, who ran away from their opinions without giving us a month's warning.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

HE'BEN, } Fr. hebene; ebony, q. v.
HE'BEN-WOOD. }

We killed likewise a gray conie in shape like unto those of Nuova
Espanna, and another as blacke as heben-wood.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 422. Francisco de Villosa.

A gentle youth, his dearely loued squire,
His spere of heben-wood behind him bare,
Whose harmfull head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had riven many a breast with pikehead square.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 7.

HEBENSTRIETIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia. Generic character:
calyx spathe-like, bursting longitudinally beneath; co-rolla tubular, unequal, upper part of the lip four-cleft; stamens produced from a cleft in the lower part of the corolla; capsule two-seeded; one seed convex, the other flat.

Nine species, natives of the South of Africa.

HE'BETATE, } Fr. hebeté; Lat. hebes, dull. Of HE'BETE, } uncertain Etymology. Hebete, as HE'BETUDE. } the Fr.

"Dull, sottish, witless, blockish, blunt, slow, senselesse, heavy-headed; also, dulled, blunted." Cotgrave.

Examine and try the commonalty in almost every place, and you must observe how hebeté and dull they are, how strangely unacquainted with what they profess to believe.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 325.

Beef, it is true, may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son,
but will hebetate and clog his intellectuals.

Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus, ch. iv.

The body is perfectly free from pain, oppression, hebetude, and every species of uneasiness; and a certain vivacity and vigour, not to be described, reign through the system.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. p. 293.

HECATEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoe-cia, order Monodelphia. Generic character: male flower, calyx five-parted; corolla none, disk fleshy; anthers three, aggregated into a fungous mass; female flower, calyx five-parted; corolla none; one style;
berry three-seeded.

One species, H. biglandulosa, a tree of 20 feet, native HECATEA of Madagascar.

HECATOMB, Lat. hecatombe; Gr. ἑκατόμβη, from ἑκατόν, a hundred, and βῆς, bos, an ox. Applied to

HECTOR.

A sacrifice of a hundred oxen, and generally a hundred of any kind of victims; a great sacrifice.

And here, sir, she offers, by me, to the altar of your glory, whole hecatombs of most happy desires, praying all things may prove prosperous unto you.

Drummond. Speech to Prince Charles.

Let us aske some prophet, priest, or prove
Some dreame-interpreter, (for dreames are often sent from Jove,)
Why Phoebus is so much incenst? If unperform'd vows
He blames in us, or hecatombs.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad. book i. fol. 2.

But let some prophet, or some sacred sage,
Explore the cause of great Apollo's rage;
Or learn the wasteful vengeance to remove,
By mystic dreams, for dreams descend from Jove;
If broken vows this heavy curse have laid,
Let altars smoke, and hecatombs be paid.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book i.

Yet still he wander'd, and with looks intent,
The fatal road his darling Atys went.
There to averted heav'n he tells his pain,
And slaughter'd hecatombs decrees in vain.

Whitehead. Atys and Adrastus.

HECATONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Do-decandria, order Polygynia. Generic character: calyx five-leaved, inferior, reflexed; corolla, petals five, ovate, striated, spreading; no pericarp; seed many, leticular.

Two species, natives of China. Loureiro.

HE'CTICK, adj. } Hectica febris, ἐκτικὸς πυρετός, HE'CTICK, n. } an habitual or constitutional HE'CTICAL, } fever, because it is ἐν τῇ εἴξει, in HE'CTICALLY. } the habit of the body.

Habitual or constitutional; and, consequentially, feverish, heated.

Do it England,
For like the hecticke in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me.

Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 273.

This said, he paus'd; and now the hecticke heate
Of Oswald's blood doubled their pulses' pace;
Which high, as if they would be heard, did beate,
And hot ambition shin'd in either's face.

Davenant. Gondibert, book ii. can. 5.

Thus I have a little run over these accidents unto you, enough only to break out of that silence which I will not call a symptome of my sickness, but a sickness itself. Howsoever, I will keep it from being hectical.

Reliquiæ Wottoniæ, p. 433. Letter to Sir E. Bacon.

The hecticke of the soul produces one in the body, the man from an inward falls into an outward consumption; and death itself gives the finishing stroke, and closes all with a sad catastrophe.

South. Sermons, vol. iv. p. 109.

Unartful tears, and hecticke looks, that show
With silent eloquence the lover's woe,
Boldness unfledg'd, and stolen raptures new,
Half trembling stands, and scarcely dares pursue.

Guardian, No. 127. (from Claudian.)

Again, the dropsey's bloated mask they steal;
Or, "melt with minings of the hectic fire."

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book v. l. 305.

He was for some years hectically feverish; and though he found some alleviation of his distemper, never obtained a perfect recovery of his health.

Johnson. Life of Ascham.

HE'CTOR, v. } Hector, the brave son of Priam,
HE'CTOR, n. } appears to have gained by tradition
HE'CTORING, } the undeserved character of HE'CTORLY, } A vainglorious blusterer, a bully, HECTORE'AN. } a braggadocio, a threatener; whence to hector,

HECTOR. To bully or bluster, to menace, to threaten.

HEDGE. Thus he [the Erle Douglas] went euer forwarde lyke a hardy Hector, wyllyng alone to conquere the felde, and to dyscomfyte his enemyes.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 143.

Now I could quarrel heav'n, and be Ringleader to a mutiny,
Like that of the gigantic wars,
And hector my malignant stars.

Cotton. An Elegy.

But his majesty was not so to be hector'd out of his right, as appears by the honourable provision he has made to secure it, in the late treaty with the Dutch.

Evelyn. On Navigation and Commerce, sec. 54.

Thus the hectors use to do, and to give the lye at adventure, when they have a mind to try a man's courage.

Marvell. The Rehearsal Transposed, vol. ii. p. 109.

'Twas he that brought upon his knees
The hectoring kill-crow Hercules.

Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 1.

But when huffing and hectoring must be looked upon as the only badges of gallantry and courage, what can recommend the exercise of patience against the disgrace of it?

South. Sermons, vol. x. p. 121.

If there be any imprecation added to it, (as there is in all the damnme's and confound-me's, that are used among us) it is a downright braving and hectoring God Almighty, and challenging him to do the worst he can to us.

Sharp. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 17.

Those who seek glory from evil things, (who glory in their shame) from presumptuous transgression of God's law, (hectorly profaneness and debauchery) from outrageous violence, from over-reaching craft, or from any bad quality, are not only vain-glorious, but impudent.

Barrow. Sermon 31. vol. iii.

In vain I charg'd him soon to quit the plains
And warn'd to shun Hectorean force in vain.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xviii.

HEDERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentan- dria, order Monogynia, natural order Araliæ. Generic character: calyx five-toothed; corolla, petals five;
broadest at the base; berry encompassed by the calyx;
seeds five.

Of this genus the most remarkable species is H. helix,
the common Ivy; there are two other species natives of Jamaica, and one of Ceylon.

HEDGE, v. } A. S. heg-ian; Ger. haeg-an; D.
HEDGE, n. } noun, haeghe; Sw. hag. See HAW, HE'DGER } and HAY.

To enclose, to surround, to encompass, to circumscribe; to shut or fence in or out; also, to lurk under a hedge; and, thus, to hide, to conceal.

Toward þe wode, from wanne he come, þe Brutons gonne to fle.
Ac þo hii come among narwe heggys, hii stode aȝen anon,
And turnde þe breste aȝen, & vaste slow her fon.

R. Gloucester, p. 211.

— Oþr shep oþr kýne kepe
Eggen oþr harwen. oþr swýne oþr gees drýve.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 76.

— The meseles in heggys
Lýggeth bý hure wenne hem luste.

Id. Ib. p. 46.

There was an housbondeman that plauntide a vineyard and heggide it about.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxi.

There was a certayne housholder, which planted a vyneyard, and hedged it round aboute.

Bible, Anno 1551.

A man plauntyde a vineyard and sette an hegge about it.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. xii.

A certayne mā planted a vyneyard, and compased it with an hedge.

Bible, Anno 1551.

The hegge as thicke as a castel wall
That who that list without to stond or go
Though he would all day prien to and fro
He should not see if there were any wight
Within or no.

Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe, fol. 366.

For this worde [wife] in the first proposition, is hedged with her circumstaunce, that is to say, adulterie, which causeth diuorcement.

Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol. 74.

Howbeit they be wysely ordered, and alonge the way they haue fortified strongly the hedges and bushes; one part of their archers are along by the hedge, so that none can go nor ryde that way, but must past by them.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 160.

There were ordeyned a xxv. hundred hewers of woodes, hedgers, and dykers, to make playne the wayes.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. ch. 138.

There shal the hedghoge builde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forthe his young ones.

Bible, Anno 1551. Isaiah, ch. xxxiv.

If thou hedge thy close as high as the middle region of the air in all other places, and leave but one gap, all thy grass will be gone.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture, book i. disc. 50.

CAS. Brutus, baite not me,
Ile not endure it: you forget your selfe
To hedge me in.

Shakspeare. Julius Caesar, fol. 124.

HEL. Nay this shall not hedge vs out, wee le heare you sing cer-tainely.

Id. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 89.

I, I my selfe sometimes, leauing the feare of heauen on the left hand, and hiding mine honor in my necessity, am faine to shuffle: to hedge, and to lurch.

Id. Merry Wives of Windsor, fol. 45.

While he with heates doth dying glow
Above he sees
The other hedg'd in with his snow
And enries him his ice, although he freeze.

Habington. Castara, part iii.

Here, in this garden only, springs the rose,
In ev'ry common hedge the bramble grows.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. Edward IV. to Mrs. Shore.

COM. Two such I saw, what time the labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink hedger at his supper sat.

Milton. Comus, l. 293.

Could they be happier without it, the law, as an useless thing, would of itself vanish; and that ill deserves the name of confinement which hedges us in only from bogs and precipices.

Locke. Of Civil Government, book ii. ch. vi. Of Paternal Power.

To a man under the difficulties of his nature, beset with temptations, and hedged in with prevailing custom; 'tis no small encouragement to set himself seriously in the courses of virtue, and practice of true religion, that he is from a sure hand, and an Almighty arm, promised assistance to support and carry him through.

Id. The Reasonableness of Christianity, vol. ii. p. 537.

[Sir Ralph Hopton] with very easy contention, beat them off their ground; they having lined the hedges behind them with their reserve, by which they thought securely to make their retreat into the town.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. ii. p. 133.

Beneath the hedge, or near the stream,
A worm is known to stray,
That shows by night a lucid beam,
Which disappears by day.

Couper. The Glowworm.

HEDGE, in Composition.

He should (if I were worthy to be judge)
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-borne swaine
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

Shakspeare. Henry VI. First Part, fol. 110.

For, what can be more direct to that effect, than to hide themselves [hares] in hedge-bottoms, or in woods.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxxvi.

The worst sallys may be planted so neer yet, as to be instead of stakes in a hedge, and then their tops will supply their dwarfishness;

HEDGE, and to prevent hedge-breakers many do thus plant them; because they cannot easily be pull'd up, after once they have struck root.
 —
 HEDJAS. Evelyn. On Forest Trees, ch. xix. sec. 7.

1 LORD E. He can come no other way but by this hedge-corner.
 Shakspeare. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 245.

Unlesse some base hedge-creeping Collybist
 Scatters his refuse scraps on whom he list.
 Hall. Satire 4. book iv.

Who whilst in hand it gryping hard he hent,
 Into a hedgehogge all unwares it went,
 And prickt him so that he away it threw
 Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 9.

The magicians, who were of the sect of Zoroastres, honored above all living creatures upon the earth the urchin or hedghock.
 Holland. Plutarch, fol. 583.

1. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
 2. Thrice and once the hedge-pigge whin'd.
 Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 143.

To chase and banish all odde hedge-priests, wizzards, tellers of fortunes, and magicians out of the common place, out of the shew place and theatre, yea, and quite out of the cittie.
 Holland. Livius, fol. 1033.

And soon the tempest so outrageous grew,
 That it whole hedge-rows by the roots upthrew.
 Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

Hence as I went, I chanc'd to look aside
 And near at hand I happily espy'd
 The hedge-sparrow, and her compeer the wren.
 Id. The Owl.

To him she granted also a cottage with a garden near the parish church of Eltham, and all other lands, tenements, rents, reversions, services, liberties, courts, &c. with reasonable fire-boot, cart-boot, plow-boot, hedge-boot, within the woods of the said manner.
 Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1553.

The hedghog being an helpless, slow, and patient animal, is accordingly guarded with prickles, and a power of rolling itself in them.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xiv. note 5.

When they begin to be somewhat better bred, and were entering, as I may say, into the first rudiments of civil conversation, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, somewhat polished, which was also full of pleasant raillery, but without any mixture of obscenity.
 Dryden. On the Origin and Progress of Satyre.

But the Cornish so briskly bestirr'd themselves and press'd them so hard on every side, being indeed excellent at hedge-work, and that kind of fight, that they quickly won that ground too.

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, vol. ii. p. 133.

Haye-bote or hedge-bote is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences.
 Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. iii.

And deek'd (as after ages more shall see)
 With poor hedge-flow'rs, y-clept simplicity!
 Harte. The Charitable Mason.

Who spends too oft in indolence the day,
 Soon sees his farm his base neglect betray;
 His useless hedge-greens docks and nettles bear,
 And the tough cammoc clogs his shining share.
 Scott. Amæbean Eclogues.

No effort of the animal could determine the clothing of its skin. What conatus could give prickles to the porcupine or hedgehog, or to the sheep its fleece?
 Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xxiii.

Her hedge-row shrubs, a variegated store,
 With woodbine and wild roses mantled o'er.

Cowper. Retirement.

Hundreds of waggon loads of Birmingham goods have been sold in Germany, and in other parts of the continent, from stirring a pot of melted brass with an hedge-stake, which would not have been saleable at all had the pot been stirred with an iron instrument.

Anecdotes of Bishop Watson, vol. i. p. 266.

He then traced them from place to place, till at last he found two of them drinking together, with a third person, at a hedge-tavern near Aldersgate.
 Fielding. History of a Foundling, ch. x.

H E D J A S.

HEDJAS, or, as Niebuhr spells it, Hedsjas, is the German mode of expressing the Arabic word Hhijáz, (pronounced Hhejáz,) which is the name of the Holy Land of the Moslims, that Province of the Arabian Peninsula in which the two sacred cities (el hharemēn) of Mecca and Medinah are situated. It consists of a narrow strip of land, lying between the elevated central Deserts and the sea, together with the mountainous ascent leading to them. A large portion of its soil is, therefore, nearly as uneven and as productive as the vales and declivities of Yemen. As, with the exception of Jiddah, Yanbo', and a few places on the coast, no part of its sacred soil can be trodden by the feet of unbelievers, it has rarely been visited by any Western Europeans. Alí Beg el-'Abbásí, i. e. Don Diego de la Badía, and Louis Burckhardt, are the only modern travellers who have been able to penetrate into the interior of it; but the ostentatious style in which the former travelled, rendered him an object of suspicion, and effectually checked the freedom of his inquiries. Being, moreover, too indolent to acquire more than a mere smattering of the Arabic language and literature, he could neither command the respect of the Arabs, nor avail himself of the opportunities which his position offered. Burckhardt, on the contrary, set out on his pilgrimage, prepared by an acquaintance with the literal and spoken Arabic, seldom attained by any but natives, and having assumed the character and appearance of a merchant, neither excited jealousy, nor experienced interruption from the crowds of pilgrims with whom he mixed. He had ample leisure, and was well prepared to inquire and observe with advantage. His travels in Arabia, Nubia, and the Peninsula of Mount Sinaï, have also sufficiently shown his talent for observation, and care in recording his remarks, so that much new information may be expected from his account of Hhijáz; till the publication of which, Niebuhr, and the materials collected by M. Jomard, are almost the only authorities for this unknown and unexplored part of Arabia.

Having the Desert and Yemen on the North and South, with Nejd and the Red Sea on the East and West, lying between the 19th and 26th parallels of Northern latitude, and possessing no permanent stream of any size, the low lands of this Province are subject to all that excess of heat and aridity for which Arabia is noted; but its mountainous districts enjoying, in consequence of their elevation, a lower temperature, have the advantage of a moister atmosphere, and in many cases, a supply of water from wells and brooks throughout the year. Its principal towns are its seaports, the sacred cities of Mecca and Medinah, and Táyif, Khaibar, and Bedr. Besides many roadsteads, it has the harbours of Yanbo' and Jiddah.

Yanbo', (pronounced Yambo', and signifying "a Yambo, spring,") in 24° 7' 6" North, and 38° 27' 15" East, is HEDJAS. now the port of Medínah, as Jár, lying to the South East of it, was formerly. It is a walled, but ill-built town of some size, at the foot of Mount Ridwá, (Abú'l-fedá's Tacwim el boldán.) It is much frequented by pilgrims on their return from Mecca, as they usually go to visit the Prophet's tomb at Medínah on their way home. Yambo', the Iambia vicus of Ptolemy, is frequently called Yambo'-el-bahr (i. e. the maritime) by the Arabs, to distinguish it from Yanbo' el-berr, (the inland,) or Yanbo' el-nakhl, (the town of palms,) which is one day's journey East $\frac{1}{4}$ North-East from the port.

Djidda, or Gedda.

Jiddah, in $21^{\circ} 30'$ North, and $39^{\circ} 13' 15''$ East, is surrounded by a wall, so neglected in Niebuhr's time, (A. D. 1762,) that there were several large breaches in its Southern side, and the battery at the extremity of the point forming the harbour was perfectly unserviceable; but since the town has been occupied by Mohammed 'Alí, the present Páshá of Egypt, its fortifications have been doubtless restored and improved. The whole of the Red Sea is beset with shoals of coral rock, and the harbour of Jiddah is so much obstructed by them, that at certain seasons there is not water enough near the shore for the draft of boats, and ships are obliged to anchor at a considerable distance from the town; to the North-West, also, large hills of coral-rock, covered with sand and shells, show how far the sea has retired. These hills, however, supply a convenient material for building, and from them all the more substantial houses are constructed; the rest are mere Arab hovels. As the port of Mecca, Jiddah is a place of great resort, and almost the only spot in Hhijáz on which Christians were allowed to set their foot, till Mohammed 'Alí sent some European officers with his troops on their expedition against the Wah-hábies. It is the great emporium of Arabia, to which the Southern monsoon, from November to April, brings fleets of merchantmen from the Indian Ocean, laden with the produce of Asia and Africa; and the Northern, during the remainder of the year, sends the productions of Europe, from Caíro and Suez. The gate and road leading to Mecca are the only parts of the town and neighbourhood prohibited to infidels. There are several okéls (wakkáls) or caravansarais for the accommodation of merchants, and a few neat houses built of coral-rock. The water is all brought by camels from the hills; throughout Hhijáz, it is scarce, somewhat brackish, (Burckhardt's Nubia, p. lx.) and peculiarly unwholesome. Among the European articles in demand at Jiddah, are Venetian zecchines and Imperial dollars, much used in mercantile transactions both in Yemen and Hindústán. Coffee and a little senna are the only articles brought from the former of those Countries. All goods pay a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, often raised to 12 or 15 by the Custom-house officers, who overrate their value. The English pay only 8 per cent.; but all these regulations, as far as the natives are concerned, have undoubtedly been changed by Mohammed 'Alí. Formerly the duties collected in this port were divided between the Páshá, appointed by the Grand Signior, and the Sheríf or Prince of Mecca; but that chief was deposed and sent to Caíro, by the present Páshá of Egypt, and the whole revenue is now probably received by him. As no coin is struck in this territory, the money of Constantinople and Caíro is current. Párahs (pronounced paráhs) are called faddah, (i. e. silver,) and imaginary coins, such as crúsh (curúsh, or ghurúsh, i. e. dollars) and díwánies, are used in calculation. In 1762, 1 Imperial dollar = 85

párahs at Caíro, and 92 at Jiddah; and 4 párahs = 5 díwánies; 40 díwánies = 1 kirsh or piaster; and 1 Imperial dollar = 2 crúsh and 35 díwánies; 1 díwání = 20 jedid, a very small, unstamped morsel of copper. Niebuhr has given a plan of the town and harbour, (Reise. tab. lv.) and plates to show the costume of the common people. (Ib. tab. lvi. lvii.) The higher classes dress as in Turkey.

Kunfudeh (pronounced Gumfudeh) is an ill-built town of moderate size, on the coast of the Red Sea, in $19^{\circ} 7'$ North and $40^{\circ} 50'$ East. Its houses are mere huts, but it has good water, and, being the port at which ships from Yemen are obliged to stop and pay duty on approaching Hhijáz, has some trade. The governor (formerly appointed by the Sheríf of Mecca, and independent of the Porte) resides in a small island called Sarúm el Kakhmeh, just opposite to the town. (See Niebuhr's plate, tab. lviii.) A guard-house near the town, and a round tower, with some cannon at its foot, are the only remarkable objects. The roadstead between the island and the main is only open to the South, its Northern entrance being obstructed by coral-reefs.

Of Mekkah, which is placed, according to M. de la Badía's observations in $21^{\circ} 28' 17''$ North, and $40^{\circ} 24'$ East: the best description is that given by Joseph Pitts,* who performed his pilgrimage about A. D. 1690. "It is a town," he says, (p. 121,) "situated in a barren place, (about one day's journey from the Red Sea,) in a valley, or rather in the midst of many little hills. 'Tis a place of no force, wanting both walls and gates. Its buildings are (as I said before) very ordinary, insomuch that it would be a place of no tolerable entertainment, were it not for the anniversary resort of so many thousand Haggés (Hájjís) or pilgrims, on whose coming the whole dependance of the town (in a manner) is; for many shops are scarcely open all the year besides. The people, here, I observed, are a poor sort of people, very thin, lean, and swarthy. The town is surrounded for several miles with many thousands of little hills, which are very near one to the other. I have been on the top of some of them near Mecca, where I could see some miles about, but was not able to see the farthest of the hills. They are all stony rock and blackish, and pretty near of a bigness, appearing at a distance like cocks of hay, but all pointing towards Mecca. Some of them are half a mile in circumference, but all near of one height. Between these hills there is good and plain travelling, though they stand near one to another. There is upon the top of one of them a cave, which they term Hira, i. e. 'a blessing,' (hhará signifies the court round which a house is built, but Hhirá, or Hhari, for according to the Cárnús it may be pronounced in either way, is merely a proper name,) into which they say Mahomet did usually retire for his solitary devotion, meditation, and fastings; and here they believe he had a greater part of the Alcoran brought him by the Angel Gabriel. I have been in this cave, and observed that it is not at all beautified; at which I admired. About a mile out of Mecca is a very steep hill, and there are stairs made to go to the top of it, where is a cupola, (a cubbeh, or oratory,) under which is a cloven rock; into this, they say, Mahomet, when very young, viz. about four years of age, was carried by the Angel Gabriel,

* This man, who was made a very unwilling convert to Moham-medanism at an early age, exposed himself to considerable risks, and sacrificed some flattering prospects, in order to return home and again profess his real faith: his whole narrative bears the stamp of truth.

HEDJAS.

Ghumfudé, or Ghomfodé.

Mecca, Mekkié, Mucca.

Hira.

HEDJAS. who opened his breast, and took out his heart, from which he picked some black specks,* which was his original corruption; then put it into its place again, and afterward closed up the part; and that during this operation Mahomet felt no pain. Into this very place I myself went, because the rest of my company did so, and performed some erkaets, (rikáts;) as they did. This town hath plenty of water, and yet but few herbs, unless in some particular places. Here are several sorts of good fruits to be had, viz. grapes, melons, water-melons, cucumbers, pumpkins, and the like; but these are brought two or three days' journey off, where there is a place of very great plenty, called, if I mistake not, Habbash. Likewise sheep are brought hither and sold. So that, as to Mecca itself, it affords little or nothing of comfortable provisions. It lieth in a very hot country, insomuch that people run from one side of the streets to the other to get into the shadow, as the motion of the sun causes it. The inhabitants, especially men, do usually sleep on the tops of the houses for the air, or in the streets before their doors. Some lay the small bedding they have on a thin mat on the ground; others have a slight frame, made much like drink-stalls on which we place barrels, standing on four legs, corded with palm-cordage, on which they put their bedding. Before they bring out their bedding, they sweep the streets and water them. As for my own part, I usually lay open without any bed-covering, on the top of the house; only I took a linen-cloth, dipt in water, and after I had wrung it, covered myself with it in the night; and when I awoke, I should find it dry; then I would wet it again; and thus I did two or three times in a night. Secondly, I shall next give you some account of the Temple of Mecca. It hath about 42 doors (19 according to the Jihán-numá, p. 518) to enter into it, not so much, I think, for necessity, as figure; for in some places they are close by one another. The form of it is much resembling that of the Royal Exchange in London, but I believe it's near ten times bigger. 'Tis all open and gravelled in the midst, except some paths that come from certain doors, which lead to the Beat-Allah, (Beit-Allah, i. e. House of God,) and are paved with broad stones. The walks, or cloisters, all round are arched over head, and paved beneath with fine broad stone; and all round are little rooms, or cells, where such dwell as give themselves up to reading, studying, and a devout life, who are much akin to their dervises or hermits. The Beat-Allah, (i. e. the Ka'beh, or square building,) which stands in the middle of the Temple, is four square, about 24 paces each square, and near 24 feet in height. 'Tis built with great stone, all smooth and plain, without the least bit of carved work on it. 'Tis covered all over from top to bottom with a thick sort of silk. (kisweh sherifeh.) Above the middle part of the covering, are embroidered all round, letters of gold, the meaning of which I cannot well call to mind, but I think they were some devout expressions. (They are texts from the Corán relative to the Temple and the pilgrimage to it. D'Ohsson, son, Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman, V. 7, § 4. tom. iii. p. 221. 8vo.) Each letter is near two feet in length and two inches broad. Near the lower end of this Beat are large brass rings fastened into it, through which passeth a great cotton rope; and to this the lower end of the covering is tacked. The threshold of the door that belongs to the Beat, is as high as a man can reach; and therefore when any person enters into it, a sort of ladder-stairs are brought for that purpose. The door is plated all over with silver, and there's a covering hangs over it, and reaches to the ground, which is kept turned up all the week, except Thursday night and Friday, which is their sabbath. The said covering of the door is very thick embroidered with gold, insomuch that it weighs several score pounds. The top of the Beat is flat, beaten with lime and sand; and there is a large gutter, or spout, (the mizáb, or allún blúc, D'Ohsson, iii. 230.) to carry off the water when it rains; at which time, the people will run, throng and struggle to get under the said gutter, that so the water that comes off the Beat may fall upon them, accounting it as the dew of heaven, and looking on it as a great happiness to have it drop upon them: but if they can recover some of this water to drink, they esteem it to be yet a much greater happiness. Many poor people make it their endeavour to get some of it, and present it to the Haggas, for which they are well rewarded. In Mecca, there are thousands of blue pigeons, which none will affright or abuse, much less kill them; and they are, therefore, so very tame, that they'll pick meat out of one's hand. I myself have often fed them in the house where I resided, while there. They come in great flocks to the Temple, where they are usually fed by the Haggas: for the poor people of Mecca come to them with a little sort of dish made with rushes, with some corn in it, begging them to bestow something on Hammamet metta Nabee. (Hamámet mtá' n-nebí.) I have heard some say, that in their flight they'll never fly over the Beat-Allah, as if they knew it to be the House of God: but it is a very great mistake, for I have seen them oftentimes fly over it. This Beat-Allah is opened but two days in the space of six weeks, (only six times in the year, D'Ohsson, iii. 208.) viz. one day for the men, and the next day for the women. As I was at Mecca about four months, I had the opportunity of entering into it twice; a reputed advantage, which many thousands of the Haggas have not met with: for those that come by land make no longer stay at Mecca than 16 or 17 days. I found nothing worth seeing in it, (the Beit-Allah,) only two wooden pillars in the midst to keep up the roof, and a bar of iron fastened to them, on which hanged three or four silver lamps, (which are, I suppose, but seldom, if ever, lighted.) The floor of the Beat is marble, and so is the inside of the walls, on which there is written something in Arabic, which I had no time to read. The walls, though marble on the inside, are hung all over with silk, (striped brocade of pink and silver, according to Badía,) which is pulled off before the Haggas enter. Those that go into the Beat tarry there but a very little while, (viz. scarce so much as half a quarter of an hour,) because others wait for the same privilege; and while some go in, others are going out. After all is over, and all that will, have done this, the Sultán of Mecca, who is a Shirreef, (Sherif,) i. e. one of the race of Mahomet, accounts himself not too good to cleanse the Beat; and, therefore, with some of his favourites,

* "Three drops of blackish blood, the dregs of the contagion of original sin;" says Mahomet Rabadan, in Mahometism explained, (ii. 46.) where the whole story is given at length, as related by Mohammed to his nurse. It is remarkable, that the tradition there recorded, says nothing of any cleft in the rock. "We beheld Mahomet sitting upon the grass," says his nurse, (p. 44;) "they laid me very gently upon the ground," says Mohammed himself, (p. 45;) yet the cleft was shown to Pitts and his companions.

HEDJAS.

cloth wash and cleanse it. And first of all, they wash it with the holy water Zem Zem, (from the well called Zemzem,) and after that, with sweet water. The stairs, which were brought to enter in at the door of the Beat, being removed, the people crowd under the door, to receive on them the sweeping of the said water; and the besoms, wherewith the Beat is cleansed, are broken in pieces, and thrown out amongst the mob; and he that gets a small stick or twig of it, keeps it as a sacred relique. The compass of ground round the Beat, where people exercise themselves in the duty of To-waaf, (tawáf, i. e. circuit,) is paved with marble about 50 feet in breadth; and round this marble pavement stand pillars of brass, (the hhatim;) about 15 feet high and 20 feet distant from each other; above the middle part of which iron bars are fastened, reaching from one to the other, and several lamps made of glass are hanged to each of the said bars, with brass wires in the form of a triangle, to give light in the night season; for they pay their devotions at the Beat-Allah as much by night as by day, during the Haggas' stay at Mecca. . . . On each of the four squares of the Beat (i. e. opposite to each of its sides) is a little room built, and over every one of them is a little chamber, with windows all round it, in which chambers the Emaums, (Imáms;) together with the Mezzins, (Muezzins;) perform sallah (saláh, i. e. prayer) in the audience of all the people which are below. The four chambers are built one at each square (side) of the Beat, by reason that there are four sorts of Mahometans. The first are called Haniffee, (Hanifi;) most of them are Turks. The second, Shaffee, (Sháfí;) whose manners and ways the Arabians follow. The third, Hambelee, (Hhanbali;) of which there are but few. The fourth, Malekee, (Málíkí;) of which are those that live Westward of Egypt, even to the Emperor of Morocco's country. These all agree in fundamentals, only there is some small difference between them in the ceremonial part.

"About twelve paces from the Beat is (as they say) the sepulchre of Abraham, who, by God's immediate command, they tell you, built this Beat-Allah; which sepulchre is enclosed with iron grates. 'Tis made somewhat like the tombstones which people of fashion have among us, (he probably means altar-tombs,) but with a very handsome embroidered covering. Into this persons are very apt to gaze. A small distance from it, on the left hand, is a well, which they call Beer el zem zem, (Bír el zemzem, i. e. the well of Zemzem,) the water whereof they call holy water, and as superstitiously esteem it as the Papists do theirs. In the month of Ramadan, they'll be sure to break their Fast with it. They report that it is as sweet as milk; but for my part, I could perceive no other taste in it, than in common water, except that it was somewhat brackish. The Haggas, when they come first to Mecca, drink of it unreasonably, by which means they are not only much purged, but their flesh breaks out all in pimples; and this they call the purging of their spiritual corruptions. This Beer, or well of Zem Zem, is in the midst of the little rooms before-mentioned, at each square of the Beat, distant about 12 or 14 paces from it, out of which four men are employed to draw water, without any pay or reward, for any that shall deserve it. Each of these men have two leathern buckets tied to a rope, on a small wheel, one of which comes up full, while the other goes down empty." After saying that they often bathe themselves with the water of Zemzem, and carry some of it home, to give a little to their friends, he adds: "The reason of their putting such an high value upon the water of this well, is because (as they say) it is the place where Ishmael was laid by his mother Hagar."

The white stone at the foot of the North side of the Ka'beh, which is believed to be Ishmael's tomb, the golden belt, the treasury, and the cubbeh of Al 'Abbás, are not mentioned by Pitts. The belt is a broad black silk band, which is folded round the kisweh, or hangings for the Ka'beh, when sent to Mecca, and covered, like them, with texts from the Corán, embroidered in gold letters of enormous dimensions; when attached to the building, it forms a broad band round the upper part of it. The golden spout, four cubits long, is, as before observed, on the North side of "the Holy House," and carries off the rain water from its flat roof; it was at first only cased with gold, but was entirely formed of that precious metal by order of Ahhmed (Achmet) the first. The treasury and the cubbeh of Al 'Abbás are small buildings, similar to that placed over the well of Zemzem: the use of the first is obvious from its name; it is also called cubbeh shem' i-dán, (i. e. the repository of the candlesticks,) being the place where the sacred plate and vessels are kept; in the second, the holy mats and carpets are deposited. The Hhatim, or sacred enclosure, round the Ka'beh, is venerated as the place at which 'Ayisheh performed her devotions immediately after Mecca was taken by the Prophet. (D'Ohsson, iii. 76.)

"The sacred territory (Hharem) of Mecca extends," Territory. says Hhájí Khalífeh, (Jihánumá, p. 520,) "for three days' journey towards Medínah, seven miles towards Yemen and 'Irác, and ten towards Jiddah." Many of its hills are venerated on account of their connection with the history of the Patriarchs. To Jebel Abú Cubeis, the Almighty himself is believed to have brought the black stone, (hajar el aswad,*) afterwards set in a silver case at one corner of the Ka'beh, and supposed to be turned black "by reason of the sins of the multitudes of people who kiss it." (Pitts, p. 119.) There also Adam was buried; thence Abraham called all the sons of men to perform the pilgrimage; and there the Prophet split the moon in half by waving his hand, in commemoration of which a grotto, called Mahalli Shaccu'l camar, (the place of the splitting of the moon,) was formed near its summit. Batn-wadí, (i. e. Belly of the Valley, or Bed of the Stream,) between Safá and Merweh, the place where Hagar suffered such dreadful thirst, is now within the city, and must be visited by the pilgrims. There are likewise some public buildings, as the Sheríf's Palace, the Mahhkemah, or Court of Justice, with some Colleges, Baths, and Bezesteins. The aridity of the soil of Mecca is proverbial; and, except the Mu'allá bághcheh-sí, to the West of Mount Abú Cobeis, there is not a single garden in or near it. The valley of Miná, the plain of Muzdelifeh, and Mount Arafat, are about five miles from each other, and the first is two or three from Mecca; these are the most important places, next to the Ka'beh, which the pilgrims are required to visit, nor have they any right to the title of Hhájí, or Hhájí, (the word is spelt both ways,) till they have performed the appointed devotions on some part of that sacred hill.

Abou Koo-kays.

Batn Wadee

Mina.

Arafat.

* Supposed by M. de Hammer (Wiener Literatur. Zeitung, 1816, col. 108.) to be a meteoric stone, but reported by M. de la Badía to be volcanic basalt with crystals of feldspar.

HEDJAS. (Pitts, p. 138.) Plates of Mecca are given from drawings by Musulman artists in the Tableau de l'Empire Ottoman, and from his own designs by Don Diego de la Badia, in his travels, published under the assumed title of 'Alí Beg el 'Abbási.*

Medeena,
Medeenat
en nabee,
Medina tal
nabi.

Medínah (more fully, Medínatu 'l nabí, or Medínatu'l-rasúl, i. e. the city of the Prophet) is about 10 easy days' journey from Mecca, and is placed by M. Jomard, from the calculations of different Itineraries, in $25^{\circ} 13'$ North, and $40^{\circ} 3' 15''$ East, being about 225 miles North of it. "It is but a little town and poor," says Pitts, (p. 156,) "yet it is walled round, and hath in it a great Mosque," (of which Niebuhr has given a plate, (Beschreibung, tab. xxii.) and D'Ohsson, another,) "but nothing near so big as the Temple at Mecca. In one corner of the Mosque is a place built about 14 or 15 paces square. About this place are great windows fenced with brass grates. In the inside it is decked with some lamps and ornaments. It is arched all overhead." (It is the grated enclosure on the left hand in the second court, in Niebuhr's plate.) "I find some relate that there are no less than 3000 lamps about Mahomet's tomb; but it is a mistake, for there are not, as I verily believe, an hundred; and I speak what I know, and have been an eye-witness of. In the middle of this place is the Tomb of Mahomet, where the corpse of that bloody impostor is laid, which hath silk curtains all around it like a bed; which curtains are not costly, nor beautiful. There is nothing of his tomb to be seen by any, by reason of the curtains round it; nor are any of the Haggas permitted to enter there: none go in but the eunuchs who keep watch over it, and they only to light the lamps which burn there by night, and to sweep and cleanse the place. All the privileges the Haggas have, is only to thrust in their hands at the windows, between the brass grates, and to petition the dead juggler, which they do with a wonderful deal of reverence, affection, and zeal. My patron had his silk handkerchief stole out of his bosom, while he stood at his devotions here. It is storied by some, that the coffin of Mahomet hangs up by the attractive virtue of a loadstone to the roof of the Mosque; but believe me, 'tis a false story. When I looked through the brass grate, I saw as much as any of the Haggas; and the top of the curtains, which covered the tomb, were not half so high as the roof or arch; so that 'tis impossible his coffin should be hanging there. I never heard the Mahometans say any thing like it. On the outside of the place where Mahomet's tomb is, are some sepulchres of their reputed Saints; among which is one prepared for Christ Jesus, when he shall come again personally into the world. . . . Medina is much supplied by the opposite Abyssine country, which is on the other side of the Red Sea; from thence they have corn and necessities brought in ships; an odd sort of vessels as ever I saw, their sails being made of matting, such as they use in their houses and mosques to tread upon." The proper name of Medínah is Yathrib, but it can hardly be the Iatrippa of Ptolemy, as he places that town in $23^{\circ} 30'$

* The plate of the Ka'beh, published in Sale's Introduction to the Corán, is borrowed, without acknowledgment, from Reland, who copied his from an Arabian drawing brought from the East by Professor Enemann, of Upsala, having corrected the distances, &c. on the authority of Arabian writers. It is also copied, together with another plate of Reland's, without any hint as to their origin, in the third edition of Pitts's Religion and Manners, &c.; but this was probably done by the London booksellers without the author's knowledge.

North, nearly two degrees to the South of Medínah. HEDJAS. It owes its present name to the devotion of its inhabitants to Mohammed, who was by them received when he was driven from Mecca by the Coreish; he subsequently, therefore, often made it his residence, died, and was buried there; circumstances abundantly sufficient to establish its sanctity in the estimation of his votaries, who think the visiting it, after they have been at Mecca, a meritorious act, though it be not required as a necessary part of their pilgrimage. The account of his tomb, collected by Niebuhr during his residence among the Arabs, exactly agrees with that given above. The story about the grave left open for Seyyidná 'Isá, (Our Lord Jesus,) who will die at Medínah a short time before the end of the world, he at first supposed to be a fiction; but having been informed of it by respectable and credible Mohammedans, without any previous question on his part, he justly concludes that such a grave really exists, and that such is the creed of the Musulmans. The building above the grave of the Prophet contained vast treasures, the accumulated donations of the faithful, reserved to cover the expenses of a war against the infidels, whenever absolutely wanted; and the grave is guarded by 40 eunuchs, to prevent impurities from being thrown upon it, and to keep the devout from stealing strips of the sacred curtains to serve as amulets, which will preserve them from all calamities. The outside of the building containing the grave was covered, in Niebuhr's time, with rich green silk hangings, ornamented with texts embroidered in gold, in the style of the hangings which cover the Ka'beh. Beside the Prophet lie the bodies of the two first Khalifs, Abú Bekr and 'Omar, a circumstance signified in the drawing given to Niebuhr, by three small gilt parallelograms marked on the grating, on one side of the building containing these tombs. The coffins there appear suspended, one above the other; and this peculiarity that judicious traveller thinks, may have given rise to the absurd story of the suspension of Mohammed's coffin by means of a loadstone. (Beschreibung, p. 373.) The Mosque consists of two courts, surrounded, as usual, by a cloister; the centre of one being occupied by a circular building, which is doubtless used as a Cubbeh, or sepulchral chapel, and the other, on one side of which is the Cubbet-en-nebí, (Prophet's Tomb,) serving as a burial ground for his immediate followers. In the centre of it there is a minber, or pulpit, for the Khatib (Preacher) to pronounce the Khotbah, (prayer said on Friday for the Commander of the Faithful, Mohammed's temporal successor,) and the whole is, doubtless, used, like the sacred Mosque at Mecca, as an Hypæthrum, or uncovered temple. The style of this building is more clumsy and antique (if Niebuhr's artist can be trusted) than that of Mecca, which is probably owing to the frequent inundations to which that place is liable; the most modern edifice having been more than once destroyed. Another peculiarity, noticed by Niebuhr himself, is the use of crosses as ornaments on the top of some of the minarets, and also as loopholes in the lower part of the two largest.

Those resolute and fanatical reformers, the Wahhábies, who, in 1801, spoiled the holy tombs at Kerbelá, and carried off the accumulated offerings of the followers of 'Alí, in 1810 violated the sanctuary at Medínah, and sold or distributed its treasures; what their amount must have been, may be conjectured from a remarkable passage in M. Mengin's History of Mohammed 'Alí.

HEDJAS.

HEDON.

Spoliation
by the Wahabees.

"When 'Abd-allah ibn Su'úd, the last of the Wah-hábi chiefs, was presented," he says, (ii. 140.) "to the Páshá, (Mohammed 'Alí,) on his arrival at Caíro, he had a small ivory case in his hand, which contained, he said, the treasures which his father So'úd had taken from the tomb of the Prophet. On being opened, there were found in it three splendid MSS. of the Corán, the covers of which were set with rubies, 300 large pearls, and an emerald attached to a gold chain. The Páshá set his seal upon the box, and desired 'Abd-allah to deliver it himself to the Sultán on his arrival at Constantinople."*

Taif, Thayef.

Táyif, called the Garden of Mecca, is between 50 and 60 miles (two days' journey) to the South-East of that city. Placed on the declivity of Ghazwán, supposed to be a part of Mount Kharrah, in the midst of orchards and vineyards, it possesses advantages, the value of which must be peculiarly felt in the neighbourhood of so parched and barren a tract as the country round Mecca. Its great height may be inferred from its temperature, being, as Háji Khalífeh says, (p. 519,) the coldest place in Hhijáz, so that water sometimes freezes on the top of the mountain. It is extremely healthy, and supplies Mecca with abundance of fruit, particularly grapes, oranges, and lemons. The Poet Temirí says, that Zeíneb, the sister of the celebrated conqueror Hijáj, "luxuriously passed the winter at Mekkah, and the summer at Táyif." From its founder, the son of 'Abdu-'l Hhaí, it was called Wejj, till it was surrounded by walls, from whence it received the name of Táyifah, (an enclosure.) The territory in which it stands is called Bilád Thackíf, from the Tribe occupying it, or Wádí-el-'Abbás, from Mohammed's uncle, who lived there. (Golius in Alfergani Astron. 99.)

Bedr Honein.

Bedr Hhoneín, so called from the spring of Hhoneín, just opposite to it, and in order to distinguish it from another Bedr near Táyif, is a fertile valley, four days' journey distant from Rábigh, (Robogh, in Niebuhr's map,) and two from the road of the Syrian and Egyptian pilgrims to Mecca. It has two pools of spring water, on the banks of which palms, bananas, and grapes are cultivated. Near it, in the second year of the Hijrah, (A. D. 624,) Mohammed gained a very decisive victory over his enemies from Mecca, to which he often alludes in the Corán, (ch. iii. &c.) as a proof of his having received the divine aid. "The spot is now," says Háji Khalífeh, (p. 524,) "a palm grove, and below it are the tombs of the martyrs," (shuhadá mezár-lerí.)

"Khaíbar," says the same geographer, (p. 522,) "six days' journey North-East of Medínah, is a very populous place, remarkable for the abundance and excellence of its dates. The country round it is occupied by the Bení 'Anezeh," (a Tribe, part of which frequents the neighbourhood of Tedmor and Hhamáh,) "and its name signifies 'a castle' in the Jewish tongue." It was in Mohammed's time a very flourishing colony of Jews, from whom he met with great opposition, but he at last defeated them, and took Khaíbar in the seventh year of the Hijrah. (A. D. 628.) The inhabitants of this district were still Independent Jewish Tribes in Niebuhr's time. They consist of the Bení Mizzeyád, or Mizyád, Shahhám, and 'Anezeh; and live, like other Arab Tribes, by pasturage and plunder, being abhorred by the Mohammedans, and accused of many robberies in which they have no concern. They are uniformly called Jews by the Musulmans, but are disowned by their brethren established in Egypt, Syria, and the towns on the Red Sea. Niebuhr, therefore, suspects that they are Caraítes, who adhere to the written and reject the oral law, and are, for that reason, mortally hated by all the followers of the Rabbins.

Niebuhr, Reisebeschreibung, Kopenhagen, 1774, 2 vols. 4to.; Niebuhr, Beschreibung von Arabien, Kopenhagen, 1772, 4to.; Voyages d' Ali Beg el 'Abbási, Paris, 1814, 3 tom. 4to.; Háji Khalífeh, Kátib Chelebi's Jihán-numà, Constantinople, 1732, fol.; Mengin, Histoire de l'Egypte sous Mohammed Aly, Paris, 1823, 2 tom. 8vo.; Mouradgea D'Ohsson, Tableau Général de l'Empire Ottoman, Paris, 1788-1824, 7 tom. 8vo.; Pitts, Account of the Religion and Manners of the Mahometans, London, 1731, 12mo.; Morgan, Mahometanism Explained, London, 1723-1725, 2 vols. 8vo.; Pococke, Specimen Historiæ Arabum, Oxon. 1605, 4to.; Golii Alfergani Elementa Astronomica, Amstelod. 1669, 4to.; Sale, Korán, London, 1734, 4to.; Relandus, De Religione Mohammedicâ, Trajecti, 1717, 12mo.

HEDJAS.

HED-WIGIA.

Khybar.

HEDON, or HEYDON, a Borough and Market Town in the County of York, pleasantly situated on a small creek of the river Humber, in a level and fertile country, and until its haven became blocked up, and its commerce was principally transferred to Hull, a place of considerable note. Tradition states, that it was much exposed to the Danish ravages, and in later times it has twice suffered greatly from fire, once in 1656, when the larger portion of the town was consumed, and again about 1810, when many houses in the market-place were burned. The new buildings, in consequence of these calamities, have given an air of regularity to the streets, which they would not otherwise have possessed. On the South-East of the Town, a cut has been made, which secures such part of the old Haven as is remaining, but the occupations of its inhabitants are much more agricultural than maritime. Of the three Churches which Hedon once possessed, only one, that of St. Austin, is yet standing. The Borough returns two Members to Parliament. Population, in 1821, 902. Distant from Hull 8 miles East, from London 182. In the village of Paul, about two miles and a half nearly South of Heydon, is a considerable Dock-yard, in which 74-gun ships have occasionally been built.

HEDWIGIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Oc-tandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx four-toothed; corolla tubular, four-cleft; capsule three-lobed, three-celled, nuts solitary.

* This anecdote, though not very improbable, is not very probable, and M. Mengin would have done well had he told his readers on what authority it rests.

HED-
WIGIA. One species, H. balsamifera, a lofty tree, native of Hispaniola.

HEDY-
SARUM. HEDYCARYA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Icosandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx flat, eight or ten cleft; corolla none, anthers about fifty, sessile, bearded; female flower, calyx and corolla as the male; germens numerous; nuts six to ten.

One species, H. dentata, native of New Zealand; the nuts are sweet and eatable.

HEDYCHIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Monandria, order Monogynia, natural order Cannæ. Generic character: calyx one-leaved, double, five-parted; style very long; nectary two-leaved.

One species, H. coronarium, native of the East Indies.

HEDYCHRUM, in Zoology, a genus of stingless Hymenopterous insects, belonging to the family Chrysidæ, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Abdomen formed of three external segments, half circular, vaulted, smooth, and not toothed at the ends; jaws toothed on the inner side, tongue nicked; maxillary palpi much longer than the labial; scutellum simple, point-like.

The bodies of these insects are generally brilliant and metallic. They are found in various parts of Europe, and several species are natives of England.

The type of the genus is Chrysis lucidula of Fabricius.

HEDYCREA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rosaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-toothed, inferior; no corolla; drupe, soft, one-seeded, nut one-seeded, covered with fibres.

One species, H. incana, a small tree, with eatable fruit, native of Guiana.

HEDYOSMUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoeica, order Polyandria. Generic character: male flower, catkin naked, anther imbricated; female flower, calyx three-toothed; berry three-angled, one-seeded.

Two species, H. nutans and arborescens, natives of high mountains in Jamaica.

HEDYOTIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx four-toothed; corolla of one petal, funnel-shaped; capsule two-celled, many-seeded, inferior; partitions of the receptacle all joining.

Sixteen species, mostly natives of the East Indies.

HEDYPNOIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Polygamia-æqualis. Generic character: receptacle naked, punctated; calyx imbricated with scales at the base; down feathery, sessile, unequal.

All the species of this genus are natives of the Northern hemisphere. H. hispidum, hirtum, Taraxici, and autumnalis are natives of England. Eng. Bot.

HEDYSARUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx five-cleft; keel of the corolla transversely obtuse; pod many-jointed, joints one-seeded, compressed, mostly hairy.

An extensive genus, containing more than one hundred and fifty species, spread over both hemispheres. The most remarkable are, H. coronarium, the French Honeysuckle, native of Italy, a biennial; H. onobrychis, the Saintfoin, native of England, generally cultivated as food for cattle; H. gyrans, growing on the banks of the river Ganges, has engaged the attention of vegetable physiologists; the leaves are ternate, the smaller leaves are constantly in motion, in jerks similar to the minute hand of a clock; this wonderful motion is most active when the sun shines on the plant about noon.

HEED, v.

HEED, n.

HE'EDFUL,

HE'EDFULLY,

HE'EDFULNESS,

HE'EDLESS,

HE'EDLESSLY,

HE'EDLESSNESS,

HE'EDINESS.

To be careful or cautious, to mark, to attend to, to mind; to regard, to look after.

A. S. hed-an; D. hoeden; Ger.

huten. "Cavere, curare, accurare, attendere, to take heed, to have a care of, to attend, mark or give heed unto, to regard or look to." Somner. It admits of conjecture that heed is a consequential usage of head.

'To be careful or cautious, to

Who taketh hede

For fresh aray, as men may see

Without pride may oft be.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 126.

That man should be punished who little heedeth the maintenaunce of his tillage.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 54.

But now take hede what damage ensued to hym [Cesar] by his decre, wherin he cōmanded, that no man shulde be so hardy to approche or speke to hym.

Sir Thomas Elyot. The Governour, book ii. ch. v.

God wil not clene forsake his chosē, but he loueth wakeful & hedeful perones.

Udall. Mark, ch. xi.

Pamela, without show either of favour or disdain, either of heeding or neglecting what I had said, turned her speech to Mopsa.

Sidney. Arcadia, book ii.

For now the Duke of Bedford being dead,

He is ordain'd the Regent to succeed

In France, for five years: where he travailed

With ready hand, and with as careful heed.

Daniel. History of the Civil Wars, book v.

And Publicola took great head, not only to get his goods most justly, but had regard that those which he had, he spent most honestly in helping the needy.

North. Plutarch. -Solon and Publicola.

At other times he casts to sew the chace

Of swift wilde beastes, or runne on foote a race,

T'enlarge his breath, (large breath in armes most needfull)

Or els by wrestling to wex strong and heedfull.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

The bloody Borgio did conduct the rere,

Whom sullen Vasco heedfully attends;

To all but to themselves they cruel were,

And to themselves chiefly by mischief friends.

Davenant. Gondibert, book i. can. 3.

They that look into them, with less heedfulness and judgment then such a matter requires, are too apt to impute them to mysterious causes, above the reach of humane nature to comprehend.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxiii.

In humble dales is footing fast,

The trode is not so tickle,

And though one fall through heedless hast,

Yet is his misse not mickle.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. July.

Certainly if we do not buckle our spiritual armour close to us, but suffer the joints of it by our heedlessness to lye open, the Devil may easily wound us, wheresoever, and in whatsoever part he pleaseth.

Hopkins. Sermons, fol. 290.

And evermore that craven coward knight

Was at his backe with heartlesse heedinesse,

Wayting if he unwares him murther might:

For cowardize doth still in villany delight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 7

With tears and blandishments I sought to move

The Sire of heav'n, and thwart the Queen of love;

But at her suit the partial Thund'rer nods,

Rejects our prayers nor heeds the suppliant gods.

Lewis. The Thebaid of Statius, book v. l. 402.

HEDY-SARUM.

HEED.

HEED.

HEEL.

He that considers what Tacitus, Suetonius, Seneca, de Benef. l. iii. c. xxvi. say of Tiberius and his reign, will find how necessary it was for our Saviour, if he would not dye as a criminal and a traitor, to take great heed to his words and actions; that he did, or said, not any thing that might be offensive, or give the least umbrage to the Roman government.

Locke. Works, vol. ii. fol. 507. The Reasonableness of Christianity, &c.

And there he led him, and he taught him there,
And safely kept him with a watchful care;
The tender apples of our heedful eye,
Not more in guard, nor more securely lie.

Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

He seems in that place, (2 Pet. iii. 17.) if it be heedfully considered to have a special respect to St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, which indeed hath more of those δυσόνοια, or difficult passages, than any other of his epistles.

Bishop Bull. Works, vol. ii. p. 161. Discourse 3.

Nothing can be more evident than that there are many virtues which upon these accounts have a natural tendency to the increasing of man's estate, as diligence in our callings, the diligent hand maketh rich; heedfulness to improve all fitting opportunities of providing for ourselves and families.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, book ii. ch. iv.

Through every part most diligently pierce,
And weigh the sound and sense of every verse,
Unless your strictest caution you display,
Some words may lead the heedless bard away.

Pitt. Vida. Art of Poetry, book iii.

And therefore to have no apprehension of mischief at hand; nor to make a just estimate of the danger, but heedlessly to run into it, be the hazard what it will, without considering of what use or consequence it may be, is not the resolution of a rational creature, but brutish fury.

Locke. Of Education, sec. 115.

The gay Corinna, who sets up for an indifference and becoming heedlessness, gives her husband all the torment imaginable out of mere insolence, with this peculiar vanity, that she is to look as gay as a maid in the character of a wife.

Spectator, No. 194.

A thousand objects recall ideas, and excite sensations in my mind, which seem to be not perceived, or not heeded, by other men.

Hurd. On Retirement. Dialogue 2.

Now the most natural, and most obvious inference, from what you have been taught concerning the inspiration of the penmen of the Holy Scriptures, is, that therefore every christian is bound to give diligent heed to the reading, and the study of them.

Pearce. Sermon 11. vol. iii.

Attentive she doth scarce the sounds retain;
But to herself first cons the puzzling strain
And tracing, heedful, note by note repays,
The shepherd in his own harmonious lays.

Philips. Pastoral 5.

"I therefore," says he, "so run," not as uncertainly, not heedlessly and ignorantly, but with a perfect knowledge of the course I am to pursue, the rules I am to observe, the prize I am to aim at, and the conditions on which it is to be attained.

Porteus. Sermon 13. vol. ii.

To rush into the more immediate presence of God with the same heedlessness that you enter a tavern or a theatre, is a great indecency; and argues a levity of mind, incompatible with devotional sentiment.

Knox. On the Duties of the Preacher and the Hearer.

HEEL, v. A. S. hyldan; D. helden; Ger. halden. "A. S. hylding, curvatura, a bowing, hooking, crooking, bending, or inclining: a leaning, as we say, the ship *heel*s, when it lies or leans on one side." Somner, with whom Junius and Skinner concur.

The Spaniards do report, that there was once a very rich ship driven ashore here in a calm, for want of wind to work her. As soon as ever she struck she heel'd off to sea, 7 or 8 fathom water, where she lies to this day; not having attempted to fish for her, because she lies deep and there falls in here a great high sea.

Dampier. Voyage round the World, Anno 1684.

HEEL, *v.*HEEL, n.

HEEL-BLOCK,

HEEL-PIECE.

A. S. hele; D. heel; Sw. hael;Tooke thinks from A. S. hel an, tegere, to cover.

That part of the foot which is covered by the leg. To heel,

To use the heels, to perform with the heels, to dance.

Not headlong half so swift, doth coursing steeds bestyr their heels, Whan for their wager fast with all their force they flye with wheelles.

Phaer. Virgil. Aeneidos, book v. p. 113.

I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high Lauolt.

Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 96.

His looser garment to the ground did fall,

And flew about his *heel*s in wanton wize,

Not fit for speedy pace or hardy exercise.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 12.

But as we drew neerer unto him, he discerned we were not those he looked for, he took to his heels, and fled from his houses.

Sir Francis Drake Revived, fol. 27.

Between thee and the woman I will put

Enmitie, and between thine and her seed;

Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 181.

He was no whirligig lect'rer of the times,

That from a heel-block to a pulpit climbs.

Brome. On the Death of Mr. Josias Shute.

He thus: nor insolent of word alone

Spurn'd with the rustic heel his King unknown.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book xvii.

Major-Gen. Harrison, Col Croxton, and the forces of Cheshire, entered the place at their heels; and, being followed by the rest of the army, soon finished the dispute, and totally defeated the enemy.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 314.

And then it griev'd me sore to look

Just at the heel-piece of his book.

Lloyd. The Cobbler of Tessington's Letter.

HEFT, i. e. haft, q. v. that which is haved, hav'd, or haft, or held.

If the heft belonged to Walworth, the blade, or point thereof, at least, may be adjudged to Cavendish.

Fuller. Worthies. Suffolk.

HEFT, n. Mr. Steevens, who produces the passage from Gorges' Lucan, says, "Hefts are heavings, what is heaved up."

But if one present

Th' abhorr'd ingredient to his eye, make knowne

How he hath drunke, he cracks his gorge, his sides

With violent hefts; I haue drunke, and seene the spider.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 282.

But if a part of heaven's huge sphere

Thou chuse thy pond'rous heft to beare.

Sir Arthur Gorges. Lucan, 1614.

HEGEMONICAL, Gr. ἡγεμονικός, from ἡγεμῶν, a leader, from ἡγεῖσθαι, to lead.

Leading, guiding, directing.

The judgment being the hegemonical power, and director of action, if it be led by the overbearings of passion, and stor'd with lubricious opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and be peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular, as the conceptions erroneous.

Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xxiii.

HEGETER, in Zoology, a genus of Heteromerous, Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Blapsidæ.

Generic character. Body oval; thorax perfectly square, flat, margin reflexed; antennæ filiform, short, formed of eleven joints; maxillary palpi filiform. Wing none; legs simple, thin.

The type of the genus is the H. striatus of Latreille, pl. ix. fig. 11. found in Madeira. Their habits are like those of the Blaps.

HEEL.

HEGETER

HEIFER. HEIFER, A. S. heah-fore, heah-fur, juvenca, bu-cula, vitula; of uncertain Etymology: written by Skinner, Junius, and Minshew haifer: and Skinner derives from heah, high, and fore, gressus, a step, utpotè quæ altum graditur, i. e. superbè incedit toto tam corpore et cornibus adulta. Junius from the same, heah, and fore, a corruption of fodre, q. d. heah-fodred, summe pastam. The name is given to

A female calf, from the completion of its first year, till it has itself borne a calf.

Let the elders of that citie which is nexte vnto the slayne man, take an heyffer that is not laboured wyth, nor hath drawen in the yocke, and let them brynge her vnto a valeye, where is nether earing nor sowing, and strike of her head ther in the valey.

Bible, Anno 1551. Deuteronomium, ch. xxi.

But heare me, faire lady, I doe also love to see her, whom I shall choose for my heifar, to be the first and principall in all fashions.

Ben Jonson. The Silent Woman, act ii. sc. 5.

They mutter bloody deeds,
And, groaning deep, th' impetuous battle mix
While the fair heifer, balmy breathing, near,
Stands kindling up their rage.

Thomson. Spring.

HEIGH-HO.

When that I was and a little tyme boy,
with hey, ho, the winde and the raine:
A foolish thing was but a toy,
for the raine it raineth euery day.

Shakspeare. Twelfth Night, fol. 275.

BEAT. 'Tis almost fve a clocke cosin, 'tis time you were ready,
by my troth I am exceeding ill, hey ho!

Id. Much Adoe about Nothing, fol. 113.

For faine would I leave a single life
If I could get me a good wife,
Hai-ho for an husband, cries she.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 561.

HEIGHT, } Formerly also written heygth;
HE'IGHTEN, } by Milton, highth; (see HIGH);
HE'IGHTENING. } Goth. hauhitha; A. S. hihthe.

Tooke asserts it to be the third person singular heafeth, of the verb heaf-an, extollere, to heave or raise. Our other terms of admeasurement, length, breadth, width, depth, still retain the final h, probably from the difficulty of pronouncing the words without it. To heighten,

To heave or lift up, to raise, to elevate, to extol, to exalt, to promote.

Keepe the residue, and adde thereto thy height vnto thine eye, to the residue, and that shall be the very height of the toure.

Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie, fol. 269.

And stode vpon a foote on highte
Of borned golde.

Gower. Conf. Am. fol. 22.

But they within made a coutermure as highe as the olde walle: yet that coude not streche to y^e height of the toures made vpon the mount, so that the inner partes of y^e citie were subiect to shotte.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book iv. fol. 69.

That ye being rooted and grounded in loue myghte be able to comprehend wyth all saynctes, what is that breadth, and length, and depth & heygth.

Bible, Anno 1551. Ephesians, ch. iii.

And hact beneath trembling doth bend his top,
Till yold with strokes, geuing the latter crack,
Rent from the height, with ruine it doth fall.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

That rourne that the ryver enclosed not, (whych was the space of not aboue six hundred foote) was fortified with a hyll of a great heygth, so that the foote of it on both sydes touched the very brym of the ryuer.

Arthur Goldyng. Cæsar. Commentaries, book i. fol. 29.

And thus th' Almighty taught just Noah the same.
Three hundred cubits the whole length to be,
Fifty the breadth, the height (least of the three)

Full thirty cubits; only with one light
A cubit broad, and just so much in height.

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

This hill is of that heighth, that if a man be upon the top of it in the darke night season, at the reliefe of the fourth watch, he may behold the sunne arising.

Holland. Plinie, book v. ch. xxii.

I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine honor for his truth; who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new plants with dewes of flattery,
Seducing so my friends.

Shakspeare. Coriolanus, fol. 29.

The nature of imperfect animals is such, that they are apt to have but a dull and sluggish sense, a flat and insipid taste of good, unless it be quickned and stimulated, heightned and invigorated, by being compared with the contrary evil.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. iv.

Every sin against the duty we owe to our parents is unnatural: but they have their heightenings and diminutions from other accounts, and in this they have variety.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. i. rule 6.

After him came the Swiss Matthew Miriam, who, had he performed his heightenings with more tendernes, and come sweetly off with the extremities of his hatchings, had proved an excellent master.

Evelyn. Sculptura, ch. iv.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again behold the winter's weight
Oppress the labouring woods below.

Dryden. Horace, book i. Ode 9.

So far it [a life of religion] is from abridging us of any of our earthly delights, (as its enemies slanderously represent it) that it abundantly heightens them.

Sharp. Works, vol. i. Sermon 2.

But I delight not to dwell on the sad object; let this part of the landscape be cast into shadows, that the heightenings of the other may appear more beautiful.

Dryden. Dedication to Plutarch's Lives.

Such taxes [upon the necessities of life] when they have grown up to a certain height, are a curse equal to the barrenness of the earth and the inclemency of the heavens; and yet it is in the richest and most industrious countries that they have been most generally imposed.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book iv. ch. ii.

Fancy enervates, while it soothes, the heart,
And, while it dazzles, wounds the mental sight:
To joy each heightening charm it can impart,
But wraps the hour of woe in tenfold night.

Beattie. The Minstrel.

The adulation of Virgil, which has given so much offence, and of Horace, who kept pace with him, was, we see, but the authorized language of the times; presented indeed with address, but without the heightenings and priviledged licence of their profession.

Hurd. Works, vol. i. p. 332. Notes on the Epistle to Augustus.

HEIMIA, in Botany. a genus of the class Dodecandria, order Monogynia, natural order Lythrarieæ. Generic character: calyx six-cleft; corolla, petals six, alternating with the calyx; capsule four-celled, many-seeded; seeds minute.

Two species, natives of South America. Decandolle.

HE'INOUS, or } Fr. haineux, from haine, hate;
HA'INOUS, } haine from hair, and that from the HE'INOUSLY, } inus. odire, (odisse), to hate. Me-HE'INOUSNESS. } nage.

Hateful, detestable, odious, abominable; and, consequently, wicked or atrocious in the extreme.

He rong hem out a proces like a bell
Upon her foe, that highte Poliphete
So heinous, that men might on it spete.

Chaucer. Troilus and Cressida, book ii. fol. 165.

But well perceyung that theyr malicious purpose is to bring you to destruccion, ye like good Chrysten people auoidyng theyr false traines & grinnes, geue none eare to their haynous heresies, nor walke sedicious wayes.

Sir Thomas More. Works, book i. fol. 313. The Supplication of Soules.

HEIGHT.

HEINOUS.

HEINOUS.

HEIR.

This very lawe is often transgressed, and that haynously euen in the church: notwithstanding both the church, and also heathen men doe acknowledge it to be most iust and good.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 581. The True State of Ireland.

For he is all disposed to bloody fight,
And breathes out wrath and hainous crueltee;
Hard is his hap, that first fals in his ieopardie.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 5.

I would not spit to quench the fire they're in,
For they are guilty of much hainous sin.

Donne. Elegy 12. On the Loss of his Mistress's Chain.

The earle immediatlie followed, and as heinouslie as the lord iustice accused him of felonie, Kildare no lesse appealed him of treason.

Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, Anno 1294.

And verily this inward sorrow, & grieve being conceived in the heart fore the heynousnesse of sinne, if it be earnest, and unfained, is as a sacrifice to God, as the holy prophet David doth testifie.

Homilies. Sermon of Repentance, part ii.

On the other side he waited long for the repentance of the Canaanites, but would not destroy them, because their sins, though very heinous, admitted a place for repentance.

Sharp. Works, vol. i. Sermon 8.

You have received all that you have, and your own being from him, and why should you take it so heinously, if he is pleased to resume something back again.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, book i. ch. xvii.

There are many authors who have shown wherein the malignity of a lie consists, and set forth, in proper colours, the heinousness of the offence.

Spectator, No. 507.

How heinous must be the offence of them, who, not content with neglecting those religious ordinances which conduce to the preservation of good order and virtue, exercise that authority which their situation gives them, in preventing their dependents from the performance of duties in which they would otherwise delight; who force them from God, to employ them in luxury!

Knox. Works, vol. vi. p. 230. On the Duty of Servants.

A sinner truly affected with the heinousness of his guilt, and with the eternal punishment it deserves, will account all mortification to be a light burthen.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. iii. p. 364.

HEIR, v.	} Fr. hoir ; It. herede ; Sp. here-dero ; Lat. hæres ; which (says Junius) is commonly derived from the Gr. ἀρ-εῖν , capere , to take. Vossius leaves all in uncertainty. Dryden uses
HEIR, n.
HE'IRDOM, HE'IRESS, HE'IRLESS,
HEIR-APPARENT,
HEIR-LOOM,
HEIR-MATE,	To heir , to take, or receive, or be entitled to, as heir ; to inherit.
HE'IRSHIP.	Also applied to

One who takes, or receives, from any one deceased.

Com Edward, Eilred sonne, out of Normundie, & Hardeknoute's brother on his moder side,
Right heyre of þe lond, þorgh grace that may betide.

R. Brunne, p. 56.

Kepeth this child, al be it foule or faire,
And eke my wif, unto min home coming
Crist whan him list may senden me an heire,
More agreable than this to my liking.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5186.

And as they went,
Shaded with branching palme, each order bright,
Sang triumph, and him sang victorious king,
Son, heir, and lord, to him dominion giv'n,
Worthiest to reign.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 877.

If a gentleman contracts with a slave whom he thinks to be a free woman, with a bastard whom he thinks to be legitimate, with a beggar whom he thinks to be a great heiress, the contract is naturally valid.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. i. rule 7.

LEO. Whiles I remember

Her, and her vertues, I cannot forget
My blemishes in them, and so still thinke of
The wrong I did my selfe, which was so much
That heire-lesse it hath made my kingdome.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale, fol. 298.

FAL. I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why heare ye my masters, was it for me to kill the heire-apparent?

Shakspeare. Henry IV. First Part, fol. 57.

He [Edward the Confessor] of Almighty God obtain'd by earnest pray'r,
This tumour by a king might cured be alone:
Which he an heir-loom left unto the English throne.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11.

That himselfe there present, was that very Richard duke of Yorke, brother of that vnfortunate prince, king Edward the fift, now the most rightfull, and lineall suruiuing heire-male to that victorious and most noble Edward of that name the fourth, late king of England.

Speed. Henry VII. Anno 1493. book ix. ch. xx. sec. 42.

But this old peaceful prince [Latinus] as heaven decreed,
Was bless'd with no male issue to succeed:
His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate:
One only daughter heird the royal state.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, book vii.

Some time after the duke's return, Harold, son to earl Godwin, and heir of his great possessions and dependencies in England, was forced by a storm (as he at least pretended) upon the coast of Normandy.

Sir William Temple. An Introduction to the History of England.

Go, sordid slaves! one lordly master gone,
Like heir-looms go from father to the son.

Rowe. Lucan, book ix.

The last duke had no power to dispose of that duchy from his nephew; because, if the Salique law had place in Lorrain, it was unalienable from the next heir-male; if the feminine succession, then the duke himself had no title at all to it.

Sir William Temple. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 335.

An heir therefore is he upon whom the law casts the estate immediately on the death of the ancestor: and an estate, so descending to the heir, is in law called the inheritance.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. xiv.

The second offence, more immediately affecting the personal security of individuals, relates to the female part of his majesty's subjects; being that of their forcible abduction and marriage; which is vulgarly called stealing an heiress.

Id. Ib. book iv. chap. xv.

Thus an heir-loom, or implement of furniture, which by custom descends to the heir together with an house, is neither land, nor tenement, but a mere movable: yet being inheritable is comprised under the general word hereditament.

Id. Ib. book ii. chap. ii.

I shall first review the laws of heirship by proximity of blood; and, secondly, the laws of heirship by appointment, which is either by adoption during life, or by testamentary disposition.

Sir William Jones. A Commentary on Isæus, vol. ix. p. 302.

The HEIR is one, in Law, who succeeds by descent to lands, tenements, and hereditaments; being an estate of inheritance, the Estate must be Fee, and, by the Common Law, a man cannot be Heir to Goods and Chattels. Heir Apparent is he on whom the succession is so settled, that he cannot be set aside without altering the laws of inheritance. Heir Presumptive is he whose immediate right may be defeated by the contingency of a nearer Heir being born. Heir at Law, or Heir general, is he who, after his Father's or Ancestor's death, hath a right to, and is introduced unto, all his lands, &c. Special Heir is the issue in tail claiming per formam doni. Heir by custom is the Heir according to rules of descent prevailing in particular places, as Gavelkind, &c. Heir by devise is Heir under a Will. The Eldest Son, after the death of his Father, is, at Common Law, his Heir. If a man having issue only a daughter, dies leaving his wife with child of a son, which is afterwards born, the son after his birth is Heir to the land, but till then the daughter is to have it. There are some persons who cannot be Heirs, as a Bastard born out of lawful wedlock; an alien born out of the King's allegiance; nor may one made denizen by Letters Patent, though it is otherwise of a person naturalized by Act of Parliament; a man attainted of Treason or Felony; but Idiots or Lunatics may be Heirs. The Heir at HEIR. Law is bound by all conditions which run with the land. Goods and Chattels annexed to the Freehold, go to the Heir; so do deer in a Park, conies in a warren, doves in a dove-cote, fish in a pond or piscary, fruit growing at the death of the ancestor, roots within the soil, ancestral coat armour, pennons, tombstones, and monuments in a Church, for the Parson, though he has the freehold of the Church, and these be annexed to it, is liable to action if he takes or defaces them; Charters, Deeds, and Evidences of Lands, with the chests in which they are preserved; and any particular article by which the tenure is held, as an ancient horn where the tenure is by Cornage. A Creditor may sue either the Heir or Executor for his debt, but the Heir shall be reimbursed by the Executor if there be assets, and the personal Estate must pay to keep the inheritance free. Heir-looms are such Goods and personal Chattels as, by special custom, go to the Heir together with the inheritance; some of them we have mentioned above; and others appear to depend upon local and immemorial custom.

HEISTERIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Aurantia. Generic character: calyx large, coloured, five-cleft; corolla, petals five; seed vessel a drupe.

One species, H. coccinea, native of Martinique.

Surface.

HELENA, (the Island of Saint,) situated in longitude $5^{\circ} 43'$ West, latitude $15^{\circ} 55'$ South, in the great solitude of the Atlantic Ocean, is distant 400 leagues West from the Coast of Africa, and 600 from that of America. A mere point in the expanse of waters which surrounds it, this Island has only $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles in its greatest length, $6\frac{3}{4}$ in breadth, and a circumference of 28 miles. Perpendicular cliffs, from 600 to 1200 feet in height, form round it a natural rampart nearly impregnable. A chain of mountains, from East to West, cut across by deep narrow valleys, divide the Island into two unequal portions. At the Eastern extremity of this chain, the Peak of Diana rises to the height of 2700 feet above the level of the sea. Several other summits attain a nearly equal elevation. There are several landing-places or coves at the opening of the valleys: but, owing to the reefs of rocks and dangerous sea round the Island, the only secure anchorage is on the North-West, or leeward side, in James's Bay, where the Town is situated. The landing-place is like a half-moon, scarce 500 paces wide between the two points. Close by the sea-side are strong batteries extending from one end of the bay to the other. The lofty headlands between which the town is placed, are Rupert's Hill on the East, and Ladder Hill on the West. The road from the landing-place leads over a drawbridge between double rows of guns, and through an arched gateway, under the rampart, into the Town. The Government House, Theatre, and Church are good edifices, but the dwelling-houses of the better class, who reside chiefly in the country, are seldom occupied, except when the shipping has arrived, on which event every house becomes a hotel. The heights commanding James's Bay, as well as every accessible portion of the coast, are all strongly fortified.

Town.

Soil and productions.

A rich mould forms the general soil of the country, and nourishes a great variety of plants. There are about a dozen species of indigenous trees, including three species of gum-tree, now nearly extirpated, the red-wood, a kind of ebony, and the cabbage-tree. This last is a palm, affording very valuable timber. The furze, introduced from Europe, and the red-wood furnish the chief supply of fuel. The choicest flowers of Europe and Africa here attain full perfection, and the most valuable fruits and vegetables of the Old World are cultivated with success. Towards the sea the Island presents a picture of absolute sterility; but vegetation increases from the shores to the heart of the Island, where it is in the highest degree luxuriant. The lands are almost wholly devoted to pasturage, on account of the great demand for live stock, and the gardens to culinary roots and vegetables. Experiments, not without success, have been made on the capabilities of the soil and climate: the sugar-cane, cotton-tree, and indigo have been advantageously cultivated, but still the great purpose of rearing cattle and useful herbs has finally predominated. Not even the cultivation of corn has been much attended to. The vegetables produced here are said to be peculiarly serviceable in scorbutic diseases. The British oak has been introduced, and is found to grow rapidly. Figs, oranges, and pines grow well near the shore, and English fruit, including even the apple, are produced in abundance. The yam plantations were formerly extensive, but that vegetable has given way to the potato, which is generally preferred, as the equability of the climate allows, in general, two crops to be gathered in the year. The whole surface of the Island is about 30,000 acres, of which 14,000 are bare rock or otherwise unimprovable, 8000 are waste lands, fit for trees or pasture, and only 3000 are considered fit for the plough; but the quantity of productive soil may evidently be increased by the proper distribution of water, and the construction of terraces to catch the vegetable mould as it is washed along.

The hills abound with springs, which, however, are so widely apart as to furnish no large stream, and many of them dry up in the long absence of rain. One of these rivulets falls from a height of 260 feet perpendicular, forming in the rainy season a fine cascade. Two streams, one in Fisher's Valley, the other at the Briars, are thought to increase in volume after a continuance of dry weather. Severe droughts were formerly observed to take place once in seven or eight years, but we have not, latterly, heard of their recurrence. Great apprehensions appear to have been felt on the Island that the destruction of the woods lessened the quantity of rain. The theory which cherished the alarm, however, is now called in question, while, on the other hand, the plantations of European timber, oaks, and firs are rapidly increasing. The rain falls here with great regularity, the annual quantity being about 33.38 inches, and no part of the year can be called a dry season.

Water.

The climate of this Island is unusually temperate and serene; hurricanes or thunder-storms are hardly known. The summer temperature is, in general, about 72° , consequently lower than in England, and it never exceeds 80° ; while in winter the thermometer never sinks below 55° . Fresh breezes continually blow from the sea, and there is but a single instance in the History of the Island of a vessel being either wrecked or weather-bound in the harbour. The climate appears to be particularly well adapted to the European constitution, and disease is rare. In 1823, the first and only year in which an official medical return was made from the Island, the deaths were only one per cent., in a population of 4381, including the garrison.

Climate.

The base of the Island is basalt, and the lava and scoria, abundantly scattered over it, attest its volcanic

Minerals.

HELENA.

origin. The geological character of the Island increased the alarm occasioned in 1736 by a slight shock of an earthquake, which was repeated afterwards in 1782. In a philosophical account of St. Helena, written in 1805, the writer attempted to disprove the likelihood of such a calamity recurring; but in September, 1817, a smart shock, with a loud explosion, awakened the former fears of the inhabitants. Good lime-stone, being a concretion of shells and sand, is found in sufficient abundance. During the search for this useful mineral some marcasites were found which were mistaken for gold; and, in consequence, a reward of £250 was offered for the discovery of a mine of this precious metal, but without effect. Iron is said to have been found, but the ores of this metal would be worthless from the want of abundant fuel.

stock. The cattle on the Island are of the English breed, and, in general, of a good description. Goats had formerly multiplied to a surprising degree, and used to be hunted as game: they were afterwards divided into ranges or flocks, of which proprietors had a right to a certain number. They proved, however, so injurious to plantations and to a regular rural economy, that in 1810 their destruction was resolved on, and none are allowed at present to rove at large. Pheasants and partridges are abundant as well as rabbits: but the guinea-fowl is nearly extirpated. Great improvements have, it is said, been made in the husbandry of the Island, from the exertions of the present Governor, (Walker,) who has established Agricultural and Horticultural Societies.

There are neither snakes nor toads on the Island. In the valleys near the sea, scorpions and centipedes are found, but their sting is not dangerous. Bees have, at different times, been brought to the Island, but have, in every instance, disappeared; being carried off, probably, by high winds. Of fish it is computed that 76 species frequent the coast. Flying fish, of more than ordinary size, are frequently found upon the rocks. Whales are often seen, and have, in a few instances, been killed by South-sea whalers in the roads. Turtle make their appearance on the shores between December and March. The coast of the Island abounds in sea-fowl, which deposit their eggs in the cliffs and detached rocks round the coast.

Population

From the inefficiency of slave labour, it was thought advisable to procure from Canton, in 1810, 50 Chinese labourers, and their number was shortly after increased to 200. Subsequent arrivals made them amount to above 600, a number which has since declined. The free negroes are found to increase but slowly, and are said to be of an indolent and licentious character. The following Table shows the state of the population in the years 1805 and 1823 respectively.

	1805.	1823.
White inhabitants	504	1201
Civil and military establishment	1314	911
Slaves	1231	1074
Free Blacks	329	729
Chinese	—	442
Lascars	—	24
	3378	4381

The importation of slaves ceased in 1792; but no direct attempt was made to abolish slavery in the Island till the Government of Sir H. Lowe, who, in 1818, introduced a law that the children of female slaves, born after Christmas in that year, should be free, but that they should be considered as the apprentices of their mothers' proprietors, males till 18, and females till 15 years of age. At the same time regulations were made enforcing the attendance of free-born children at the schools.

The number of vessels which touched here annually for 19 years, previous to 1805, was 165; it is, probably, at present much increased. From the nature of the trade-winds, within the limit of which the Island is placed, it is hard to make it on the outward-bound voyage; but as a resting-place for vessels homeward-bound, it is invaluable. For this reason the East India Company is willing to pay a large sum annually for its support, for the Island has never been able to bear its own expenses, and even provisions were, till recently, sold by the Company at discount prices; for as the supply of fresh meat to the shipping is of paramount importance, no one is allowed to kill an ox without the Governor's permission. Water for the ships is conducted from the hills to a large reservoir near the landing-place, and the supply has been lately increased so as to furnish 300 tons in 24 hours. The water, as well as the vegetables of the Island, is said to be singularly efficacious in removing scorbutic complaints.

When this Island was discovered in 1502, the interior was one great forest, and the gum-trees grew to the very edge of the precipices which overhang the sea. Fernando Lopez, a Portuguese, who, in 1513, obtained leave to live in exile at St. Helena, in commutation of a heavier sentence, was the first to stock it with goats, hogs, pheasants, peacocks, partridges, and domestic fowls of various kinds. He planted a variety of fruit-trees and esculent vegetables. The Island remained in the possession of the Portuguese until, being forgotten by them while they were engaged in the attempt to colonize the South-East of Africa, it came into the hands of the Dutch, and was again abandoned by them in 1651, for the Cape of Good Hope. The English then took possession of it, and, from that time, until the Cape of Good Hope also fell into their power, it was the only watering-place in the Atlantic Ocean possessed by the British East India Company.

The sovereignty of St. Helena is vested in the East India Company by repeated charters. The supreme and executive authority is vested in the Governor and a Council, composed of two senior Civil servants. These possess the legislative and judicial powers, and represent the Lords proprietors in all their concerns. The military force consists of a battalion of artillery and one of infantry, with four companies of militia, composed principally of negroes.

St. Helena has acquired no small share of Historical importance from its being selected for the place of Napoleon's captivity. That extraordinary man arrived there on the 15th October, 1815. Longwood, the highest and most extensive plain on the Island, being 1760 feet above the sea, was shortly after selected as the place of his residence. He was pleased with the choice, and for some time appeared to bear his reverses with perfect equanimity. His health, however, rapidly declined, and he breathed his last on the 5th May, 1821. His remains were interred in a spot near Longwood, which he had himself selected for his grave, and the turf which covers him is shaded by a few willows. The arrival of Buonaparte was a most unexpected event at St. Helena, and caused no small alarm, as the conversion of the Island into a State prison was likely to diminish the intercourse with shipping, from which the inhabitants derived their chief gains. The Island, how-

HELENA.

History

Government.

HELENA. ever, was not absolutely ceded to Government as was expected; the Company retained all its rights, except that of appointing the Governor: at the same time the increase of population which ensued, with the large expenditure of public money, gave such a stimulus to industry as more than overbalanced the loss arising from the restricted communication with trading vessels.

See Forster's and Valentia's Voyages; Beatson's General Tracts on Saint Helena; Brooke's History of Saint Helena, London, 1823.

HELENIS, in Zoology, a genus of chambered univalve shells, established by De Montfort.

Generic character. Shell univalve, free, chambered, twisted in a flat disk; spire apparent, excentric on each side; whorls, front edge keeled; mouth very long, covered by a dissepiment pierced with small pores like a sieve.

De Montfort believes that each pore of this shell is furnished with a distinct animal; there is no other shell which has a similar kind of animal, and there is more reason to think that it is an internal shell like the bone of a Cuttlefish.

The type of the genus is H. spatosa, which is a white shell about two lines in diameter. Fichtel figures the species under the name Nautilus aduncus, pl. xxiii. fig. Aa.

HELENIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Superflua. Generic character: calyx one-leaved, many-parted; radial florets semitrifid; receptacle naked, chaffy; seeds villose; down five-leaved, chaffy.

Three species, natives of Portugal and North America.

HELEUS, in Zoology, a genus of Heteromerous Coleopterous insects, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Antennæ gradually enlarging; head exposed, placed in a nick in the front edge of the thorax; the body is oval and flattened. This genus is nearly allied to Cossyphus. Latreille describes six species, all found in New Holland and the Pacific Islands. The type is H. perforatus.

HELE, to cover, see HEAL, and HILL, v.

HELIACAL, } Lat. heliacus, from the Gr. ἥλιος,

HELIACALLY, } the sun. See the Quotations below explaining the usage of the word.

The cosmical ascension of a star we term that, when it ariseth together with the sun, or the same degree of the ecliptick wherein the sun abideth: and that the heliacal, when a star which before for the vicinity of the sun was not visible, being further removed, beginneth to appear.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iv. ch. xiii.

Now from the rising of this star, [Sirius] not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the raies of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular daies. Id. Ib.

The heliacal rising of a constellation is, when it comes under the rays of the sun, and begins to appear before daylight.

Dryden. A Discourse on Epick Poetry.

He [Orion] is tempestuous in summer, when he rises heliacally. Id. Ib.

HELIANTHEMUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Monogynia, natural order Cisti. Generic character: calyx five-leaved, the two external leaves smallest; corolla, petals five; capsule three-valved. A genus divided from Cistus. Decandolle. Prod.

HELIANTHUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Frustranea, natural order Corymbifera. Generic character: calyx imbricated, scales spreading, leafy; receptacle chaffy, flat; down two-seeded, caducous.

VOL. XXIII.

A genus of more than thirty species, mostly natives of North America. H. annuus, the common Sunflower, native of Mexico, and H. tuberosus, the Jerusalem Artichoke, native of Brazil, are well-known inhabitants of English gardens.

HELICIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx four-cleft, inferior, small; corolla, petals four, linear, spirally revolute; drupe ovate, one-furrowed; germen ovate.

One species, H. Cochinchinensis, native of the woods of Cochinchina. Loureiro.

HELICONIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Musæ. Generic character: spathe general and partial; calyx none; corolla, petals three; nectary two-leaved; capsule three-celled, cells one-seeded.

Of this genus of magnificent herbaceous plants, ten species have been described natives of the West Indies and South America.

HELICTERES, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphia, order Decandria, natural order Malvaceæ. Generic character: calyx tubular, obliquely five-cleft; corolla, petals five; germen on a long foot-stalk; style slightly five-cleft; capsules five, one-celled, many-seeded, twisted spirally.

Thirteen species have been described, shrubs and small trees, natives of the East and West Indies.

HELIGOLAND (the Island of) lies on the coast of Holstein, at nearly an equal distance (28 miles) from the mouths of the Jahde, the Weser, the Elbe, the Eider, and the Hever, which last runs between the Island Nordstrand and the Peninsula of Eiderstadt. Its situation near the entrances of so many rivers, and on a low and dangerous coast, renders it of great importance as a station for pilots. It is said by some to derive its name, which signifies Holy Island, from its having been the seat of worship of the goddess Phoseta, who was adored by the Sicambri; while others suppose it originated in the early conversion of the Island to Christianity.

Heligoland, two miles in circumference, may be divided into the rock or cliff, or, as it is called, the Land, from 84 to 220 feet high, to which a flight of steps conducts, and on which the wealthier inhabitants reside in about 350 low houses built of brick; and the Downs, or more properly the beach, where the poorer and more numerous portion of the population dwells, and often suffers from the inundations of the sea. A narrow channel separates the rocks from sand-banks, stocked with rabbits, which with birds of passage afford the islanders a considerable proportion of their animal food. These rabbits, it is said, are reduced in winter to feed on fish bones. Whenever a flight of thrushes, larks, snipes, or woodcocks, alights on the Island, the inhabitants immediately commence the destruction of them, and forget every other occupation, so long as game is to be found; even if assembled in church when the birds arrive, the whole congregation rushes out immediately with the pastor at its head, and the sport is begun without delay. This Island, which in the IXth century had nine Parishes, and supported two Monasteries, is now obliged to draw almost all its provisions from the main. The sea has swallowed up the fields and meadows, so that there are no longer either cows or horses in the Island; a few sheep, tethered to prevent their falling

HELIANTHUS.

HELIGOLAND.

HELIGO-
LAND.

down the cliffs, find hardly grass enough to support them. A little oats, barley, and pulse is reared in patches. The sea daily undermines and gains further on the rock, the ultimate destruction of which appears inevitable. The downs, however, or borlande, appear to increase, so that the rock of Heligoland may hereafter be replaced by a low and extensive sand-bank. Tradition assigns the years 800 and 1300 as the dates of the greatest encroachments made on the Island by the waters of the ocean. But the same calamity was repeated in 1664 and 1720.

Heligoland has two small havens on the North and South defended by batteries; they admit small vessels only. The lighthouse, formerly kept by the Ham-burghers, is now supported by the English. The tower is a massive and handsome edifice, with iron staircase and gallery; the light, made by a coal fire, is equal to the lustre of 20 Argand lamps, and is said to be visible at the distance of 30 miles. The tower itself is a mark of great importance to seamen. As the vessels which enter the Elbe, Weser, Eiser, and Yade make this point first, the Island is the station whence the navigation of those seas may be most easily watched, and the pirates of the middle Ages were as well acquainted with its advantages as are the British of the present day.

It is possible to walk round Heligoland at low water on the beach; but the attempt is attended with danger, owing to the frequent falling of rocks undermined by the sea. Shipwrecks are here spoken of as especial favours of Providence, and a tempestuous winter is as welcome to the inhabitants as a good harvest to the husbandmen of other Countries. This bleak and uninviting rock has had in latter times many illustrious visitors. Gustavus IV., the Comte d'Artois, (Charles X., the present king of France) and the Duc de Berri spent a few months here. The price of lodgings and provisions on the Island at that period were extravagantly high, and the influx of money is said to have been prejudicial to the simple manners of the people.

The inhabitants of Heligoland, 2200 in number, are of Frisian descent, and the old Frisian dialect, which is rapidly disappearing in Friesland, is still spoken here. The people are in most respects as rude as the rock they dwell upon. An old and sensible custom renders it infamous for a man to marry a foreign woman; without this provision the chances of matrimony would be unequally divided between the sexes. The women remain always at home, performing all the labour of the field and of domestic economy; while the men are at sea, or if not, either watching from the cliffs the approach of vessels, or lying in a state of intoxication. They are all fishermen or pilots, and their practised eyes can distinguish the ships of different nations while they are as yet hardly visible to the landsman. The Islanders are a tall, strong people, with handsome features and florid complexions. They convey an adequate idea of the physical superiority of the ancient Normans. This Island belonged to the crown of Denmark as a dependancy of Holstein, until 1807, when it was taken possession of by the British, to whom it was finally ceded by Denmark in 1814. During the war an English garrison of 500 men was maintained here. Great magazines of colonial goods were formed on the Island in order to be smuggled to the Continent as occasions offered, and it is so favourably situated to be the centre of a contraband trade, that it rendered nearly nugatory the exclusive system in the North of Europe. At that time the population was from 4000 to 5000. The Governor and garrison have been withdrawn, only a Commandant residing there as the British Consul. The people are allowed to govern themselves. The Lighthouse is in $7^{\circ} 53' 13''$ East longitude, and $54^{\circ} 11' 34''$ North latitude.

HELIOCARPUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Dodecandria, order Digynia, natural order Cisti. Generic character: calyx four-leaved; corolla, petals four; style simple; capsule two-celled, compressed, longitudinally radiated on both sides.

One species, H. Americanus, native of Vera Cruz. Decandolle.

HELIOPHILA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetradynamia, order Siliquosa, natural order Cruciferae. Generic character: pod entire or moniliform; cotyledons incumbent, curved, linear; the short filaments toothed at the exterior of the base when the pod is entire.

Nineteen species, herbaceous plants, mostly natives of the South of Africa.

HELIOPSIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Superflua, natural order Corymbiferae. Generic character: calyx imbricated, scales subovate; rays large, linear; receptacle chaffy, conical, chaff lanceolate; seeds four-sided; down none.

One species, H. laevis, native of North America. Nuttall.

HELIOTROPIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia, natural order Boraginæ. Generic character: corolla salver-shaped, five-cleft, with intermediate teeth, orifice of the tube naked; stigma emarginate.

More than eighty species have been described, natives of both hemispheres: South America possesses a large proportion. H. Peruvianum, the Peruvian Turnsole, is generally cultivated for its very fragrant flowers.

HELIX, in Zoology, a genus of spiral, univalve shells, established by Linnæus for all the univalve shells which have semilunar mouths, but restricted by Lamarck to the terrestrial mollusca, which have globular shells, while Ferussac has extended it to all the terrestrial mollusca which have four retractile tentacula; but as he appears to mistake a family for a genus, we shall use Lamarck's character, so modified as to contain his genus Carocolla.

Generic character. Shell globular or conical; spire short, conical; whorls rapidly enlarging; last generally keeled when young, and sometimes so when full grown; the mouth semilunar, the edge of the mouth reflexed and thickened internally; axis perforated, often covered when full grown.

The species of this genus are very numerous, and every traveller who takes the trouble to save the kinds which fall in his way, is almost sure of adding to their number; for more than a dozen new species have been added by the last importation from Madeira alone.

De Montfort and others have divided this genus into several genera, as Caprinus, Polydontis, Acavus, Zonites, and Cepolus.

Several experiments have been made on the property which snails possess of reproducing a part which may have been amputated. Spallanzani was the first to observe that when the head was cut off, it was, after a short time, reproduced. Adanson, in a most positive manner, denied this fact, after trying the experiment on 1500

HELIGO-LAND.
—
HELIX.

HELIX. individuals; but he admitted that the wound would heal if the head was left attached by a portion of the skin. Cotte and Valmont de Bomare make the same remark. Bonnet, on trying the experiment, succeeded. In his Memoirs, published in the Journal de Physique, vol. x., he gives a figure of the amputated part and of the progress of the reproduction of the head; he compares the growth of the head to a kind of vegetation. The experiments were repeated by Mr. George Farenne, who published an account of them in 1808.

Like most terrestrial shells, only a few species have been found fossil. Brongniart has described seven species, found in the neighbourhood of Paris.

HELIXANTHERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx oblong, truncated; corolla five-parted; anthers spiral; berry enclosed in the calyx.

One species, H. parasitica, growing on cultivated trees in the gardens of Cochinchina; the calyx, flowers, and berry are scarlet coloured. Loureiro.

HELIXARION, in Zoology, a genus of terrestrial spiral univalves, belonging to the family Helicidae, established by Ferussac; very nearly allied to the Vitrinae, and forming the passage from them to the Parmacellæ.

Generic character. Shell very thin, transparent, brittle, polished externally; spire nearly flat; whorls few, rapidly enlarging; operculum none; animal much larger than the shell, truncated behind; neck covered with a shield.

Ferussac describes two species, both found in New Holland, H. Cuvieri, and H. Freycinetti, figured in his beautiful and costly work on land and fresh water shells.

HELL, } A. S. helle; D. hel; Ger. helle.
HE'LLISH, } Skinner and Wachter concur with HE'LLISHLY, } other Etymologists, (see Wachter,) that hell is from A. S. hel-an, Ger.
HE'LLISHNESS, } hullen, to cover. Tooke makes it
HE'LLWARD, } the past participle of the A. S. verb HE'LLY. } hel-an. Old English, to hele, heal, or hil. See also the Quotations from Verstegan, Clarke, and Horsley.

Any place or some place covered over. Applied, emphatically, to the place of the damned; and, to

1. An obscure dungeon in any of our prisons.
2. The dark place into which a tailor throws his shreds.
3. A place under the Exchequer Chamber, where the King's debtors were confined. Steevens, who produces the passages from the Counter Rat, and Decker's Play.

Also to the place or hole to which those who were caught in the game of Barley-break were brought, as in the extract below from Suckling. See BARLEY-BREAK, subjoined to the word Break.

Spenser uses hell as a verb.

& vor holi Thursday was ney, thoughtes he adde inowe,
Leste the deuelen of helle al quic to helle him drowe.

R. Gloucester, p. 506.

Sodom & Gomor fulle vile synne þat stank,
Boþe for euer more down tille helle þei sank.

R. Brunne, p. 289.

In wonderwýse holý wrýt. telleth how þei fullen
Some in erþe some in aier. some in helle dupe
Ac Lucifer lowest. lith of hem alle.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 19.

Out of þe west as it were. a weynche as me þhouhte
Cam walkýnge in þe way. to helleward he lokede.

Id. Ib. p. 315.

It is better to thee to enter crokid into everlasting lyf than to have tweyn feet and be sent into helle of fire that nevere schal be quenched.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. ix.

It is better for the to goo halte into lyfe, then hauyng two fete to be cast into hell, into fyre that neuer shal be quēched.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Wherfore, as sayth Seint Anselme; ful great anguish shal the sinful folk have at that time: ther shal be the sterne and wroth juge sitting above, and under him the horrible pitte of helle open, to destroy him that wolde not beknownen his sinnes.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, vol. ii. p. 289.

To heare those hellishe fiendes in raging blasphemie,
Defye our onely Sauour, were this no miserie.

Gascoigne. Flowers. Deuise of a Maske.

Else would the waters ouer flowe the lands,
And fire deuoure the ayre, and hell them quight,
But that she holds them with her blessed hands.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 10.

Me miserable! which way shall I flie
Infinite wrauth, and infinite despaire?
Which way I flie is hell; myself am hell;
And in the lowest deep a lower deep
Still threat'ning to devour me opens wide,
To which the hell I suffer seems a heav'n.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 75.

Hell hath like apt appellation, (sc. as heaven) as being helled over, that is to say, hidden or covered in low obscurity.

Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, ch. vii.

In Wood-street's hole, or Poultry's hell.

The Counter Rat, a Poem, 1658.

Tailors ——— 'tis known

They scorn thy hell, having better of their own.

Decker. If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it, 1612.

Love, Reason, Hate, did once bespeak
Three mates to play at barley-break;
Love, Folly took; and Reason, Fancy;
And Hate consorts with Pride; so dance they;
Love coupled last, and so it fell
That Love and Folly were in hell.

Sir John Suckling.

The fear whereof, O how doth it torment
His troubled mynd with more then hellish paine!
And to his fayning fansie represent
Sights never seene, and thousand shadowes vaine,
To breake his sleepe, and waste his ydle braine.

Spenser. Hymn 1. In honour of Love.

No snaky Fiends with more remorseless spight
Reud one another's breasts, than man doth man's:
Wounds, shrieks, and gaspings are his proud delight;
And he by hellishness his prowess scans.

Beaumont. Pysche, can. 11. st. 27.

Free Helicon and franke Parnassus hilles,
Are hellie haunts, and ranke pernicious illes.

Mirror for Magistrates, fol. 455.

Whenever the place of torment is spoken of, the word hell, in the original, is always Gehennah: but when only the state of the dead in general is intended, 'tis always expressed by a quite different name, which though we render by the same word hell, yet its signification is at large the invisible state.

Clarke. Sermon 14. vol. v.

Still my revenge shall take its proper time,
And suit the baseness of your hellish crime.

Croxall. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book vi.

Be all but virtuous; Oh! unwise to live
Unfashionably good, and hope to thrive!
Trees that aloft with proudest honours rise,
Root hell-ward, and thence flourish to the skies.

Brome. Epistle to Mr. Fenton.

These solemn vows and holy offerings paid
To all the phantom-nations of the dead;
Be next thy care the sable sheep to place
Full o'er the pit, and hell-ward turn their face.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book x.

The English word "hell," in its primary and natural meaning, signifies nothing more than "the unseen and covered place;" and is properly used, both in the Old and New Testament, to render the

HELL

Hebrew word in the one, and the Greek word in the other, which denote the invisible mansion of disembodied souls, without any reference to sufferings.
Horsley. Sermon 20. vol. ii.

From Anger, fell Revenge, and Discord free
He [the King of Righteousness] bad war's hellish clangour cease.
Smart. Ode to Dr. Webster.

HELL, in Composition.

And after sewed an helle-brethe, as hit semed, and derkenesse, so that the monekes toke holy water, and drof away the maner deuellenesse.
R. Gloucester, p. 415, note.

And so taking our iourney directly toward the north, me thought that wee had passed through one of hell-gates.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 102. The Tartars.

Burchardus the prouoste of Tryere in Germany, was marryed to the prince of the Russians sister, by dyspensacyon of pope Helhoude, Hildebrande I shulde say, anon after prestes marriages were forbydden.
Bale. Apology, fol. 125.

With that, he from his angry bosome drew
A golden banner, in whose stately lap
His Lord's almighty name wide open flew,
Of hell-appalling majesty made up.
Beaumont. Psyche, can. 2. st. 122.

Well may'st thou come from that infernal seat,
Thou all the world with hell-black deeps dost fill.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 8.

Or like the hell-borne Hydra, which they faine
That great Alcides whylome overthrew.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 12.

Retire, or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
Hell-born, not to contend with Spirits of heav'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 687.

Hart cannot thinke, what outrage, and what cries,
With foule enfouldred smoake and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth vnto the skyes,
That all was couered with darknesse dire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

For a charme of powrefull trouble,
Like a hell-broth, boyle and bubble.
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 143.

The whoreson old hell-cat would have given me the brain of a cat once in my handkerchief.

Middleton. The Witch, act. ii. sc. 2.

'Tis strange! 3. And sauors of the diuell, strongly!
I ha' the sulphure of hell-coale i' my nose.
Ben Jonson. The Diuell is an Asse, act v. sec. 7.

And reck'n'st thou thyself with Spirits of heav'n,
Hell-doom'd, and breath'st defiance here and scorn
Where I reign king, and to enrage thee more,
Thy king and lord?
Milton. Paradise Lost, book ii. l. 697.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd
By sudden onset, either with hell-fire
To waste his whole Creation, or possess
All as our own, and drive as we were driven
The punie habitants.
Id. Ib. l. 364.

And now great deeds
Had been achiev'd, whereof all hell had rung;
Had not the snakie sorceress that sat
Fast by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between.
Id. Ib. l. 724.

O Earth gape open wide, and eate him quicke,
As thou dost swallow vp this good king's blood,
Which his hell-gouern'd arme hath butchered.
Shakspeare. Richard III. fol. 175.

Backe do I tosse these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated lye, ore-whelme thy heart.
Id. Lear, fol. 308.

We might have done some fine thing
To have made thy hel-hood laugh.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Little Thief, act ii.

But Epaminondas would in no wise suffer the Thebans, through his means, to make league with such an helhound.
Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 251. Pelopidas.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? Oh hell-kite! all?
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 147.

In which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell-paines,
Yet, for necessitie of present life,
I must show out a flag, and signe of loue.
Id. Othello, fol. 311.

There are many among us that live according to that hell-bred proverb, that plain dealing is a jewel, but he that useth it shall die a beggar.

Bates. Works, vol. iii. ch. xiv. p. 215. On the Fear of God.

A corroding disease it [envy] is; an hel-hag that feeds upon its own marrow, bones, and strongest parts.

Bishop Richardson. On the Old Testament, p. 281.

EM. By cruel charms, dragg'd from my peaceful bower,
Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark;
And bade me stand expos'd to the bleak winds,
And winter storms, and heav'n's inclemency,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove.
Dryden. King Arthur, act iv. sc. 1.

ARTH. Now I perceive a danger worthy me.
'Tis Osmond's work, a band of hell-hir'd slaves:
Be mine the hazard, mine shall be the fame.
Id. Ib. act iii.

Envy, hypocrisy, deceit,
Fierce party-rage, and warm debate;
And all the hell-hounds that are foes
To friendship and the world's repose.
Somerville. To Allan Ramsay.

Within was Discord with her hell-born train
Stirring to war the league, and haughty Mayne,
The people, and the church: and from on high,
Call'd out to Spain, rebellion's prompt ally.
Lloyd. The Henriade, book i.

O shall I never feel
The meltings of thy love?
Am I such hell-hardned steel
That mercy cannot move?

Watts. Lyric Poems, book i. Confession and Pardon.

This woe is, that the offenders shall be cast into hell-fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched: and it is subjoined three times, in the same awfull words, to so many instances of supposed criminal indulgence, in the case alleged.

Hurd. Sermon 11. vol. vi. p. 162.

Yes, ye faithless crew,
His Muse's vengeance shall your crimes pursue,
Stretch you on Satire's rack, and bid you lie
Fit garbage for the hell-hound, infamy.
Mason. An Heroic Postscript to the Public.

HE'LLEBORE, } Fr. ellebore; It. elleboro; Sp.
HE'LLEBORISM. } elleboro; Lat. helleborus; Gr.
ἐλλέβορος, παρὰ τὸ ἐλεῖν τὴ βόρᾶ, quod esu interimat; if taken, Martinius adds, in too large a dose.

Here mercury, here hellebore,
Old ulcers mundifying,
And shepherd's-purse, the flux most sore
That helps by the applying.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymphal 6.

Who hath not heard of Melampus that famous divinour and prophet? he it was of whom one of the *Ellebore*s tooke the name, and was called Melampodion: and yet some there be who attribute the finding of that hearbe unto a shepherd or heardman of that name, who observing well that his shee goats feeding thereupon, fell a scouring, gave their milke unto the daughters of K. Proetus, whereby they were cured of their furious melancholie, and brought againe to their right wits.
Holland. Plinie, book xxv. ch. v.

In vain should the physician attempt, with all his medicines and helleborisms, the cure of those that are sick with love, or any the like passions.
Ferrand. Love Melancholy, 1640, p. 169.

The root of white hellebore and staves-acre, powdered and mixed with meal, is a certain poison to them.

Pennant. British Zoology. Meadow Mouse.

HELLEBORINE, in Botany, a genus of the class Gynandria, order Diandria, natural order Orchideæ. Generic character: calyx ringent, five-leaved, the two HELL.

—
HELLEBORINE.

HELLE-BORINE.
—
HELM.

interior leaves narrow, conniving; lip of the corolla concave; anthers joined to the elongated style; stigma concave.

Three species, natives of the South of Europe and Barbary.

HELLEBORUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Polygynia, natural order Ranunculaceæ. Generic character: calyx none; petals five or more; nectary tubular, two-lipped; capsule erect, many-seeded.

Ten species, natives of the Northern hemisphere.

H. hyemalis, the winter Aconite, whose brilliant yellow flowers are protruded through the surface of the ground in gardens as soon as the snow has melted, is a native of Italy. H. viridis, and fætidus, are natives of England.

HELLENIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monandria, order Monogynia, natural order Scitamineæ. Generic character: calyx spathe formed, bell-shaped, two-cleft; corolla, border double, exterior slightly three-cleft; nectary two-leaved, or two-cleft; capsule three-celled, coriaceous, inflated.

Four species, natives of the East Indies and China. Willdenow.

HE'LLENIZE,

HE'LLENICK,

HE'LLENISM,

HE'LLENIST,

HELLENISTICAL,

HELLENISTICALLY.

Gr. ἡλληνίζ-ειν, to follow or imitate the Greeks; to use the Greek language.

So saith Phavorinus, ἡλληνίζω, ἡλληνικῶς φηγομαι, καὶ τὰ ἑλληνικὰ φρονῶ, to hellenize is to speak Greek, and to have skill in the Greek learning.

Hammond. Annotation on Acts, ch. vi. v. 1.

So great an injury they then held it to be depriv'd of hellenic learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining, and secretly decaying the church, than the open cruelty of Decius or Dioclesian.

Milton. Areopagitica.

These Jews understood Greek, and used the Greek Bible, and therefore are called Hellenists.

Hammond. Annotation on Acts, ch. vi. v. 1.

Into the importance of the hellenistical dialect he had made the exactest search.

Fell. Life of Hammond.

It may bear the same signification hellenistically in this place.

Gregory. Notes on Scripture, p. 60.

Virgil is full of the Greek forms of speech, which the critics call hellenisms, as Horace in his Odes abounds with them much more than Virgil.

Spectator, No. 285.

HELLUO, in Zoology, a genus of Carnivorous, Pentamerous, Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Carabidæ, established by Professor Bonelli, allied to Anthia.

Generic character. Middle lobe of the chin one-toothed; tongue slightly produced beyond the origin of the labial palpi, nearly square, round at the ends; elytra transversely truncated; outer palpi ending by a large obconic joint.

The type of the genus is H. costatus, of Bonelli, the Anthia truncata of Latreille. It is found in New Holland. The Galerita hirta of Fabricius, also, appears to be a species of this genus.

HELM, v.

HELM, n.

HE'LMET,

HE'LMETTED,

HE'LMETTIERS,

HE'LMET-GRACED.

A. S. helm; D. and Ger. helm; Sw. hiælm; Fr. heaume; It. elmo, elmetto; Sp. yelmo, almete; Low Lat. helmus. It is probable enough (says Skinner) that helm descends from hel-an, to cover; that which covereth or protecteth, sc. the head.

To helm, to put on, to wear or use, to provide with a helm, or helmet; covering or protection. HELM.

He smot hym vpon hys helm, þat he fel down to hys fet.

R. Gloucester, p. 437.

But we that ben of the dai ben sobre, clothid in the haburion of feith and of charite, and in the helme of hope of heelthe.

Wiclif. 1 Thessal. ch. v.

But let vs which are of the day, be sober, armed with the brest plate of fayth and loue, and with hope of saluaciō as an helmet.

Bible, Anno 1551.

He throweth on his helm of huge weight
And girt him with his sword, and in his hond
His mighty speare, as he was wont to feight.

Chaucer. The Complaint of Mars and Venus, fol. 325.

And she that helmed was in starke stoures,
And wan by force tounes strong and toures,
Shal on hire hed now were a (vitremite?)

Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14376.

They came togyder as streyght as they could deuise, and strake eche other in the syght of the helmes, in such wyse y^t bothe were unhelmed; they passed forth their course frake and frely: anone, they were agayne helmed, and ranne togyder, and strake eche other on their sheldes, and brake eche their speares withoute any other dōmage.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 168.

And ouer this, there hangs much enmies harneis fixt on height,
And spoyles, and captiue chares, and halberd axes, huge of weight,
And helmet crestes, and brasen boltyng barres of conquer'd townes,
With speares, and battrid sheelds, & topps of ships, and garland crownes.

Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book vii.

They astonisht all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons drop'd;
O're shields and helmes, and helmed heads he rode
Of Thrones and mighty Seraphim prostrate.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 840.

They hew'd their helmes, and plates asunder brake,
As they had potshares bene.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 1.

Upon his head he wore an helmet light,
Made of a dead man's skull, that seem'd a ghastly sight.

Id. Ib. book ii. can. 11.

THES. Oh no knees, none widow;

Unto the helmeted Bellona use them
And pray for me your souldier.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, act i.

Item, he ordeined that the helmettiers or morioners should stand upon their feet, having their shields upright before them.

Holland. Livius, fol. 1191.

The helme-grac't Hector answer'd him: Renowned Telamon,
Prince of the souldiers came from Greece; assay not me like one,
Yong and immartiall, with great words, as to an Amazon dame.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vii. fol. 100.

Thus having spoke, th' illustrious chief of Troy
Stretch'd his fond arms to clasp the lovely boy,
The babe clung crying to his nurse's breast,
Scar'd at the dazzling helm and nodding crest.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book vi.

What late thou saw'st when Turnus took the field,
His prancing courser, helm and golden shield;
That courser, shield and helm of skill divine,
Exempt from lot, brave Nisus, shall be thine.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book ix.

He [the clown] is as smart above
As meal and larded locks can make him; wears
His hat or his plum'd helmet with a grace:
And, his three years of heroship expired,
Returns indignant to the slighted plough.

Cowper. The Task, book iv.

The HELMETS of the Greeks were, probably, for the most part, little more than variously shaped skull-caps; though the more distinguished warriors, as is plain from Homer's epithets, adorned them with horse-hair crests, nodding most portentously from their summits. The crest is stated by Herodotus (i. 171.) and Strabo (xiv.) to have been first introduced by the Carians; and hence, says Plutarch, (in Artax.) the Persians call the Carians

HELMET. Cocks. Φάλος is often distinguished from λόφος, the first being the cone which was part of the substance of the Helmet, the second the plume attached to it, but they are scarcely less often used synonymously. These crests frequently, among the Chieftains, had more than one plume; we read of an ἀμφίφαλος, a πρυφάλεια, and even of a τετράφαλος; nay, Pyrrhus, besides a towering crest, bore Goats' horns as an augmentation. (Plut. in vit.) Suidas, from some such custom, informs us that κέρας was used synonymously with τρίχωσις. The common soldiers had either smaller crests, or none at all, and sometimes the leaders adopted a similar mode of arming; the Helmet thus ἀφαλός τε καὶ ἄλοφος was called καταίτυξ, (Il. K. 258.) and such a one was worn by Diomedes in his night expedition with Ulysses. The principal animals which supplied their skins, mentioned by Homer, are the Bull, the Fox, the Lion, the Goat, the Weasel, and most commonly the Dog, the Water Dog according to Eustathius. The hair was left shaggy upon them, and in the case of Ulysses, though a Dog furnished the leather, the tusks of a white-toothed Boar thickly studded it without. (Id. K. 261.) A thong (ὄχευς) fastened the Helmet to the neck, and the flap, which projected over the brow, was named γείσων, (a pent-house.) The Bœotians were held to manufacture the best Helmets, (Pollux, i. 20.) the Lacedæmonians to have discovered their use; (Plin. vii. 56.) but this most probably should be understood only of the peculiar Helmets (whatever they might be) which were worn by that people. Montfaucon admits that he never saw an ancient Helmet with a vizor, yet he inclines to an opinion that some such contrivance was used; and Ammianus Marcellinus, while describing a charge of Persian cavalry, at Maranga, during Julian's retreat, uses words which can scarcely be interpreted unless as meaning vizored Helmets. All the troops he says were clad in complete scale armour, humanorumque vultuum simulacra ita capitibus diligenter apta, ut, imbracteatis corporibus solidis, ibi tantum incidentia tela possint hære, quæ per cavernas minutas, et orbibus oculorum affixas parcius visitur, vel per supremitates narium angusti spiritus emittuntur. (xxv. 1.) Wagner, in his note on this passage, plainly understands it as we do,—humanorum vultuum simulacra, larvæ ferreæ. In two Grecian Helmets, (one of which was found on the field of Cannæ in 1752, and is supposed to have belonged to some Greek in the Carthaginian army,) preserved in Sir William Hamilton's collection in the British Museum, and engraved by Grose, (Mil. Ant. vol. ii. p. 1.) the nose is protected by a bar, (sila), and the cheeks are completely covered by bucculæ.

Among the Romans, Isidorus (xviii. 14.) distinguishes between Cassis, the metallic Helmet, and Galea, the leathern; and the words are manifestly used with some such difference by Tacitus. (Germ. 6.) Silius Italicus has naturalized Cudo from the Greek. Brass, as in Greece, was the metal first used in Rome, and such is mentioned by Livy and by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, in the Census of Servius Tullius. Camillus, however, employed iron against the Gauls. (Plut. in vit.) The Crests are vividly described by Polybius: (vi. 21.) they were crowned with three black or purple (φοινικίους) plumes, towering to the height of a cubit, raising the stature to double its natural dimension, and striking terror into the enemy. The Crests of the Centurions, as a mark of distinction, were plated with silver, (argentati), and oblique, if such be the meaning of trans- versi in the passage in Vegetius to which we are indebted for this information. (ii. 16.) In most other points the Grecian habits were adopted and imitated. The Chapter in Lipsius de Militiâ Romanâ, (iii. 5.) which treats of Roman Helmets, contains almost every thing which can be collected on the subject, and has accordingly been largely used by most later writers on Classical Antiquity, and generally without acknowledgment. The figures which he gives from ancient sculpture, and which have been transferred to the pages of Archbishop Potter, may be found far better engraved in the Latin translation of the Tract by du Choul, De Castramet. et Disc. Mil. Rom. p. 79. The III^d volume of the Comte de Caylus's Recueil d'Antiq., illustrates, by references to works of Art, many of the particulars which we have above mentioned from ancient writers.

The different kinds of Helmets in more modern use are not very accurately separated from each other, but Grose (ut supra, ii. 241.) has given the following varieties. 1. The Chapelle de fer, (sometimes called Armet), mentioned in the Statute of Winchester, 13 Edward I. 6. (otherwise known as the Assize of Arms,) and frequently occurring in Froissart, was a light Helmet without vizor or gorget. It was worn chiefly by the light horse and footmen, and occasionally by Knights while not actually engaged in combat. The conical and cylindrical headpieces on ancient seals may be referred to this species. 2. The Bourguinote, or Burgonet, succeeded the first iron hat, but we gain little information respecting it, by the sentence which Grose has translated from Fauchet, (De l'ordonnance, armes et instrumens desquels les François usé en leurs guerres, ii. 42.) "When Helmets better represented the human head they were called Bourguinotes, possibly from being invented by the Burgundians." The same writer says, that the Italians named Burgonets, Armets, Salades, or Celates. 3. The Bacinet, a light Helmet, so called from its resemblance to a basin; generally, but not always, without a vizor, worn by Knights like the Chapelle de fer, when in half armour, and during the reigns of Edward II. and III. and Richard II. by most of the English infantry. 4. The Salade, Salet, or Celate, is defined by Père Daniel (Hist. Mil. Fran.) to be a light casque, without crest, with or without a vizor. Sallets for Archers on horseback, Sallets with grates, old Sallets with vizards, Salettes and skulls, Salotts with vysars and bevers, and Salets with bevers, are mentioned in a MS. inventory, referred to by Grose, of Royal stores in the different arsenals 1 Edward VI. 5. The Skull, a headpiece without vizor or bever. 6. The Hufken, seems to be a light headpiece worn by Archers. 7. The Castle, perhaps a figurative name of a close headpiece, or a corruption (much more probably) of casquetel, a small, light Helmet. 8. The Morion, an open Helmet, without vizor or bever, somewhat resembling a hat, worn by harquebussiers and musqueteers. 9. The Pot, an iron hat with broad brims.

This account, it must be confessed, is very far from being satisfactory, but the Plates annexed to it in Grose's Work may be consulted with better result for various specimens of different kinds of Helmets. Meyrick, in the Glossary appended to his Critical Account of Ancient Armour, (ad v.) has added a few particulars. The jousting Helmet, heaume à broches, sometimes consisted only of leather, stuffed inside, and was made to fasten on to the body armour. The original Helmet he believes to have been no more than a skull-cap; it next assumed HELMET. the nasal, and afterwards the ventaile, (aventail, a movable front, quâ ventus hauritur.) A skull-cap was worn on ordinary occasions, and in battle a Helmet over it. Movable vizors, crests, mantlings, and coiffures, were introduced in the reign of Henry III.; feathers in that of Henry V.; scrolls in that of Henry VII. Kings' Helmets were often distinguished by a golden crown, those of Noblemen by the coronet of their degree.

The vizor (viser, to take aim) lifted up by pivots over each ear. The bever (bever, to drink) lifted up in like manner, or (which was less common) consisted of several plates one shifting over the other, and let down when the wearer wished to eat or drink. Mr. Douce (Illust. of Shakspeare, i. 442.) does not admit that the bever ever let down.

HELM, v. } As helm, or helmet, is the highest HELM, n. } part of the whole armour, so the helm
HELMS-MAN. } of a ship is the highest part of the rudder. Skinner. To helm, consequentially and met.
To steer, to guide, to direct, to manage.

The William had her sterne post broken, that the rudder did hang cleane besides the sterne, so that she could in no wise port her helm.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 448. Pet and Jackman.

The very streame of his life, and the businesse he hath helmed, must vpon a warranted neede, giue him a better proclamation.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 73.

But he that is of Reason's skill bereft,
And wants the staffe of wisdom him to stay,
Is like a ship in midst of tempest left
Withouten helme or pilot her to sway.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

For in a great sea, which we often meet with, the compass will traverse with the motion of the ship; besides the ship may and will deviate somewhat in steering, even by the best helmsman.
Dampier. Voyage round the World, Anno 1699.

I was, at that period, far from being inclined to absent myself from the care of the republic; as I then sat at the helm of the commonwealth, and shared in the direction of its most important motions.
Melmoth. Cicero to Papirius Pætus, let. 11.

HELMINTHIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Æqualis. Generic character: receptacle naked; calyx double, interior eight-leaved, exterior three-leaved, both of the same length; seeds transversely striated; down stipitate, feathery.

Three species, natives of Europe. H. echioides, a native of England, is the Picris echioides of English Botany.

HELONIAS, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Trigynia, natural order Iunci. Generic character: corolla six-parted, spreading, segments sessile; capsule three-celled, three-horned, seeds one or two in each cell.

A North American genus, allied to Veratrum, containing five species; they are hardy plants, with elegant spikes of flowers.

HELOPS, in Zoology, a genus of Heteromorous, Coleopterous insects, established by Fabricius.

Generic character. Jaws ending in two teeth; last joint of the maxillary palpi large, triangular; body thick, convex, arched, and oblong.

The Helopes live under bark of dead trees and in the cracks of living ones. The larvæ live in the soft mould and rotten wood found at the roots of old trees, and are much sought after by the Warblers and other insect-eating birds.

The type of the genus is H. lanipes of Fabricius, HELOPS. figured by Olivier, iii. pl. i. fig. 1—6.

HELORUS, in Zoology, a genus of boring Hymenopterous insects, belonging to the family Ichneumonidæ, established by Lamarck. HELP.

Generic character. Lower lip spread out, rounded, the upper edge entire; the maxillary palpi filiform, long, of five joints, the labial palpi of three joints, the last one largest, oval; antennæ filiform, straight, of fifteen joints, the third nearly conical, the others cylindrical; jaws long and pointed.

This genus is nearly allied to Proctotrupes.

The genus contains only one species, H. ater, Latreille, figured by Jurine, Hymen. pl. xiv. and by Panzer in his Faun Germ. 411. pl. xxiii. fig. 18. under the name of Sphex anomalipes.

HELP, v.

HELP, n.

HE'LPFUL,

HE'LPFULNESS,

HE'LPLESS,

HE'LPLESSLY,

HE'LPLESSNESS,

HELP-ALE,

HELP-FELLOW,

HELP-GIVER,

HELP-MATE.

Goth. hilp-an; A. S. hylp-an, help-an; D. help-en; Ger. helff-en; Sw. hielpa, adjuvare, auxiliari. The old pret. and past participle is holpe, holpen.

To aid, to assist, to relieve, to succour;—to serve, to give, furnish or supply with, aid, assistance, or relief.

þo þat to þe lasse Brutayne þe kyng sone sende
To Howwel, kyng of þe lond, þat he to hym wende
To helpe hym in such nede.

R. Gloucester, p. 169.

Ac ich sende to Rome, to abbe help of the.

Id. p. 503.

þe Brutones, þat weré helples, come aboute hem faste.

Id. p. 134.

Sipen he went aboute, kirkes vp to raise
Abbeyes for to helpe, were fallen in miseýse.

R. Brunne, p. 35.

Richard bade, "hale vp hie zour sailes, þer God vs lede,
Our men at Acres lie, of help þei haf grete nede."

Id. p. 171.

Trywe charite
That most helpeþ men to hevene.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 27.

And anon the fadir of the child cryed with teeris & seyð lord y beleve lord helpe thou myn unbileve.

Wiclif. Luke, ch. ix.

The lord is an helper to me, I schal not drede what a man schal do to me.

Id. Ebrewis, ch. xiii.

The Lord is my helper, and I will not feare what man doth vnto me.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Aftirward vertues, aftirward gravis of heelyngis, helpyngis.

Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xii.

And wel I wot, withouten helpe or grace
Of thee, ne may my strengthe not availle:
Than helpe me, lord, to-morwe in my bataille.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2402.

Sone after the midnight, Palamon,
By helping of a frend brake his prison,
And fleeth the cite faste as he may go.

Id. Ib. v. 1470.

He which that hath no wif I hold him shent;
He liveth helples, and al desolat.

Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9194.

To euery crafte of man's helpe
He had a redy witte to helpe
Through naturall experience.

Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 89.

HELP.

There passeth no moment of tyme, in whiche we haue not great nede of the helpe & assistaunce of almightie God.

Fisher. On Prayer, sig. B. 2.

Wherefore the kynge sayd after in game, that seynt Martyn was a good helper at nede.

Fabyan. Works, vol. i. ch. xcix.

Therefore we taried still alone at Athenes, and from thence sente Tymothe our brother, a tryed minister of God, and an helpfellowe of our office.

Udall. 1 Thessalonians, ch. iii.

Who trauailes by the wearie wandring way,
To come unto his wished home in haste,
And meetes a flood, that doth his passage stay;
Is not great grace to helpe him over past,
Or free his feet that in the myre sticke fast?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 9.

On their heads
Main promontories flung, which in the air
Came shadowing, and opprest whole legions arm'd,
Their armor help'd their harm, crusht in and bruis'd
Into their substance pent.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book vi. l. 656.

LUC. Indeed you have cause to love those wanton motions,
They having holpe you to an excellent whipping.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Love's Cure, act i.

The cōmon people much lamented, y^t warre should arise betwene the king & the emperor, and especiall theyr consideration was, because the emperor's dominions had holpen them with corne, & relieued them with grayne, when they could haue no corne, or little out of Fraunce.

Grafton. Henry VIII. The nineteenth Yere.

EPH. ANT. A man is well holpe vp that trusts to you.

Shakspeare. Comedy of Errors, fol. 93.

And first, for you my lord, in grief we see
The miserable case wherein you stand;
Void here of succour, help, or majesty,
On this poor promontory of your land.

Daniel. History of the Civil Wars, book ii.

Look on this son, O Jupiter, our helper,
And Romulus, thou father of our honour.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Valentinian, act v.

But Ajax Telamonius, had many helpfull men
That when sweat ran about his knees, and labour flow'd, would then Helpe beare his mighty seven-fold shield.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xiii. fol. 182.

God ordain'd it in love and helpfulness to be indissoluble, and we in outward act and formality to be a forc'd bondage.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

LOR. But if he be thus helplessly distract,
'Tis requisite his office be resign'd,
And given to one of more discretion.

Anonymous. Spanish Tragedy, act iv.

With them the superfluous number of idle waks, guilds, fraternities, church-ales, helpe-ales, and soule-ales, also called dirge-ales, with the heathnish rioting at bride-ales, are well diminished and laid aside.

Hotunshed. Description of England, ch. i.

O my God, my sole help-giver,
From the wicked me delyver,
From this wrongfull spightfull man.

Sidney. Psalm 71.

I might have made you such a fellow
As should have carried my umbrella,
Or lay the cloth, or wait at table,
Nay, been a helper in the stable.

King. The Art of Love, part iii.

Even the most wild, most fierce, most ravenous, most venomous creatures shall, if there be need, prove friendly and helpfull, or at least harmles, to us: as the ravens to Elias, the lions to Daniel, the viper to Saint Paul, the fire to the three children.

Barrow. Sermon 2. vol. i.

We are all of us desirous that others should be just to us, ready to help us, and do good to us, and because 'tis a principle of the highest equity and reason, that we should be willing to do to others, as we desire and think them obliged to deal with us, this must therefore oblige us to the same acts of charity and helpfulness towards them.

Wilkins. Natural Religion, book i. ch. xvi.

Ah! too forgetful of thy wife and son,
Too daring prince! Ah whither dost thou run?
And think'st thou not how wretched we shall be,
A widow I, an helpless orphan he.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book vi.

You see plainly here because God made man first, and out of him created woman; and declared withal, that he therefore created her that she might be a help-mate for the man; St. Paul doth from hence conclude the perpetual obligation of women to be subject to the man.

Sharp. Works, vol. iv. Sermon 12.

In reality, a great clearness helps but little towards affecting the passions, as it is in some sort an enemy to all enthusiasms whatsoever.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, sec. 3.

To speak it [a foreign language] readily, and pronounce it rightly, is still more difficult: it is what many persons can never accomplish, though they have all the proper helps, as we may see every day, nor can any study and application acquire this habit, unless there be an opportunity of conversing frequently with them whose tongue it is.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. i. p. 201.

Let us give a faithful pledge to the people, that we honour, indeed, the crown, but that we belong to them; that we are their auxiliaries, and not their task-masters; the fellow-labourers in the same vineyard, not lording over their rights, but helpers of their joy.

Burke. On the Economical Reform.

An endeavour to preserve its being, makes part of the essential constitution of every created thing. Hence, in the inanimate, a resistance to outward force; in the animate, a pursuit or an abhorrence of what is helpful or hurtful; and, in man, that first and strongest passion of nature, self-love.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. p. 57. Sermon 3.

While Cook is lov'd for savage lives he sav'd
See Cortez odious for a world enslav'd!
Where wast thou then, sweet Charity? where then,
Thou tutelary friend of helpless men.

Cowper. Charity.

No one can be barbarous enough to desire the continuance of poor wretches in error and helplessness, that he may tyrannize over them with impunity.

Secker. Works, vol. v. Sermon 12.

In Minorca the ass and the hog are common help-mates, and are yoked together in order to turn up the land.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Hog.

HELSTONE, a Borough and Market Town in the County of Cornwall, situated on the side of a hill sloping to the river Cober. It contains four principal streets, meeting at right angles, with a water-course through each. The Church, a modern building with a lofty tower, stands on an eminence to the North, and forms a well known sea-mark. Helstone is one of the original Stannary towns, and it has returned two Members to Parliament since the reign of Edward I. Its chief buildings are a Market House and Guildhall; and Leland mentions vestiges of a Castle which are no longer to be seen. There once also existed in it a Priory of Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, on the site of which a Methodist Meeting-house has been erected. Population, in 1821, 2671. Distant 9½ miles West from Penryn; 274 West from London. The Duke of Leeds is Patron of the Borough.

In the LXth Volume of the Gentleman's Magazine, (p. 520, June 1790,) is an account of a Holiday called Furry day, (Flora's day?) celebrated at Helstone annually on the 8th of May. A rabble, during the morning, parade the streets with noisy music and songs in honour of May, and wearing hawthorn flowery branches in their hats. After much rude sport and revelry, they collect money from house to house, and dance, hand in hand, through the streets, till dark, to a particular tune. This is termed a Faddy.

HELTER-SKELTER. Skinner prefers, D. heel, wholly, and schetteren, to scatter. Mr. Grose says that ketter or kilter (in the North) is frame, order, condition. Hence helters-ketter, a corruption of helter, to hang, and

HELP.

HELTER
SKELTER

HELTER-SKELTER. keller, order; i. e. hang order, or in defiance of order. In good keller, (he adds,) in good case or condition. Keller is thought by D. Th. H. (in Skinner) to be culture.

And helter-skelter haue I rode to thee,
And tydings do I bring.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 98.

Or run helter-skelter
To his harbour for shelter
Where all goes to ruin
The Dean has been doing.

Swift. My Lady's Lamentation, &c. against the Dean.

HELVE, n. A. S. helf; Ger. helve; manubrium, the handle. Skinner derives from heald-an, to hold. Still common in Suffolk. See Moor.

To throw the helve after the hatchet.

Ray. Proverbial Phrases.

The prophet borrows an axe to cut an helve for the lost axe; why did he not make use of the handle which had cast the head?

Hall. Contemplations, book xix. Elisha raising the Iron.

Their ax is but small, and so made that they can take it out of the helve, and by turning it make an adds of it.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1686.

HELVINGIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Triandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx three-cleft; corolla none; stamens inserted into the calyx. Female flowers unknown.

One species, H. ruscifolia, native of Japan. Willdenow.

HEM, v. } A. S. hem. Spelman derives ham, do-

HEM, n. } mus, (home), from ἡμα, fascia; and adds, inde oram vestimenti etiam hodie, the hem, appellamus. Minshew derives from the same Greek word. Skinner from ambire. It has, probably, the same origin with ham, i. e. home, in the A. S. hæm-ian, coire, to come or go together, to bring together. To hem is

To bring together; to close down and fasten together; consequentially, (as the Ger. hemmen,) to confine, to surround, to enclose. The hem (sc. of a garment) is

The edge folded over, or doubled down, and sewed down. Generally, the edge or border.

And thei preiden hem that thei schulden touche the hemme of his clothing, and who evere touchiden weren maad saaf.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xiv.

And they besought him, that they myghte touch y^e hemme of hys vesture only. And as manye as touched it were made safe.

Bible, Anno 1551.

He goeth walkyng vp and downe in hys habite garded or hemmed with hys brode phylacteries.

Udall. Luke, ch. vi.

There she received was in goodly wize
Of many priests, which duely did attend
Upon the rites and daily sacrifice
All clad in linnen robes with silver hemd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 7.

See, see! he cries, where your Parthenia fair,
The flour of all your army, hemm'd about
With thousand enemies now fainting stands,
Ready to fall into their murd'ring hands.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, can. 12.

MES. My noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hemme o'th' sea
And on his grauestone, this insculpture.

Shakspeare. Timon of Athens, fol. 98.

Pylos, for Nestor's city after fam'd,
And Trœzen, not as yet from Pitheus nam'd:
And those fair cities, which he hemm'd around,
By double seas within the Isthmian ground.

Crowall. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book vi.

Orlando, who the shining band perceiv'd
That hemm'd him round, his knotty weapon heav'd
With twofold strength.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xxxix.

HEM, v. } D. hemmen. A word (says Skinner)
HEM, n. } formed from the sound.

We should orderly obserue circumstaunces, and tell one thing after an other, from time to time, not tumbling one tale in another's necke, telling halfe a tale, and so leauing it rawe, hacking and hemming, as though our wittes and our senses were a woll-gathering.

Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 109.

CEL. Hem them away.

ROS. I would try if I could cry hem, and haue him.

Shakspeare. As you like it, fol. 188.

Now play me Nestor; hum [hem] and stroke thy beard

As he, being drest to some oration.

Id. Troilus and Cressida, fol. 82.

PRIS. Hem, hem.

WITTY. He's dry, he hems, on quickly.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Wit at Several Weapons, act i.

Young Lalus took a text of excellent matter,
And did the same expound, but marre the latter,
His tongue so vainly did and idly chatter,
The people nought but hem, and cough, and spatter.

Sir J. Harrington. Epigram 25. book ii.

I was no sooner come into Gray's Inn walks, but I heard my friend upon the Terrace hemming twice or thrice to himself with great vigour, for he loves to clear his pipes in good air, (to make use of his own phrase) and is not a little pleased with any one who takes notice of the strength which he still exerts in his morning hemms.

Spectator, No. 269.

HEMARTHRIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Digynia, natural order Gramineæ. Generic character: spike compressed, jointed; joints two-flowered; glume two-flowered, two-valved; stigmas plumose.

Two species, natives of New South Wales.

HEMEROBIUS, in Zoology, a genus of Neuropterous insects, forming the family Hemerobidæ, established by Linnæus, and restricted by modern authors.

Generic character. Antennæ setaceous; palpi four; no false eyes; first segment of the thorax very short; tarsi of five joints; wings equal, shelving one against the other.

The Hemerobii are sometimes called Land Demoiselles. Their body is soft, and their eyes are globular and often ornamented with a metallic colour, so that they are often trivially called Golden eyes; their wings are large, broad, and transparent like gauze, exhibiting their green and often metallic body through them.

They are generally found in gardens, and they emit a disagreeable odour.

Reaumur has given an interesting account of the habits and manners of these insects. Their eggs are supported on a thin, hair-like pedicle, placed on the back of leaves, which give them so much the resemblance of the longer stalked mould, that some Botanists have described them as Fungi; the pedicles are rarely straight, they are usually bent in different ways on the leaf. The larvæ, on account of the great destruction which they make amongst the Plant-lice, have been called Plant-lice Lions; their body is flattened and long, tapering behind. The thorax is slightly extended; their mouth is armed with two hooks, by which they seize and immediately kill the Plant-lice: their habits are so voracious that if their food be scarce, they attack and eat others of their own species. At the end of about fifteen days they hide themselves under or between two leaves, and form for themselves a round, white, silky cocon, about the size of a pea.

The larvæ of some of the species cover themselves over with a case like the larvæ of the smaller Moths, formed of the dried skins of the Plant-lice which they have destroyed.

HEM
HEMERO-BIUS.

HEMERO-
BIUS.HEMIPO-
DIUS.

The type of the genus is H. chrysops of Linnæus, common in London. There are several other species found in England and on the Continent of Europe.

HEMEROCALLIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Asphodeli. Generic character: corolla bell-shaped, tube cylindrical; stamens declining.

The species of this genus, which are all hardy, are frequently cultivated in gardens. H. flava is a native of Siberia; H. fulva of the Levant; H. Japonica and H. cœrulea are natives of Japan.

HEMIANDRA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia, natural order Labiata. Generic character: calyx compressed, two-lipped, inferior lip slightly two-cleft; corolla two-lipped, superior lip flat, two-cleft; inferior lip three-lobed, middle lobe two-cleft; one lobe of each anther without pollen.

One species, H. pungens, native of New South Wales.

HEMIANTHUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Diandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx tubular, four-toothed; lower lip of the corolla three-parted, middle segment incurved; filaments two-cleft; style two-cleft; capsule one-celled, two-valved, many-seeded.

One species, H. micranthemoides, a small creeping plant, native of marshes in North America. Nuttall.

HEMICYCLE, Gr. ἡμικύκλος, a half circle; from ἥμις, half, and κύκλος, a circle.

Besides, upon the right hand of her, but with some little descent; in a hemicycle was seated Esychia, or Quiet, the first hand-maid of Peace. Ben Jonson. Part of the King's Entertainment, &c.

HEMIDESMUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Asclepiadæ. Generic character: masses of pollen twenty granular; filaments connected at the base; corolla wheel-shaped.

One species, H. Indicus, native of Ceylon.

HEMIGENIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia, natural order Labiata. Generic character: calyx five-cleft, five-angled; corolla ringent, middle segment of the lower lip slightly two-cleft; only one lobe of each anther bearing pollen.

One species, H. purpurea, native of New South Wales.

HEMIMERIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla wheel-shaped, one of the segments large, obcordate; cells of the corolla nectariferous; filaments shining; capsules two-celled, one of the cells gibbous.

Five species, natives of the Cape of Good Hope and South America. Willdenow.

HEMIONITIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Cryptogamia, natural order Filices. Generic character: capsules inserted into the reticulated veins of the frond; indusium none.

A genus of Ferns, natives of the West Indies.

HEMIPODIUS, from the Greek ἥμις, half, and ποῦς, a foot, Tem. Turnix. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Gallinacidæ, order Gallinacæ, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak slender, longish, straight, and much compressed; the upper mandible slightly arched at the tip; nostrils longitudinal, reaching to the middle of the beak, and covered with a naked skin; tail short, and hidden by the feathers of the rump; tarsi long, and having three toes distinctly divided and straight, but no hind toe.

This genus of birds, described by Lacepede under the name Tridactylus, and by Illiger under that of Ortygis, was included by Linnæus among his Tetraones, and by Latham in the Perdrices. They are the smallest of gallinaceous birds, not being larger than a Thrush, and more nearly resemble the Quails, from which, however, they are remarkably distinguished by their short tails, consisting of ten quill feathers. There is but little difference between the male and female plumage. They are polygamous, but both young and old birds are solitary; their habits are not well known, but they feed principally on insects, and are found on barren lands; two or three species in the Southern parts of Europe, but the greater number in the warm regions of Asia and Africa. They do not fly much, but run with great speed; and when pursued, commonly hide themselves under any tuft of grass which may be in their way. They are believed, though not certainly, to be birds of passage.

H. Tachydromus, Tem.; Tetrao Andalusicus, Gmel.; Perdrix Andal., Lath.; Swift-running Turnix. About six inches long; belly white; back and scapulars marked with zigzags of red and black, each feather being also edged with white; wing-coverts yellowish, their inner webs marked with a red, and the outer with a black spot, the quills ashy, and the outermost edged with white: head blackish brown, marked with three longitudinal yellow stripes; throat white; front of the neck and chest red, inclining to yellow on the sides, the feathers of which parts are marked with black at some distance from their tips. Native of the South of Spain.

H. Lunatus, Tem.; Tetrao Gibraltarius, Gmel.; Perd. Gib. Lath.; le Caille de Gibraltar, Sonnini; Gibraltar Turnix. Rather larger than the last species; has its brown back striped transversely with black; the wing-coverts light red edged with white, and each feather marked with a black spot circled by white; primaries black; the throat black dashed with white; the breast feathers ferruginous in the middle, edged with black, and a streak of white between the two colours; tail quills radiated with black and white, and edged with white; beak and feet yellow. Native of Gibraltar and the Southern parts of Spain.

H. Nigrirostris, Tem.; Black-fronted Turnix. About the size of the H. Tachydromus; is distinguished by three broad stripes across the forehead; the first, which is white, extends on the base of the beak as far as the nostrils; the second, twice its breadth, is black, and the third white: the top of the head light red, and each feather streaked down the middle with little black stripes; the back of the neck clouded with olive green: the back and the upper parts are reddish yellow mingled with yellow and black; the middle and lesser wing-coverts more yellow, and each feather marked near its tip with a black spot; primaries and secondaries ashy; the throat light reddish yellow, as are also the neck and chest, but the two latter sprinkled with little semicircular black spots; belly, thighs, and legs white; beak red; legs light red, claws brown. Native of India.

H. Pugnax, Tem.; (Bouron Gemma of Java;) Fighting Turnix. Not exceeding the last species in size; the back, rump, tail-coverts, and scapulars brown varied with red, and the tip of each feather transversely with deep black, zigzag lines, some of the scapulars being also spotted irregularly with black, and all edged with white; the throat deep black; the front of the neck, the chest, upper part of the belly, and wing-coverts, striped at equal distances with broad black and

HEMIPO-
DIUS.

HEMIPO-
DIUS.

white bands; lower belly and thighs mostly red; primaries and secondaries brown, the first primary white on its outer edge; top of the head blackish brown mingled with red; the forehead, eyebrows, cheeks, and spaces behind the eyes varied with black and white spots; occiput red; beak yellowish, and brown at the point; legs yellowish brown. Native of Java, where it is much sought after for fighting, after the manner of English Cock and Chinese Quail fighting: as much as twenty-five piastres are given for such birds as are valiant, and whose prowess is known. The natives are greatly addicted to this sport, and will lay very heavy bets, often a hundred piastres, on their favourite bird. It is a curious fact, that birds, timid as these and the other gallinaceous birds are, can be induced to fight with such fury as they manifest; but, as Temminck justly observes, l'amour seul est la cause; faire la guerre et l'amour sont à la vérité des actions fort communes chez les animaux.

H. Nigricollis, Tem.; Cagan Turnix. About six inches and a half in length; the top of the head, cheeks, and sides of the neck irregularly marked with black, white, and a little red; the front of the neck, from the base of the lower mandible to the upper part of the chest, deep black; the occiput, back of the neck, and the upper parts rayed transversely with ash, black, and red, the black rays being the broadest; the scapulars also edged with white; sides of the chest bright red; its middle, the belly, and other under parts light ash; wing-coverts ash and red mingled, but the red predominating, also spotted with round white spots, bearing each a small black semicircle; primaries and secondaries ashy brown, the first four of the former edged externally with yellowish white; tail quills marked as the body. Native of Madagascar.

H. Thoracicus, Tem.; Redbreasted Turnix. Size of the last species; head, cheeks, and neck covered with black and white feathers, the former most numerous; throat feathers white, edged with black; lower part of the neck and the upper part of the chest bright red; other under parts light yellow; upper parts greyish brown, marked with very delicate black zigzags; wing-coverts marked with large black spots on a yellowish white ground, and above each a transverse stripe of bright red: primaries ashy brown and spotless. Native of the Philippines.

H. Maculosus, Tem.; Spotted Turnix. About five inches long, is distinguished from the other species by the extreme shortness of its tail, which does not reach below the wings, and beyond it extend the feathers of the rump, which are very numerous; the black feathers on the top of the head are margined with ashy red, and a white stripe, passing from before to behind, divides them longitudinally; sides of the neck and back of the head clear bright red; throat and cheeks reddish white; under parts of the neck and body and sides light red, the latter being marked also with streaks of white and black; the feathers at the upper part of the back and on the shoulders have a large black badge, are red near the tip, and margined with white; the back and rump feathers deep black, marked with little red zigzags, surrounded with a delicate yellow band which fades to bluish grey; wing-coverts reddish yellow, with a black spot at some distance from their extremity; the longest are red, spotted with black on their inner webs; primaries and secondaries light ash, margined with reddish white; beak and feet yellow. Native of Australia.

H. Fasciatus, Tem.; Striped Turnix. About five inches long; has the back and rump brown, mingled with black and red; the belly pure red; the side of the head, front of the neck, and chest striped alternately with black and reddish white; top of the head black; ocular circle striped alternately with black and white; back of the neck bright red; wing-coverts striped alternately with white and black; the longer feathers near the body are tipped with grey, and have their outer webs black; primaries grey; feet and beak yellowish. Native of the Philippines.

H. Hottentottus, Tem.; Hottentot Turnix. Is the smallest species of this genus, not exceeding a Lark in size. The throat is white, and each feather tipped with light red, and the cheeks are of the same colour; the sides and front of the neck and chest are reddish white, and a broad short black band crosses each feather near its tip, which is edged with yellowish white; the middle of the belly also yellowish white, spotted with brown; the top of the head black, and the feathers tipped with deep red, and a fine streak divides the head by passing to the back of the neck, which is ash colour, clouded with a deep tinge of the same; the back, rump, and scapulars marked with deep red stripes and spots in zigzag on a black ground, the latter edged with a broad white stripe, and another of deep black; wing-coverts marked with red, black, and white, the red on the inner, and the black and white spots on the outer web; primaries and secondaries light brown, tipped with yellowish white; tail quills marked with black and red zigzags, and large white spots. It lives on the confines of deserts, and is a native of the South of Africa, and was first discovered by Le Vaillant near the Cape of Good Hope. It runs with difficulty, but hides itself so well as only to be met with by accident; it is so fat that it cannot often fly, and is easily taken with the hand when found.

See Temminck, Histoire Naturelle Générale des Gallinacés; Cuvier, Regne Animal; Latham's General History of Birds.

HEMIPTERA, in Zoology, an order of sucking insects, established by Linnæus, but restricted by Degeer, answering exactly to the order Rhyngotes of Fabricius.

Ordinal character. Wings two, covered with elytra; mouth proper for suction, without distinct jaws; mandibles formed of a tubular, jointed, cylindrical, or conical trunk, curved on the front of the chest, containing three bristles, forming together a needlelike sucker.

According to Savigny, the mouths of these insects are only modifications of those of the other orders. He says, that the two upper bristles fill the place of the mandibles, the two lower threads (which are united together) represent the jaws, and the longest bristle represents their lower lip; while the sheath of their sucker is simply an elongation of their upper lip; so that the palpi are the only parts which are truly wanting, and even vestiges of these are to be found in the genus Thrips.

The elytra of some of the families are partly coriaceous and partly membranaceous, from whence the name of the order, Half-winged; in others they are netted, strong, and of an uniform texture. These insects live by sucking the juices of animals and plants, which they obtain by piercing them with their trunks. The Hemiptera, like most other insects, undergo three changes, but they have nearly the same form in all

HEMIPO-
DIUS.HEMI-PTERA.

HEMI-PTERA.
—
HEMI-
STICH.

their stages; for the only change which they undergo is occasioned by the developement of their wings and the growth of the body, which requires that they should be furnished with a fresh skin. This order has been divided into two groups: first, those with the beak growing from the forehead, and the end of the elytra membranaceous, and placed horizontally; when folded together called Heteroptera, containing the family Cimicidæ, or Bugs, living on animals, and Geocorisidæ, or Water Bugs, living on vegetable juices. The other, called Homoptera, have the beak growing from the under side of the head near the chest, and the elytra, half membranaceous or coriaceous, of the same texture throughout, and placed slopingly: these all live on vegetable juices. This group contains three families; the Cicadidæ, the Aphides, and the Coccidæ.

HEMISPHERE, } Fr. hemisphere; It. emispero; HEMISPHERE'Rick, } Sp. emispherio; Lat. hemisphae- HEMISPHERE'rical. } rium; Gr. ἡμισφαῖρον, from ἡμις, half, and σφαῖρα, a sphere or globe.

Half of a sphere or globe; (in Geometry) when such a sphere is divided by a plane passing through its centre.

Lowly betweene their dainty hemisphaeres,
(Their hemisphaeres the heav'nly globes excelling),

A path more white than is the name it beares,
The lacteal path, conducts to the sweet dwelling
Where best Delight all ioyes sits freely dealing.

Spenser. Britain's Ida, can. 3.

That we call a fayrie stone, and is often found in gravel-pits amongst us, being of an hemispherical figure, hath five double lines arising from the center of its basis, which, if no accretion distract them, do commonly concur and meet in the pole thereof.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book ii. ch. i.

Without this circular motion of the earth, here could be no living: one hemisphere would be condemn'd to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun-beams.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

And in creatures, whose eyes are without motion, as in divers insects, in this case either they have more than two eyes, or their eyes are nearly two protuberant hemispheres, and each hemisphere often consisting of a prodigious number of other little segments of a sphere.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. ii.

Water, oyl, and, in short, all liquids run nearly in a spherical form, when hung on a small surface, as at the point of a pin; or into an hemispherical figure, on a broader surface; their self-attraction causing the former, as that of the earth, and the surface on which they lye doth the latter.

Id. Astro-Theology, book vi. ch. i.

Ech. of a hemispherical form, covered with sharp strong spines, above an inch long.

Pennant. British Zoology. Echinus.

When Columbus had engaged King Ferdinand in the discovery of the other hemisphere, the sailors with whom he embarked in the expedition had so little confidence in their commander, that, after having been long at sea looking for coasts which they expected never to find, they raised a general mutiny, and demanded to return.

Johnson. The Adventurer, No. 99.

Ech. hemisphaeric, depressed, with five linear flexuous ambulacra or avenues.

Pennant. British Zoology. Echinus.

HEMISTEMMA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Monogynia, natural order Dilleniaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-leaved; corolla, petals five, obtuse, or emarginate; stamens numerous, arranged in a straight line, the exterior stamens sterile.

A genus allied to Cistus, containing two species. Natives of Madagascar. Decandolle.

HEMISTICH, } Fr. hemistique; It. and Sp.
HEMISTICHAL. } emistico; Lat. hemistichium; Gr.
ἡμιστίχιον, from ἡμις, half, and στίχος, a verse.

Half of a verse.

HEMI-STICH.
—
HEMOR-RHIDS.

Virgil seems to endeavour to keep up his versification to an harmonious dignity; and therefore, when fit words do not offer with some ease, he will rather break off in an hemestich, than that the line should be lazy and languid.

Garth. Ovid. Metamorphoses. Preface.

The reader will observe, the constant return of the hemistichal point, which I have been careful to preserve and to represent with exactness; as I suspect that it shows how these poems were sung to the harp by the minstrels.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i. a. ii. p. 5. Emendations and Additions.

The accent, or tone, is understood to be an elevation or sinking of the voice in reciting; the pause is a rest that divides the verse into two parts, each of them called an hemistich.

Goldsmith. Essay 18.

HEMLOCK, A.S. hemleac, hymlice, cicuta. Junius, Skinner, and Minshew say nothing about the origin of this word. It has not obtained in the cognate languages.

But cursed speaking set out in the image of godlynes, what is it elles than the poison of humlocke myxed with wyne? so that the venome is more presently strong, in that it is myngled with a most holosome matter.

Udall. James, ch. iii.

Here henbane, poppy, hemloc here,
Procuring deadly sleeping,
Which I do minister with fear,
Not fit for each man's keeping.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 6.

As touching hemlocke, it is also a ranke poyson, witnesse the publicke ordinance and law of the Athenians, whereby malefactors, who have deserved to die, were forced to drinke that odious potion of hemlocke.

Holland. Plinie, book xxv. ch. xiii.

The ruin'd wall, compos'd of stinking mud,
O'ergrown with hemlock, on supporters stood.

Pomfret. Love triumphant over Reason.

Alas! the drops which morning sheds
With dewy fingers on the meads,
The pink's and vi'let's tubes to fill,
Alike the noxious juices fed
Of deadly hemlock's pois'nous weed,
And give 'em fatal pow'r to kill!

Cooper. The Apology of Aristippus.

HEMORRHAGE, } Fr. hemorrhagie; Gr.
HEMORRHAGY. } αἱμορραγία; sanguinis erup- tio, a breaking or bursting forth of the blood, from αἷμα, the blood, and ῥήγνυ-ειν, to break.

Others wear [bloodstones] against hemorrhages.
Byrle. Works, vol. iv. p. 767. Essay of the Porousness of Animal Bodies.

That the maternal blood flows most copiously to the placenta uterina in women, is manifest from the great hemorrhagy that succeeds the separation thereof at the birth.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

Inflammatory and bilious fevers, hemorrhages, apoplexies, inflammation of the brain, mania, have arisen from the increased impetuosity it [anger] has given to the vascular system.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. p. 301 Anger.

HEMORRHIDS, } Fr. hemorrhoides; It. emor- HEMORRHIDAL. } roidi; Lat. hemorrhoids; Gr.
αἱμορροῖς; sanguinis fluxus, a flowing of the blood, from αἷμα, the blood, and ῥέ-ειν, to flow. Also written emerods, q. v.

Hemorroides be vaynes in the foundement, of whome do happen sundry passions, sometyme swellng, without bledynge, sometyme superfluous blood by the puissance of nature, is by them expelled, and than be they very conuenient.

Sir Thomas Elyot. Castel of Helth, book iii. ch. x.

Or, as some thought, for that his bodie was dried up, by reason that certaine passages, which now we tearme hemorrhoides, were closed up and grown to a verie hard crust, they were so bound with cold.

Holland. Ammianus, fol. 392. Valentinianus and Valens.

HEMOR- Eusebius, an holy writer, affirmeth, there grew a strange and un-RHODS. known plant near the statue of Christ, erected by his hæmorrhoidal — patient in the Gospel, which attaining unto the hem of his vesture, HEMP. acquired a sudden faculty to cure all diseases.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book vii. ch. xviii.

To these useful stones I might add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwal, which, being once well heated at the fire, retains its warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease and relief in several pains and diseases, particularly in that of the internal hæmorrhoids.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

And I shall proceed to take notice of a distemper, that physicians generally reckon among diseases, I mean the flowing of blood at the hæmorrhoidal veins.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 233. A Free Enquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

[The Leech] inhabits standing waters. The best of phlebotomists, especially in hæmorrhoids.

Pennant. British Zoology. Hirudo. Leech.

HEMP, HEMPEN, HEMPY,
HEMP-BEATER,
HEMP-OIL,
HEMP-PLANT,
HEMP-SEED.

A. S. heenep, canabis; Ger.
hanf; D. hennep; Sw. hampa;
which the Etymologists agree to be from the Gr. κάνναβις; Lat.
cannabis; whence the Fr. chanvre;
Sp. cannamon; It. cannapa.

And she had on a suckeny
That not of hempe herdes was
So faire was none in all Arras.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 121.

Yet could not he (good man) for all his art the culuer smight,
But hyt the hempe corde, and of the knot the bands he brast,
Wherby the byrd was bound, and by her fote did hang at mast.

Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book v.

A man in deepe despaire, with hempe in hand,
Went out in haste to ende his wretched dayes;
And where he thought the gallo tree should stand
He found a pot of gold.

Turbervile. Of Two Desperate Men.

The hempe groweth about Smolensko vpon the Polish border, 300 miles in compasse; muche of the soile is so imployed.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 364. Distances of Places.

Hemp in effect secureth itself from thieves, not because it is ominous for them to steal that which is the instrument of their execution, but because much pains (which idle persons hate at their hearts) is required to reduce hemp to profit.

Fuller. Worthues. Dorsetshire.

— And to increase his feares,
In fowle reproch of knighthoodes fayre degree,
About his necke an hempen rope he weares,
That with his glistring armes does ill agree:
But he of rope, or armes, has now no memoree.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 9.

'Twixt the rind and the tree (called maguais) there is a cotton or hempe kind of moss, which they wear for their clothing.

Howell. Letter 54. book ii.

— Now your thump,
A thing deriv'd first from your hempe-beaters,
Takes a man's wind away most spitefully.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Passionate Madman, act iii.

The juice of greene hempe-seed being dropped into the eares, driveth out any wormes or vermin therein engendred, yea, and what earewigs or such like creatures that are gotten therein: but it will cause headach withall.

Holland. Plinie, book xx.

It is said, that they make cordage here of hemp; but if they have any such manufactory, it is some distance from the town, for here is no sign of any such thing.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1685.

The ships do commonly hire of the merchants here each two cables to moor by all the time they lie here, to save their own hempen cables.

Id. Ib. Anno 1699.

I was told by a colonel, that the soldiers this winter making use of sallad oil to keep their locks from freezing, found they could not discharge; but being advised to use hemp oil, they froze not.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 716. Experiments and Observations relating to the History of Cold.

At eve last Midsummer no sleep I sought,
But to the field a bag of hemp-seed brought;
I scattered round the seed on every side,
And three times, in a trembling accent, cry'd,
This hemp-seed with my virgin hand I sow,
Who shall my true love be the crop shall mow.

Gay. Pastoral 4. l. 23.

If the hemp and flax of Riga are purchased with the tobacco of Virginia, which had been purchased with British manufactures, the merchant must wait for the returns of two distinct foreign trades, before he can employ the same capital in repurchasing a like quantity of British manufactures.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book ii. ch. v.

The former of these are made of the bark of a pine-tree beat into a hempen state.

Cook. Voyages, vol. ix. book iv. ch. iii.

Except the flax, or hemp plant, and a few other plants, there is very little herbage of any sort, and none that was eatable, that we found; except about a handful of water-cresses, and about the same quantity of celery.

Id. Ib. vol. vi. book i. ch. v.

HEMPSEED, according to Pliny, is very efficacious in medicine. Among other qualities it is an admirable cosmetic, it strengthens the sight, subdues inflamma-tions, and quiets colics. When roasted it is an astringent; mixed with vinegar it cures dysenteries, and eaten with raisins it is a specific in liver complaints.
It may be exhibited very usefully in consumptions; callosities and tumours are softened by it; and if it be mixed with the root of the wild cucumber, it draws out stings and thorns. Broken bones, herpetic sores, and eruptions, are under its control. It is good for the nails, and may be beneficially employed in complaints of the stomach and throat. (xx. 92.)

But the use to which it is applied by the love-sick maiden in the above extract from Gay was unknown to the Roman Philosopher. The superstition is practised in Scotland, but the time at which the charm is to be tried is transferred from Midsummer eve to that night of wonders, the Hallow e'en, the vigil of All Saints Day, on the first of November. Burns, who no doubt had often witnessed and practised the ceremony, and most probably believed in its efficacy, has very accurately described it in the notes on his Poem Halloween. — “Steal out unperceived, and sow a handful of Hempseed, harrowing it with any thing you can conveniently draw after you. Repeat, now and then, ‘Hempseed I saw thee, Hempseed I saw thee; and him (or her) that is to be my true love come after me and pou thee.’
Look over your left shoulder, and you will see the appearance of the person invoked in the attitude of pulling Hemp. Some traditions say, ‘Come after me and shaw thee;’ that is, show thyself; in which case it simply appears. Others omit the harrowing, and say, ‘Come after me and harrow thee.’”

HEN,

HEN-COOP,

HEN-HARRIER,

HEN-HEARTED,

HEN-PECKED,

HEN-ROOST,

HEN-TURKEY.

A. S. hæn, a hen; han, hana, a cock; D. henne, hinne, a hen;
haen, a cock; Ger. henne, a hen;
han, a cock; Sw. hæna, a hen;
hane, a cock. Ihre observes, that he has seen two Etymologies deserving of notice: the one, that hanē (a cock) is from the Lat. can-ere, or the Gr.
χαύειν, clamare; as it is peculiar to that bird to warn men of their duty by their noisy crowing: the other, that hane is from the pronoun han, he, and hæna, from

HEMP
—
HEN.

HEN. hon, she, (κατ'ἐξοχήν.) Junius supplies two more, the Gr. áva, the vocative of ávaξ, a king; or áva, by apocope, for ávaστα, surge, arise.

And an hen to výftene ssylllynges.

R. Gloucester, p. 404.

Hou ofte wolde I gedre togider thi children as an henne gederith togidere here chyken undir hir wyngis, and thou woldist not.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxiii.

How often would I haue gathered thy childre together, as y^e henne gathereth her chickens vnder her wynges, but ye would not.

Bible, Anno 1551.

This gentil cok had in his governance
Seven hennes, for to don all his plesance,
Which were his susters and his paramoures,
And wonder like to him, as of coloures.

Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14872.

But as a cocke among the hennes.

Gower. Conf. Am. book viii, fol. 174.

I my selfe, with many other moe, haue seene the cocke swan kill his hen; because she followed another cocke.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, sig. S. viii.

He is reconed a lowte and a hennehearted rascall, that maketh no querell whan wrong is done vnto him.

Udall. James, ch. i.

A man shall know a good and kindly hen by her comb, when it is streight and upright: otherwhiles also double crested: also by the pinion feathers blacke, the upper plume reddish.

Holland. Plinie, book x. ch. lvi.

And now (saith he) the souldiours are comforted and refreshed well ynough, and none there is but my brother consull that would have the battaile differred; who no doubt is more hen-hearted than bodily hurt.

Id. Livius, fol. 423.

Captain Swan, to encourage his men to eat this coarse flesh, would commend it for extraordinary good food, comparing the seal to a roasting pig, the boobies to hens, and the penguins to ducks.

Dampier. Voyages, Anno 1684.

So that with provision chests, hen-coops and parrot cages, our ships were full of lumber, with which we intended to sail.

Id. Ib. Anno 1676.

This sort of good man is very frequent in the populous and wealthy city of London, and is the true hen-peck man, the kind creature cannot break through his kindnesses so far as to come to an explanation with the tender soul, and therefore goes on to comfort her when nothing ails her, to appease her when she is not angry, and to give her his cash when he knows she does not want it.

Spectator, No. 176.

It would show his reading, if the poet put a hen-turkey upon a table in a tragedy; and therefore I would advise it in Hamlet, instead of their painted trifles.

King. Art of Cookery, let. 6.

A common hen, if moderately fed, will lay above a hundred eggs from the beginning of spring to the latter end of autumn.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, part iii. book iii. ch. ii.

The hen-harrier weighs about twelve ounces: the length is seventeen inches; the breadth three feet three inches.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Hen Harrier.

Thus we, who lead poetic lives,
The hen-peck'd culls of vixen wives,
Receive their orders, and obey,
Like husbands in the common way.

Lloyd. On Rhyme. Epistle to a Friend.

Gipsies, who ev'ry ill can cure,
Except the ill of being poor,
Who charms 'gainst love and agues sell,
Who can in hen-roost set a spell,
Prepar'd by arts, to them best known,
To catch all feet except their own.

Churchill. The Ghost, book i.

HENCE, v. } Very variously written. See
HENCE, adv. } the extracts from Wiclif and HE'NCEFORTH, } Chaucer. A. S. heonan, heonon; HE'NCEFORWARD. } D. hen, hennen; Ger. hin; from the Lat. hinc, say Skinner and Minshew. Perhaps from the A. S. hig-an, to hie, to go. It is applied to,

The time or place from which motion, remoteness, or distance is made or measured; to that from which any thing moves or begins its motion, to the source, origin, cause; from here, from this, sc. place or time; source, origin, or cause.

Sidney makes a verb of hence.

— Holynesse and love. han ben longe hennes.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 79.

If ye have feith as a corn of Seveuev, ye schulen sey to this hil passe thou hennes, and it schal passe. Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xvii.

And I seye to you, ye schulen not se me fro hennisforth til ye seyen blesid is he that comith in the name of the Lord.

Id. Ib. ch. xxiii.

And therfore is I come, and eke Alein,
To griud our corn and cary it hame agein:
I pray you spede us hene that ye may.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4031

And yet have I alway a coltes tothe;
As many a yere as it is passed henne
Sin that my tap of lif began to renne.

Id. The Reves Prologue, v. 3887.

By Seinte Marie, sayd this tavernere,
The child sayth soth, for he hath slain this yere
Hens over a mile, within a gret village.
Both man and woman, child, and hyne, and page.

Id. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12621.

— God him graunt grace
That he may, er he hence pace
Contein under obedience
Through the vertue of pacience.

Id. The Romant of the Rose, v. 4922.

Such wrech on hem for fetching of Heleine
There shal be take, er that we hence wend.

Id. The fifth Booke of Troilus.

But hennesforth I wol my processe hold
To speake of adventures and of batailles,
That yet was never herd so gret mervailles.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10972.

Hee [Gregorie] decreed that y^e election of the emperour shoulde continue from henceforth amonge the princes of Germanye.

Bale. Pageant of Popes, by Studley, fol. 70.

Go, bawling cur, thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me.
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curs'd.

Sidney. Arcadia, book i.

Playing on shaumes and trumpets, that from hence,
Their sound did reach unto the heaven's hight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 5.

— Hence horrible shadow,
Vnreall mock'ry hence.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 142.

KING. Follow him at foote,
Tempt him with speed aboard:
Delay it not; Ile haue him hence to night.

Id. Hamlet, fol. 272.

Hence-banished, is banisht from the world,
And world's exile is death.

Id. Romeo and Juliet, fol. 67.

— My ships are ready, and
My people did expect my hence-departure
Two dayes agoe.

Id. Winter's Tale, fol. 281

Or why should ever I henceforth desyre
To see faire heaven's face, and life not leave,
Sith that false traytour did my honour reave?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 1.

When she once could see to what end the Spanish preparations tended, she would willingly afford him [the French King] all the assistance she conveniently could, lest the adversaries hence-forward, as heretofore, should reap advantage by his necessity.

Camden. Elizabeth, Anno 1595.

— But first of all
How we may steale from hence: and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going,
And our returne, to excuse: but first how get hence.

Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 381.

HENCE.
—
HENDE-
CASYL-
LABLE.

Henrie (as if by miracle
Preseru'd by forraines long
From hence-ment treasons) did arriue
To right his natiues' wrong.
Warner. Albion's England, book vi. ch. xxxiii.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
To her, and him who best deserves her love!
Depart from hence, in peace as free as air,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair.
Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

What mortals henceforth shall our power adore,
Our fanes frequent, our oracles implore,
If the proud Grecians thus successful boast
Their rising bulwarks on the sea-beat coast.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, book vii.

And now having seen what the true causes of all our misapprehensions of God are, let us from hence-forward beware of them; and, so far as in us lies, labour to avoid them.

Scott. Christian Life, part ii. ch. vi

Not Envy base, nor creeping Gain,
Dare the Muse's walk to stain,
While bright-ey'd Science watches round;
Hence away, 'tis holy ground!
Gray. Ode for Musick.

Baptiz'd or Pagan, all that travel here,
He will'd henceforth should buy their passage dear,
For with their spoils, t'atone the virgin's doom,
He vow'd a thousand trophies at her tomb.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xxix. l. 240.

I have survived my reputation, my fortune, my friendships, and nothing remains henceforward for me but solitude and repentance.

Goldsmith. The Good-natur'd Man, act v.

HE'NCHMAN, } Skinner from hine, a servant,
HENCH-BOY. } and man, q. d. hine-man, or hines-
man. Spelman from Ger. hengst, a war-horse. Drs.
Percy and Blackstone say, "Henchman quasi haunch- man, one that goes behind another. Pedissequus," sc.
stands or follows at his haunch. And Mr. Steevens remarks that this Etymology may receive some support from the passage already quoted, in v. Haunch, from the Second Part of Shakspeare's Henry IV. See HAUNCH. And see the note on the Midsummer Night's Dream. Generally,

An attendant, a follower.

And every knight had after him riding
Three hensh-men on him awaiting.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

Cōpare me the fewe, & poor simple disciples of Jesus, with the solēne pompe, passing the pompe of any worldly prince, of such as go before the bishop, of his hensemēn, of trumpettes, of sundry tunes, &c.
Udall. Mark, ch. xi.

Her highnes hath of late, whereat some doo moche nīvel, dissolved the auncient office of the henchmen.
Lodge, vol. i. fol. 358. Francis Alen to the Earl of Shrewsbury.

Fur. For my own part,
Kill or be kill'd, (for there's the short and long on't)
Call me your shadow's hensh-boy.
Ford. The Ladie's Trial, act i. sc. 1.

Why should Titania crosse her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.
Shakspeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, fol. 149.

Three henchmen were for every knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind:
White velvet, but unshorn, for cloaks they wore,
And each within his hand a truncheon bore.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

HENDECASYLLABLE, Gr. ἑνδεκα, eleven, and συλλαβή, a syllable. Explained by the citation below.

I will only, therefore, premise further that I design to give these trifles the title of hendecasyllables, (hendecasyllabi;) in allusion to the measure in which the verses are composed.

Melmoth. Pliny to Pulernus, book iv. let. 14.

In þys half þere were aslawe þe noble men and hende,
Syre Lyger Duc of Babyloýne, & anoþer Duc al so,
And the Erl of Salesbury, and of Cýcestre þerto.

R. Gloucester, p. 216

So loveth she this hendy Nicholas,
That Absolon may blow the buckes horne:
He ne had for his labour but a scorne.

Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3386.

Mede ys y married more for her mechel richesse
þan fo holýnesse oþ henderes. oþr for hýe kýnde.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 28.

And held holýnesse a jape. and hendýnesse a wastour.

Id. Ib. p. 399.

I haylsede that hirdman, and hendeliche I sayde.

Id. Crede, p. 9.

HENDY, Skinner says, hend, hende: feat, fine, gentle, q. d. handy, or handsome. See HAND. Un- hende (see R. Gloucester, p. 655) is used; fierce, cruel.

HENEAGUAS, or HENEAGAS, two of the most Southern of the Bahama Islands. The original name is Inagua, a Spanish word signifying a watering-place.
A strait of about five miles in width separates the two Islands. Little Heneagua is not at all inhabited nor visited, except perhaps by the wreckers and other wandering adventurers of this Archipelago. The Great Heneagua is about 45 miles in length from South-West to North-East, and 16 in its average width. It is chiefly known from the great number of shipwrecks which it has occasioned by its position at the mouth of the windward passage, the frequented strait between Cuba and St. Domingo. A dangerous reef runs at some distance off the shore, and, from the strength and uncertainty of the currents, vessels are continually and unexpectedly driven upon it. In 1800, the Lowestoffe man-of-war, and eight Jamaica ships under her convoy, were cast away and destroyed on this treacherous coast.
The land is low, and of an uninviting appearance, but in the interior are extensive salt-ponds, which induced some families from the Northern Islands to settle there in 1803. But owing to the difficult navigation of the shores, and the consequent obstruction to mercantile adventures, the colony does not appear to have increased. The Eastern coast of the Great Heneagua lies nearly in longitude 72° 55' West, and the Southern shore in latitude 21° 3' North. The most Westerly extremity of the Island is the promontory called Devil's Point, on both sides of which, to the North and South,
there is good anchorage.

HENRIETTIA, in Botany, a genus of the class
Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Melasto- maceæ. Generic character: calyx bell-shaped, fivelobed, lobes broad, obtuse; corolla, petals five, ovate, base of the anther bifid, the apex long beaked; berry five-celled.

Two species, natives of Jamaica and Ceylon. De- candolle.

HENT, Skinner, hent, henten, to catch, q. d. to hand, manu prehendere, to seize with the hand. A. S. hend- an, or hent-an, to catch, to seize, in which sense, says
Lye, Chaucer uses henten; and henters pro raptoribus.

In Shakspeare, Measure for Measure, to seize, to occupy.

Verste he was sore adrad, þat þe geaunt were þeyre neý
And naþeles he hente herte.

R. Gloucester, p. 204.

HENDE-
CASYL-LABLE.
—
HENT.

HENT.

HEPIA-
LUS.

Honger hent in haste. Wastour by the mawe.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 137.

And of this crie ne wolde they never stenten,
Till they the reines of his bridel henten.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 906.

We scorne suche raueners, and henters of foulest things.
Id. Boecius, book i. fol. 211.

Encreasing his wrath with many a threat,
His harmefull batchet he hent in hand.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calenar, fol. 6.

The generous and grauest citizens
Haue hent the gates, and very neere vpon
The duke is ent'ring.
Shakspeare. Measure for Measure, fol. 79.

With his left foot fast forward gan he stride,
And with his left the Pagan's right arme hent,
With his right hand meanwhile the man's right side,
He cut, he wounded, mangled, tore, and rent.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Bulloigne, book xix. st. 16.

HEPATICA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polyandria, order Polygynia, natural order Ranunculaceæ. Generic character: involucre three-leaved, calyx-like, close to the flower, leaves entire; corolla, petals six to nine, disposed in a double or triple series.

A beautiful Alpine genus, divided from Anemone, containing three species, natives of Europe and North America, H. triloba, well known in gardens, with single and double blue, white, red, and purple varieties, is a native of Europe.

HEPATICK, Gr. ἡπατικός, from ἥπαρ, ἥπατος, the liver; Fr. hepatique.

Of or pertaining to the liver.

This observation can scarce be made good, without entering into the controversy, which, for its difficulty and importance, has perplexed divers modern physicians; whether there be any medicines that have a sympathy with the head, heart, liver, &c. and thereby deserve the name of cephalic, cordial, or hepatic, &c.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 93. Of the Reconcilableness of Specific Medicines, &c.

The bile is of two sorts, the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, which is a sort of repository for the gall, and the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver.
Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, p. 10.

His lordship's bilious and hepatick complaints seemed alone not equal to the expected mournful event.
Johnson. Life of Littleton.

HEPATUS, in Zoology, a genus of short-tailed crabs, established by Latreille, allied to Calappa of Fabricius.

Generic character. All the legs for walking hooked, and extending horizontally; shell the segment of a circle, narrowed behind and finely toothed on the edge; second joint of the first jaw-like feet sharp pointed.

These Crustacea are intermediate between the Crabs and the Calappæ. Only one species is well known.

The Cancer princeps of Bosc, the Cancer annularis of Olivier, and Calappa angustata of Fabricius, figured by Herbst, pl. xxxviii. fig. 2. found in the American Ocean.

HEPIALUS, in Zoology, a genus of Lepidopterous insects, belonging to the family Bombycidæ, established by Fabricius.

Generic character. Antennæ moniliform, shorter than the thorax; lower palpi very small, very hairy; trunk none or imperceptible; wings long, narrow, lanceolate, always shelving in repose.

These insects, from the rapidity of their flight, are trivially called Swifts. Their larvæ are observed with difficulty, as they live on the roots of plants; their body is generally bald, and their mouth armed with two strong pair of jaws, by which they cut the roots. They form their cocon under ground of fine earth; their chrysalis is cylindrical, rather convex above, and enveloped by the short wing; the sides of the ring of the body are armed with teeth pointing towards the tail.

The type of the genus is Phalæna humuli, Linnæus, which lives on the roots of hops, and commits great ravages in their plantations. It is often found in church-yards, and, as the males are of a beautiful white, they are trivially called Ghost Moths.

HEPTACA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polygamia, order Dioecia. Generic character: hermaphrodite flower, calyx, three-leaved; corolla, petals ten; stamens numerous; style one, berry seven-celled, many-seeded. Male flower: calyx, three-leaved; corolla, petals ten; stamens about one hundred.

One species, H. Africana, a small tree, native of the Eastern parts of Africa.

HEPTAGON, } Gr. ἑπτα, seven, and γωνία, an HEPTAGONAL. } angle.

A figure with seven angles, and, consequently, seven sides.

In a circle describe an heptagonal and equilateral figure; from whose every side shall fall equilateral triangles.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11. note by Selden.

For the space about any point may be filled up either by six equilateral triangles, or four squares, or three hexagons; whereas three pentagons are too little, and three heptagons too much.

Ray. On the Creation, part viii.

HEPTARCHY, } Gr. ἑπτα, seven, and ἀρχή, a HEPTARCHIST, } principality. For the use of the HEPTARCHICK. } word see the Examples.

This heptarchy or division of this island into seven kingdoms, came not in all at once, nor yet in an equal partition, but some good distance of time one after another, and as the invader had strength to expel the natives.

Baker. Of the first known Times of this Island.

The Saxons pursued their invasion with courage and fierceness, equal to the multitudes of their nation that swarmed over this island, and with such an uninterrupted course of fortune and victories, after the year 500, that by the end of the next century, they had subdued the whole body of the province, and established it in seven several kingdoms, which were, by the writers of those times, styled the heptarchy of the Saxons.

Temple. An Introduction to History of England.

Seven independent thrones, the Saxon heptarchy, were founded by the conquerors, and seven families, one of which has been continued, by female succession, to our present sovereign, derived their equal and sacred lineage from Woden, the god of war.

Gibbon. Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. xxxviii.

HER, } A. S. heora, here, her; written in old HE'RSELF. } English, hir, hire, here, hure, and used plurally (i. e. where we now use their) as well as singularly. The A. S. heora, of which here, her, are contractions, may be compounded of he, (itself used with no distinction of number or gender,) and ora; which latter must be left to some future Etymologist. See HE.

þe fader was þo glad y now, and bad hire [Regan] vnderstonde,
To whom heo wolde y married be with þe threde del ys londe.

R. Gloucester, p. 30.

With hir [Maude] went many a knyght tille Aniowe þat cuntre.

R. Brunne, p. 107.

I was aferd of hure face.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 13.

His modir kepte togidere alle these wordis & bare hem in her herte.

Wiclif. Luke, ch. ii.

HEPIA-
LUS.
—
HER.

HER.
HERALD.Sothely I sey to you thei han resseyved her meede.Wiclif. Matthew, ch. vi.

Ful wel she sange the service devine,
 Entuned in hire nose ful swetely:
 And French she spake ful fayre and fetisly,
 After the Scol of Stratford atte bowe,
 For Frenche of Paris was to hire unknowe.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 124.

And smale foules maken melodie,
 That slepen alle night with open eye
 So priketh hem nature in hir corages.

Id. Ib. v. 11.

And tho hir eie up to the heuen
 She caste, and sayde; O thou unkynde,
 Here shalt thou through thy slouth finde
 A lady dede for loue of thee.

Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 67

With that upon a grene bough
 A seynt of silke, which she there had
 She knit: and so hir selfe she lad,
 That she about hir white swere
 It dyd, and henge hir selfe there.

Id. Ib. fol. 67.

His doughter had a bed all bi hirselve,
 Right in the same chambre by and by.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4140.

The kyng of Englande, whan he was enfourmed of the mater, sayd, howe that he wolde counsell therle Moütfort to haue peace, so that alwayes he might be duke of Bretayne, and somewhat to recöpenche the lady, callinge herselfe duchesse, with some honest thyuge, assign-ynge her some certayne rent yerely to be payd out of some place, wher she myght be sure to haue it wythout daunger.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 229.

The ioyous day gan early to appeare;
 And fayre Aurora from the deawy bed
 Of aged Tithone gan herselfe to reare
 With rosy cheekes, for shame as blushing red:
 Her golden locks, for hast, were loosely shed
 About her eares, when Una her did marke
 Clymbe to her charret, all with flowers spred,
 From heven high to chace the chearelesse darke;
 With mery note her lowd salutes the mounting lark.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

HERACLEUM, in Botany, a genus of the class
Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Umbelliferae.
 Generic character: corolla irregular, inflexed, emarginate;
 involucre caducous; fruit elliptical, emarginate,
 compressed, striated.

The species are natives of the North of Europe. H.
spondylium, the cow parsnep, is a native of England.

HE'RALD, v. Ger. herold; D. heraut; Sw.
 HE'RALD, n. } hærold; Fr. herault, heraut; It.
 HE'RALD, adj. } araldo; Sp. heraldo. About this HE'RALDRY, } name of heralt, divers (says Ver-HERA'LDICK. } stegan) have been diversly conceited. For which conceits may be consulted Ver-stegan himself, ch. x., Menage, Spelman, Vossius, de Vitiis, and Wachter. Junius and Wachter seem the most reasonable; viz. from the Ger. haren, to cry, to proclaim, (the same word, probably, with the A. S. herg-an, herian, to hery, q. v.) The Fr. have the verb her-auder, which Cotgrave explains, to blaze; publicly to denounce, manifest, or commend.

Shakspeare uses the verb; to herald, to act as herald
 to. And see HERALDRY, in our Second Division.

A crier, proclaimer, publisher, messenger.

Thus have ich beo hus heraude. her and in helle.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 318.

An heraude on a scaffold made an o,
 Til that the noise of the peple was ydo.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2536.

The vice cleped auantance,
 With pride hath take his acquaintance.

VOL. XXIII.

HERALD.
HERAULT

So that his owne price he lasseth,
 Whan he suche mesure ouerpasseth,
 That he his owne heraulde is.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 21.

And though there be no cause why,
 Yet woll he iangle, not for thy
 As he whiche hath the herauldie
 Of hem, that vsen for to lie.

Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 36.

Than an haraulde of the duke of Guerles, who coude well in the langage of Frenche, was enformed what he shuld say, and so he rode tyll he came into ye Frenche hoost; and than he drewe hym to kyng Philyppe, and to his counsaile, and sayd, syr, the kyng of Englande is in the felde, and desyreth to haue batell, power agaynst power.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. xl.

ANG. Wee are sent,
 To giue thee from our royal master thanks,
 Onely to harrold thee into his sight,
 Not pay thee.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 132.

My herald thoughts, in thy pure bosome rest them.

Id. Two Gentlemen of Verona, fol. 29.

To tell the glory of the feast that day,
 The goodly seruice, the deuisefull sights,
 The bridegroom's state, the bride's most rich aray,
 The pride of ladies, and the worth of knights,
 The royall banquets, and the rare delights,
 Were worke fit for an herauld, not for me.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 3.

The Gaules seeing their man slain, sent immediately an herald to Rome to accuse Fabius, how against all right and reason he began wars with them, without any open proclamation made before.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 57. Numa.

Let us see whether titles of honour be either unfit in themselves to be given to bishops, or what the guise of Christendome hath been in her spiritual heraldry.

Taylor. Polemical Discourses, fol. 152.

And very likely, when this limit was made, that in honour of him [Mercury] being by name president of ways, and by his office of heraldship, pacifex, i. e. peace-maker, as an old stamp titles him, they called it Wodensdike.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 3. Note by Selden.

The sound of trumpets to the voice reply'd,
 And round the royal lists the heralds cry'd
 "Arcite of Thebes has won the beauteous bride."

Dryden. Palamon and Arcite.

Certainly that must needs be a glorious thing, that thus gives titles of glory to the Prince of glory, that thus fills the heraldry of heaven, and calls gifts, graces, blessings and every good thing, after its own name.

South. Sermons, vol. x. p. 302.

And now the queen, to glad her sons, proclaims
 By herald hawkers, high heroic games.

Pope. The Dunciad, book ii.

There are several proofs which indicate that many romances of the fourteenth century, if not in verse, at least those written in prose, were the work of heralds.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i. p. 331.

The pompous circumstances of which these heraldic narratives consisted, and the minute prolixity with which they were displayed, seem to have infected the professed Historians of the Age.

Id. Ib. p. 336.

Or chant of heraldry the drowsy song,
 How tyrant blood, o'er many a region wide,
 Rolls to a thousand thrones its execrable tide.

Beattie. The Minstrel, book ii.

HERAULT, a Department of the South of France, bounded on its Northern limits by the Departments of Gard and Aveyron, on the West by the Department of Tarn, and on the South and South-East by that of Aude and the Mediterranean. It takes its name from the river Herault, which enters the Department at Ganges, and falls into the sea near Agde. At some distance from the sea it communicates with the great Canal du Midi. This river washes down from the mountains a considerable quantity of gold, which is found mingled

HERAULT. with talcites and granitic fragments. It is after floods and inundations that those whose trade it is to wash the sands find the richest harvest. The surface of this Department is 630,935 hectares, or about 2800 square miles, and the population, in 1827, was 339,560. The country towards the West and North is hilly or even mountainous; towards the South and East parallel to the shores of the Mediterranean, it is barren and rocky, but extensive alluvial lands, forming salt-marshes and lagoons, (estangs), have been in the course of Ages formed along the coast at the foot of the rocks from Lunelle to Nissau. The valley forming the central portion of the Department is tolerably fertile, and, owing to the excellence of its climate, is richly decked with vegetable productions. There is not much corn grown here, but the olive and the mulberry thrive well. Tobacco, some plants for dye stuffs, and aromatic shrubs for the distillation of perfumes and essences, are favourite objects of culture. The Department comprises the Bishoprics of Montpellier and Lodeve, both subject to the Archbishop of Toulouse. The chief places are Montpellier, BEZIERES, and AGDE; which two last have been already described.

Montpellier Montpellier, (Mons puellarum), the seat of the Departmental authorities, is situated about five miles from the sea, on an agreeable eminence, at the foot of which runs the Mosson and the Lez. The country round has a singularly luxuriant appearance. The city itself is extremely handsome, and appears much larger than it really is. The Fauxbourgs are built with regularity, but the interior is a labyrinth of narrow lanes, overshadowed by huge antique roofs, which almost exclude the light. On the summit of the hill is the celebrated Place de Peyron, said to be the handsomest promenade in Europe. It is formed by a terrace ornamented with fountains and temples. But its principal charm lies in the extensive prospect it commands, stretching from the Cevennes to the sea, and from the Alps to the Pyrenees. There are 21 Churches in the city, but the Cathedral or St. Peter's Church alone demands notice. The other remarkable edifices are the Theatre, the Music Hall, and the Government House. There is also a magnificent aqueduct, 10 miles in length, and in general of three rows of arches, which supplies Montpellier with water. The Academy, formerly a university, founded in 1196, numbered, in 1819, 1200 students. It has three Faculties, viz. of Medicine, Mathematics, and Belles Lettres. The Medical School acquired its reputation in the XIIth century, when some learned Moors, driven from Spain, established themselves here as teachers. The Anatomical Theatre is large enough to hold 2000 persons, and attached to the school is an excellent Botanical Garden, which is remarkable as having been the first public establishment of the kind in France. The Public Library contains 42,000 volumes, and the Museum, the Lyceum, and several Scientific Associations, bear witness to the culture of the place. Montpellier was formerly much resorted to by invalids, and was indeed proverbially spoken of for its salubrity, but there is reason to believe that it owes its reputation altogether to the interested representations of the Physicians established there, as it is remarkable for its liability to sudden changes of temperature, for its humidity, and its exposure to the vent bise. Silk, liqueurs, and essences are its commercial products. The little town of Cette, on the sea-side, is its port, but vessels of 200 tons burden can with difficulty approach.

Large sums have been expended in fruitless endeavours to make a port at Agde, at the mouth of the Herault, but the accumulations of mud and sand, carried Westward from the Rhone, have rendered the harbours unapproachable as soon as they have been formed. The little town of Lunelle in this Department was anciently of some importance, and the country around it is still famous for the fine muscadel wine which it produces, and which is esteemed the best in France.

HERB,
HERBA'CEOUS, HE'RBAGE, HE'RBAGED,
HE'RBAL, n.
HE'RBAL, adj.
HE'RBALIST, HE'RBAR, HE'RBARIZE, HE'RBARY, HERBA'RIAN, HE'RBARIST, HE'RBELET, HE'RBLESS,
HE'RBOUS, HE'RBY, HERBI'VOROUS.

Fr. herbe; It. herba; Sp. yerba; Lat. herba. Junius adopts the Etymology proposed by Vossius, the Gr. φῆρβ-ειν, pascere, to feed, and this Scheidius derives from φῆρβ-ειν, to bear. Herb, literally, then, will mean,

That which feeds or nourishes (sc. animals, called graminivorous) pasture, (for them.)

Herbs are distinguished from shrubs or trees, by the annual growth and decay of their stems or stalks, and by their not attaining the solidity of wood.

For the erthe that drinkith reyne ofte comyng on it & bryngith forth couenable erbe to hem of whiche it is tild takith blessing of God.

Wiclif. Ebrenwis, ch. vi.

And whan she homward came she wolde bring

Wortes and other herbes oft,

The which she shred and sethe for hire living.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8102.

She gethereth herbes soote,

She pulleth vp some by the roote,

And many with a knife she shereth

And all in to hir chaare she beareth.

Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 105.

Wherof Osmunde beyng ware, and also beyng sure of the kyng, made a great trusse of herbys or grasse, wherin he wrapped the childe, and so coueyed hym out of the citie of Laoune.

Fabyan. Works, vol. i. ch. 186.

Well seene in everie science that mote bee,

And every secret worke of Nature's wayes;

In wittie riddles; and in wise soothsayes;

In power of herbes; and tunes of beasts and burds.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iv. can. 2.

The rooffe hereof was arched over head,

And deckt with flowers and herbars daintily.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. ix. st. 46.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor shrub, but of an herbaceous plant, resembling the Water-flower-de-luce, as Garcias first described; or rather the common Reed, as Lobelius since affirmed.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book ii. ch. vi.

God having made man, the first thing he took care of, was his life; in the appointment of his convenient food: I have given you every herb and every tree for meat; Gen. i. 29. Which comprehended, with the herbage of plants, their roots, and fruits.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book iv. ch. vii.

As Pena the French herbarian hath also noted in the verie end of his herball.

Holinshed. Description of England, book iii. ch. ii.

He was a curious florist, an accurate herbalist, throughly vers'd in the book of nature, not unseen in any kind of ingenuous knowledges, such especially as were both for delight and use.

Mede. Works. The Author's Life.

The herbarists who have written thereof, doe say that it lieth along and creepeth by the ground.

Holland. Plinie, book xxvii. ch. xi.

You were as flowres, now wither'd: euen so

These herbelets shall, which we vpon you strew.

Shakspeare. Cymbeline, fol. 389.

HERB.

For the cold, lean, and emaciated, such herby ingredients should be made choice of as warm and cherish the natural heat, depure the blood, breed a laudable juice, and revive the spirits.

Evelyn. Acetaria.

No man goes about to poison a poor man's pitcher, nor lays plots to forrage his little garden made for the hospital of two bee-hives, and the feasting of a few Pythagorean herb-eaters.

Taylor. Sermon 10. part ii.

MAR. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity.

Shakspeare. Pericles, act iv. sc. 6.

It is just with such a person as with an ignorant physician, though possibly he may know the shape and the colour of an herb, as it is set down in an herbal, yet neither knows its virtue nor its operation, nor how to prepare it for a medicine.

Bates. Works, vol. iii. p. 213. On the Fear of God.

As the herbaceous eaters (for instance) are many, and devour much; so dryland surface we find naturally every where almost carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xi.

With wholesome herbage mix'd, the direful bane
Of vegetable venom taints the plain;
From Pæan sprung, their patron-god imparts
To all the Pharian race his healing arts.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book iv.

Delicious is your shelter to the soul,
As to the hunted hart the sallying spring,
Or stream full flowing, that his swelling sides
Laves, as he floats along the *herbag'*d brink.

Thomson. Summer.

Others made it their business to collect in voluminous herbals all the several leaves of some one tree.

Spectator, No. 455.

The herbal savour gave his sense delight.

Quarles. History of Jonah, 1620. I. 3. b.

I know two or three virtuosi that are good herbalists, who travelling in divers parts of America, partly islands, and partly regions of the continent, found there and brought away for Europe, many scores, if not many hundreds, of undescribed plants, some of which they shewed me, and others they presented me to.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 727. The Second Part of the Christian Virtuoso, aph. 4.

Which I do not say to detract from the excellent pains and performance of that learned, judicious, and laborious herbarist (C. Banhins), or to defraud him of his deserv'd honour, but only to shew, that he was too much sway'd by the opinions then generally current amongst herbarists, that different colour or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, and the like accidents, were sufficient to constitute a specifick difference.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

The Apothecaries' Company very seldom miss coming to Hampstead every spring, and here have their herbarizing feast; and I have heard them often say that they have found a greater variety of curious and useful plants near and about Hampstead than in any other place.

Soame. Analysis of Hampstead Water, 1734, p. 27.

But far remov'd in thund'ring camp is found
His slumbers short, his bed the herbless ground.

Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel, p. ii. l. 9.

When the earth ceased to furnish spontaneously all these primitive luxuries, and culture became requisite, separate inclosures for rearing herbs grew expedient.

Walpole. On Modern Gardening ch. vii.

Swift as his word, an arrow flew;
The dropping prize besprent with dew
The brothers, in contention gay,
Catch, and on gather'd herbage lay.

Jones. The Hindu Wife.

An herbary, for furnishing domestic medicines, always made a part of our ancient gardens.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 231, note n.

I speak of graminivorous and herbivorous birds; such as common fowls, turkeys, ducks, geese, pigeons, &c.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. xvi.

Nor in December, if we reason close,
Are fields poetically call'd herbose.

Byrom. Critical Remarks on Horace, book ii. ode. 3. v. 17.

HERBER, i. e. arbour, so written. See ARBOUR.

Prive pride in pes es nettille in herbere,
pe rose is myghtles, per nettille spreadis ouer fer.

R. Brunne, p. 280.

And shapen was this herber roofe and all
As a prety parlour.

Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe, fol. 366.

Til of fortune, they entred an herbere
With trees shadowed, fro the son shene
Ful of floures, and of hearbs grene
Wonder wholesome, of sight and aire.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, part iii. fol. 385.

HE'RBER, v.

HE'RBER, n.

HE'RBERGAGE,

HE'RBERGEOUR,

HE'RBOROUGH.

See HARBOUR, ante.

To shelter, to lodge.

Herbergeour, an harbinger, q. v.

one who looks out for a harbour or lodging for another.

Shortly I woll herberowe me.

Chaucer. The Romant of the Rose, fol. 144

But of his craft to reken wel his tides
His stremes and his strandes him besides,
His herberwe, his mone, and his lodemauage,
Ther was non swiche, from Hull unto Cartage.

Id. The Prologue, v. 405.

The miller sitting by the fire he fond,
For it was night, and forther might they nought,
But for the love of God they him besought
Of herberwe and of ese, as for hir peny.

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4117.

Wel sayde Salomon in his langage,
Ne bring not every man into thin hous,
For herberwing by night is perilous.

Id. The Cokes Prologue, v. 4330.

A ha (quod he) for Cristes passion
This miller had a sharpe conclusion,
Upon this argument of herbergage.

Id. Ib. v. 4326.

And in swiche place as thought hem advantage
For hir entente, they taken hir herbergage.

Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4567.

The fame anon thurghout the toun is born,
How Alla king shal come on pilgrimage,
By herbergeours that wenten him befor.

Id. Ib. v. 5417.

Doune fro the toure she gan to renne
In to an herber all hir owne
Where many a wonder woful mone
She made.

Gower. Conf. Am. book iv. fol. 67.

To him goth Elda tho forth right
And tolde him of his lorde tidinge
And praid, that for his comynge
He wolde assigne him herbergage.

Id. Ib. book ii. fol. 55.

After thys maner he came wyth hys armye to the citie of Tarson, whyche was sette on fyre by the Persians, because that Alexādre shoulde finde no herberowe there.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, book iii. fol. 26.

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, tooke order to have his armes set up in his last herborough.

Ben Jonson. Discoveries.

HERB.

HERBER.

HERCULANEUM.

HERCULANEUM.

HERCULANEUM, or HERCULANUM, as it is written on the Continent after the authority of Cicero, (ad Att. vii. 3.) a city of great antiquity on the Bay of Naples, buried under ashes and lava during an eruption of Vesuvius at the close of the 1st century, and accidentally discovered in 1713. At the time of the discovery, the learned were by no means agreed as to the site of the ancient Herculaneum. The Tabula Theodosiana fixed it at the 11th mile-stone from Naples; but the erroneousness of this calculation was discerned by Cluverius, who placed it on the site of Torre del Greco, still two miles to the South of its actual position. Some thought that the subterranean City was the Pompeii of antiquity, (for the true situation of Pompeii was not discovered till 40 years later,) while others believed it to be that Retina so often named by the younger Pliny in his account of the fatal eruption: this last conjecture appeared to receive support from the circumstance that the buried town is actually under the site of the modern Resina which might be supposed to have inherited the name of the town, on whose ruins it arose. The excavations, however, had not been long continued, when it was determined, beyond a doubt, by the inscriptions found, that the place was Herculaneum.

Described by the Ancients.

This town is cursorily mentioned by a great number of ancient authors, but by none is it circumstantially described. Pliny, Florus, and several other writers agree in fixing its position between Naples and Pompeii. Strabo says it was the first place that occurred on the road from Naples; and that it nearly adjoined Pompeii may be inferred from Pliny and from Columella. Strabo informs us that it was built on a promontory (or rather cape) exposed to the African or South-West wind, and on that account remarkably healthy: the situation was probably low, and from that circumstance, as well as from its position relatively to the mountain, enjoyed in a peculiar manner the refreshing current of the sea-breeze. The ancient shore appears, from the late investigations, to have been not more than 30 feet above the sea. The Salinæ Herculeæ, alluded to by Columella, were, probably, lagoons on the flat shore or salt-marshes in the valleys, which have been, subsequently, filled up by scorïæ and streams of lava.

Origin.

The origin of Herculaneum is lost in the dimness of mythic traditions. Dionysius of Halicarnassus (i. 44.) relates that Hercules, returning from Spain after conquering the tyrant Geryon, anchored here and built a town, (to which he gave his own name,) having the advantage of a port secure at all seasons. This port was the Portus Retinensis, (the bay between the points of Herculaneum and the ancient Retina,) which appears from Pliny to have been a station of the Roman navy, till the time of the eruption, which altered the coast. The arrival of Hercules is supposed to have taken place 60 years before the Trojan war, or 1342 before the Christian era. This Hercules was, unquestionably, the Phœnician hero of that name, or, in other words, the town was, originally, a Phœnician colony, which took its name, as was usual in antiquity, from its patron deity. The names of Vesuvius and of the places in its vicinity may be traced to the Hebrew and other languages of that family, and all have a reference to volcanic eruptions, of which the Greeks and Latins did not even preserve a tradition. The worship of Hercules was preserved, as is evident from numerous sculptures and inscriptions, as long as the town existed, together with a considerable share of Egyptian superstition, which appears, indeed, at whatever period it may have been introduced, to have been pretty widely diffused through all Magna Græcia.

However fabulous the accounts which ascribe the foundation of the town to Hercules, no doubt can be entertained of its great antiquity. The investigations of late years have shown that below the stratum of lava on which Herculaneum was built, and at the depth of 168 palms beneath the present surface of the ground, there occurs a stratum of earth bearing the visible traces of human industry. (Diss. Isagog. ad Herc. Explan.) This coast, therefore, must have been inhabited and cultivated long previous to the arrival of the Pelasgian Greeks, whose traditions, as we before remarked, do not reach so far back as the volcanic activity of Vesuvius. We may here observe that the name and achievements of Hercules were frequently recalled to the antiquaries of the Augustan Age, by numerous monuments round the Bay of Naples. This coast was afterwards successively possessed by the Osci, the Tyrrheni, the Pelasgi, and the Samnites. (Strabo, lib. v.) The Tyrrheni were, it is probable, a Pelasgian nation, although they have hitherto been always confounded with the Etrusci; not the least vestige, however, of Etrurian Art has been discovered in Herculaneum. Its most ancient monuments are all of the Grecian or Pelasgian character.

The Samnites being subdued, the Romans were masters of Campania, whose delightful shores soon became the favourite residence of the wealthy senators. But it does not appear that Herculaneum ever held an eminent rank among the cities of this Province: the town itself, there is reason to think, was inconsiderable; but the neighbourhood, and the whole coast indeed, were rich and populous. Cicero, (de Leg. Agrar.) enumerating the principal cities of Campania, frequently names Pompeii, but never in this place Herculaneum. Seneca, also, calls Herculaneum oppidum, while he designates Pompeii as celebrem Campaniæ urbem. To these may be added the direct testimony of Sisenna, an old Historian quoted by the Grammarians, who calls it oppidum parvis mœnibus cinctum. The expression of Pliny, frequens erat amœnitas loci, is evidently not to be applied to the populousness of Herculaneum, but to that of the whole tract of

HERCULANEUM.

Its great antiquity

Its rank and importance.

HERCULANEUM.

A Roman Colony.

Its destruction.

country along the bay: we are, therefore, warranted in concluding that Herculaneum was a place of minor importance, and certainly inferior to Pompeii. The desire alone to enhance the interest of a singular discovery could have induced Mr. Eustace to entertain a contrary opinion. (Class. Tour, vol. i. p. 582.) Inscriptions found at Torre del Greco, long before Herculaneum itself was discovered, proved it to have been a Roman Colony; but at what time the inhabitants were admitted into the Roman Tribes, or when the town received the rank of city, cannot be clearly ascertained. The latter event, however, is supposed to have taken place about the time of Augustus; but the town of Hercules, which, if we follow Dionysius, must at that period have already had an existence of thirteen centuries, and to which we are disposed to ascribe a still higher antiquity, was not destined to survive very long its accession of political dignity.

In the reign of Nero, and in the 63d year of our era, a violent earthquake desolated the Campanian coast. Pompeii was swallowed up, Herculaneum nearly ruined. This is the simple statement of Seneca. (Quæst. Nat. lib. vi.) The alarm of the inhabitants, however, lasted no longer than the violence of the shock, and the beauties of the Campanian coast continued to attract a numerous population. But fifteen years had hardly elapsed, when a new and unheard-of visitation effaced all traces of human habitation from this abode of wealth and luxury. In the 79th year of the Christian era, and in the first of the reign of Titus, took place the eruption of Vesuvius, which buried Herculaneum. The volcanic character of that mountain had been recognised before this event from various analogies, but antiquity had preserved no traditions of its active fires. A calamity so awful, occurring in the gloomy period of Rome's first decline, is touched on by Tacitus with his usual force of expression. Jam vero Italia aut novis cladibus vel post longam seculorum seriem repetitis, afflicta. Haustæ aut obrutæ urbes fecundissimâ Campaniæ orâ. (Hist. lib. i. c. 2.) The younger Pliny, who witnessed the eruption, and describes the manner in which his uncle fell its victim, (vi. 16.) makes no mention of the extent of its devastations. Though Herculaneum was among the buried cities, and we find its fate lamented by many subsequent writers, as by Martial, among others, who says, (lib. iv. 42.)

Hic locus Herculeo nomine clarus erat; Cuncta jacent flammis et tristi mersa favillâ.

Yet Dion Cassius is the first author who explicitly ascribes the destruction of the city to the eruption which took place in the reign of Titus. In the mean time no places of importance had risen upon the sites of the buried towns to represent their magnitude and splendour; and the Herculis Porticus of Petronius, from which the modern Portici derives its name, was too slightly related to the ancient Herculaneum, on whose grave it was built, to serve to distant Ages as a monument of its geographical position.

The circumstances connected with the destruction of so many cities, are but inadequately described by ancient writers. Nevertheless the phenomena attending so great a natural convulsion, the sudden annihilation of so much property, and the excessive misery which must have been its inevitable consequence, deserved the minutest attention of the Natural and Civil Historian. Herculaneum was completely buried under showers of ashes, as modern researches have evinced; a stream of lava flowing over it afterwards hardened the surface, and running into the sea, changed the figure of the coast; the local features were totally altered, and nothing was known of the city but the name, when accident led to the discovery of its ruins. In the year 1713, the Prince d'Elbeuf, Emanuel of Lorraine, having married a daughter of the Prince of Salsa, wished to fix his residence in the vicinity of Naples, and, resolving to build a Palace for that purpose, fixed on Portici as its situation. He engaged in his service an artist who excelled in the composition of stucco from pounded marble and terra cotta. A large supply of these materials was required, and was at first procured from a peasant on the ground adjoining, who found them in abundance while sinking a well. The Prince purchased from him the right of making further excavations; the well happened to be immediately above an ancient Theatre, and the labour of a few days brought to light a vault, in which were found first a statue of Hercules, and then a Cleopatra. The Prince was encouraged by this success to prosecute the research, and the workmen soon after reached a marble doorway with an inscription on the architrave, and shortly after three statues of female figures resembling Vestals. The discovery had by this time created a great sensation; the jealousy of the Neapolitan Court was excited, and the Prince was forbidden to proceed further in the research. The statues of the Vestals, which were said to be of exquisite workmanship, were given to the Austrian ambassador. From him they passed into the possession of Prince Eugene, and afterwards into that of Augustus, King of Poland. In 1733, they were carried with the rest of that Prince's splendid collection to Dresden, where they were destroyed, Winkelmann says, in the Thirty Years' War.

A period of 25 years now elapsed without any further attempt to investigate the buried ruins; but when Don Carlos, uniting by conquest the crown of Naples to his hereditary dominions, fixed his residence at Portici, in 1738, the excavations were reopened, and continued on a grander scale. The Theatre was almost immediately discovered, and the inscriptions found on the architraves recording the name of the founder, Lucius Memmius, established beyond doubt that the place was Herculaneum. Immediately previous, however, to this discovery, were found several paintings in fresco, and some well-executed marble statues of the Nonian family. The attention of all was now directed to the Theatre, which was of Grecian architecture it was supposed. Its external circumference was 290 feet, the internal, as far as the stage, 230. The breadth or diameter internally 150 feet, the width of the stage was about 72 feet across, and its height not above 30. Some authors make the height of the Theatre 60 feet; and we may observe, in general, that great diversities exist in the statements of contemporary writers with respect to its measurements, which appear to have been guessed at rather than correctly ascertained. This Theatre resembled in figure all the other Theatres of antiquity. Three tiers of arches, one above the other, formed as many corridors, ascended by steps on the exterior and opening internally to the benches. The upper tier corresponded to the last seven benches, which, as they were built within the arcade, were covered, and are supposed to have been intended for the women. The walls of this fine edifice, which was large enough to contain three, and as some

HERCULANEUM.

Its discovery, 1713.

Further researches, 1738.

The Theatre.

HERCULANEUM.

Ignorance of the engineer.

have asserted eight, thousand spectators, were all cased with polished marble, and decorated with columns and statues, many of which were found in a state of perfect preservation. But from the manner in which the excavations were carried on, it was necessary to remove these ornaments as soon as they were reached. Instead of uncovering the Theatre, a mining system was adopted, which demolished the edifice as fast as the discovery proceeded. The mode of working was as follows: a narrow passage was cut in a straight line from the first opening; on one side of this a chamber about six feet square was hollowed out, and the rubbish carried away. Opposite to that chamber was cut another of equal size, and the rubbish placed in the former. Thus successive excavations were made, each preceding chamber being filled with the materials from that which followed it. At the same time no plans were taken of the galleries, their lengths and directions; it is no wonder, therefore, if the accounts which we have of the buildings thus burrowed through, and carried away piecemeal, should be extremely incorrect and unsatisfactory. The engineer at first appointed to superintend the work was a Spaniard, named Roch Joachim Alcubierre. To this man is ascribed the destruction of many precious monuments of antiquity. As a specimen of his ignorance and disregard of the classic objects of his researches, one anecdote will suffice. An Inscription was met with, formed by large bronze letters, two palms in height, on a marble entablature. The letters were struck off, without copying the Inscription, thrown together into a basket, and presented to the King. The few men of learning who were admitted into the Cabinets at Portici, amused themselves for some time in endeavouring to restore order to the letters, and guess their meaning, but their ill success gave rise to criticisms displeasing to the Court, and the letters were consigned to the lumber rooms. Above the principal entrance of the Theatre also was a chariot and four horses, or as others say, three chariots with two horses each, (so various are the accounts of these interesting discoveries,) of gilt bronze, and of colossal size. This fine monument of ancient Art, which in all probability had escaped injury during the catastrophe of the town, was knocked to pieces with the hammer, (as if nothing was to be thought of in the work of excavation but its rapid advancement,) and the fragments, without being marked or collected on the spot, were thrown into an outer court of the Palace. There they remained unnoticed until the complaints of the learned directed attention to them. Busts of the King and Queen were then cast from a portion of them; the rest were concealed, until, after some years, a horse was made from them, with an inscription recording the antiquity of his origin. Alcubierre was soon after promoted, and an intelligent Swiss, named Weber, succeeded to his office. Plans were now drawn of the subterranean operations, and of the traces of prior excavations, of which no mention is made in history. These interesting draughts were not allowed to be shown, and the secrets they contained have been so well guarded by the jealousy of the Neapolitan Court, that the existence of the documents themselves may, at the present moment, be reasonably doubted.

The excavations being continued on the same level, that is about 76 feet below the surface, a street was found, 36 feet in width, and having on each side a raised footway covered with arcades and porticos. The labours of the workmen were now directed to clear this street, and they soon arrived at three public edifices, two of them joined together, and the third, which was the largest, separated from the others by the street, which formed as it were a common vestibule between them, an arch overhead uniting the three buildings. The largest of these edifices appeared to be a Forum, or Chalcidicum. Although the nature of the building to which this name was applied is but obscurely explained by ancient writers, yet its application in the present case seems determined by an Inscription found about a century before at Portici, importing that such an edifice existed at Herculaneum. This Chalcidicum was in form a parallelogram, 228 feet in length, and 132 feet broad. It was uncovered, but a portico, supported by 42 columns, went round the interior. About 40 feet from the front entrance were two squares, about 18 feet in length, adjoining the lateral porticos, and raised four feet from the ground; at the bottom of the court was another raised square, of 24 feet, ascended by three flights of steps; at the extremity of this was a pedestal, supporting three marble statues; the middle one standing represented Vespasian, the other two were seated in curule chairs, and were imperfect. In the corners, at the lower end of the portico, were two colossal bronze statues of Nero and Germanicus; they were nine feet in height, and of extraordinary beauty. Corresponding to the columns which formed the portico, were half columns, supported by pilasters against the walls, and between these pilasters statues of bronze and marble were ranged alternately. Of the bronze statues only a few fragments were found; of the marble statues those in the left wing were more or less imperfect; but those which had adorned the right wing had been all carried off, as was evident from the ancient excavations, the traces of which still remained. The Chalcidicum had five entrances, two in the lateral porticos, and three in front. These last were formed by four great pilasters, against each of which was an equestrian statue, two of bronze, which were totally destroyed, and two of marble, one of which (that of M. Nonius Balbus) has been perfectly restored, and is considered by connoisseurs to be even superior to the statue of Marcus Aurelius in the Capitol. This edifice was all cased with marble, except on the walls under the portico, which were covered with paintings in fresco: these are now in the Museum at Portici.

The two Temples opposite to the Chalcidicum formed one building under the same roof, about 60 feet in breadth, and 192 in length. Of this last dimension, 150 feet belonged to the greater, and 42 to the lesser of the two. These Temples were decorated internally with columns, frescos, and marble slabs, with the names of magistrates and various inscriptions engraved on them.

Of the houses in Herculaneum there is nothing particular to be said. None of the dwellings in this country appear to have been above one story in height, and the modern generally feels disappointed when he views the diminutive scale on which they were constructed. The streets were paved with lava, resembling that which is seen in the streets of Naples.

In the year 1753 was discovered, not far from the Theatre, and extending towards the sea, a Villa, adorned with a profusion of statues and fresco paintings. Adjoining it was a piece of water 250 feet long, 27 wide, and enclosed with a balustrade; on this were ranged bronze statues of excellent workmanship, which now

HERCULANEUM.

The Chalcidicum.

Temples.

Houses.

Villa

HERCULANEUM.

decorate the private apartments of the Queen. In this Villa was found that collection of manuscripts which has caused so many hopes and regrets to the admirers of classic lore. To these we shall return hereafter. All these discoveries are now mere matter of History; the portion of Herculaneum to which the excavations extended, was all stripped or demolished, the avenues were immediately closed, and nothing at present remains to be seen but a part of the vault which formed the Theatre, and some of the benches cut in tufo, the marbles and other ornaments being carried away. The proximity of the village of Resina rendered it impossible indeed to uncover the subterranean town, or to continue the excavations in that quarter without danger, but it is hard to conceive a palliation of the ignorance, illiberality, and slowness with which so interesting a discovery was carried on, or of the imperfect manner in which it is recorded.

General results.

The whole extent of the excavations at Herculaneum was about 600 yards from North-West to South-East, and 300 yards in breadth. The great street, in which the chief edifices were found, was the North-Eastern limit; to have passed that would have endangered Resina. Four other streets were found, one parallel to the former, and the other three intersecting these at right angles. The Theatre stood at the Northern angle of the town, about six miles from Naples. Numerous wells, sunk purposely in the neighbourhood, have ascertained with tolerable correctness the figure of the ancient coast. The points of Herculaneum and of Resina were about a quarter of a mile asunder. The torrents of lava which overwhelmed the towns filled up the bay, and advanced the shore, (which at present runs in a straight line,) in some places, to nearly a quarter of a mile beyond its former position.

Statues, frescos, &c.

The statues, mosaics, frescos, medals, and vases found in Herculaneum, would alone have been sufficient to furnish the richest Cabinet of antiquities in Europe. In the Royal Museum of Portici, they are united to the relics of ancient Art, which were found at Pompeii and at Stabia. The Paintings alone fill 16 chambers in the Royal Palace. The whole collection is published in a magnificent Work, L'Antichità d'Ercolano, published at Naples in 1757, in ten folio volumes, including Bayardi's Catalogue. An Inscription found near Torre del Greco, however, appears to deserve notice in this place. It imports that the Colony of Herculaneum was bound by various laws to prevent the dilapidation and decrease of public edifices and dwelling-houses. The sale of any building for the purpose of its being taken down was declared void, and a fine was imposed on the contracting parties equal to double the purchase money. Without discussing the merit or tendency of this law, we will merely observe that the situation in which the Inscription was found, gives rise to a conjecture that Herculaneum extended to Torre del Greco, or nearly two miles along the shore; its breadth could not have been great, the space between the mountain and the sea along this part of the bay being extremely contracted.

There were no precious effects, no vessels of gold or silver, nor valuable articles of furniture, found in Herculaneum; a clear proof that the destruction of the place was not instantaneous, but that the inhabitants had time to save their properties as well as their lives. Few skeletons were met with, and these were in such a state of decomposition, that they fell to dust the moment that the tufo in which they rested was removed.

HERCULANEUM.

All these discoveries, and the literary discussions arising from them, gave rise to the establishment of a Royal Academy at Portici in 1755, called the Accademia Palatina, composed of 15 members. But so shortlived was the zeal of the Neapolitan Government and Literati, that this Society soon ceased to meet, and even ceased to exist, within a few years, the original members having died without their places being supplied. At length the Academy was reestablished in 1787, but very little has been heard of its labours.

Accademia Palatina

Of all the remains of antiquity collected at Herculaneum, there were none which created so lively an interest in the world of letters as the Manuscripts discovered in the Villa described above. They were found in a small apartment, hardly 10 feet square, arranged on shelves round the walls, and on stands in the middle of the chamber. At first they were not recognised nor attended to; nothing in fact could seem more uninviting; carbonized cylinders, about a foot in length, and resembling rolls of tobacco, appeared worthless in the eyes of the workmen, who might have exclaimed with the Mice in Phædrus, sed fato invido Carbonem ut aiunt pro thesauro accepimus. At length the regular order of their arrangement attracted observation, and but little examination was necessary to discover what they were. About 350 manuscripts were found in the same place. These, in the rolled state, are from 10 to 18 inches in length, and some of them, when perfect and unfolded, might have extended 100 feet. The papyrus is so extremely thin that the folded manuscript, with the umbilicus round which it is rolled, does not exceed three inches in diameter. The whole is formed of narrow slips of papyrus, glued together, and is written in columns about four inches wide, with an intervening space of nearly an inch, and arranged from right to left, so that to a person holding the manuscript in his left hand, and unfolding it with his right, the columns present themselves in order.

The Manuscripts.

It was a long time before any mode could be devised of unrolling them, and in this dilemma some of them were cut with a knife longitudinally, as we divide a cylinder in the direction of its axis. This mode of proceeding disclosed the writing to view, but it completely destroyed the work. The different folds of the calcined paper adhered so closely together, that, in attempting to separate them, they fell to atoms, and all that could be obtained was a single column or page, of a manuscript that consisted perhaps of a hundred. At length Assemani recommended to the King of Naples a monk named Antonio Pioggi, a writer at the Vatican, well known for his skill in copying, and his patient ingenuity. The persevering monk was foiled at first, but he went on with his tedious labour, and in the end made a machine by which he completely succeeded. His method was, after having found the beginning of the manuscript, to fasten to the exterior edge some threads of silk, which were wound round so many screws; these screws were slowly and simultaneously turned, and thus the manuscript, the back of which was at the same time lined with a thin membrane, was imperceptibly unrolled. The first papyrus unrolled contained a Treatise on Music by Philodemus the Epicurean. The pieces, as they were separated, were given to Mazzocchi, who filled up the Method of unrolling them.

Their contents

HERCULANEUM. lacunæ in the manuscript, and wrote explanatory notes. In this labour he was succeeded by Rossini, who edited the treatise in the first volume of the Herc. Vol. quæ supersunt. This discourse of Philodemus against the utility of music is so dull a performance, that it makes one regret the frequent recurrence of the author's name in the Herculaneum manuscripts. A fragment of a Work by Epicurus on Nature, formed the second volume of the Herculanensia: the Neapolitan editors have proceeded no further. Many months are requisite for the task of unfolding one of these manuscripts, and after all only a fragment can be obtained, for the exterior fold of the papyrus must be cut away, until that part is found which has suffered no other injury than that of being calcined.

Mr. Hayter. The patience and the funds of the Neapolitan Government appeared to have been exhausted by these ungrateful labours, when in the beginning of the present century his Majesty George IV., at that time Prince of Wales, proposed to defray the expenses of unrolling, deciphering, and publishing the manuscripts. The offer was accepted, and the reputation of Mr. Hayter, as a classical scholar, justified his appointment to the place, which the munificence of the Prince, and his taste for literature, had created. This gentleman arrived at Naples in 1802, and was nominated one of the Directors for the developement of the manuscripts. But when the French invaded Naples in 1806, Mr. Hayter was obliged to retire to Sicily, and the papyri were all left behind. The copies, too, which had been made were in the possession of the Sicilian Government, and his Sicilian Majesty contended that he had never resigned his right to the possession either of the originals or of the copies. It was afterwards, however, conceded that the copies should be forwarded to London for publication; and these, together with several unrolled manuscripts, sent over at various times as presents to his Majesty, have been graciously presented by him to the University of Oxford.

Dr. Sickler. The unrolled papyri presented an unpromising appearance; the various chemical processes to which they were subjected in order to unfold them, proved wholly unsuccessful. It happened, however, that, in 1816, Dr. Sickler, a Professor at Hildburghausen, succeeded in convincing a Committee of the Royal Society of Gottingen, that he had found a method of unrolling the papyri, and exhibited a fragment as a specimen of his skill. He was in consequence invited over to England on liberal terms, and with the promise of ample remuneration in case of eventual success. Experiments were immediately commenced on several papyri, in order to satisfy a Committee, appointed for that purpose, of the excellence of his method; but here he failed, and from a Report of the Committee appointed to superintend the Experiments of Dr. Sickler, ordered to be printed by the House of Commons in March 1818, it appears that his method was far inferior in general to that usually employed at Naples. The expenses incurred by these experiments exceeded £1100.

Sir H. Davy. This investigation had, however, an important result. Sir Humphrey Davy had been appointed one of the superintending Committee, and his mind being constantly employed upon the subject, he was naturally led to consider the chemical changes which might have taken place in the papyri, and the various agents to which they might have been exposed. The investigation of these questions ought to be a preliminary step to any scientific process of unfolding the manuscripts.

HERCULANEUM. In order to pursue these speculations, Sir Humphrey proceeded to Naples at the desire of his Majesty, by whose patronage every facility was procured for the attainment of his object. The result of his observations and inquiries there, we shall give in his own words, from an interesting Report published in the Journal of the Royal Institution, April 1819.

His Report. "Of the Manuscripts, the greater number (those which probably were least exposed to moisture or air, for, till the tufo consolidated, air must have penetrated through it) are brown, and still contain some of their volatile substance or extractive matter, which occasions the coherence of the leaves: others are almost entirely converted into charcoal, and in these, when their form is adapted to the purpose, the layers may be readily separated from each other by mechanical means. Of a few, particularly the superficial parts, and which, probably, were most exposed to air and water, little remains except the earthy basis, the charcoal of the characters and some of that of the vegetable matter being destroyed: and they are in a condition approaching to that of the manuscripts found at Pompeii, where the air, continually penetrating through the loose ashes, there being no barrier against it as in the consolidated tufo at Herculaneum, has entirely destroyed all the carbonaceous parts of the papyrus, and left nothing but earthy matter. Four or five specimens that I examined were heavy and dense, a considerable quantity of foreign earthy matter being found between the leaves and among the pores of the carbonaceous substance of the papyrus, evidently deposited during the operation of the cause which consolidated the tufo.

"The number of manuscripts and of fragments originally brought to the Museum at Portici, amounted to 1696; of these 88 have been unrolled and found in a legible state; 319 more have been operated upon, and more or less unrolled and found not to be legible; 24 have been presented to foreign potentates. Among the 1265 that remain, and which I have examined with attention, by far the greater number consists of small fragments, or of mutilated or crushed manuscripts, in which the folds are so irregular as to afford little hopes of separating them in such a manner as to form connected leaves; from 80 to 120 are in a state which presents a great probability of success, and of these the greater number are of the kind in which some volatile vegetable matter remains, and to which the chemical process may be applied with the greatest hopes of useful results.

"The persons charged with the business of unrolling the manuscripts in the Museum, informed me that many chemical experiments had been performed upon the manuscripts at different times, which assisted the separation of the leaves, but always destroyed the characters. To prove that this was not the case with my method, I made two experiments before them; one on a brown fragment of a Greek manuscript, and the other on a similar fragment of a Latin manuscript, in which the leaves were closely adherent; in both instances the separation of the layers was complete, and the characters appeared, to the persons who examined them, more perfect than before.

"It cannot be doubted that the 407 papyri which have been more or less unrolled, were selected as the best fitted for attempts, and were probably the most perfect; so that amongst the 100 or 120 which remain in a fit state for trials, even allowing a superiority of method, it is not reasonable to expect that a much larger HERCULANEUM. — HERD. proportion will be legible. Of the 88 manuscripts containing characters, with the exception of a few fragments, in which some lines of Latin Poetry have been found, the great body consists of works of Greek Philosophers or Sophists. 9 are of Epicurus; 32 bear the name of Philodemus; 3 of Demetrius; and one of each of these authors, Colotes, Polystratus, Carneades, and Chrysippus; and the subjects of these works, and of those of which the authors' names are unknown, are either Natural or Moral Philosophy, Medicine, Criticism, and general observations on Life, Manners, and the Arts."

Under the direction of Sir H. Davy a great variety of manuscripts were unrolled and rendered more or less legible, but their contents proved of little more importance than might have been expected from the nature of the specimens before examined. In 1824, the University of Oxford published two volumes entitled Herculanensium voluminum Partes duæ, containing four fragments lithographed from the papyri, without note, commentary, or any attempt to correct the text or supply the lacunæ. Two of the fragments are Essays of Philodemus on Vices and the Virtues opposed to them. One a Treatise on Anger by an unknown author, and the fourth is from a Rhetorical Work by Demetrius. Prefixed to these volumes is a Catalogue of the papyri, 95 in number, presented to the University by his Majesty; but we find nothing in it calculated to increase the regret of the learned at the difficulties met with in attempting to unfold these relics of ancient literature.

Brosse, Lettres sur la Découverte de la Ville d'Herc. 1750; Cochin, Lettres sur les Peintures d'Herc. 1751; Bellicard, Observ. on the Ant. of Herc. 1753; Symbolæ Litterariæ, Florence, 1750, and Rome, 1754. This work contains the statements and dissertations of Scipio Maffei, Walch, Gori, D'Arthenay, and others, respecting Herculanum. Fougereux, Recherches sur les Ruines d'Herc. 1769; Venuti, Description of Herc. translated by Skurray, 1750; Winckelman, Critical Account of Herc. trans. 1771; Herculanensium Voluminum omnia quæ supersunt, 3 vols. Nap. 1793-1806. The Dissertatio Isagogica, forming the third volume, is an elaborate and somewhat inflated Essay on the history and destruction of the ancient city. L'Antichità d'Ercolano, 10 vols. fol. Nap. 1757; Barthelemy, Voyage en Italie, 1801; Herculanensia, by Sir W. Drummond, Lond. 1810. There are also several detached papers in the Philosophical Transactions, particularly between the years 1750 and 1756, on the discoveries at Herculanum and Pompeii.

HERCULANEUM. — HERD.

HERCULEAN, possessing qualities similar to those of Hercules.

Would you have
Such an herculean actor in the scene,
And not his Hydra?

Ben Jonson. Catiline, act iii.

Think of a genius [Montesquieu] not born in every Country, or every time; a man gifted by nature with a penetrating aquiline eye; with a judgment prepared with the most extensive erudition; with an herculean robustness of mind and nerves not to be broken with labour; a man who could spend twenty years in one pursuit.

Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

HERD, v. } Goth. haird-a; A. S. heorde; HERD, n. } G. herde; (Sw. heord, græx,
HE'RDËSS, } Ihre derives from herda, custo- HERD-GROOM, } dire, and so also herde, pastor.)
HERD-MAN, } "Herd (says Tooke) is the past HERDS-MAN, } part. of the A. S. verb hyrd-an, HERD-FORSAKEN. } custodire; and is applied both to that which is guarded or kept, and to him by whom it is guarded or kept. We use it both for græx and pastor." Junius inclines to the same hyrd-an, but thinks it (hyrd-an) may owe its origin to hyrd-el, crates,
Eng. hurdle, q. v.

A herd is applied to

A number of sheep or kine guarded or kept; to a number of sheep or kine collected or congregated together for the purpose of being so guarded; generally to a number of kine; to a number of persons collected or congregated; also to the person guarding or keeping.

To herd;—to collect, to assemble, to gather, to congregate together, as herds do.

To triste was he sette, forto waite þe chaunce,
With a herde þei mette, a herte þerof gan lance.

R. Brunne, p. 94.

And femeles to femeles. herdyed an drow.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 223.

Hoow hurde wher is þyn hounde, and þyn hardy herte
For to wyne the wolf. þat þy woollie fouleþ.

Id. Ib. p. 161.

VOL. XXIII.

I haylsede that hirdman, and hendliche I sayde.

Piers Plouhman. Crede, p. 9.

Ther n' as baillif, ne herde, ne other hine,
That he ne knew his sleight and his covine.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 605.

I wote well that it fared thus by me
As to thy brother Paris, an hierdesse
Which that cleped was CEnone
Wrote in a complaint of her heuinesse.

Id. Troilus, book i. fol. 155.

And many a floit and litling horne
And pipes made of grene corne
As haue these little heerd-gromes
That kepen beastes in the bromes.

Id. The third Booke of Fame, fol. 280.

And ther was there nye vnto the mountaines a great heerd of swyne feding, and al the deuils besought him, saying; send vs into the heerd of swine, that we may enter into them.

Bible, Anno 1551. Mark, ch. v.

Whan there we came, and first in hauen wee entred, lo wee see
The heardes of beast full fat to feede on euery side ful free.

Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, book iii.

The sillie herdman all astonnied stands,
From the hye rock while he doth here the sound.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book ii.

For one shepherd or herdsman is enough to eat up the ground with cattle, to the occupying whereof about husbandry many hands were requisite.

More. Utopia by Robinson, book i.

While (but those few) the rest,
However great we are, honest, and valiant,
Are hearded with the vulgar; and so kept,
As we were only bred to consume corne;
Or weare our wool.

Ben Jonson. Catiline, act i.

Ne was there heard, ne was there shepherd's swaine
But her did honour, and eke many a one
Burnt in her loue, and with sweet pleasing paine
Full many a night for her did sigh and grone.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 9.

I vrg'd my friends then, that to shunne their fate,
They would obserue their oath; and take the food
Our ship afforded; nor attempt the blood
Of those faire herds and flocks; because they were
That dreadfull God's, that all could see, and hear.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xii. fol. 189.

2 F

HERD.
—
HERE.

If thou know not for whom thy master dies,
These marks shall make thee wise:
She is the herdess fair that shines in dark,
And gives her kids no food, but willow's bark.
Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

So loytring liue you little heard-groomes
Keeping your beasts in the budded broomes.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

But he forsakes the herd-groom and his flocks,
Nor of his bagpipe takes at all no keep,
But to the stern wolf and deceitful fox
Leaves the poor shepherd and his harmless sheep.
Drayton. Pastorals. Eclogue 9.

For what would have come of it, if that communaltie consisting of heardmen and fugitive strangers, resorting out of their own countries there to dwell, having under protection of a sanctuarie and priuiledged place gotten libertie, or at least-wise impunitie; being now freed and past feare of a roiall maiestie, had begun to be troubled and disquieted, with the ruffling stormes and seditious tempests of the tribunes.

Holland. Livius, fol. 44.

Great Pan, the father of our peace and pleasure,
Who giv'st us all this leasure,
Heare what thy hallowed troope of herdsmen pray
For this their holy-day,
And how their vowes to thee, they in Lycæum pay.
Ben Jonson. Hymn 4. To Pan.

Both parties join'd to do their best
To damn the public interest,
And herded only in consults,
To put by one another's bolts.

Butler. Hudibras, part iii. can. 2.

Then was it not enough ye sons of Troy
Our flocks to slaughter, and our herds destroy.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, book iii.

The complaint, perhaps, contains some topics which are above the condition of his persons; and our author seems to have made his herdsmen somewhat too learned for their profession.

Dryden. Pastorals. To Hugh Lord Clifford.

Others are so seemingly fond of this social state, that they are understood absolutely to confine it to their own species; and entirely excluding the tamer and gentler, the herding and flocking parts of the creation, from all benefits of it, to set up this as one grand general distinction between the human and brute species.

Fielding. Works, vol. xiv. p. 266. An Essay on Conversation.

Ye gentle nymphs of Tago's rosy bowers,
Ah, see what letter'd patron-lords are yours!
Dull as the herds that graze their flowery dales,
To them in vain the injured Muse bewails:
No fostering care their barbarous hands bestow,
Though to the Muse their fairest fame they owe.
Mickle. The Lusiad, book vii. l. 721.

There, fast rooted in their bank,
Stand, never overlook'd, our fav'rite elms,
That screen the herdsman's solitary hut.
Cowper. The Task, book i.

And now the covert ends in open ground,
That spreads wide views beneath us all around;
There turbid waters, edg'd with yellow reeds,
Roll through the russet herd-forsaken meads.
Scott. Epistle 2. To a Friend in London.

HERE. There is scarcely a doubt that here and her
(q. v.) are the same word, though so differently applied.
Goth. her; A. S. her; D. hier; Ger. hier; Sw. här.
Here is used as equivalent to

This place; to this place, in this place.
Here is much used in Composition.

Issrýned he was nýne hondred ger, & on & seuentyþe ger,
After þat our Louerd alýgte in ýs moder an erþe here.
R. Gloucester, p. 282.

þe kyng, vor pýte herof, bygan to wepe sore.
Id. p. 178.

As þys kýng hereof awoc, and of þys sýgte þogte,
Hys výssares come to hym, & so gret won of fyss hym brogte, þat wonder y^t was, & namelýche vor þe weder was so colde.
Id. p. 265.

HERE.

þe body son þei fonde, þe hade was in doute,
Up and doune in þe felde þei souht it aboute,
To haf knowýng þerof, alle þei were in were, (a weary)
Tille þe hede him self said, here, here, here.
R. Brunne, p. 22.

Quaþ repentaunce for soþe
Thow wolt hongý heye þ^r fore. her opere in helle.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 99.

He is not here, for he is rysen as he seide, come ye and se ye the place where the Lord was leyd.
Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xxviii.

He is not here: he is rysē as he sayd. Come, and see the place where the Lorde was put.
Bible, Anno 1551.

And herastir no man be heuy to me, for I bere in my bodi the tokenes of oure Lorde Jesu Crist.
Wiclif. Galathies, ch. vi.

Herastirward, britheren, be ghe coumfortid in the Lord and in the myght of his vertu.
Id. Effesies, ch. vi.

I bitake this commaundement to thee thou sone Tymothe aftir the profecies that han be heretofore in thee, that thou traueile in hem a good traueile hauynge feith and good conscience.
Id. 1 Tymothe, ch. i.

For certainly our appetites here,
Be it of werre, or pees, or hate, or love,
All is this ruled by the sight above,
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1672.

Go now thy way, and spede thee hereabout.
Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3562.

For never hereafter wol I with him mete
For peny ne for pound, I you behete.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16174.

Thou shalt hereafterward, my brother dere
Come, wher thee nedeth not of me to lere.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7097.

As ye have herde herebeforn, the commune proverbe is this; he that sone demeth, sone repenteth.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. fol. 86.

Thou hast told me herebeforne, that he n'is not to blame that chaungeth his conseil in certain cas, and for certain and just causes.
Id. Ib. p. 95.

Here may ye see, and hereby may ye preve,
That a wif is mannes helpe and his comfort,
His paradis terrestre and his disport.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9204.

And er that we departen from this place,
I rede that we make of sorwes two
O parfit joye lasting evermo:
And loketh now wher most sorwe is herein,
Ther wol I first amenden and begin.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3075.

Wil of rightfulnes is the ilk same rightfulnes as heretoforne is shewed.
Id. The Testament of Loue, book iii. fol. 312.

And hereupon at night they mett yfere.
Id. Legende of Gode Women, fol. 205. Of Hypsiphile and Medea.

But this, whiche I you tell here,
Is onely for my lady dere.
Gower. Conf. Am. book ii. fol. 28.

But now hereafter thou shalt here
What God hath wrought in this matere.
Id. Ib. fol. 46.

Thus nedeth me no repentaunce.
Now asketh forther of my life,
For herof am I not giltyfe.
Id. Ib. book i. fol. 22.

And hereby we are sure y^t we know hi, if we kepe hys cōmaunde-mentes.
Bible, Anno 1551. 1 John, ch. ii.

Herein is loue, not that wee loued God, but that he loued vs, & sent hys sonne to make agrement for our synnes.
Id. Ib. ch. i.

And I geue counsel hereto. For this is expedient for you, which began, not to do only: but also to wyll a yere a go.
Id. 2 Corinthians, ch. viii.

HERE.

It is moreover to be noted that neuer at any time heretofore either within the earth, or in other places of Liunia, there haue bene found any monuments at all of the antiquitie or letters of the Russes.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 225. The Genealogy of the D. of Mosc.

And hereunto I suppose it maye be applied, that S. Paule writeth saying: Not he that is a Jewe openly, is a Jewe.
Stephan, Bishop of Winchester. On True Obedience, fol. 12.

Hereupon he calleth together all his maisters debtours one by one.
Udall. Luke, ch. xvi.

The order of the blessed Spirits there
Must be his rule, while he inhabits here.
Beaumont. Of True Greatnesse.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, tho' vnkinde,
Thou loosest here a better where to finde.
Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 285.

Hereabout, as also all along, and up into the countrey throughout the province of Cusko, the common ground, wheresoeuer it be taken up, in every hundred pound weight of earth, yieldeth 25s. of pure silver, after the rate of a crown an ounce.

Sir Francis Drake. The World Encompassed, fol. 56.

SERV. 'Tis this or that house, or I have lost my aim,
They are both fair buildings, she walked plaguy fast,
And hereabouts I lost her.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Rule a Wife and Have a Wife, act i.

All those great battels, which thou boasts to win
Through strife, and blood-shed, and avengement,
Now prayst, hereafter deare thou shalt repent:
For life must life, and blood must blood, repay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 9.

Yea, hereat [the eating of meates] their hearts did so much rise, that the apostle had iust cause to feare, lest they would rather forsake Christianitie, then endure any fellowship with such, as made no conscience of that which was vnto them abominable.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book iv.

What I am truly
Is thine, and my poore Countries to command;
Whither indeed, before they [thy] heere approach
Old Seyward with ten thousand warlike men
Already at a point, was setting foorth.
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 147.

My seely sheepe (ah seely sheepe)
That heereby there I whilome vsde to keepe,
All were they lustie, as thou diddest see,
Been all sterued with pine and penurie.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. September.

Right so through the vertue of the brooch had he
What good him list: she thought "How may this be,
Some privy thing now causeth this richesse,
As did the ring herebefore I gesse."
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe. Eclogue 1.

But peace, I must not quarrel with the will
Of highest dispensation, which herein
Happ'ly had ends above my reach to know.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 51.

This brought to pass, the lords return with speed,
The parliament hereof to certify;
Where they at large publish'd the king's own deed,
And form of his resignation verbally.
Daniel. History of the Civil Wars, book ii.

MAL. 'Tis call'd the Euill.

A most myraculous worke in this goode king,
Which often since my here remaine in England,
I haue seene him do.
Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 147.

But yet excellling all
For easement, that to health is requisite and meet;
Her piled shores, to keep her delicate and sweet:
Hereto, she hath her tides, that when she is oppress
With heat or drought, still pour their floods upon her breast.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 3.

Bold Oxford leades the vantguard vp amaine,
Whose valiant offers heretofore were vaine,
When he his loue to Lancaster exprest.
Beaumont. Bosworth Field.

In which sense although wee iudge the apostle's wordes to have beene vttered: yet heereunto we do not require them to yeeld, that thinke any other construction more sound.

Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity, book iii.

Hereupon, after the battell was won, the dictator did not forget so noble an act, and therefore first of all he crowned Martius with a garland of oaken boughs.

Sir Thomas North. Plutarch, fol. 186. Coriolanus.

I send you herewith the form which I used in absolving the Lord Marquess in the presence of the Lord Primate of Ireland, the Lord Bishop of London, and diuers others.
Spotswood. Church of Scotland, book vii. The Archbishop of Canterbury to the Archbishop of St. Andrew's.

Herewithal he mention'd a town in Italy, belonging of old to the state of Athens, of which town he said an oracle had foretold, that the Athenians in processe of time should build it anew.

Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. vi. sec. 5.

And herewithal this inscription τούτου νίκα, that is, with this overcome.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, book v. ch. vi.

It were not amiss that six of the most desperate of them should be sent to the common gaol of Cambridge, and six likewise to Oxford, and some other of them to other gaols near hereabouts, as to your wisdoms shall be thought expedient.

Strype. Life of Archbishop Grindal.

And herein that happened which is not unusual; that one controversy arising occasionally out of another, the parties forsake the first contest, and fall into sharp conflicts about the occasional differences.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1547.

But Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Shaxton, Bishop of Salisbury, took great joy hereat, as appeared by their letters.

Id. Memorials, Anno 1535.

Since every man is so highly concerned, as we have seen, to do good in his life, let us all be persuaded seriously and heartily to applie our miuds hereunto.

Sharpe. Works, vol. i. Sermon 3.

Hereupon also the grand propriety of truth is ascribed to the spirit, which is conviction. It is said of him, John xvi. 8. that he shall convince the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment.

South. Sermons, vol. viii. p. 406.

And, as a hare, whom hounds and horns pursue,
Pants to the place at first from whence she flew,
I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
Here to return—and die at home at last.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

"Perhaps, then, the game is not very plenty hereabouts," cries Adams. "No sir," said the gentleman, "the soldiers, who are quartered in the neighbourhood, have killed it all."

Fielding. Joseph Andrews, ch. vii.

Perhaps no Philosopher, ancient or modern, has taken greater liberties with language than Mr. Hume, of which we gave some instances upon the former occasion, and many others will be given hereafter.

Cogan. Ethical Questions, note c.

We have elsewhere examined the meaning of demons, when applied to the objects of popular worship in the heathen world; and shown from the united testimony of Pagans and Jews, from the authors of the Septuagint version of the Old Testament, and from the New, that we are hereby to understand such human spirits as superstition deified.

Farmer. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, sec. 2.

Herein [imitation] it is that painting and many other agreeable arts have laid one of the principal foundations of their power.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, sec. 16.

With respect to the Jews, it hath been already shewn, from their own writings, that they considered demoniacs as insane in their understanding. And agreeable hereto is the representation made of their sentiments on this point in the Gospel.

Farmer. On the Demoniacs of the New Testament, sec. vi. prop. 6.

It may happen,—indeed, it has happened heretofore,—in our own times it has happened, and it will inevitably happen again, that the struggles of Christianity with the adverse faction may kindle actual war between the secular powers, taking part on one side or on the other.

Horsley. Sermon 7. vol. i.

HERE.

HEREDI-TARY.
—
HERE-FORD-
SHIRE.

HERE'DITARY, HERE'DITARILY, HERE'DITABLE, HE'REDITAMENT, HE'RITABLE, HE'RITABLY, HE'RITAGE, HE'RITOUR.

Fr. hereditaire; It. and Sp. hereditario; Lat. hereditarius, from hæres, an heir, q. v.

Taken or received as heir; coming or falling to any one as heir. See HEIR.

No childe had he neuer, his herytage myght to wende, Bot welth inou to welde, vntille his lyue's ende.

R. Brunne, p. 10.

þe whilk I hold, & salle þorgh right
Clayme to hald, at alle my myght,
Heritagelik of þe,
& of þin heires þat after þe be.

Id. p. 251.

Seilde is þe poure ryght riche. bote of hus ryght heritage.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 269.

That ghe wite whiche is the hope of his clepyng, and which ben the richessis of the glorie of his eritage in seyntis, and which is the excellent greetnesse of his vertu into us that han bileued bi the worchyng of the myght of his vertu.

Wiclif. Effesies, ch. i.

But wold ye vouchen sauf upon seurtee
Two yere or three for to respiten me.
Than were I wel, for elles mote I sell
Min heritage, ther is no more to tell.

Chaucer. The Frankleines Tale, v. 11888.

And if thou wolt by suche a waie
Do my plesance, and holde it still,
For euer I shall ben at thy will Both I, and all mine heritage.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 22.

By reason whereof, as affermyth myne auctour Gagwyne, arose a prouerbe amonge the Frenshemen, sayinge (Principibus obsequi hereditarium non esse;) the whiche is to meane, the seruyce of prynces is nat heredytable.

Fabyan, vol. ii. Anno 1485.

At the whiche parlyament y^e Duke of Alenson was iuged to lose his hede, & his heredytamentys to be forfayted unto y^e kinge.

Id. vol. ii. Anno 1461.

And the kyng by the counsell of the quene his mother did gyue hym cccc. markis sterlyngis of rent heritable, to hold of hym in fee, to be payed euery yere in the towne of Bruges.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. xiv.

But and ye erle wolde gyue him the offyce that John Lyon hathe, he wolde so handell the maryners, y^t the Erle of Flaunders shulde heretably haue y^e sayd profyte.

Id. Ib. vol. i. ch. 348.

He helde ones hys cosyn germaine, the vicoût of Chateau Bein, who is his herytter, eighte moneths in the toure of Orlaise in prison.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. xxiv.

The kyng made euery man to swere and promyse, that after his dyssease they sholde take his doughter, the lady Beautryce, who was as then but fyue yeres of age, for herytoure of y^e royalme of Portyngale.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. ch. xliii.

So natural a melody is it, and so universal, as it seems to be generally born with all the nations of the world, as an hereditary eloquence proper to all mankind.

Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

And in this kingdom, such were hereditary honoured with it [title of Count Palatine], as being near the prince in court.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11. note by Selden.

Brave Martell's sonne, great Charles, the pride of Fraunce,
To plague the Pagans heritably borne,
Who over th' Alpes his ensignes did advance,
The German's terrour, the Italian's scorner.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The ninth Houre.

That was, to succour a distressed dame
Whom a strong tyrant did uniuistly thrall,
And from the heritage, which she did clame,
Did with strong hand withhold; Grantorto was his name.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 1.

But the Earl of Athol had proposed a match between his son and Lady Dysert's daughter, and he had an hereditary hatred to the Lord Argyll and his family: so that could not be easily brought about.

Burnet. Own Times. Charles II. Anno 1671.

But an hereditament, says Sir Edward Coke, is by much the largest and most comprehensive expression: for it includes not only lands and tenements, but whatsoever may be inherited, be it corporeal, or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. ii.

If we were not mutually attached to each other by many singular good offices, I should remind you of that friendship which formerly subsisted between our parents, but I leave arguments of this kind to those who have neglected to improve their hereditary connections.

Melmoth. Cicero's Letters, let. 39. book xii. Bithynicus to Cicero.

Richard I. bestowed the lands on Richard Fitz-Anchor, to hold them in fee, and hereditary of the abbey.

Pennant. Journey from Chester, p. 566.

He had formed a scheme, and began to put it in execution, for removing the feudal grievance of heritable jurisdictions in Scotland, which has since been pursued; and effected by the statute 20 Geo. II. c. 43.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. v.

Or had the first fair she, to hell ally'd,
Creation's sole reproach, curs'd heav'n and dy'd;
Nor introduc'd in Nature's faultless frame
The wretched heritage of guilt and shame.

Blacklock. Advice to the Ladies.

HEREDI-TARY.
—
HERE-FORD-
SHIRE.

HEREFORDSHIRE.

Boundaries,
&c.

HEREFORDSHIRE, an inland County of England, bounded on the North by Shropshire, on the North-East and East by Worcestershire, by Monmouthshire on the South-West, Brecknockshire on the West, and Radnorshire on the North-West. It is in form elliptical, but some detached portions lye beyond the general outline. Thus the Parish of Farlow is wholly insulated by Shropshire, that of Rochford by Worcestershire, Lytton Hill by Radnorshire, and a considerable tract called Futhog, with some acres on the Devandin Hill, by Monmouthshire. On the other hand, the Parish of Edwin-Loch, which is situated within the County of Hereford, belongs to that of Worcester. The length of Herefordshire, from Ludford on the North to the opposite border near Monmouth on the South, is 38 miles, and its breadth, from Clifford on the West to Cradley on the East, 35.

The County may be considered as one wide valley, having on the East the Malvern Hills, and on the West the Hatterell, or Black Mountains, dividing it from Wales. Almost all the rivers flow towards, and definitively through, the centre from North to South. The hills which border the County are in many places rather barren, but the central portions of it are highly fertile as well as picturesque. Limestone is almost everywhere the subsoil, and in some places becomes a fine grained marble, streaked with red, and bearing a good polish. On the East of the County the soil is a stiff clay, of a reddish colour; on the Western borders it is poor and retentive of water, but throughout the intervening space it is of a light calcareous or marly nature. Deep beds of gravel are occasionally met with, but neither chalk nor flint is found in any part of the County. Iron ore was discovered in the Hundred of Wormelow so early as the time of the Romans in Britain. Many of the hand-bloomeries used by that people have been Soil.

HERE-FORD-
SHIRE.

HERE-FORD-
SHIRE

found,* together with considerable quantities of imperfectly melted ore. The town of Ross, near that district, was famous for smiths in Camden's time, and the "martial ore" of the County is celebrated by Philips in his Poem on Cider. Of late years, however, no iron mines have been explored here, owing, perhaps, to the superiority of the ores found in the Forest of Dean in Gloucestershire. No other mineral has been met with, and the recent attempts to discover coal, though flattered by favourable appearances at first, have proved finally unsuccessful.

petual verdure, and no part of England is better suited to the cultivation of grasses, yet the aid of artificial grasses is but little resorted to, and agriculture is less understood than in any other part of the kingdom possessing an equally good soil, and yielding an equal produce. Draining is not encouraged, and little attention is paid to the collection of composts. Oxen are generally employed in the plough with the old and heavy yoke; drilling is little practised in the light soils, and irrigation not at all. The rent of the best wheat lands in the County may be averaged at not more than fourteen shillings. But perhaps the moisture of the climate, as it prevents the ripening of the grain and injures its quality, may discourage its growth. The rich meadows on the banks of the Wye, Lug, and Frome, are rented at from two to three pounds an acre. The soil of Herefordshire appears to be singularly unfavourable to the making of cheese, the produce of the dairy in this article being found, from accurate experiments, to be very inferior to that obtained under the same circumstances in Cheshire.

The cultivation of hops, on the other hand, is a successful and increasing branch of rural economy in this County, into which they appear to have been introduced soon after their first importation into England, about the commencement of the XVIth century. The best situation for this plant is in a dry loam or gravelly soil, sheltered from the West and South-West winds. Hop-yards worked by hand will, if properly manured, flourish during 40 or 50 years, but the plough hop-lands are generally worn out in 20 or 30 years. About five hundred weight of hops is estimated as a fair produce from an acre containing 2000 poles; the length of the poles is from 15 to 20 feet, and the cost of these, together with the labour and manure, renders the cultivation of hops extremely expensive, and as the produce depends much on the fluctuations of the weather, heavy losses are occasionally sustained.

Another branch of rural economy in which Herefordshire has long been preeminent, is the cultivation of the apple. Already in the reign of Charles I. this County, according to Evelyn, was "in a manner one entire orchard." The orchards are generally planted in hop-grounds; the ground between the trees, to each of which is allowed a space of nine square perches, being kept well tilled and manured. These plantations are often of considerable extent, embracing 30 or 40 acres. The merit of cider depends as much on the skill employed in its manufacture as on the quality of the fruit. The varieties of apples most prized are found to become extinct in the course of time, and it becomes necessary to create by cultivation other kinds of equal excellence. It is said that the fruit in Herefordshire had gradually deteriorated during the early part of the last century; of late years, however, an improvement has been effected. The price of the best cider exceeds what is paid for wine in the most celebrated vineyards of France or Germany. It is often sold as high as £20 the hogshead, direct from the press. A single acre will yield in good seasons from 18 to 24 hogsheads; the quantity of apples required to make a hogshead of cider is from 24 to 30 bushels. The culture of the pear tree and the management of perry differ so little from those of the apple and its produce, that the same general rules are applicable to them both. The price of the common cider is generally fixed by a meeting of the dealers at Hereford fair, on the 20th of

The climate of Herefordshire is humid, the rains being frequent, though not heavy, and wet mists common. The fields are consequently clothed with a per-

* Bloomeries, in smelting, are reverberating furnaces in which the ore is reduced to bloom, or half-wrought iron.

Rivers.

The Wye.

Lug.

Minnow.

Climate and cultivation.

Hops.

Orchards

HERE-
FORD-
SHIRE.

Cattle.

Sheep.

Population

City of Hereford.

October annually, and averages about 30 shillings per hogshead.

Herefordshire is also famous for the excellence of its cattle, which are supposed to hold the first rank among the native breeds. They are very large, with white faces, and distinguished for their sleek appearance and the silky brightness of their coat. Oxen are generally reared for agricultural purposes, nearly half of the ploughing in the County being performed by them. After they have been worked about five or six years, they are sold to the graziers of Buckinghamshire and the adjacent Counties, who fatten them for the London market. About 1000 or 1500 head of cattle are in this way sold annually in Hereford fair. The native breed of sheep, called the Ryeland sheep, from a dry sandy district in the neighbourhood of Ross, where the choicest flocks are fed, are of equal excellence. Their flesh is excellent, and their wool, the "Lemster's silken fleece" of Philips, vies with that of Spain in fineness. Leominster, from being the chief market of this wool, shares in its celebrity, though the rich pastures in the neighbourhood of that town are thought to injure the fleece. The excellence of the Herefordshire wool has not given birth to any manufactures; the neighbouring Counties of Gloucestershire and Somersetshire appear to have engrossed by anticipation that branch of industry. To the absence of manufactures in this County may perhaps be ascribed the imperfection of the roads and the want of canals.

The County of Hereford is divided into 11 Hundreds, and contains one City, seven Towns, and 221 Parishes. The population amounted, in 1811, to 94,073, and in 1821 to 103,243. At this latter date, the number of families engaged in agriculture were 13,558, those engaged in trade or manufactures 5633, and those not included in the preceding classes 2726. The Members returned to Parliament are eight in number, viz. two from the County, two from the City of Hereford, and two from each of the Boroughs of Leominster and Weobley.

The City of HEREFORD is of great antiquity; before the close of the VIIth century, a Synod was held and a Bishop consecrated in it. Hên-forrd, its British name, signified the old ford, and the Saxon corruption, which forms its present name, is rendered by Gough, (Add. to Camden's Brit. ii. 451.) the ford of the army. Polydore Vergil describes its Church as Templum magnificum even early in the reign of Offa, King of Mercia. In the Xth century the City was enclosed by walls, but these did not save it from being sacked by the Welsh in 1055. The foundation of the Castle is assigned to the reign of Harold, but after the conquest of Wales by Edward I. it appears to have been allowed to fall to decay. The Parliament which deposed Edward II. assembled in Hereford, and here the younger Spenser, and other of that unhappy Prince's adherents, were executed by the order of his Queen. At a subsequent period of our History, after the defeat of the Lancastrians at Mortimer's Cross in this County, Owen Tudor and nine other persons of rank suffered death within its walls. During the Great Rebellion, Hereford distinguished itself by its loyalty, and was more than once alternately in possession of the forces of the King and of the Parliament.

The City stands near the centre of the County, on the Northern bank of the river Wye, which is navigable so far with barges, and is crossed by a stone bridge of six arches, erected in the XVth century. The streets, for the most part, are clean, spacious, and well built. In a square in the High Town, in about the middle of the City, stands the Shire Hall, an ancient wooden building. A modern County Gaol was built in 1797: that of the City is of considerable antiquity. An Infirmary, a Lunatic Asylum, a Bank, and a Theatre are the chief other Civil edifices. Of the Castle, which occupied a part of the Southern and Eastern sides of the City, and which Leland describes as having been "one of the largest, fayrest, and strongest Castles in England," and of as great circuit as that at Windsor, the only portion now remaining is a small fragment of the South-West angle, converted into a dwelling. The area of the outer ward and the site of the lower keep form well-planted and agreeable public walks. Here, after the battle of Lewes, were confined Henry III. and his son, afterwards Edward I.

On the murder of Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, by Offa, about the middle of the VIIIth century, the body of the deceased Prince was interred by his assassin under a magnificent tomb in the Church, which we have above noticed as existing at Hereford. The tomb soon acquired a high reputation for working miracles, and Milfrid, the Viceroy of Mercia under Egbert, having investigated these wonders to his satisfaction, employed the gifts of Offa, and the offerings of pilgrims, in constructing a Church of stone in honour of St. Ethelbert, on the site of the former edifice, which, however magnificent for its time, was yet only of wood. This second structure itself was rebuilt within two centuries by Bishop Athelstan; and his Church having been destroyed during the Welsh incursion before noticed, it was not until after the Conquest that Bishop Robert de Lozinga commenced the present Cathedral, after the model of that at Aix la Chapelle. This Prelate died in 1095, leaving his great work unfinished, and it received various additions from time to time till 1786, when the Western front and tower having fallen to the ground, were rebuilt, and the whole Cathedral repaired by Wyatt. The Cathedral is in the customary form of a cross, with a square tower, formerly surmounted by a spire 92 feet in height, at the intersection of the nave and transept. The rebuilding of the Western front has been conducted with a total disregard to the general character of the architecture of the remainder of the Church, and affords a very grievous specimen of innovation. The interior, also, has suffered not a little from modern boldness. The North end of the transept, called St. Katherine's Aisle, is used as the Parochial Church of St. John the Baptist. The Lady Chapel is fitted up as a Library; beneath it is a Crypt, and the pentagonal Chapel of Bishop Audley on the South is divided from it by a rich screen. The Chapel of Bishop Stanbury projects from the North side of the Choir. Among the monuments is that of Bishop Cantilupe, who died in 1282, and is said to have been the last Englishman who obtained the honour of Canonization, (in 1310.) So great was his repute, that his arms were adopted as the bearings of the See, and still remain so. Bishop Aquablanca, who died in 1268, lies under a rich and costly altar-tomb and canopy. The Chapter House, which was a beautiful octagon 37 feet in diameter, has been entirely destroyed, and so also has a Saxon double Chapel of St. Katherine and St. Mary Magdalen, between the Cloisters and Bishop's Palace, of unquestionable pretensions to the very

HERE-
FORD-
SHIRE.

Castle.

The Cathedral.

HERE-FORD-
SHIRE.

remotest antiquity. The plan and elevation of this curious building may be found in Gough's Camden. (ii. pl. xiv.) The Cloisters contain an area (our Lady's Arbour) 115 feet square, and form a communication between the Church and the Palace; and their Western side is now occupied by a Grammar School.

The dimensions of the Cathedral are as follows:

	Feet.
* Length from East to West, including the walls,	370
Length of the Nave.....	144
Length of the Choir.....	100
Length from the Choir to the Lady Chapel....	20
Length of the Lady Chapel.....	73
Length of the Transept	140
Breadth of the Body and Aisles	68
Breadth of the Lady Chapel	30
Height of the Nave	68
Height of the Tower on the West front	130

The Bishop's Palace is agreeably placed near the banks of the Wye. He once possessed eight residences within the County of Hereford, besides one in London. The Deanery and Prebendal houses adjoin the North-Eastern angle of the Cathedral, and besides these is a College for the Vicar's Choral, a stone quadrangle of about 100 feet, erected in the reign of Edward IV. The Chapter consists of a Dean and five Canons residentiary. The Diocese includes the whole County of Hereford, excepting eight Parishes in that of St. David's, a large part of Shropshire, four Parishes in Monmouthshire, eight in Radnorshire, six in Montgomeryshire, and 21 in Worcestershire.

Other Ec-clesiastic Foundations.

Besides the Cathedral, Hereford before the Great Rebellion possessed five Parochial Churches, St. Peter's, All Saints, St. Nicholas's, St. Martin's, and St. Owen's; the last two were destroyed by the Parliamentary ravagers in 1645. The site of St. Guthlac's Priory, a cell of Benedictines, is now covered by the County Gaol. The remains of a Monastery of Black Friars may be found on the North of the City, and present the Prior's lodgings in good preservation, and a beautiful hexagonal Preaching Cross. Coningsby Hospital, a charitable foundation of James I., not far from these ruins, is on the site of a House of Knights Hospitallers. Besides this establishment, there are two other retreats for the indigent, St. Giles's Hospital and St. Ethelred's Alms-houses. The manufactures of the City are not extensive, and consist chiefly of gloves, hats, and flannel. Hereford has returned two Members to Parliament since 23 Edward I. Population, in 1821, 9990. Distant 135 miles West North-West from London. Guiliam the Herald was born in this City about 1565, Garrick in 1717, and the notorious Eleanor Gwynn drew her first breath in an obscure dwelling in Pipe Lane, nearly adjoining the Episcopal Palace, which was afterwards occupied by her grandson. About six miles South-East from Hereford, in a little Parish of the same name with itself, stands Holm Lacey, a venerable seat originally of the Lacies, which passed by marriage to the family of Scudamore in the reign of Edward III., and is now the property of the Duke of Norfolk. The greater part of the house was rebuilt in the beginning of the XVIIIth century by the last Viscount Scudamore,

Holm
Lacey.

* These dimensions are taken from the List appended to the Essays on Gothic Architecture, collected and published by Taylor in 1802, a list in general of very great accuracy. In this instance, however, they differ widely in every particular from those laid down by Duncumb the friend of Pope, and tradition still shows the room in which that Poet penned "The Man of Ross," with whose virtues he doubtless became acquainted during visits in this neighbourhood. The house and grounds are particularly interesting, as having been allowed to retain uninjured the style in which they were originally framed; and the Gallery is very rich in portraits

HERE-
FORD-
SHIRE.

Bromyard, a small, irregular, ill-built Market Town, with a fine Church of early Norman, if not of Saxon, architecture, stands in a very beautiful country near the river Frome. Population, in 1821, 1227. Distant 125 miles North North-West from London.

Bromyard

Kington, or Kinton, a small Market Town on the river Arrow, for the most part respectably built, stands on the Black brook under Bradna mountain, on the summit of which are the remains of a square Camp. It once possessed a Castle for the protection of the Marches. The Church is very singularly built, and the tower is detached from the main body. Population, in 1821, 1980, chiefly employed in manufacturing narrow cloth. Here is a good Free Grammar School. Distant 19 miles North-West from Hereford, 154 West by North from London.

Kington.

Ledbury, an ancient Market, and once a Borough Town, stands on a declivity about a mile West from the river Leden, near the extremity of the Malvern hills. Two principal streets cross each other at right angles. The Church is large and ancient, and from the XVth century to the Reformation was Collegiate. At present two sinecure Rectors (Portionaries) are presented by the Bishop, and interchange their tithes, &c. every third year. They alternately nominate a Vicar. The buildings consist of a nave, side aisles, and chancel, a Chapel of St. Katherine,* and a detached tower crowned with a lofty spire. An Hospital of St. Katherine, a Market House, and Free School are the other public edifices. The right of sending two Members to Parliament was surrendered by this Borough on the plea of inability to support them. The chief manufactures are ropes and sacking. Population, in 1821, 3421. Distant 16 miles East from Hereford, 120 West by North from London.

Ledbury.

Ross, a Market Town, is situated on a considerable elevation on the Eastern bank of the Wye. It was constituted a free Borough by Henry III. The streets are rough, narrow, and steep; the Church is of ancient date, and the views from it luxuriant and picturesque. But the chief celebrity which attaches to the town is derived from the well-known portrait by Pope of "the Man of Ross," John Kyrk, who died in 1724, in the 84th year of his age, and whose good deeds do not appear to have been overcharged by the Poet. His residence is now converted into the King's Arms Inn. Population, in 1821, 2957. Distant 12 miles South-East from Hereford, 121 West by North from London. The iron trade, for which it was once noted, has greatly decreased.

Ross.

About three miles East from Ross is Rose, or Bury Hill, the Aricanium of Antoninus, and beyond it is the sequestered site of Penyard Castle; but the glory of the neighbourhood is Goodrich Castle, between three and four miles from Ross, on a finely wooded eminence, round which the Wye flows in a semicircular channel.

Goodrich
Castle.

* Katharine Audley, temp. Edward II. who, with her maid Mabel, had revelations, and fixed her abode in Ledbury because she heard the bells ring there spontaneously. Camden by Gough, ii. 456.

HERE-
FORD-
SHIRE.
—
HERESY.

The Keep is supposed to be antecedent to the Conquest; much of the other works are Norman, and some additions bear marks of as late a date as the time of Henry VI. This fortress was long the Baronial residence of the Talbots, Earls of Shrewsbury. Its form is a parallelogram, 176 feet by 152, with a round tower at each angle, and the Keep in the South-West part of its area, close to the outer wall, forming an exact square of 29 feet. The Chapel is on the left of the entrance. The Hall was of great magnificence; and the whole building, though much dilapidated, chiefly by the fury of the Parliament during the Great Rebellion, is among the most striking castellated remains in England.

The Wye has on or near its banks many other interesting ruins. Pembridge Castle; Dore Abbey, a Cistercian establishment, the Church of which is still appropriated to worship; Bredwardine Castle; Clifford Castle; are among the beauties, for a fuller account of which we must refer to some of the numerous Tours on this attractive river.

Introductory Sketches to the Topography of Herefordshire, by J. Lodge, 1793; Clark's General View of Agriculture in the County of Hereford, 1796; Price's History of Leominster, 1795, and of Hereford, 1796; Duncumb, Historical Collections, &c. 1805; Beauties of England and Wales, vol. vi.

HERE-
FORD-
SHIRE.
—
HERESY.

HEREMITE. See HERMIT.

HE'RESY, HE'RESIARCH, HE'RESIARCHY, HE'RETICK, HERE'TICAL, HERE'TICALLY, HERE'TICATE. } Fr. heresie; It. heresia; Sp. heresia; Lat. hæresis; Gr. αἵρεσις, from αἰρ-εἶν, capere, to take. The meaning and ancient usage of the word hæresis is well explained in the Quotation from Hobbes.

Heresy is an opinion taken in opposition, or a dogma opposed to, the principles of the Christian Church; of the Established Church; of established doctrines in general.

þe barons alle said, alle holy þe clergie,
þe lond þe wild voide of þat herisie.

R. Brunne, p. 247.

But I knowleche to the this thing, that aftir the secte which thei seien eresie, so I serue to God the Fadir.

Wiclif. Dedis of Apostlis, ch. xxiv.

But this I confesse vnto the, that after the way (whiche they call heresy) so worshyppe I the God of my fathers.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Eschewe thou a man eretike aftir oon and the secounde correccioun, witynge that he that is such a maner man is subuertid and trespassith, and is dampned bi his owne doom.

Wiclif. Tyte, ch. iii.

A man that is geuen to heresy, after the first & second admoniciō, auoyde; remēbringe that he that is suche, is peruerted, & sinneth, euen dampned by his owne judgement.

Bible, Anno 1551.

And many a frantike verse, then from my penne did passe,
In waues of wicked heresie, so deepe I drowned was.

Gascoigne. Flowers. The Recantation of a Louer.

And now in his publike doynges, he maketh her said most famous father, almoste a scismatike, and her most Cristen swete brother, and his courte of parliament, both nobles and commōs, no better than hereticks.

Stephan, Bishop of Winchester. On True Obedience. The Translatour's Preface.

Than as wise as two wispes, and as godly as two goselings, they examined her what her beleue was in the sacramēt, to bring her into more depe daunger of death, calling her husbands doctrine erroneous, heretical, and sedicious doctrine.

Bale. English Votaries, part ii. sig. O. 5.

If that great chancellour of Paris were now alive, hee would freely teach his Sorbon (as he once did) that it is not in the pope's power (that I may use his owne word) to hereticate any proposition.

Bishop Hall. Works, vol. ii. part ii. p. 198. To Pope Urban VIII.

Of such deep learning little had he neede,
Ne yet of Latine, ne of Greeke, that breede
Doubts mongst diuines, and difference of texts,
From whence arise diversitie of sects,
And hateful heresies, by God abhor'd.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

The word heresy is Greek, and signifies a taking of any thing, particularly the taking of an opinion. After the study of Philosophy began in Greece, and the philosophers, disagreeing amongst themselves, had started many questions, not only about things natural, but also moral and civil; because every man took what opinion he pleased, each several opinion was called a heresy; which signified no more than a private opinion, without reference to truth or falsehood.

Hobbes. Works, fol. 460. Historical Narrative concerning Heresy.

Such othes she oft had falsified,
Nor thought it sinne at all
To breake them to an heretike,
(Our queene, so papists call.)

Warner. Albion's England, book x.

The other thing is, that hereticks and evil persons, to serve their ends, did not only pretend things spoken by the apostles, and apostolical and primitive men, (for that was easie,) but even pretended certain books to be written by them, that under their venerable names they might recommend and advance their own hereticall opinions.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii. rule 14.

We claim no power, when heresies grow bold,
To coin new faith, but still declare the old.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Deluded people! that do not consider that the greatest heresie in the world is a wicked life, because it is so directly and fundamentally opposite to the whole design of the Christian faith and religion: and that do not consider that God will sooner forgive a man a hundred defects of his understanding than one fault of his will.

Tillotson. Sermon 34.

I have seene a series of the popes from St. Peter, and amongst the reputed heresiarchs, that medallion of John Huss and Hierome of Prague's Martyrdome, with the memorable inscription post centum annos vos cito, which fell out at the appearing of Martin Luther exactly at that period.

Evelyn. Memoirs. To Mr. Pepys, Aug. 12, 1689.

I have fought under Madam Dacier's banner, and have waged war in defence of the divine Homer against all the heretics of the age.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey. Postscript.

That saying of their father Cres. is still running in my head, that they may be dispensed with in their obedience to an heretic prince, while the necessity of the times shall oblige them to it: for that, as another of them tells us, is only the effect of Christian prudence; but when once they shall get power to shake him off, an heretic is no lawful king, and consequently to rise against him is no rebellion.

Dryden. Religio Laici. Preface.

He ignorantly and heretically held against the bishop, that the soul of man was of the substance of God; and so consequently that it was infinite; and the soul of the reprobate being damned, the substance of God should be damned.

Styrie. The Life of Bishop Aylmer.

A second offence is that of heresy, which consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed; being defined by Sir Mathew Hale, sententia rerum divinarum humano sensu excogitata, palam docta et pertinaciter defensa.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book iv. ch. iv.

This heresiarch [Manichæus] knew well, that as concupiscence hath such an empire over the mind, it would be a vain thing absolutely to prohibit marriage: he therefore permitted or tolerated it in the laity, as also meat, wine, and the possession of worldly goods.

Jortn. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. ii. p. 118.

HERESY. Constantine easily believed that the heretics, who presumed to dispute his opinions, or to oppose his commands, were guilty of the most absurd and criminal obstinacy; and that a seasonable application of moderate severities might save those unhappy men from the danger of an everlasting condemnation.

Gibbon. Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. xxi.

And this the Poet has done with more force and clearness than is often to be found in whole volumes wrote against that heretical opinion.

Warburton. Works, vol. ii. p. 76. A Commentary on Mr. Pope's Essay on Man.

HERETOCH, Low Lat. heretochius; A. S. here-toga, from here, an army, and togen, to lead. Hence, adds Spelman, the Germans at this day call a leader, heretogen. And see the Quotations from Blackstone.

Therefore the bishops, earls, sheriffs, heretoches, or marshals of armies, &c., must be all diligently attending.

Spelman. Of the Ancient Government of England.

Among the Saxons the Latin name of dukes, duces, is very frequent, and signified, as among the Romans, the commanders or leaders of their armies, whom in their own language they called heretoga; and in the laws of Henry I. (as translated by Lambard) we find them called heretochii.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book i. ch. xii.

We find a very ill use made of it by Edric, duke of Mercia, in the reign of King Edmond Ironside, who by his office of duke, or heretoch, was entitled to a large command in the king's army, and by his repeated treacheries at last transferred the Crown to Canute the Dane.

Id. Ib. book i. ch. xiii.

HERIADES, in Zoology, a genus of Hymenopterous stinging insects, belonging to the family Apidae; established by Max. Spinola, who separated it from Megachila of Latreille.

Generic character. Third joint of the labial palpi inserted obliquely near the summit of the outer side of the second, which is much shorter than the first. Maxillary palpi very small, formed of two joints; the last nearly conical. These insects form their nests in the trunks of old trees.

The type of the genus, H. truncorum, Spinola; Anthophora truncorum, Fabricius; Apis campanulata, and A. truncorum, of Kirby.

HERIOT, or } D. her-gewaede, her-geweyde; Low HARIOT. } Lat. hereotum; A. S. here-geat;
g (quod usitatissimum est) in i transeunte, Spelman.

"Here-geat, armour, weapons, or provision for warre; a tribute of old given to the Lord of the Manor for his better preparation toward warre: from here, an army, and geat-an, or geot-an, to pour out; not unlike the tribute called heregild. We now call it a heriot, and understand by it the best horse, ox, cow, or such like chattell, which the tenant hath at the houre of his death due to the Lord by custom." Somner.

Who could e'er say my lord and the next marsh

Made frequent heriots? or that any harsh

Oppressive usage made young lives soon fall?

Cartwright. On the Death of Lord Bayning.

Heriots, which I think are agreed to be a Danish custom, and of which we shall say more hereafter, are a render of the best beast or other good (as the custom may be) to the lord on the death of the tenant.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. vi.

Heriots, which were slightly touched upon in a former chapter, are usually divided in two sorts, heriot-service and heriot-custom.

Id. Ib. book ii. ch. xxviii.

The tennants are chiefly customary and heriotable.

Burnet. History of Cumberland and Westmoreland, vol. i. p. 174.

The strict meaning of HERIOT in Law is explained above. We find a provision in the laws of Canute, that at the death of a tenant of the Crown, so many horses and arms were to be paid, as the deceased in his lifetime was obliged to keep for the King's service. It differs from Relief in this particular, that Heriot is generally a personal, Relief always a predial service. Heriot service is due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and may be considered as a rent. Heriot custom depends upon immemorial usage, and is now, for the most part, confined to copyholds. The Heriot sometimes is the best beast, sometimes the best inanimate good, as a jewel or piece of plate, but it is always a personal chattel which, on the death of the tenant who owned it, having been ascertained by the option of the Lord, became vested in him as his property. No Heriot, therefore, is taken on the death of a feme-coverte, since she has not ownership in things personal. If there be a composition established by indisputable ancient custom, then both Lord and Tenant are bound by it, but no such new custom may be created.

VOL. XXIII.

HERITABLE. See HEREDITARY.

HERITIERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Polygamia, order Monoecia. Generic character: hermaphrodite flower; calyx five-toothed; corolla, none; anthers ten, sessile, two between each germen; germens five; style conical; drupe dry, coriaceous, carinate, winged, one-seeded. Male flower, as the hermaphrodite, filaments columnar, anthers five to ten, minute, connected into a cylinder.

Two species, natives of the East Indies.

HERMANNIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphia, order Pentandria, natural order Malvaceæ. Generic character: calyx bell-shaped, five-cleft; corolla, petals five, spirally-hooded; filaments lanceolate, the five styles approximating; capsule five-celled, many-seeded.

A genus of more than thirty species, natives of the South of Africa.

HERMA'PHRODITE, } Fr. hermaphrodite; It.
HERMAPHRODIT'ICAL, } and Sp. hermaphrodito;
HERMAPHRODIT'ICALLY, } Lat. hermaphroditus; Gr.
HERMAPHRODIT'ICK. } ἑρμαφροδίτης, from Ἑρμῆς,
Mercurius, and Ἀφροδίτη, Venus. See Ovid, Met. lib. iv. v. 288. and the Quotation from Pliny. Brome coins the verb; and Ben Jonson the general term hermaphrodeity.

Divinity and art were so united,

As if in him both were hermaphroditized.

Brome. On the Death of Mr. Josias Shute.

—A more strange thing

Than ever Nile yet into light could bring,

Made as Creation merely to despise,

Nor man, nor woman, scarce hermaphrodite.

Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

Beyond those Nasamones, and their neighbours confining upon them (the Machlyes), there bee found ordinarily hermaphrodites, called Androgyni, of a double nature, and resembling both sexes, male and female.

Holland. Plinie, book vii. ch. ii.

Some do beleieve hermaphrodeity,

That both do act and suffer.

Ben Jonson. The Alchemist, act ii. sc. 3.

Thus do we read in Pliny, that Neroe's chariot was drawne by four hermaphroditical mares, and Cardan affirms he also beheld one at Antwerp.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book iii. ch. xvii.

P. Iv. Look to me, wit, and look to my wit, Land,

That is, looke on me, and with all thine eyes,

Male, female, yea, hermaphroditicke eyes.

Ben Jonson. The Staple of Newes, act i. sc. 1.

He makes this difference in the sexes too;

He sells to men, he gives himself to you,

To both he would contribute some delight;

A mere poetical hermaphrodite.

Dryden. Prologue 38.

HER-MAPHRO-DITE.

HERMIT.

To the hermaphrodite, whose sex is quite doubtful, is allotted the smallest of two shares, I mean the worst of two conditions.

Sir W. Jones. Works, vol. viii. p. 256. The Mohammedan Law of Inheritance.

[Worms are] the enliveners of wet places; without head or feet, hermaphroditical; to be distinguished by their feelers.

Pennant. British Zoology. Worms.

HERMAS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Umbelliferae. Generic character: flowers polygamous; general involucre three to twelve leaved, partial involucre two-leaved; umbel hemispherical; radial florets truncated; seeds orbicular, compressed, longitudinally striated.

Five species, natives of the South of Africa.

HERMELLA, in Zoology, a genus of Annelides, belonging to the family Amphitritidae, founded by Savigny.

Generic character. Mouth below; two gills completely smooth on the lower face of the first segment, each formed of many rows of simple sessile divisions; the first segment provided with bristles placed in concentric rows, forming an opercular crown. These animals live in fixed sandy tubes, open at one end, and cemented side by side to other tubes of the same kind. Groups of these tubes are called Sea Honeycomb on the coast. The type of the genus is H. alveolata, Savigny; the Sabella alveolata, and Eutipora arenosa, of Linnæus; well described by Ellis in his Corallines, pl. xxxvi.; and by Reaumur, in the Academy of Sciences, 1711. There is also an Indian species, of a much larger size, the Nereis chrysocephala of Pallas.

HERMESIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Octandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx two or three leaved; corolla none; filaments very short: female flower, calyx four or five leaved; styles two; capsule two-celled, two-seeded.

One species, H. Castaneifolia, native of South America.

HERMETIA, in Zoology, a genus of Dipterous insects, belonging to the family Muscidae, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Antennæ much longer than the head, of three distinct joints, the last compressed, divided into eight rings, and destitute of any bristle.

All the species of this genus are exotic. The type is H. illucens, Latreille, the Musca illucens of Linnæus, found in Surinam.

HERME'TICK, } Chemistry was called the Her-
HERME'TICAL, } metick art, under the supposition
HERME'TICALLY. } that it owed its origin, or its improvement, to Hermes Trismegistus.

A glass is said to be hermetically sealed, when it is so closely stopped that not any exhalation can issue from it.

See CHEMISTRY, Hist. Int. p. 589.

Their seals, their characters, hermetique rings,
Their jemme of riches, and bright stone, that brings Invisibilitie, and strength, and tongues.

Ben Jonson. The Vader-wood. Exec. upon Vulcan.

And what the hermetical philosophy saith of God, is in a sense verifiable of the thus ennobled soul, that its centre is every where, but its circumference no where.

Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. xxiv.

Some have written mystically, as Paracelsus, in his book De Azoth, or de ligno et lineâ vitæ; and as several hermetical philosophers, involving therein the secret of their Elixir, and enigmatically expressing the nature of their great work.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book iii. ch. xii.

And I know (continues Eleutherus) that the person you have assumed, of an opponent of the hermetick doctrine, will not so far prevail against your native and wonted equity, as to keep you from acknowledging, that philosophy is much beholden to the notions and discoveries of chymists.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 549. The Sceptical Chymist.

By my diary it appears, that one of the last times I observed the hermetical weather-glass to stand at near about the same height, namely, the 34; the liquor in the other glass was no lower than 41.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 488. New Thermometrical Experiments.

This little tube was open at one end, and the other, where it was hermetically sealed, had a small glass bubble to receive the air, whose dilatation was to be measured.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 21. Experiments Physico-Mechanical touching the Spring of Air.

Among the numerous students of hermetick philosophy, not one appears to have desisted from the task of transmutation from conviction of its impossibility, but from weariness of toil, or impatience of delay, a broken body, or exhausted fortune.

Johnson. The Rambler, No. 63.

HERMINIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Gynandria, order Monandria, natural order Orchideæ. Generic character: corolla rather spreading, lip without a spur; masses of pollen naked, distinct.

One species, H. monorchis, the Ophrys monorchis of English Botany, native of England.

HERMIONE, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Narcissi. Generic character: spathe, three or more flowered; corolla six-cleft, spreading in the form of a star; tube slender, angled, longer than the segments; three of the filaments shorter than the tube; stigma three-lobed, lobes round.

A genus, (divided from Narcissus,) of which the Jonquil may be considered the type.

HERMIT.

HE'RMITE, or HE'REMITE, HE'RMITAGE, HE'RMITARY, HE'RMITLESS,
HERMI'TICAL,
HEREMI'TICAL,
HE'RMITE-TRODDEN. } Also written eremite, q. v.
Fr. hermite, ermite; It. heremita; Sp. eremitano; Lat. eremita; Gr. ἐρημίτης, from ἐρημος, a desert, a solitude.

One dwelling in a desert, in solitude; who lives or passes a recluse and solitary life.

An anachoret, or anchorite, q. v.

Hermits in the passage below from Macbeth is explained by Steevens, "we as Hermits shall always pray for you."

Tille oþer houses of þe cuntre fue þousand marke he gaf,
Tille heremites & tille seke men, & oþer of suilk raf.

R. Brunne, p. 136.

Among lolleres of London, and lewede heremites.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 75.

And in the tyme of this Phylp, Godfrey de Bulion, with many other Cristen prynces, at the exortacyon of Peter the heremyte, sayled into the holy lande, and wanne the cytie of Jerusalem of the Sarasens handes.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 215.

Whan Robert the hermyte had ben a moneth with the king he toke his leaue, and at his departyng the kyng gaue him great gyftes.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. ch. 204.

And after, as affermyth my sayde auctour, nat ferre from Warwyke, in a wyldenesse, he [Guy] purchased, by Goddes puryaunce, a lodgyng in an heremytage, where, by the terme of ii yerres and more he dwelled and kepte an harde lyfe.

Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 185.

To proceed therefore with my purpose, after these, there followed in like sort sundrie other kinds of monasticali life, as anchorites, here-

HER-METICK.

HERMIT.

HERMIT mits, Cyrilline and Benedictine monkes, albeit that the heremetical profession was onelie allowed of in Britaine, vntill the coming of Augustine the monke.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, book i. ch. ix.

A little lowly hermitage it was,
Down in a dale, hard by a forest's side,
Far from resort of people, that did pas
In traveil to and froe: a litle wyde
There was an holy chappel edifyde,
Wherein the hermite dewly wont to say
His holy things each morne and eventyde.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 1.

For those of old and the late dignities,
Heap'd vp to them, we rest your ermites.

Shakspeare. Macbeth, fol. 134.

If crosses, church-windows, organs, and fonts, are now batter'd down, I little wonder at it; for chappels, monasteries, hermitaries, nunneries, and other religious houses, were us'd so in the time of old king Henry.

Howell. Letter 77. book ii.

Alexis, here she stray'd, among these pines,
Sweet hermitress, she did all alone repair;
Here did she spread the treasure of her hair,
More rich than that brought from the Colchian mines.

Drummond. Sonnet 60. part i.

If I were saw'd into quantities, I should make foure dozen of such bearded hermites staves as Master Shallow.

Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 96.

For never hermit under grave pretence,
Has liv'd more contrary to common sense.

Dryden. Essay on Satire.

I am confident, that if the statute against jugglers and hocus-pocus blades were extended to State affairs, and strictly put in execution at this instant, some (nameless) places of very great resort would be as perfect hermitages as that your servant lives in.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 45. Letter to the Countess of Ranelagh.

You describe so well your hermetical state of life, that none of your ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary.

Pope. Letter 11. To Ed. Blount.

The most perfect hermits are supposed to have passed many days without food, many nights without sleep, and many years without speaking, and glorious was the man (I abuse that name) who contrived any cell, or seat of a peculiar construction, which might expose him in the most inconvenient posture to the inclemency of the seasons.

Gibbon. Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. xxxvii.

This, in 1262, belonged to the see of Landaff; for I find in that year that William de Radnor, then bishop, had leave from the king to lodge in the cloister of his hermitage at Charing, whenever he came to London.

Pennant. London, p. 151.

Then gently deign to guide my feet
To your hermit-trodden seat;
Where I may live at last my own,
Where I at last may die unknown.

Grainger. Poems. Solitude.

Distinction between Hermit and Anachoret.

The distinction between a HERMIT and an ANACHORET, to which we have already pointed under the latter of these heads, does not appear to have been always rigidly observed. Du Cange (ad v. Anachoreta) cites from the Rules of St. Benedict, (cap. 2.) Secundum genus (Monachorum) est Anachoretarum, id est Eremitarum, and in common parlance the words were often used synonymously. Nevertheless Isidorus, (who has been less careful in his Origines, (vii. 13. De Monachis), and has there admitted Eremitæ ii sunt qui et Anachoretæ), in his Tract de Officiis Ecclesiasticis, very clearly distinguishes between the two. Secundum genus (Monachorum) est Eremitarum qui procul ab hominibus recedentes deserta loca et vastas solitudines sequi atque habitare perhibentur, ad imitationem scilicet Eliæ et Joannis Baptistæ, qui Eremitæ secessus penetrare. Hi quippe incredibili mundi contemptu, solâ solitudine delectantur, herbis tantum arescentibus victitantes, aut pane solo quod eis per certa intervalla temporum defertur, vel aquâ contenti; sicque secretissimi penitus et ab omni hominum conspectu remoti, divino tantum colloquio perfruuntur, cui puris mentibus inhæserunt, cujus amore non solum mundum sed etiam hominum consortium reliquerunt. Tertium genus est Anachoritarum, qui jam cœnobitali conversatione perfecti, includunt semet ipsos in cellis procul ab hominum conspectu remotis, nulli præbentes accessum, sed in solâ contemplatione divinâ viventes perseverant, id est Theoricâ. Sed isti examinatione Cœnobiorum probati in omnibus disciplinis Monasterii per xxx annos ad hanc contemplationem per obedientiam eliguntur. (xi. 15.)

Mr. Fosbrooke (British Monachism, 489.) points out this original distinction, but he does not refer to any higher authority than that of Mosheim, (i. 199.) and even this reference, as far as we see, is incorrect. For the succeeding Ages, Mr. Fosbrooke cites the Anglia Sacra, (xi. 436.) Heremitæ solivagi aut Anachoritæ conclusi; and a work of another writer, whom, however highly we estimate him in his line, in which, indeed, he stands unrivalled, we little expected to find brought forward as a referee in Ecclesiastical History; De Foe in Robinson Crusoe.

It is to the III^d century that the Ecclesiastical writers, with one accord, attribute the rise of those principles, which induced the first Hermits to fly from all converse with mankind, and, burying themselves in caves and deserts, to practise self-privations, under which nothing short of the insane obstinacy of fanaticism could have supported human nature. A few particulars of the most celebrated early Hermits, of whom Paul the Thebæan and Antony were the chief, (hujus vitæ autor Paulus, illustrator Antonius, and yet higher, ut ad superiora conscendam princeps Johannes Baptista fuit, Hieron. Ep. xxii. ad Eustoch. 18.) will go far to explain the nature of the discipline which they practised and enjoined. For this purpose we have ample authorities in the Lives of the first by St. Jerome, and of the second attributed to Athanasius.*

It may not be requisite that we should give implicit credence to all which these grave writers relate, in order to become acquainted with the manners and morals of their heroes; but we may, perhaps, accept without misgiving the relation of their austerities, and of their high repute among their contemporaries. We shall begin with Antony, because, though he does not occur first in strict chronological arrangement, yet still he was contemporary with the Protohermit Paul; and he has had the fortune, we do not pretend to decide whether it be good or ill, of being presented to posterity much more at length of the two.

Antony, born of noble Christian parents, in Egypt, A. D. 231, showed an early aversion both to letters and society. When but little more than 20 years of age, having accepted our Saviour's injunction to the rich man (Matt. xix. 21.) literally, he sold and distributed his patrimony, and having placed his only sister under the guardianship of some faithful professed virgins, he coveted solitude for himself. At first, prayer and manual labour were his sole occupations, and he diligently collected whatever instructions he could procure from neighbouring recluses. Those who had addicted them-

HERMIT

Origin of Hermits.

Antony.

* See a discussion relative to the authenticity of this piece in Jortin's Remarks on Eccl. Hist. ii. 143.

HERMIT.

selves to this mode of life, were to be found, as yet, not far from great towns, for Monasteries in Egypt were few, and the Desert hitherto was untenanted. The struggles of Antony with the Power of Evil commenced from the very outset of his profession; and as long as Athanasius permits us to consider them as merely spiritual, they are described not without vigour and effect; but unfortunately the conflict soon becomes too personal to retain its dignity. Satan having in vain assaulted the youthful Saint by such allurements as were most likely to prevail over one in the flower of life, at length, gnashing his teeth, and no longer master of himself, appeared to him in the shape of a black boy, (μέλας αὐτῷ φαίνεται παῖς), and with a lamentable voice announced himself as the Spirit of Fornication, whose efforts, successful with others, were in this instance unavailing. Antony, in great joy, replied that blackness betokened the Fiend's mind, boyhood his weakness; and the Devil fled from this first interview in consternation. To prevent these inroads as much as possible for the future, the Saint macerated his body more and more, he never tasted food till sunset, and sometimes fasted through two or even four days; his diet was of the simplest kind, bread, salt, and water, his bed was straw, or frequently the bare ground. For the sake of more uninterrupted self-speculation (καταμανθάνειν ὡς ἐν ἐσόπτρῳ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ βίον) he withdrew into some tombs at a distance from human habitation, and having agreed with a friend to provide him with bread, at many days intervals, he barred the gate, and shut himself in alone. His enemy, fearing that such an example might people the Desert with Hermits, broke into the tomb one night with a whole legion of Fiends, and beat Antony so soundly as to leave him speechless on the ground, where he was found on the next morning by his friend, and conveyed, more dead than alive, to a neighbouring church. Hence, however, though surrounded by kinsmen who congratulated him on his escape, while they, overjoyed at his safety, were sleeping, by the assistance of the same friend he again betook himself at nightfall to his former retreat. Here once more closing the gate he remained alone, and being unable to stand from the pain of his beating, he prayed in a recumbent posture, and fearlessly dared the Evil One, who was not backward to accept the challenge. If the reader will call to mind any etching of the Flemish School, which he may have chanced to see, representing the Temptations of St. Antony, he will have before his eyes the vivid description which Athanasius has given of those conflicts which now succeeded. Satan had no difficulty in assuming new shapes of ill. So great was the noise which he raised on that memorable night, that the whole place was rocked and shaken, and the four walls of the vault being rent, the Fiends gained access to its interior; thronging round under the varied images of beasts and serpents, of lions, bears, leopards, bulls, snakes, basilisks, scorpions, and wolves; roaring, butting, creeping, and rushing. Antony, however, was undismayed, and he was rewarded with a beatific vision. As he raised his eyes the roof opened, and a beam of light descended. The Demons vanished, his bodily pains remitted, and the building, which was lately ruined, became whole. Antony's first question to the celestial visitor was somewhat querulous. He asked why it had not come earlier and assisted him at the beginning. The reply was that it had been present from the first, in order to watch his struggle; and that as he had achieved victory, it would be with him for ever for the future, and render his name universally famous. HERMIT.

The Hermit arose refreshed by this assurance, and though now in his 35th year felt greater strength than at any former period of his life. He plunged boldly into the Wilderness and sought a mountain, regardless of a lure of gold and silver which the Tempter threw in his way, and which vanished like smoke (ὡσεὶ καπνὸς) when thus neglected. His next abode was a tower on the bank of a river, deserted by every thing but snakes, which made way for him. Here he laid up bread for six months; after which period the supply was renewed by some friends, who let it down from the roof, without seeing or even conversing with him. Often, however, both by day and night, if they lingered without the walls, they heard menacing voices urging Antony to depart. At first they supposed them to proceed from men, who had forced their way in by ladders; but when, after peeping through a crevice, not a soul was visible, they were convinced that they could be produced by nothing short of Devils. Alarmed for Antony's safety, they called to him repeatedly by name, but he, equally disregarding friend and foe, answered only by a louder Psalm-singing, which assured them that he was yet living.

This rigid seclusion, we are told, lasted for twenty years, and Antony then came forth precisely as he had entered his retirement, neither fatter nor thinner, (τὸ σῶμα μήτε πικρὸν μήτ' ἰσχνὸν.) As natural consequences of his sanctity he performed numberless miracles, induced many to turn Hermits, and preached in the Egyptian tongue a sermon of inordinate length, which occupies seventeen folio pages in the Greek of Athanasius. In the course of it he recounts his various Temptations, how the Fiends threatened him, surrounded his abode like armed men, filled his cell with hideous shapes, brought light into his darkness, sang Psalms and quoted Scripture, clapped their hands, hissed, danced, shed tears, and howled; offered him food and treasure, buffeted and tormented him. One interview with the Fallen Spirit is not without sustentation of narrative. Having heard some one knocking at the gate of his retreat, the Saint went forth, and was encountered by a person of huge limbs and lofty stature. He asked his name? Satan, was the reply, readily given, and one whereat the good Father did not express surprise, for these visits had now become so regular, that he did not consider them either intrusive or out of the course of things. What was his business there? "Why," returned the Fiend, "do the Monks and all the other Christians accuse me falsely? why do they curse me hourly?" "Why," said Antony in answer, "are you so troublesome to them?" "It is not I," continued the Tempter, "who trouble them; they trouble themselves. Have they not read, 'O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end, even as the cities which thou hast destroyed?' I have now no place, nor weapon, nor city. The Christians are everywhere, the Deserts are thronged with Monks; but let them look to themselves, nor curse me without cause." Antony lost in wonder at the grace of Heaven, was brief and sharp in conclusion. "Liar as thou art, and unable to conceive truth, in this instance thou hast spoken it against thy will. It is Christ who by his coming has weakened, stripped, and overthrown thee"—and at the word the Devil vanished.

Antony now resided in a Monastery, where he com-

HERMIT. plied as little as he could help with the dictates of Nature. He was heartily ashamed of those compulsions, which forced him to eat, drink, and sleep; and the two first offices were always performed in private. His dress was haircloth within, sheepskin without, and this he wore till the hour of his death, never cleaning his body nor washing his feet, (μήτε σῶμα διὰ ρῦπον ὕδατι λείσας, μήθ' ὅλως τὰς πόδας ἀπονίψας,) insomuch, that if while on a journey he was obliged to wet them in crossing a stream, this was done most sorely against his will; for no one, till he was to be stretched out for burial, ever saw Antony naked. Such elevation of mind naturally attracted the wonder of numerous admirers, and Antony, finding that his privacy was broken in upon in the Monastery, determined to penetrate into the upper Thebais, where he was unknown. For this purpose he took sufficient bread with him, and sat down on the banks of the Nile to wait for a chance passage. But a voice from Heaven warned him to change his design, and rather to go into the Desert, (εἰς τὴν ἐνδοτέραν ἐρημον,) whither accordingly he was guided by some Saracens, (Σαρακηνοί,) sent expressly for the purpose; and after a journey of three days and nights, he fixed himself at the foot of a lofty mountain, gladdened at its foot by a clear, cold, and refreshing spring, and where on the plain beyond were scattered a few wild palm trees. Here, where later times have dedicated a Monastery to the Saint, near Mount Colzim on the Red Sea,* he cultivated with his own hands enough ground to afford him bread and potherbs. These little crops at first were infested by the neighbouring wild animals, but the Saint, as opportunity offered, gently laying hold of one of these marauders, asked him, why, being unhurt himself, he chose to hurt others, and bade him begone in the name of the Lord. The admonition had its effect, and Antony's garden was unmolested afterwards by the beasts.† But the Devils were not so easily rebutted, and the few persons who obtained permission once a month to bring the Hermit such trifling indulgences as his advancing years now began imperatively to require, (and these were no more than a few olives, a little pulse and oil,) were often terrified by strange sights and noises; tumults, voices, clashing of arms, and shapes of wild beasts at night. Antony, moreover, had to contend with the Fiends in bodily form, and sometimes they appear to have animated monsters unheard of elsewhere, for the sole purpose of tormenting the Recluse. One of these showed itself human to the hips, and thence downwards like an Ass, ἀναστὰς δὲ εἶδε θηρίον, ἀνθρώπου μὲν ἑοικὸς ἕως τῶν μηρῶν, τὰ δὲ σκέλη καὶ τοὺς πόδας ὄμοιός ἔχων ὄνως. At the sign of the Cross the whole rabble fled, for Legion was within this monster; and so hasty was its attempt to escape, that it fell dead after a few steps, and the Devils in vain attempted to drag the carcass out of the Desert.

Antony's miraculous powers seemed to increase with his years, and he performed all the customary wonders attributed to the devout of his time; wonders which appear in most instances to have been singularly devoid of the great legitimate purposes of a Miracle, the confirmation of a divine mission and the increase of the glory of God. He raised the dead and cured diseases by his prayers only; and one case, in which he was called in, was itself so much out of the common way that it doubtless required an uncommon remedy. It was that of a young woman, whose tears and other secretions from the head, as soon as they fell to the ground, were changed into worms, τότε γὰρ δάκρυα αὐτῆς καὶ αἱ μύξαι, καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν ὠτῶν ὑγρὰ πίπτοντα χαμαὶ σκώληκες εὐθὺς ἐγένοντο. Antony not only freed her from this uncomfortable affection, but he stopped her friends as they were beginning to describe the symptoms, and recounted the whole diagnosis of the complaint. He saw the soul of his friend Ammus carried to Heaven, though he had just died in a Hermitage on Mount Nitria, 13 days' journey distant. He was gifted with a kind of second sight as to the number of visitors who would come to him on any particular day, and very often as to the cause of their coming. Once, when being about to visit a neighbouring Monastery, it was necessary that he should embark on board a vessel with many other Monks, he alone complained of a very disagreeable and overpowering stench, (δεινῆς δυσωδίας καὶ πάνυ πικρᾶς.) The mariners said it arose from salt-fish. But Antony was not so easily to be deceived; he invoked a holy name, and immediately an Evil Spirit flew out of a miserable Demoniac among the crew, leaving behind him a smell which every one acknowledged was that of the Devil, (πάντες δὲ ἔγνωσαν ὅτι τὸ δαίμονος ἦν ἡ δυσωδία.)* Occasionally he was snatched up into mid air; and on one night he was presented with a distinct view of the passage of the Soul to another Being. A tall, shapeless, and awful figure appeared, as he stood, to touch the clouds, while others, as if with wings, attempted to mount them; some of them were dragged down when the Spirit stretched out his hands triumphantly, while as others rose in security he gnashed his teeth with envy and despair.

Thus gifted, it was not likely that Antony would hold communion with Heretics, and accordingly he avoided both Meletians and Manichæans, and loudly anathematized the Arians to the great joy of the people. Certain Greek Philosophers who came to scoff were soon discomfited by his answers; and some men of Letters were unable to find a reply to his axiom, that to a sound mind Literature was unnecessary. This doctrine, indeed, he embraced so cordially that he never learned to write; and when Constantine and his sons had addressed complimentary despatches to him in the hope of obtaining a reply, he for a long time refused to open them, alleging that it was useless so to do since he was not able to answer. At length in his 105th year, having warned his friends of his approaching departure, and having earnestly requested that his body might be buried in the ground, not preserved after the Egyptian fashion, he bequeathed his wardrobe as follows; one sheepskin (μηλωτή) to Athanasius, together with an old blanket, (τὸ ὑποστρωγννόμενον ἱμάτιον,) which that Bishop had given him when new, another sheepskin to Serapion, and his haircloth (τὸ τρίχινον ἐνδυμα) to his attendant. Having thus done, he gave up the ghost tranquilly, in entire possession of all his bodily

* Hieron. in Vit. Hilarion. Sicard, Missions du Levant, v. 122-200.

† Jerome, in his Life of Hilarion, tells this story differently. The offender was a wild ass, (onager,) and Antony, striking him with his staff, baculo tundens latera, asked why he eat what he had not sown?

* This was always a very satisfactory proof of the presence of a Devil, and abundant instances to the purpose might be cited. A single one from Sulpicius Severus, perhaps, may suffice. St. Martin has been adjuring a Fiend by a powerful exorcism. Ad hanc vocem statim ut fumus evanuit et cellam tanto fœtore complexit ut indubia indicia reliquit Diabolum se fuisse. (Vita S. Mart. 25.)

HERMIT.

HERMIT.

Paul the Thebæan.

functions, and in the fullest odour of sanctity; for his Biographer repeats once again, with great apparent satisfaction, that even when old age advanced upon him, he was yet unconquered, and steadily refused either to change his clothes or to wash his feet, μήτε διὰ τὸ γήρας ἡττηθεὶς, ἀλλάξας τὸ σχῆμα τῆ ἐνδύματος ἢ νιψάμενος κἀν τὰς πόδας ὕδατι.

Paul, born in the Thebais, about the time of the Persecution of Decius, differed from Antony very materially in one respect. He was fond of and deeply imbued with Literature both Greek and Egyptian, and at the age of 15 had manifested great scholastic proficiency. In order to escape the treachery of a brother-in-law, who intended to betray him to the Roman Magistrates, he betook himself to the mountains, and found refuge in a cavern, somewhat picturesquely described as well watered and shaded, which had once, under Antony and Cleopatra, been the haunt of coiners. Here his sole food and raiment were afforded by an old palm tree; a fact for which Jerome pledges his veracity, and which he is confident will not be doubted by those who recollect other Hermits whom he himself had seen in the Syrian Desert, one of whom for 30 years had lived upon barley bread and dirty water; and another, whose cell was in an old tank, (cisternâ veteri quam gentili sermone cubam Syri vocant), ate no more than five dates per diem. Paul, having once fixed himself, does not seem to have been itinerant, and the remainder of his history comprises little more than his acquaintance with Antony. The first was already 113, the second 90 years of age, when it occurred to Antony one day, that besides himself no other perfect Hermit existed in the Desert. As a corrective of this arrogant belief, it was imparted to him at night that there was another much better than himself whom he ought to lose no time in visiting. *When the morning rose he was most anxious to set out, though he knew not whither, and while he was in doubt, casting his eyes upon a Hippocentaur, who happened to pass by, having first crossed himself, he asked if the monster knew the way to the abode of the servant of God. The Hippocentaur, barbarum nescio quid infrendens et frangens potius verba quam proloquens, pointed the course with his right fore leg, and galloped off, so that Antony never really knew whether he was Angel or Devil. Still he followed the direction till he met a second monster, a little man with a hooked nose, a horned forehead, and a body ending in goat's legs and feet, who offered him some dates, which the Father took in good part, especially when he found upon inquiry that the Sylvan was a Christian, and that he requested his prayers. Of the truth of this rencontre not a doubt, says Jerome, can exist. All the world knows that during the reign of Constantine such another man as this was caught and brought alive to Alexandria, where the whole City saw him; and that his body after his death was pickled and salted, and carried to Antioch, as an exhibition for the Emperor.* On the third day, Antony, following a she-wolf panting with thirst, arrived at a cave at the foot of a mountain, and stumbling against a stone announced himself to Paul, who, disliking visitors, immediately barred his wicket. Many hours passed before the supplications of the stranger could gain admittance, but when this was once obtained, the two Hermits rushed into each other's arms with very gracious salutations. Meantime a raven descended from the palm tree, and gently laid a whole loaf of bread at their feet; for sixty years past she had brought but half a loaf, but, as the occasion required, the supply was now doubled. And here arose an egregious scruple of politeness,—which of the two should break the loaf. This amicable struggle was protracted till evening. Paul urged the honourable office upon Antony as his guest, Antony upon Paul as his elder. It ended by an ingenious compromise; they pulled the loaf in sunder between them; tandem consilium fuit ut apprehenso e regione pane, dum ad se quisque nititur pars cuique sua remaneret in manibus. The night was passed in prayer and vigils, and on the following morning Paul told Antony that he had arrived in time to assist at his burial, and requested, as the last friendly duty which he could perform, that he would commit his body to the ground, wrapped in the sheepskin which he (Antony) had received from Athanasius. Paul, it seems, knew by revelation that Athanasius had made this present. He was, in truth, quite indifferent in what state his senseless body might be inearthed, but in order to spare his friend the bitterness of parting, he adopted this excuse to send him home for the sheepskin. Antony was sorely perplexed; how much he valued his sheepskin, and how much reason he had to value it, as his only duplicate, we have already noticed in the history of his own life; moreover, it must cost him six days' journey through the Desert to fetch it and return, and in that time Paul might depart. He went, however, and his worst fears were realized; he found his friend dead on his return, and not having had the forethought to provide a spade, he was assisted in digging a grave (in which he placed the corpse, but not the sheepskin) by two weeping Lions. The beasts, when they had finished their work, fawned upon him, licked his hands and feet, bent their ears, inclined their necks, and went away very well satisfied with his blessing. The incident with which the Life concludes is somewhat naïf. Antony considered himself to be executor and residuary legatee, and as such fairly entitled to the unappropriated property of the deceased. Postquam autem alia dies illuxit, ne quid pius hæres ex intestati bonis non possideret, tunicam ejus sibi vendicavit, quam in sportarum modum de palmæ foliis ipse sibi contexuerat. Ac sic ad Monasterium reversus discipulis cuncta ex ordine replicavit, diebusque solennibus Paschæ et Pentecostes semper Pauli tunicâ vestitus est.

Some notices of early Eremitical virtue may be borrowed from Jerome's Life of Hilarion. This Saint, born at Thabatha, near Gaza, initiated himself under Antony, and entered on his own account upon the Desert at 16 years of age, wearing skins and sackcloth, and eating 15 dates daily after sunset. Like his master he was soon beset with Devils, who tormented him chiefly by noises: quâdam nocte cæpit infantum audire vagitus, balatus pecorum, mugitus boum, placentum quasi mulierum, leonum rugitus, murmur exercitûs, et rursus variarum portenta vocum. But these we must pass over; suffice it to say he was undismayed. From 16 to 20 he lived in a little hut framed of sedge and reeds; afterwards he constructed a superior cell, four feet wide, five feet high, and a very little longer than the length of his body; this cell was standing in the days of St. Jerome. He cut his hair once a year at Easter, lay upon reeds on the bare ground, never washed the sackcloth in which he was clothed, observing that it

Hilarion

* Pliny long before had been gratified with a similar wonder. Nos principatu ejus (Claudii Cæsaris) allatum illi ex Ægypto (Hippocentaurum) in melle vidimus. (vii. 3.)

HERMIT. was superfluous mundicias in cilicio quærere, nor changed his single garment till it dropped off from raggedness. His daily bill of fare for different periods of his life has been accurately preserved: from his 21st to his 27th year, for the first three years he ate lentiles in half a pint of cold water; for the next three dry bread, salt, and water; from his 27th to his 30th year wild herbs and undressed roots; from his 31st to his 35th year six ounces of barley bread and parboiled cabbage without oil. But finding himself becoming near-sighted, and that his skin was turning scurfy, he added a little oil, and persisted in this diet to his grand climacteric. From 64 till 80 he abstained altogether from bread, and substituted five ounces of a certain maigre, composed of flour and chopped cabbage, (de farinâ et comminuto olere sorbitiuncula.) This carte without doubt is unrivalled, and it is perhaps the most interesting reminiscence which Hilarion has left behind him. Like Antony he possessed the power of discovering the presence of Evil Spirits and their particular genus by his nose; habebat enim senex hanc gratiam ut ex odore corporum, vestiumque et earum rerum quas quis tetigerat, sciret cui dæmoni vel cui vitio subjaceret. He appears to have led a wandering life, and the particular circumstance which attached him to one of his last residences may be worthy of notice. In a part of Cyprus, about 12 miles from the sea, rough, desolate, uninhabited, and girt by such steep mountains that he could scarce ascend them by painfully creeping on his hands and knees, he found the ruins of an old Temple, from which by day and night were heard cries of such numberless Devils, that you would believe them to be an army; quo ille valde delectatus quo scilicet antagonistas haberet in proximo; and accordingly here he lived for five years, the short space of life remaining to him.

Particulars
from Sulpicius Severus.

The reader who is accustomed to classical Latinity, may not be disinclined to quit the rude, harsh pages of St. Jerome for the polished style and more rounded periods of Sulpicius Severus; the purest writer of Ecclesiastical History, as he has been named by Joseph Scaliger,* the Christian Sallust as Barthiust† has called him. The great object of this writer's admiration is St. Martin; and from his Life of that holy man, and three Dialogues in which he is largely mentioned, we may collect several incidental particulars of early Eremitical manners. His description of a Hermitage which Posthumianus, one of his interlocutors, visited, 12 miles from the Nile, is such as might tempt an enthusiast to seek it; and the simple pleasures of the Corycius Senex of the Poet, scarcely exceed the calm delights of the aged devotee who inhabited it. But it was not without its wonders as well as its enjoyments; a Lioness stood still while the Recluse plucked dates from a tree in the presence of his trembling visitors, and, having fed from his hand, stalked away in peace. (Dial. i. 7.) The fashion, however, was a common one; and it is as rare to meet with a Hermit without a Lion as his playfellow, in the Ecclesiastical Writers, as it would be to find a true Virgin similarly unattended in those of Romance. One Syrian Hermit turned his acquaintance with a wild animal, not of so ferocious a nature, an Ibex, to admirable account. He had resolved to live upon herbs, but not being versed in Botany, he had unfortunately in the outset eaten many which had piteously disagreed with him: cum ergo edentem vis interna torqueret et immensis doloribus vitalia universa quaterentur, ac frequens vomitus cruciatibus non ferendis ipsam animæ sedem stomacho jam fatisciente dissolveret, omnia penitus quæ essent edenda formidans, septimum in jejuniis diem spiritu deficiente ducebat. In this state of torment (which Sulpicius may be supposed to have described while himself was fresh from the pangs of sea-sickness) he tossed the bundle of herbs, which he dared not touch, to an Ibex which was sporting near him. The sagacious beast separated the innocent from the noxious vegetables, and the Hermit ever afterwards profited by the lesson. (Ib. 10.) Another Recluse, in the same Desert, is described as going stark naked, and having his body covered with bristles, or, as Sulpicius expresses it with quaintness of conceit, nullo vestis usu, setis corporis suis tectus, nuditatem suam divino munere vestiebat. (Ib. 11.) The same costume is given by other writers to Macarius, Onuphrius, and Paul the Thebæan. Indeed it may be stated, once for all, that whether the habits and histories of the Hermits really abounded in coincidences, or whether their Biographers freely borrowed from each other from poverty of invention, there is little which belongs to any individual among them which has not, in some form or other, been attributed to all.

One other reference which we shall make to Sulpicius, will sufficiently prove the extraordinary sanctity which was attached to the character of a Hermit, and the superiority with which the deserter from active duties became invested over his more operative brethren. A young Asiatic, of noble birth and large possessions, who had filled the office of Tribune in Egypt, and was distinguished in military service, having also a wife and an infant child, suddenly took a fancy to turn Hermit. Accordingly he quitted all his connections, and, entering the Desert, distinguished himself by fasting, humility, and faith. After a time, however, the thought occurred to him, injecta per Diabolum, that it would be better to return home and labour for the salvation of his wife and family. Thus determining, istiusmodi falsæ justitiæ colore superatus, he quitted his cell. No sooner, however, had he entered a neighbouring Monastery, and informed the Abbot of his evil intention, in which, notwithstanding admonition, he persisted, malo animo et infelici obstinatione, than he was seized with violent frenzy, and became a demoniac for more than two years. Prayers and exorcisms at last restored him, and he returned to his Hermitage: aliis post futurum exemplum ne quem aut falsæ justitiæ umbra decipiat, aut incertat mobilitas inutili levitate compellat semel cæpta deserere. (Ib. 15.)

Perhaps no more compact narrative of solitary virtue is extant, than may be found in a Volume by the Monk Cavacius of Padua, Illustrium Anachoretarum Elogia, sive Religiosi Viri Musæum, Venet. 1625. It is dedicated to St. Benedict, Anachoretarum maximus, and contains the lives of 30 Hermits diligently compiled from original authorities, and illustrated with curious plates of each in his retirement. We can afford room for little more than the names of those whom he celebrates, which may be accepted as a catalogue of the most distinguished of their kind.

Lives by Cavacius.

Paulus Thebæus,
Antonius Ægyptius,
Hilarion Palestinus,
Abrahamus Syrus,
Malchus Syrus,
Joannes Ægyptius,
Theonas Oxyrinæus,
Apollonius Hermopolites,

Mutius Pollinator,
Helenus Ægyptius,
Joannes Rectus,
Paphnutius Heracleotes,
Didymus Celliensis,
Helias Antinoita,
Serapion Arsinoita,
Pityrion Ægyptius,

* De emend. temp.

† Advers. xlii. 4.

HERMIT.

Eulogius Ægyptius,
Apelles Faber,
Origenes Ægyptius,
Evagrius Ponticus,
Orus Ægyptius,
Copres Ægyptius,
Macarius Ægyptius,

Macarius Alexandrinus,
Anubis Ægyptius,
Chronion Phœniceus,
Amon Nitriotes,
Onuphrius Ægyptius,
Piamon Diolcenus,
Hieronymus Dalmata.

There is but little variety in their adventures. Theonas Oxyrincaeus observed silence during thirty years; Helenus Ægyptius rode on a Crocodile; Joannes Rectus obtained his title from standing upright till his legs failed him; and Didymus Celliensis walked barefoot without injury over venomous beasts. They all fasted, prayed, neglected their persons, and worked miracles innumerable; and it is difficult to say which was the most famous or the most useless in his generation.

Lives of the Saints.

This list may be increased, almost without number, by any one who will turn to the Vitæ Patrum, to the Collection by Rosweide, or to the four 8vo. Volumes published in 1754, containing The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs, and other Principal Saints, adapted to the daily use of the Romish Breviary. If the reader will but take the trouble of picking out the Hermits from the long array of Saints, Martyrs, Virgins, Confessors, and Bishops, with whom they are intermixed in these Volumes, he may supply himself with a sufficiently copious Catalogue.

Decree of Council of Constantinople.

Hermits were early subjected to Church discipline. The VIth General Council, A. D. 481, has a Canon, the XLIIId, directed against the abuses which even then had crept into their practice. "We decree that those bearing the name of Hermits, who, clothed in black (μελανειμονοῦντες) and suffering their hair to grow long, wander about Cities, in free communication with laics, men and women, doing wrong to their peculiar profession, if they choose to cut off their hair and assume the garb of other monks, they shall be received into Monasteries, and counted among the Brethren. If otherwise, that they shall be altogether driven out of Cities, and compelled to live in the Deserts from which they have borrowed their name." (Conc. Gen. v. 335.)

English
Hermits.
Godric of Finchall.

As a choice specimen of English Hermits, we may take the account which Matthew Paris has given of Godricus, (not Godfrey, as Mr. Fosbrooke miscalls him,) in the reign of Henry II. This good man was born at Walmpol (Walpole) in Norfolk, and appears to have traded first as a pedlar, and afterwards to have made short voyages in bolder commercial daring. Having acquired some money in this way, he took the Cross according to the fashion of his day, and devoutly visited Jerusalem and Compostella. On a subsequent pilgrimage his mother was his companion, and whenever the path was particularly rough, the dutiful son carried her on his shoulders. On his return he resolved to turn Hermit; and going to Carlisle, he begged a Psalter of St. Jerome from a relation, and learned it by heart. Hence he went into the woods, where the Serpents and wild beasts (with which, it is plain, England at that time was incommoded) gazed at without harming him. While in this retirement, he had an adventure founded upon that of Antony with Paul; a sort of incident which seems, indeed, to have been transmitted as an heir-loom, a common-place necessary to occur once in the lives of all who betook themselves to the Desert. He found at the point of death an aged brother Hermit, Ailric who, though he had never set eyes upon Godric before, knew him at once, and begged him to superintend his funeral. A voice next instructed him to proceed once more to Jerusalem, and afterwards to fix his residence at Finchall, where he should meet with divine protection. To Jerusalem accordingly he proceeded, and, strange to say, on returning to England, he set up his hut not at the place appointed, but in a wood at Eskdale. Here, after rather more than a year's residence, he was disturbed by the Lords of the Manor, (a dominis fundi molestias sustinuit), and he migrated thereupon to Durham, where he renewed his acquaintance with the Psalter, of which he acquired after all but an equivocal knowledge: Psalterium ex integro discens, tantum in brevi profecit, quod in Psalmis, Hymnis et Orationibus eruditus est, quantum sibi sufficere videbatur. One day, however, having heard a shepherd call to his flock, "Let us go to Finchall to water," he remembered his former Divine admonition, and, giving his guide the only penny which he possessed, he advanced into the Forest, unterrified by a huge Wolf which the Devil sent to scare him from his purpose, and whose ferocity he tamed, selon le règle, by the sign of the Cross. Having, with becoming respect for Ecclesiastical discipline, obtained a License from Ranulph, Bishop of Durham, he constructed a hut, et cepit ibi habitare serpentum socius et ferarum. The Serpents, indeed, were without number; sometimes when he sate by the fire they would crawl between his legs, sometimes they coiled themselves within his bowl or platter. All these intrusions he bore quietly for some years, but at last, finding that they interrupted his prayers, one day when the Serpents had come according to custom, he ordered them never to cross his threshold again, and was implicitly obeyed. The Devil, however, often appeared to him as a Bear, a Lion, a Bull, a Wolf, a Fox, or a Toad; but all were in vain: and, for the rest, he subdued any troublesome appetite by eating barley bread, one-third of which was ashes. His other austerities resembled those of his Brethren, save that he was fond of passing the winter nights up to his neck in the river, where he poured forth prayers, psalms, and tears. On one of these occasions the Devil ran away with his clothes, which he had left upon the bank, but Godric soon obliged him to drop his booty.

Among other visions he was honoured one day with a conversation by the Virgin and Mary Magdalen. The former taught him an English Hymn, which, in all respects, is a great curiosity; and to which, in order that it may be understood, we subjoin its Latin translation. Post hæc autem Dei Genetrix Canticum quoddam coram illo musicâ modulatione præcinuit, et ipsum cantare edocuit, quod frequenter repetens Godricus memoriæ firmiter commendavit. Est autem Canticum illud Anglico idiomate compositum sic.

Seinte Marie clane Virgine,
Moder Jesu Christes Nazarene,
Onfo scild thin Godrich,
On fang bring haali widh the in Godes rich.
Seinte Marie Christes bur,
Meidenes clenhad, moderes flur,
Dilie mine sennen, rixe in min mod,
Bringe me to pinne widh selfe God.

Hoc Canticum potest hoc modo in Latinum transferri.
"Sancta Maria Christi thalamus, virginalis puritas, matris flos, dele mea crimina, regna in me, duc me ad fælicitatem cum solo Deo." Præcepit itaque Mater Christi Godrico ut quotiens dolori, tædio, vel tentationi subcumbere formidaret, hoc se Cantico solaretur."

HERMIT.

HERMIT.

Having performed a full course of miracles, raised sundry persons from the dead, received the Eucharist from the hands of St. Peter, chased away two Devils who brought a litter purposely to carry him to Hell, and recovered from a heavy blow which another Devil struck on his head with a joint-stool, after pulling him out of bed, this excellent Hermit departed on the 21st of May, A. D. 1170, after sixty years' abode at Finchall; and such was his humility, that not many years before his death when requested by a neighbouring monk to give him some particulars of his life and character, he sketched the following, not over-flattering, portrait. Vitam Godrici, amice, talem esse cognoscas—Godricus primo rusticus pinguis, fornicator, immundus, fœnerator, falsarius, deceptor, perjurus, adulator, discurrens, petulans, et gulosus, modo pulex mortuus, canis fœtidus, vilis vermiculus, non Heremita sed hypocrita, non solitarius sed mente diffusus, devorator eleemosynarum, fastidiosus deliciarum, cupidus et negligens, otiosus et stertens, prodigus et ambitiosus, et qui non esset dignus alii servare quotidie sibi ministrantes verberat et objurgat. Hæc autem et his pejora scribere poteris de Godrico. (Matt. Paris, Hist. Ang. ann. 1170. p. 117 et ss. Ed. 1640.)

Roger of Markate.

But Hermits, at least in England, were not always wholly without company, though apparently they took effectual pains not to derive enjoyment from it. There are few Histories of the kind more extraordinary than that given by Dugdale (ix Hist. Abb. St. Alban, Bibl. Cott. Claudius, E. iv. f. 104. b.) of the Hermit Roger of Markate, near Dunstable, and his companion Christina; and one of the most remarkable features in the story is the grim satisfaction with which the narrator dwells on the sufferings of this assuredly deluded, perhaps most fearfully abused lady. The circumstances occurred a few years earlier than those just related of Godric. Hujus Rogeri disciplatui adhæsit beata Christina virgo de Hontingdonâ oriunda, quæ propter amorem castimonie amplas reliquerat possessiones domumque paternam divitiis opulentam. Non tamen consensit ipse faciem videre virginis, quamvis apud eum quatuor annis et eo amplius reclusa fuisset. Erat nempe oratorio dicti Rogeri domus contigua quæ cum illo fecit angulum conjunctione sua. Is antepositam habens unam tabulam ita celari ut de foris aspicienti nullum interius haberi persuaderet, ubi tantum plus paulo semis inesset. In hoc carcere Rogerus gaudentem Christinam posuit, et admovit pro hostio conveniens ligni roboris; quod fuit tanti ponderis ut ab inclusâ nullatenus admoventi sive removeri poterit. Hic ancilla Christi coartata super duram petram sedit et frigidam, usque ad Rogeri obitum, per annos quatuor et amplius, ut perfertur, latens Heremita quinque, et omnes qui cum Rogero pariter habitabant. O quantas una sustinuit incommoditates æstus et frigoris, famis et sitis, jejuniique cotidiani. Angustia loci non patiebatur eam habere tegumentum necessarium cum algeret, integerrima clausula cum æstuabat nullum refrigerium indulgebat, longâ inedia contracta sunt et aruerunt sibi intestina, quandoque pro sitis ariditate frusta sanguinis coagulati et ejus naribus bulliere: exire foras non nisi serò licebat ad ea que natura poposcit, quia nequibat, licet instaret necessitas, sibi ipsa aperire, et Rogerus de more tardabat: itaque necessè fuit eam immobiliter in loco sedere, torqueri et tacere, quia si Rogerum habere voluerit, voce vel pulsu eum vocare oportebat: sed qualiter faceret hoc abscondita, quæ nec ausa fuit trahere vel semisuspiria, metuebat namque ne quis præter Rogerum adesset, qui vel anhelitu suspirantis audito latebras suas deprehen-

VOL. XXIII.

deret, et illa quidem in carcere mori mallet quam tunc temporis cuidam externo patefieri. Talia patientem corripuit dira morborum varietas, sed omnes anxietates equanimiter tolerabat amore Christi. Verum amicus Dei Rogerus eam nunc doctrinâ nunc exemplis informabat et docebat incredibilia pene de secretis cœlestibus. (Monasticon Ang. i. 350. Ed. 1682.) It is scarcely possible to acquit Roger of all suspicion under these very marked circumstances; and both the abduction and the concealment of the young lady wear a very questionable aspect. But we are not about to follow Bale by prying into forbidden mysteries, which, perhaps, for the sake of all parties, both of the actors in them and of posterity, had far better remain uninvestigated, and we forbear to awaken the long dormant scandal of the veil and the scapulary. Christina's reward was the succession to the Hermit's cell after his demise, and a total freedom from temptation, in consequence of a Beatific vision. The fact, which we learn from her story, is this; that Hermits, as well as Cœnobites, sometimes congregated together, though, probably, in small numbers. In the instance before us we read of no less than five Hermits, besides other persons who were in consort with Roger. The date of this Recluse is under Gaufridus, the 16th Abbot of St. Alban's, in the reign of Henry I.

The sanctity of their character, however, did not always protect Hermits from the vengeance of those in power whom they offended. A notable instance to this effect was furnished in the reign of King John, by the execution of Peter of York, or, as he is more generally known, through Shakspeare, Peter of Pomfret, for predicting, in the month of January, 1213, that, on the following Ascension Day, John should be cast out of his Kingdom. Upon the truth of this prophecy the unhappy Recluse gaged his life,—and it proved true; for the Crown was resigned to the Pope's Legate on the very day before the Feast of Ascension. But John was not so easily satisfied. Had he been classically read in the ambiguous terms employed by the ancient Oracles, perhaps he might have pardoned the Hermit: as it was, he dragged him, at a horse's tail, from the prison at Corfe to the town of Warham, and there mercilessly hanged him, together with his son. (Matt. Paris, ut sup. p. 237; Holinshed, ann. 1213, vol. ii. p. 311. Ed. 1807.)

Peter of Pomfret.

In the XVIIth Century, although the profession of Hermit had fallen much into disrepute, a strenuous attempt was made to revive it. Michel de Sainte Sabine, in the year 1634, under the patronage of Ferdinand, Infant of Spain, and the Bishop of Madaura, endeavoured to reestablish the Institution in Lorraine; and he drew up a Code for the purpose, L'Institut des Ermites Reformé sous l'Invocation de Saint Jean Baptiste. In his Dedication he complains loudly that this vie toute angélique et plus divine qu'humaine had grievously fallen off. Hélas! par le laps et l'injure des temps, l'immission des diables, la malice des hommes, la tépidité des Ermites de ce temps, et la nonchalance des Supérieurs, cette sublime profession s'est altérée et abastardie et a tellement descheu de la gloire de sa première institution, qu'où elle estoit (comme dict S. Basile) le Cour des Célestes Sénateurs et des favoris du Ciel; elle est maintenant la retracte et le receptacle de la lie et de la baliure du monde. We know not what success attended these representations, but it is but just to add, that the Articles of Sabine's Code are very simple and reasonable; one of them, nevertheless, betrays rather a fearful anticipation as to the nature of the subjects from whom Revival of Hermits in France.

HERMIT. the Bishops would have to make their selection. Art. XVI. Les incorrigibles vagabonds et désobéissants aux Visiteurs et aux Majeurs seront chassés des Diocèses.

HERO.

In recounting the particulars which we have given above, we have strictly and carefully abided by the original narratives; in no respect exceeding their statements, nor heightening their colouring, and often adopting their very expressions. It may be necessary to offer this assurance on account both of their truth and their romance. That the Hermits frequently imposed upon themselves a degree of voluntary suffering from which our nature recoils with horror, is not to be doubted: that they thereby obtained such special Grace from Heaven, as to be endowed with miraculous powers, is a position against which we need not argue here. It should be remembered, however, that such a position was accredited, not only by their Biographers in Ages which we call dark, but is still embraced, in more enlightened times, by many who even now address prayers to these Saints, and consider their mediation as availing with the Most High. The patience with which Fanaticism submits to self-inflicted torture, is not, perhaps, without some claim upon respect. It is a virtue mistakenly applied. But the superstition which almost deifies Folly, and measures out sanctity according to the proportion of pious error in its object, at the best can deserve no other feeling than our pity.

HERMIT
HERO.

HERN, } See HERON.
HERNSHAW, }

HERN, A. S. hyrn, a corner.

þo Aureli wiste, þat heo were y flowe to hurne,
He was glad, þat heo were a ferd, & þohte he hom sturne.
R. Gloucester, p. 137.

Ac euere were ys eyen in eche hurne aboute.

Id. p. 272.

As yonge clerkes, that ben likerous
To reden artes that ben curious,
Seken in every halke and every herne
Particular sciences for to lerne.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11433.

Wher dwellen ye, if it to tellen be?
In the subarbes of a toun, quod he,
Lurking in hernes, and in lanes blinde.

Id. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16126.

He herd thair strakes, that war ful sterin,
And yern he waytes in ilka heryn,
And al was made ful fast to hald.

Ywaine and Gawin, l. 3220. in Rutson, vol. i. p. 185.

HERNANDRIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoecia, order Triandria, natural order Lauri. Generic character: male flower, calyx three-parted; corolla, petals three: female flower, calyx truncated, entire; corolla, petals six; drupe cavernous, with an aperture; nut movable.

Three species, natives of the East Indies and South America.

H. sonora is remarkable from the loud sound produced by the fruit when agitated by the wind, which is heard at a considerable distance.

HERNARIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Illecebræ. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla, none; five sterile filaments, alternating with the fertile stamens; capsule one-seeded.

Six species, natives of the Northern hemisphere. H. glabra and hirsuta are natives of England.

HE'RO,
HE'ROESS, HERO'ICK,
HERO'ICK, n.
HERO'ICKLY, HEROI'CKNESS, HERO'ICAL, HERO'ICALLY, HE'ROINE, HE'ROISM, HEROICO'MICAL,
HEROICO'MICK. }

Fr. heroe; It. eroe; Sp. heroe;
Lat. heros; Gr. ἥρως. A word of which the Etymology is left quite unsettled by Vossius and Martinius. Lennep undertakes to decide, and he fixes upon the Gr.
verb ἄρ-ειν; the peculiar meaning of which expresses the force, vis et impetus, quo aliquid alior-sum moveatur, et admoveatur al-teri: to this meaning he affirms, all the various applications of the verb may be traced: and from which he forms certain words, designating power, virtue, eminence, excellence, superiority; and among these, ἥρα, Juno; Lat. hera, i. e. domina; ἥρος, Jupiter; Lat. herus, i. e. dominus: ἥρος, the final syllable pronounced long, is ἥρως; and ἥρως, eximiè ob præstantiam, denotes a more illustrious race of men, or one intermediate between Gods and men. It is in modern usage applied to Any one excelling in, preeminent or illustrious for, the virtues, active or passive.

Thales, Pythagoras, Plato, and the Stoicks, hold that these dæmons be spirituall substances; and the heroes soule separate from their bodies; of which sort there be good and bad: the good heroes are the good soules, and the bad heroes the bad soules; but Epicurus admitteth none of all this. Holland. Plutarch, fol. 665.

But all th' heroesses in Pluto's house,
That then encounter'd me, exceeds my might.
To name or number.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xi. fol. 169.

Tho' heroical be properly understood of demi-gods, as of Hercules and Æneas, whose parents were said to be, the one celestiall, the other mortal; yet is it also transferred to them, who for their greatness of mind came near to God.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. To the Reader.

But evermore some of the vertuous race
Rose up, inspired with heroicke heat;
That crompt the branches of the sient (scyon) base,
And with strong hand their fruitfull ranknes did deface.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 1.

The goodly off-spring of Jove's progenie,
That wont the world with famous actes to fill;
Whose living praises in heroick style,
It is my chief profession to compyle.

Id. The Teares of the Muses.

————— No time for lamentation now,
Nor much more cause, Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroicly hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd. Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1710.

As Saint Jerome saith of the chastity of virgins compared with that of angels, there is more felicity in the one, but more fortitude in the other: so we may respectively say of their loves, that there is more happiness in the one, but more heroicknesse in the other.

Montague. Devout Essays, treat. xiv. sec. 3.

The shining quality of an epic hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristic virtue his poet gives him, raises first our admiration; we are naturally prone to imitate what we admire; and frequent acts produce a habit.

Dryden. Æneis. Dedication.

An heroic poem, truly such, is undoubtedly the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform. The design of it is to form the mind to heroic virtue by example; it is conveyed in verse, that it may delight while it instructs: the action of it is always one, entire, and great. Id. Ib.

HERO.
—
HERON.

Wherefore, seeing the acts and events, which are the subjects of true history, are not of that amplitude as to content the mind of man, poesy is ready at hand to feign acts more heroical.

Spectator, No. 108.

They [actions] would change their natures as often as men change their opinions; and that which to-day is a virtue, to-morrow would be a crime; and that which in one man would be a heroically good action, would in another man be a prodigious piece of villainy.

Sharpe. Works, vol. iii. p. 196. A Discourse of Conscience.

Tom Otway came next, Tom Shadwell's dear Zany,
And swears for heroics, he writes best of any.

Rochester. A Trial of the Poets for the Bays.

A heroine is a kinde of prodigy; the influence of a blazing starre is not more dangerous or more avoyded.

Evelyn. Memoirs. Mrs. Evelyn to Mr. Bohun, Jan. 4, 1672.

He forms and equips those ungodly man-killers, whom we poets, when we flatter them, call heroes; a race of men, who can never enjoy quiet in themselves, till they have taken it from all the world. This is Homer's commendation; and, such as it is, the lovers of peace, or at least of more moderate heroism, will never envy him.

Dryden. Dedication of the Third Miscellany.

The most magnanimous hero of the field will earnestly solicit the aid of a physician on a bed of sickness, and in his domesticated state.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. v. p. 217. The Mediatorial Office of Christ.

This conduct, however it may be varnished over by the name of wisdom, had too much the air of fearful womanish intrigue, to consist with that heroical firmness and intrepidity so commonly ascribed to Queen Elizabeth.

Hurd. Works, vol. iii. Dialogue 4. On the Age of Queen Elizabeth.

He [William Lord Craven] and the Duke of Albemarle (the noted Monk) heroically stayed in town during the dreadful pestilence; and, at the hazard of their lives, preserved order in the midst of the terrors of the time.

Pennant. London, p. 214.

They [some spectators] also admire a favourite performer's coat, gown, cap, shoe, leg, or hand, but forget the hero and the heroine, the poet and the poem.

Knox. Essays, No. 121.

Among the Gentoos, the virtuous and pious affections of the wife are manifested by her determination to commit her body to the flames in honour of the deceased husband; that is, by an act of self-murder. More civilized nations will admire the calm heroism of the sufferer, but execrate the custom.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. iii. part ii. ch. ii. sec. 3. p. 182. On the Laws of Moral Obligation.

HE'RON, or HERN,
HE'RONSHUEWS, or HE'RNSHEWES, HE'RONER, HE'RONRY,
HE'RON-HAWKING.

Fr. heron. The Italians (says Menage) call this bird aerone, airone, aghirone, antherone, and arghirone; and the Spanish, agrone. Julius Scaliger derives the It. aerone, from the Lat. aerius, aerial; and the Lat.

ardea, from ἀέρειν, to go into the air. The Greek name of this bird is ἐρωδιος; and Menage forms the Fr. heron (after his manner) from this Greek name, and the It. and Sp. from the Lat. ardea. His editor prefers the Ger. her, high, lofty. Hernsues (says Skinner) ardea avis, still found in Lincolnshire, from heron and sue, for pursue, because this rapacious bird pursues other birds as well as fish. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, heron-ceaux, according to the Glossary; and calls them young Hérons. And heroner, a Hawk, made to flie only at the Heron.

The trivial name of the Ardea.

Ech for his vertue holden is for dere,
Both heroner and faucon for riwere.

Chaucer. Troilus, book iv. fol. 177.

I wol not tellen of hir strange sewes,
Ne of hir swannes, ne hir heronsewes.

Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 1382.

They toke their horses, they two alone, and went into the felde and founde plentie of heerons to flye at.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 406.

The king gaue our capitaine at his departure a plume or fanne of hernshawes feathers died in red.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 308. The First Voyage to Florida.

And the slow heron down shall fall,
To feed my fairest fair withal.

Cotton. Invitation to Phyllis.

How could frogs be ingendred in the air? Eels, of dewy turfs, or of mud? Toads, of ducks? Fish, of herns? and the like.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xxiv.

So have cranes, herns, storks, and shovelards long necks.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book vii. ch. xiv.

Certes, there is nothing in this rocke that is not full of admiration and woonder; therein also is great store of Soland geese (not vnlike to those which Plinie calleth water-eagles, or (as we say) sea-herons) and no where else but in Ailsaie and this rocke.

Holinshed. Description of Scotland, ch. vii.

Here is a stately heronry (sc. in the park at Bruxelles.)

Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 26.

As when a cast of faulcons make their flight
At an hernshaw, that lyes aloft on wing,
The whiles they strike at him with heedlesse might,
The wary fowle his bill doth backward wring.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 7.

Their large, broad, concave wings, (in appearance much too large, heavy, and cumbersome for so small a body, but) of greatest use to enable them to carry the greater loads to their nests at several miles distance; as I have seen them do from several miles beyond me, to a large heronry above three miles distant from me.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xxv. note 25.

The heron usually takes his prey by wading into the water; yet it must not be supposed that he does not also take it upon the wing.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, book v. ch. v. The Heron.

It was formerly in this country a bird of game; heron-hawking being so favourite a diversion of our ancestors, that laws were enacted for the preservation of the species; and the person who destroyed the eggs was liable to a penalty of twenty shillings for each offence. Not to know the hawk from the heronshaw, was an old proverb taken originally from this diversion; but, in course of time, served to express great ignorance in any science.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Heron.

HERPESTES, from the Greek ἐρπῆστης, a creeper, Illig.; Ichneumon, Ray. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the tribe Digitigrada, family Carnivora, order Sarcophaga, class Mammalia.

Generic character. Six incisive teeth in each jaw, the second outer, on each side of the lower, narrower than the others; cuspid teeth sharp, conical, longer than the incisive; molars six on each side in each jaw; of the upper, the anterior three are compressed and cutting, the fourth tricuspid, and the fifth and sixth tubercular; of the lower, the first four are single pointed, and cutting, the fifth largest and cutting with two points on its outer, and two tubercles on the inner edge, behind which is a broad surface, having four tubercles on it; the sixth molar large, tubercular, and grinding: muzzle sharp, with a lengthened rounded snout; ears short and rounded; body long and covered with long hair, except the head and legs, on which it is short; tail long; anal pouch large, but single, and immediately beneath the tail; the vent placed in its deepest part; the legs short, five-toed, and half-webbed; claws sharp; the whole sole bare, but the animal walks only upon the tips of the toes.

This genus was included by Linnæus among his Viverræ, from which it has been separated by later Zoologists in consequence of the different position of the

HERON.
—
HER-PESTES.

HER-PESTES.

anal pouch, the variation in the size of the incisive teeth, and the bare soles of the feet. Olivier has named the genus Mangusta, and Lacepede and Geoffroy Ichneumon. The animals are natives of the warm climates of Africa and Asia.

H. Ichneumon, Illig.; la Mangouste d'Egypte, Buff.; Viv. Ichn. Lin.; Egyptian Ichneumon. Is about eighteen inches in length from the snout to the root of the tail, and the tail about as long again; the hair very rough and wiry, and each ringed alternately with chestnut brown and fawn, which renders the coat a mixture of the two colours; the nose and paws deep chestnut or black; the tail tipped with a tuft of long thready black hairs, which spread from above to below in a fanlike form. The Ichneumon is frequently known by the name of Pharaoh's Rat, but whence this title is derived is not clear.

The Ichneumon is found in Egypt, and is very common in the Northern parts of that Country, between the Mediterranean and Siout. It is said to be a great destroyer of the eggs and young of the Crocodile, but it may be doubted whether its services in this respect are so great as to entitle it to the deification bestowed upon it by the ancient Egyptians, because the number of Ichneumons is very limited in Upper Egypt, where the Crocodiles abound, whilst in Lower Egypt, where there are but few, the Ichneumon is very common. In its wild state this animal is said to live on the banks of rivers, and, like the Otter, supports itself by fishing, for which purpose it dives extremely well, and can remain a long while under water. In Egypt it is domesticated, and serves the purpose of a Cat, destroying the vermin by which the houses are infested: it is easily tamed, and becomes attached to its owner; is very active, and springs with great swiftness on its prey, but often squats on its haunches, and feeds itself with its fore paws like the Squirrel. It is fond of poultry, and will feign itself dead till the birds come within its reach, when it springs upon them, and, strangling them, generally satisfies itself by sucking their blood. The Ichneumon will also attack Serpents. M. d'Obsonville states that he possessed a tame one, which he fed at first on milk, but afterwards on baked meat mixed with rice. Being anxious to see whether its natural instinct would lead it to destroy reptiles, he brought a small Water Serpent into the room. The Ichneumon at first seemed both surprised and angry, but presently recovering, it in an instant slipped behind the Serpent, leaped on its head, and immediately crushed it with its teeth. This exploit excited its natural disposition, and from that time it committed great depredation among the poultry, with which it had formerly lived at peace. The story of the Ichneumon creeping down the Crocodile's throat whilst asleep, and devouring its entrails, is now very properly thrown aside as fabulous. The Ichneumon sleeps rolled up like a ball, with its legs sticking out, and is not very easily wakened; it grows rapidly, and is shortlived, more especially in cold climates.

H. Mungo, Illig.; Viv. Mongoz, Lin.; la Mangouste de l'Inde, Buff.; Indian Ichneumon, Edwards. This animal is considered by Pennant as merely a variety of the former species, but its specific characters have been noted by Geoffroy. The general colour of its skin is brown, but it is marked with thirteen brown stripes, separated by a streak of red between each, produced by the adaptation of some colours by which each hair is ringed, being white at the root, brown in the middle, and red at the tip; the stripes commence behind the shoulder, and are continued alternately to the root of the tail, those on the loins being most distinct; the feet and tail are brown, and the latter very pointed. This animal is known in India, of which it is a native, by the name of Mungo or Mungutia, and is celebrated for its contests with the Cobra di Capello, one of the most poisonous Snakes known. It is said that if bitten in the attack, it retreats in search of the Ophiorhiza Mungoz, the root of which it eats, and then returns to the combat, in which it is usually successful. It may be doubted, however, whether this be fact, as it is only given on the authority of the natives. The celebrated Kämpfer, who lived many years in India, possessed one of these animals, and he only mentions that it retired and ate the root of any herb it might meet with.

H. Griseus, Illig.; Viv. Caf. Gmel.; le Nems, Buff.; Grey Ichneumon. This animal is considered by Cuvier merely a variety of the last; its general colour brownish grey; the body is striped, but less distinctly than the last species. It is found at the Cape of Good Hope, and Geoffroy says in India.

H. Edwardsii, Illig.; Edwards's Ichneumon. In this the ground colour is olive, in other respects it resembles the last two species; but the claws are black, and it is the only species which have them of that colour. Native of the East Indies.

H. Vansire, Illig.; le Vansire, Buff.; Hohang Shira of the Madagascar Islanders. The skin is of a deep brown colour, striped with yellow; and the tail is spreading and of the same thickness throughout. This animal is said to be fond of bathing, but it is little known. It is found in the Isle of Madagascar, and has been naturalized in the Ile de France.

H. Ruber, Illig.; la Mangouste Rouge, Geoff.; Red Ichneumon. The general colour is a very bright ferruginous red, especially on the head and outside of the limbs; the back and sides are striped alternately with this colour, and light yellow or fawn; the tail is long, and entirely red, without bands.

H. Major, Illig.; la Grande Mangouste, Buff.; Great Ichneumon. Its body is about four inches longer than the Egyptian species, and of a chestnut colour; the muzzle is rather longer and larger than in the other species, and the coat rougher and longer; the tail tipped with brown.

H. Javanicus, Illig.; la Mangouste de Java, Geoff.; Garangan of the Javanese. Body of a deep brown colour, with tawny lines, the back more deeply tinged; the forehead, top of the head, muzzle, and feet nearly black. Native of Java.

See Linnæi Systema Naturæ a Gmelin; Desmarest, Mammalogie; Pennant's History of Quadrupeds.

HERPESTIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Didynamia, order Angiospermia. Generic character: calyx bibracteate; corolla subequal, five-cleft; partitions of the valves of the capsule parallel; all the stamens fertile.

Seven species, mostly natives of the Northern hemisphere.

HERRERIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla inferior, six-parted; stigma three-angled; capsule three-winged, three-celled, three-valved; margin of the seeds encircled with a membrane.

One species, H. stellata, native of Peru.

HER-PESTES.
—
HER-RERIA.

HERRING.
—
HERT-
FORD-
SHIRE.

HE'RRING, } A. S. heering; D. haring;
HE'RRING-BUSS, } Fr. harang; It. aringa; Sp.
HE'RRING-FISHERY. } arengue; Low Lat. haringus, from her, an army. See the Quotation from Pennant.
The trivial name of the Clupea Harengus.

Certaine sonnes of iniquitie of the towne of Lenne, comming, as they said, to fish for herrings, cruelly murdered a certaine knight.
Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 141. Edward II.

Guicciardine, in his description of the Low Countries, affirmeth, that the Low Countrymen make yearly in clear gain four hundred and ninety thousand pounds sterling of the herrings taken in our seas.

Spelman. Of the Admiralty Jurisdiction, &c.

Dismally shrunk, as herrings shotten,
Suppos'd originally rotten.

Prior. The Mice.

This mighty army begins to put itself in motion in the spring; we distinguish this vast body by that name, for the word herring is derived from the German her, an army, to express their numbers.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Herring.

From the commencement of the winter fishing 1771, to the end of the winter fishing 1781, the tonnage bounty upon the herring-buss fishery has been at thirty shillings the ton.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book iv. ch. v. Bounties.

If there be fisheries, which are inexhaustible, as the cod-fishery upon the banks of Newfoundland, and the herring-fishery in the British seas are said to be; then all those conventions by which one or two nations claim to themselves, and guarantee to each other, the exclusive enjoyment of these fisheries, are so many encroachments upon the general rights of mankind.

Paley. Moral and Political Philosophy, book i. ch. xi.

HERSE, see HEARSE.

HERSE, } Herse (Warton) is hersal, i. e. rehearsal.

HERSAL. } Holy herse, the rehearsal of the prayers.
Heaue herse, the Glossarist E. Th. interprets, "The solemn obsequie in funerals."

They both vprose and tooke their ready way

Vnto the church their prayers to appeale,

With great deuotion, and with little zeal;

For the faire damzell from the holy herse,

Here loue-sicke heart to other thoughts did steale.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book ii. can. 2. st. 48.

The earth now lacks her wonted light,

And all we dwell in deadly night,

O heaue herse.

Id. The Shepherd's Calendar. November.

With this sad hersall of his heavy stresse,

The warlike damzell was empassion'd sore,

And said; Sir Knight, your cause is nothing lesse

Then is your sorrow, certes if not more.

Id. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 11. st. 28.

HERRING.
—
HERT-
FORD-
SHIRE

HERTFORDSHIRE.

Boundaries.

HERTFORDSHIRE, a wealthy inland County of England, bounded on the South by Middlesex; on the West and part of the North by Buckinghamshire, from which it is separated by a very irregular line. Bedfordshire forms the limits on the remainder of its Northern side, and it unites with Cambridgeshire for a few miles on the North-East. On the East, along its whole line, it is bounded by Essex. The general length of Hertfordshire from North-East to South-West is 36 miles, its average breadth about 26. The superficial extent has been variously estimated, some making it amount to 451,000 acres, while others reduce it to 385,000.

Surface.

In its general appearance this County is one of the most agreeable in the Kingdom. It may be called a level country, although there are not any flat plains of any extent, a series of gentle undulating eminences diversifying the surface in every direction. The highest district is towards the North; the range of hills which stretch from King's Langley towards Berkhamstead and Tring, commands in many places a very extensive prospect. Kingsworth hill, the most elevated spot in the County, is 900 feet above the level of the sea. Chains of hills, also parallel to the former, run from the neighbourhood of St. Alban's, Sandridge, Whitwell, &c. The country is all enclosed, and the hedge-rows of flourishing timber trees, including a quantity of old oaks, add to the richness of the landscape. The number of Parks and country-seats with ornamental plantations is very great, owing to the vicinity of the Metropolis, and no County in England unites in a greater degree the display of opulence with rural beauty.

Rivers.
Lea.

The principal rivers of Hertfordshire are the Lea and the Colne. The former of these rises near Luton in Bedfordshire, and entering the County at Hide Mill flows past Hertford and Ware, in which neighbourhood some of its waters are diverted into the channel of the

New River, which is continued in a parallel direction for some miles; it then turns to the South after its conflux with the Stort, and falls into the Thames a little below London. The Lea is navigable as far as Ware and Hertford.

The Colne rises on the Western borders of the County, Colne. becomes considerable in the vicinity of North Mims by the union of several small streams, and flows across Colney Heath, London Colney, Colney Park, and Colney Street, all which places derive their name from it. It is afterwards greatly increased by receiving the Ver, or Meuse, from St. Alban's, and flowing by Watford and Rickmansworth enters Middlesex. The springs which unite to form the New River have their rise in the neighbourhood of Ware, but the streams thus artificially collected belong more properly to Middlesex. The Grand Junction Canal also passes through a considerable part of this County before it reaches its termination in London. The small streams are very numerous, so that every part of the County is well watered, and the facility of water-communication with the Thames and London, together with the numerous fine roads running through the County from the Metropolis, give Hertfordshire every possible advantage in its intercourse with that great market.

The County of Hertford is, in an agricultural point Soil. of view, one of the most important in the Kingdom, yet its fertility is due not so much to nature as to industry, and the neglect of a few years would, perhaps, condemn it to absolute sterility. The subsoil is everywhere chalk, and the surface soil is in general a clayey loam, in many places poor and retentive of moisture, and nowhere of extraordinary richness. In the Eastern parts of the County, bordering on Essex, there are extensive tracts of wet land which require expensive draining. Immense quantities of manure of all sorts, soot, ashes, burnt bones, and compost, are brought from

HERTFORDSHIRE.
Cultivation.

London by the canals, and without this abundant supply the fertility of the County would soon be at an end. As it is, Hertfordshire is for the greater part a corn-bearing country. There are some rich meadow lands, indeed, on the banks of the river Stort, along the Lea and about Rickmansworth, where they are watered by the Colne, but with the exception of these, and the land immediately around the parks and gentlemen's seats, the whole of the County is devoted to tillage. The supply of corn produced in it is rendered more important by the proximity of the Capital. Turnips and clover are supposed to have been introduced into this County in the time of Oliver Cromwell, who is said to have allowed £100 yearly to the farmer who first attended to their culture. Artificial grasses are grown to a great extent. But although a large proportion of the land in this County has always been arable, and the produce of wheat, barley, and oats is very great, yet the progress of agricultural science in it has not been so great as in other parts of the Kingdom. This may proceed from the minute division of landed property in Hertfordshire, (arising from its vicinity to London,) and the consequent smallness of the farms; the rivulets, also, are too valuable as mill-streams to be diverted by the farmer to the purposes of irrigation. The drill husbandry has made but little progress here, the general opinion being in favour of the broad-cast method, but all the imperfections of system or of soil are overbalanced by the practice of liberal manuring.

Orchards.

In the South-West angle of the County there is a good deal of ground under orchards, the principal produce of which are apples and cherries. The apples are the most profitable. The cherries are esteemed inferior to those of Kent, and fetch a lower price in the market. The orchards, whether of cherries or apples, ought to be under grass, and fed with sheep. They seldom exceed the size of four or five acres, and their greatest value is not more than £4 per acre.

Woodland.

Besides the great quantity of oak, elm, and beech timber, which ornaments the hedge-rows and Parks, there is a good deal of copse woodland interspersed through the County. The large timber flourishes particularly at Ashbridge, Beechwood, Hatfield, &c. On the Essex side the copses abound in hazel and hornbeam, together with fir, poplar, alders, birch, &c. The quantity of waste land is but inconsiderable, not exceeding, perhaps, 4500 acres, and of this several acres are serviceable as sheep downs. The commons are still numerous in the Northern and Western parts of the County, although more than 20,000 acres have been enclosed since the beginning of the present century.

Cattle, &c.

As the chief object of the farmer in this County is the raising of corn, the care of live stock is comparatively neglected. There is no indigenous breed of cattle, and every kind is to be met with, but the preference appears to be given to the Suffolk breed. The sheep are generally ewes of the South Down and Wiltshire kinds. In many places they are fed on oil-cake.

Industry.

The manufactures of Hertfordshire are of no importance; the great bulk of the population are agricultural labourers. Some paper-mills on the banks of the Meuse, Colne, and Bulborne, and malting-houses, which are numerous, constitute the chief exceptions. Hertfordshire, indeed, affords London its principal supply of malt, and from Ware in particular, that important article is furnished of a better quality and in greater abundance than from any other part of the Kingdom. At St. Alban's, Watford, and Rickmansworth are some manufactures of silk and cotton, but they are not extensive, nor likely to become so. Lace is made in the neighbourhood of Berkhamstead; but the chief domestic occupation of females is the plaiting of straw for bonnets. This branch of industry, which has existed for a very long time in this County, is the source of very considerable gains.

There are few large landed properties in Hertfordshire, the salubrity of the air, and the agreeable distance from London, having led to the multiplication of country-seats and the subdivision of estates. The average rental of the chief proprietors is supposed not to exceed £3000 per annum. Copyhold and customary tenures are very common, and the line of demarcation between the old Mercian and East-Saxon Kingdoms is supposed to be denoted in several manors by the existing differences in the rules of descent.

This County is divided into 8 Hundreds and 134 Parishes, of which some belong to the Diocese of London, the remainder to that of Lincoln. The inhabitants amounted, in 1811, to 111,654, in 1821 they were 129,714. The number of families employed in agriculture at the time of the last census was 13,485; of those employed in trade and handicraft occupations, 7935. The families not comprised in the preceding classes were 4750. Hertfordshire returns six Members to the House of Commons; two for the County and two for each of the Boroughs of Hertford and St. Alban's.

Hertford, a Borough and the County Town, is known in our Saxon History, and a Synod was held in it during the VIIth century. Its name is traced to Hereford, (the ford of the army,) as it is frequently written in old documents; or Heort-ford, (the ford of Harts,) of which the Town arms, a Hart couchant at a ford, are plainly symbolical; or to Durocobuva, (the red ford,) such being the colour of the gravel. Edward the Elder built a Castle here about 909, which was granted to John of Gaunt by Edward III., and was often the residence of John, King of France, and David of Scotland, during their captivity. In the 25th of Elizabeth, while the Plague was raging in London, the Queen kept her Court in this Castle, and so also, for like reasons, twice subsequently, in the 34th and 35th of her reign. In our own days it was occupied, until the buildings at Haylebury were completed, by the students of the East Indian College. Of the original pile only a few vestiges of the outer walls remain, the rest is chiefly of the date of the Stuarts.

The Town is neatly built, and pleasantly situated on the river Lea. It contains a respectable Sessions House, a Town Hall, a Grammar School, and a Blue Coat School connected with Christ's Hospital, and calculated to receive 500 resident children. Two Churches (All Saints and St. Andrew) alone remain out of five, which once were within its limits. Four of them were Parochial, the fifth was attached to a Priory of Benedictines, (subordinate to the Abbey of St. Alban's, and founded soon after the Conquest,) which stood in the Eastern part of the Town. Hertford has returned two Members to Parliament (though not uninterruptedly) since the 26th of Edward I. Population, in 1821, 4265. Distant 21 miles North from London.

To our notice of ST. ALBAN'S, already given, the following particulars may be added. The form of the HERTFORDSHIRE.

Estates.

Population.

Hertford.

St. Alban's.

HERT-
FORD-
SHIRE.

Abbey Church is a long cross, surmounted with a massive square tower at the intersection of the nave and transept. The walls are constructed of a mixture of Roman tiles, flint, brick, and stone. On entering from the Western porch, 10 columns, with arches not all uniform in their workmanship, present a magnificent vista, and separate the nave from the aisles. At the tenth column, a richly sculptured skreen, St. Cuthbert's, crosses the nave. Three more arches intervene between this skreen and the tower, and this part, from containing the Font, is called the Baptistry. The choir comprehends all the space between the Western arch of the tower and the altar skreen, and unhappily is pewed and wainscoted in a taste most incongruous with the rest of the building. The altar, or Wallingford's skreen, is not surpassed by any workmanship of the pointed style, and with the exception of part of the centre, which has been remodelled by the zeal of the Iconoclasts of the Reformation, dates from the reign of Edward IV. Behind it is the Presbytery, which once opened by three arches into the Lady Chapel, which Chapel is the most mutilated part of the building, and is now used as a School Room. On the pavement in the middle of the Presbytery is an inscription, marking the spot on which the shrine of St. Alban once stood. On the South is a wooden gallery, in which Monks were used to be stationed as sentinels over the shrine, and on the North is the monument of Humphrey, fourth son of Henry IV., known as the Good Duke of Gloucester. The body of the Duke was discovered in the vault beneath this tomb in the year 1703, and then was lying in a leaden coffin, enclosed in an outer case of wood. The few remaining bones are now most indecently exposed, and handled by every rude and ignorant clown who visits the Abbey. The principal entrance on the South, the Abbot's door, is now closed, but both this porch and the skreen opposite it are elaborately and beautifully carved; adjoining the door is a highly ornamented Piscina. The ceiling of the nave, transept, and choir is of wood, formed into square compartments, and painted with various devices. At the lower part of the choir are two beautiful monumental Chapels, immediately opposite to each other, one of Abbot Wheathampstead, the other of Abbot Ramryge. With the exception of the Gate House on the West, built in the time of Richard II., and now occupied as a Prison, none of the outer buildings of the Abbey are standing; and it is only by the remains of arches attached to the walls of the Church that the bearing of the Cloisters can be traced. In the fields on the West are two very extensive souterraines curiously arched, called the Monks' Holes. One of these may be traced nearly 250 feet before it becomes choked; they are supposed to have been drains. The Lives of 23 early Abbots of St. Alban's have been written by Matthew Paris. Thomas Fuller, who held the Curacy of the Abbey Church, published a brief History of it; and yet later, Newcombe has collected much larger materials on the same subject.

St. Alban's has a Grammar School, and several other private foundations; some Almshouses (the Buildings) endowed by Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, near the entrance of the Town from Hertford; and others near St. Peter's Church, founded in 1627 by Roger Pemberton. Over the gateway of the last-named houses an arrow-head is cemented into the brickwork; and tradition says, the founder shot a poor widow accidentally with an arrow, and in atonement for his involuntary offence raised this charitable institution. The Camp of Ostorius in the neighbourhood is now generally known by the undignified name of the Oyster Hills. The ruins of Sopwell Nunnery, a Benedictine establishment, founded about 1140, are half a mile to the South-East of St. Alban's; and Gorhambury, the beautiful seat of the Earl of Verulam, is distant about two miles North-West. This property belonged to the great Lord Bacon, and in the Park may still be found the remains of a house built by his father, the Lord Keeper Sir Nicholas, and added to by the Chancellor himself. The modern edifice was built from the designs of Sir Robert Taylor in 1785, and contains a rich collection of Historical portraits.

To our account of Ayott St. Lawrence may be added, that it was an ancient demesne of the Saxon Kings, and that it is at present remarkable for its two Churches. The older Church is much dilapidated, for it was the intention of Sir Lionel Lyde, by whom the new edifice was erected, to add the ancient site to his Park; but he was stopped by an Episcopal injunction, after unroofing and much injuring the ancient pile. Some interesting tombs still remain; among them one with a miniature effigy not exceeding two feet in length, with the legs crossed, which probably represents some child who died in the Holy Land. The new Church was built by Revet in 1788, professedly, as an inscription informs us, ad antiquæ Architecturæ exemplaria quæ in Græciâ atque Asiâ Minori adhuc visuntur. Distant 27 miles from London.

Baldock is an ancient Market Town between two chalk hills, on the Roman Icknield Street and the great North Road. The manor once belonged to the Knights Templars, who possessed a cell in the neighbourhood for such of their Order as were afflicted with leprosy. The Church contains some stone coffins, believed to belong to Knights of that Order; its date is about the reign of Edward III. It is a large and handsome building, containing three chancels. The Living is a Rectory, patron the King. Population, in 1821, 1550, many of whom are employed in the corn and malt trade. Distant from Biggleswade 8 miles South, from London 37 miles North. About 3 miles West, on Wilbury Hill, is an area of nearly seven acres, variously attributed to a Roman Camp or an Amphitheatre.

Berkhamstead, Great, or St. Peter's, is a considerable Market Town, the Castle of which, in the reigns of Henry II. and Richard II., was a Royal residence. It stood on the East of the Town, and from the massiveness of its present remains must have been a fortress of great strength. The works included about 11 acres, the greater part of which are now grown up with trees, or occupied by farm buildings. The Town stands on a branch of the river Gade and the Grand Junction Canal, which run for two miles parallel with each other. It consists of one handsome principal street, and a smaller one branching out from the Church to the Castle. The Church is in the form of a cross, with a tower at the intersection towards the West. It contains several ancient tombs, and there are the remains of many Oratories connected with it. The Living is a Rectory, in the patronage of the Crown. Berkhamstead has a Free School, a Charity School, and some other charitable foundations. In the 14th Edward III. it returned two Members to Parliament; but the representation ceased after that single return, and a Charter granted to the Town by James I. was dropped during the succeeding Rebellion. The manufactures are chiefly

HERT-
FORD-SHIRE.Gorham-
bury.Ayott St.
Lawrence.

Baldock

Berkhamstead.

HERT-
FORD-
SHIRE.

Buntingford

Cheshunt.

Theobalds.

Hatfield.

Hemel
Hempstead.

Hitchin.

those connected with turning, and bowls, shovels, and wooden spoons are largely made here. Population, in 1821, 2310. Distant from Watford 11 miles, from London 27 North-West.

Buntingford is a small Market Town on the river Rib: it is a Chapelry to the Parish of Laystone, and the birth-place of Seth Ward, Bishop of Exeter and Salisbury, who died in 1688. Population, in 1821, 907. Distant 10 miles from Ware, 31 from London North.

Cheshunt is a pleasant and large Town, though now without a market, in an extensive Parish, near the river Lea and the New River, and, from its neighbourhood and connection with Ermine Street, is supposed to have been a Roman station. The Church, dedicated to the Virgin, was built in the reign of Henry VI. The Living is a Vicarage, in the patronage of the Marquess of Salisbury. Not far from the Town stands a house, once occupied by Richard Cromwell, who lived many years in it after his abdication, under the name of Clerk, and died here in 1712, at the age of 80; he was buried at Hursley in Hampshire. Cardinal Wolsey also resided occasionally in the Manor House, which still exists. Here also was a Benedictine Nunnery. Population, in 1821, 4376. Distant from London 12 miles North. Within the Parish stood Theobalds, the residence of the great Lord Burleigh, who was often honoured here by visits from his Royal Mistress. His son Robert, Earl of Salisbury, exchanged it for Hatfield with James I. It was a favourite residence with that Prince, who materially enlarged the Park, and died there in 1625. During the Interregnum, the Parliamentary Commissioners destroyed the Palace; their survey is now preserved in the Augmentation Office, and Mr. Lysons has amply described the nature of the buildings. (Environs of London, iv.) Not a vestige of them is now left, but a new Park has been formed, and a modern mansion erected about a mile North-West from the ancient site.

Hatfield, or Bishop's Hatfield, a demesne of the Saxon Kings, and afterwards of the Bishops of Ely, was purchased from that See by Queen Elizabeth. It is a Market Town. The Church, dedicated to St. Etheldrede, is a handsome pointed building, and attached to it, on the North of the Church, is a sepulchral Chapel of the Earls of Salisbury, containing the monument of the founder, the first Earl Cecil, whose recumbent skeleton is sculptured on it. The Living is a Rectory, in the patronage of that family. Population, in 1821, 3215. Distant from Barnet 9 miles, from London 19 North. Hatfield House, the seat of the Marquess of Salisbury, is a magnificent brick mansion, erected by the first Earl, after his exchange of Theobalds with James I. in the early part of the XVIIth century. The collection of Pictures is distinguished, and the Park very finely timbered.

Hemel Hempstead is a Market Town on the slope of a hill, descending into a rich valley on the river Gade. It was an ancient demesne of the Saxon Kings, and afterwards in part belonged to the Abbots of St. Alban's. The Church is of Norman date, and of very interesting architecture. The Living a Vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The straw plait manufacture is much carried on here by women. Population, in 1821, 3962. Distant 23 miles from London North-West.

Hitchin is a large and ancient Market Town in a rich valley, with the little river Hiz flowing through it. The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is of spacious dimensions, 150 feet in length, 67 in breadth, and terminated with a massive Western tower. It contains many early monuments and brasses, much painted glass, and an altar-piece by Rubens. The living is a Vicarage, in the patronage of Trinity College, Cambridge. The Priory of Biggin, which stood at a short distance South-East from the Church, belonged to Gilbertine Nuns. Hitchin Priory, another Religious establishment here, was founded in the reign of Edward II. for White Carmelites; the site is now occupied by a modern house. Here is a Free School and some other Charitable foundations. Population, in 1821, 4486, chiefly employed in malting and the wool trade. Distant 34 miles North from London.

Hoddesdon is a Market Town and Chapelry on the river Lea, in the Parishes of Broxbourne and Amwell. The Market House is a curious wooden building, carved with numerous grotesque figures. The Town consists of one long principal street. Population, in 1821, 1364. Distant from London 17 miles North.

King's Langley, a small irregular village, nearly opposite Abbot's Langley, from which it is divided by the river Gade, is so called from a Palace built in it by Henry III., of which a few vestiges still remain. The Church is of the pointed style. Within it Richard II. was buried before his removal to Westminster; and here are still found the tombs of Edmond of Langley, fifth son of Edward III. (who was born in this village) and his first wife Isabel, daughter of Pedro, King of Castile. Piers Gaveston, the favourite of Edward II., was also interred here, but the monument sometimes attributed to him belongs to Sir John Vernon. The Living is a Vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. Population, in 1821, 1242. Distant from London 20 miles North North-West.

Rickmansworth, or Rukmansworth, is a small Market Town on the confluence of the Gade, the Colne, and a third small rivulet. It was a demesne of the Saxon Kings, and afterwards belonged to the Abbey of St. Alban's. The Church, dedicated to the Virgin, is a spacious pointed building; the Living a Vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of London. Numerous mills have been constructed on the neighbouring streams, and the straw plait manufacture employs many hands. Population, in 1821, 3940. Distant from London 17 miles North-West. Moor Park, once the residence of the unfortunate Duke of Monmouth, whose original brick mansion has been transformed by successive owners into a superb Corinthian pile, stands in a finely wooded Park, not far from Rickmansworth. The grounds in later times were laid out by Brown for Lord Anson; many of the older oaks are decayed at top, and tradition attributes this defect to the Duchess of Monmouth, who, on her husband's execution, is said, with a somewhat whimsical sentimentality, to have lopped their heads.

Royston is a Market Town on the Northern border of the County, situated in a bottom among wild chalk downs, on the Roman Icknield Street. Antiquaries have doubted whether its origin is Roman or Saxon. Stukeley assigns it to the former; Salmon to the latter; and Camden, Weever, and Chauncy bring it from a still later source, the Lady Roise, (daughter of Aubrey de Vere, Chief Justice of England in the reign of Henry I.) who erected a Cross here by the road side, and gave her name to it. A Priory and village which grew up soon afterwards near this Cross, by an easy contraction from Roise's Town became Royston. Besides these, Royston possessed two other Religious foundations, an

HERT-
FORD-
SHIRE

Hoddesdon.

King's Langley.Rickmans worth.

Moor Park.

Royston.

Hospital to St. Nicholas, dedicated in the reign of John, and one to St. John and St. James in 12 Henry III.: some remains of the latter are still extant. James I. had a Hunting Box in this Town, which recently formed a carpenter's workshop. Royston has twice suffered very severely from fire, once in the reign of Henry IV., again in 1747, nevertheless the streets are still narrow and irregular. It once contained five Parishes. The present Church is that which belonged to the Priory. The Living is a Vicarage, in the patronage of Lord Dacre. Beneath the market place, at the bottom of the principal street, is a circular Crypt, or Oratory, (the Cave), 25 feet in diameter, and about 35 in height, dug out of the solid chalk, and ornamented with rude carvings of Scriptural subjects. It originally had an approach by a shaft from the street. The discovery of this souterrain in 1742, led to an antiquarian controversy between Dr. Stukely and Mr. Parkyn, whose several works on the subject abound in curious information. The downs in the neighbourhood are frequented by a species of Crow, which derives its trivial name from the Town. Pennant describes it as a bird of passage breeding in Sweden, the South of Germany, and on the Danube, coming to England about the beginning of winter, and leaving it with the Woodcock: the head, the under part of the neck, and the wings are black, glossed over with a fine blue; the breast, belly, and back of a pale ash colour. (Zool. i. 169. 8vo.) The malting trade is largely carried on here. Population, in 1821, 1474. Distant from London 38 miles North. The Parish is partly in Cambridgeshire.

Tring is a small Market Town, on the high road to Aylesbury. The Church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a large, well-proportioned, pointed building, with a massive Western tower; the timber roof is curiously carved. It is a Curacy united with Long Marston, in the patronage of Christ Church, Oxford. The Roman Icknield Street passes the Town, and at the village of Little Tring, within the Parish, rises one of the heads of the Thames. Population, in 1821, 3286. Distant 4 miles from Wendover, 31 from London.

Ware is a large and ancient Market Town on the Western bank of the Lea. In the North part of it stood a Convent of Franciscans, and on the banks of the river a Priory of Benedictines, some remains of which have been converted into a dwelling-house. The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious building of the pointed style, with a Western tower. The roof is of timber, in part very richly painted. The Living is a Vicarage, in the patronage of Trinity College, Cambridge. The School belonging to Christ's Hospital, which we have already mentioned as now transferred to Hertford, formerly was established in this Town. Corn and malt are the principal articles of trade. A spring near the Town, increased by a cut from the Lea, supplies the New River with water, and affords Ware great facilities for traffic. Population, in 1821, 3844. Distant from Hatfield 4 miles East North-East, 21 North from London.

Watford is a handsome, large, and well-built Market Town, on a gentle hill, rising from the banks of the Colne, and consists principally of a single street of more than a mile in length. The Church, dedicated to the Virgin, is a spacious pointed building, with a Western tower and spire; attached to the chancel on the North is a cemetery belonging to the possessors of the neighbouring seat at Cashiobury. It contains several monuments; two of which, by Nicholas Stone, are of superior workmanship, each to a Sir Charles Morrison, 1599 and 1628. In the Church-yard is an endowed School. The chief manufacture is at some mills for throwing silk. Population, in 1821, 4713. Distant from London 19 miles North-West. Cashiobury, between two and three miles South from Watford, was granted by the Mercian King Offa to the Abbot of St. Alban's, and is now the property of the Earl of Essex. The present house is of modern Gothic architecture. The Park is of great beauty, and is intersected by the river Gade and the Grand Junction Canal. The Grove, a seat of the Earl of Clarendon, stands two miles North from Watford, and contains a valuable collection of Historical Paintings, many of which belonged to the great Lord Clarendon, and have been brought from the family seat at Cornbury in Oxfordshire.

The Historical Antiquities of Hertfordshire, by Sir H. Chauncy, fol. 1700: this valuable work is now very rare, it was abridged and continued by Salmon in his History of Hertfordshire, fol. 1728; Young's Agricultural Survey of Hertfordshire, 1793; Beauties of England and Wales, vol. vii.

HE'RY, } A, S. her-ian, her-gan, her-gean; lau- HE'RYING. } dare, celebrare, to praise.

To praise, to celebrate, to honour, to worship; to proclaim the praise or honour; generally, to proclaim.

And the schepardis turneden agen glorifyinge and heryinge God in alle thingis that thei hadden herd and seyen: as it was seyde to hem. Wiclif. Luke, ch. ii.

And whan that folk it to his fader told,
Not only he, but all his contree mery
Was for this childe, and God they thonke and hery.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8492.

But by the mouth of children thy bountee
Parfourmed is, for on the brest souking
Sometime shewen they thin herying.

Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13389.

Tho wouldest thou learne to caroll of loue,
And hery with hymns thy lasses gloue.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

Thenot, now nis the time of merry-make,
Nor Pan to herie, nor with loue to play.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. November.

HESINGERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Polyandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx four-leaved; corolla none; stamens fifteen to twenty-five: female flower, calyx six-leaved; corolla none; styles two; berry double, two-celled, two-seeded.

One species, H. nitida, native of South America.

HESIONE, in Zoology, a genus of Annelides, established by Savigny, belonging to the family Nereidea.

Generic character. Insect without tentacula at its orifice; antennæ equal; first, second, third, and fourth pair of feet converted into eight pair of uniform tentacula, all very long, filiform, and retractile; gill not distinct.

HESIONE. The type of the genus is H. splendida of Savigny, figured in the large work on Egypt.

—
HESPERIA

HE'SITATE, v.

HESITA'TION,

HE'SITANCY,

HE'SITANTLY.

Fr. hesiter; It. esitare; Sp. hesitar; Lat. hesitare, from hæ-rere, hæsum, to stick. To stick fast; to stay, to stop; to delay; (sc. in doubt or uncertainty, whether to proceed, what to do or determine;) to be or remain in doubt, uncertainty, or suspense.

It is so plainly, so certainly affirmed in Scripture, that there is no place left for hesitation. For this is his precept, that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and that we love one another.

Taylor. Rule of Conscience, book ii. ch. iii. rule 14.

Paschasius Radbertus, who lived about eight hundred and twenty years after Christ's incarnation, so expounds the precept without any hesitation, Bibite ex hoc omnes, i. e. tam ministri quam reliqui credentes, Drink ye all of this, as well they that minister, as the rest of the believers.

Id. Dissuasives from Popery, part ii. book ii. sec. 4.

The Spirit of God comes in as another witness, that in the mouth of two witnesses this may be established, and by his immediate light clears up the truth of that attestation that conscience did make, which takes away all doubtings and hesitancies, and fills us with a full assurance.

Hopkins. Sermons, fol. 505.

It must needs become a sceptick above all men to hesitate in matters of exchange. And tho' he acknowledges no present good or enjoyment in life, he must be sure, however, of bettering his condition, before he attempts to alter it.

Shaftsbury. The Moralists, part ii. sec. 1.

Upon these grounds, as they professed they did without any mincing, hesitancy, or reservation, in the most full, clear, downright, and peremptory manner with firm confidence and alacrity concurrently aver the fact.

Barrow. Works, vol. ii. Sermon 29.

If there be sight in the eyes, it will at first glimpse, without hesitation, perceive the words printed on this paper different from the colour of the paper.

Locke. On Human Understanding, book iv. ch. ii. sec. 5.

The only sure foundation of hope, which the wisest and most thoughtful men amongst the heathen pretended in this case to have, was, from the consideration suggested in the text, (1 Cor. xv. 19.) and from thence some of them reasoned without doubt, or hesitancy; and lived and died in such a manner, as to shew, that they believed their own reasonings.

Atterbury. Sermon 1. vol. ii. p. 15.

Of my being wont to speak rather doubtfully, or hesitantly, than resolvedly, concerning matters wherein I apprehend some difficulty, I have in another treatise (which may through God's assistance come abroad ere long) given a particular, and, I hope, a satisfactory account.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 2. To the Reader.

I would beseech my readers, not to look upon any thing as my opinion or assertion, that is not delivered in the intire series of my own words; lest a transcriber should make me deliver those things resolutely and dogmatically, which I deliver but hesitantly and conjecturally.

Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 314. Considerations touching Experimental Essays in general.

A people, whose sacred books bore testimony in every page to the punishment of crimes by pestilence, by famine, and the sword, could never hesitate a moment to conclude, that the calamities of the wicked Galileans were a mark of God's displeasure against sin.

Warburton. Sermon 18.

But in an age of darkness he [Gregory VII.] had not all the knowledge that was requisite to regulate his zeal; and taking false appearances for solid truths, he without hesitation deduced from them the most dangerous consequences.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, vol. iii. p. 277.

HESPERIA, in Zoology, a genus of Diurnal Lepidopterous insects, established by Fabricius, comprehending most of the Plebeian Ruricolæ and Urbicolæ of Linnæus, which have been divided into nine genera by Fabricius.

Generic character. Antennæ ending in a club or button, hooked at the tip; the lower palpi short, large, and covered with spines. Their bodies are generally short, thick; their heads broad, and the antennæ far apart at their insertion. These insects are commonly found in grassy places, especially in damp shady places. A few are found in Europe, but they are far more numerous in America, and they generally form the most beautiful part of the boxes of Brazil insects.

The type is the Papilio alcæa, Esper, the H. malvæ of Fabricius.

HESPERIDES, the Mythological guardians of certain golden fruit, concerning whom M. l'Abbé Massieu, in a Dissertation sur les Hesperides, (Mém. de l'Acad. des Ins. iii. 28.) has given a summary of Historical and Poetical evidence which we shall freely incorporate with such other materials as have occurred to ourselves elsewhere. The Abbé begins with Palæphatus, an author about whose date nothing precise is known; but the title of whose work, Περὶ ἀπίστων, for the most part, very faithfully represents its contents. In the instance before us, however, he is more than ordinarily credible. Hesperus, says this writer, (19.) was a rich Milesian, who established himself in Caria. His two daughters, the Hesperides, possessed numerous flocks, (μῆλα), which, on account of their beauty, were termed golden, κάλλιστον γὰρ ὁ χρυσὸς. The care of these was confided to a shepherd named Draco, whom, together with his flocks, Hercules captured and carried off. This is a very simple narrative, and it were hard indeed to dissent from the honest assertion of veracity with which it is accompanied, ἔχει δὲ ἡ ἀληθεια ὧς ἐστι. With this account agrees that of Agroïtas, an author who is often cited by the Scholiasts, and especially by that on Apollonius Rhodius. Ἀγροίτας δ' ἐν Γ Λιβυκῶν φησὶ μὴ μῆλα εἶναι ἀλλὰ πρόβατα κάλλιστα ἃ χρυσᾷ ὠνομάσθη· ἔχειν δὲ ταῦτα ποιμένα ἄγριον ὃν διὰ τὸ ἀνήμερον Δράκοντα ὠνομάσθαι. Thus also say Varro and Servius.

But others, equal in authority and number, change the Flocks to Fruit, and the Shepherd to a Gardener; and Diodorus Siculus, with very laudable impartiality, permits free choice between the two opinions; ἀλλὰ περὶ μὲν τούτων ἐξεστὶ διαλαμβάνειν ὡς ἂν ἕκαστος ἐαυτὸν πείθῃ. (v. 13.) The reason of the dilemma is obvious; μῆλα signifies apples as well as flocks. Diodorus relates many more particulars than have been stated by his predecessors. Hesperus and Atlas, according to this Historian, were two wealthy brothers in the extreme Western parts of Africa. The daughter of the first, named Hesperis, gave her name to the Country, and married her uncle. From this union sprang seven daughters, called Hesperides from the mother, Atlantes from the father; who watched with great care the sheep or the fruit, whichever they happened to be. As these damsels were both clever and beautiful, Busiris, King of Egypt, became enamoured of them all, and, not trusting to his received reputation for gallantry, he despatched Pirates to capture them. They were rescued by Hercules from this abduction; and Atlas, out of gratitude, rewarded the Hero with a portion of his doubtful treasures. Moreover, he instructed him in Astronomy, for he was skilled in that Science, and very often handled a globe. One of these instruments he presented to Hercules; and hence arose the poetical fiction that the Demigod had relieved him from the labour of bearing the Heavens on his shoulders.

Pliny is much more brief upon this subject than might be expected from his customary love of the marvellous. In speaking of Mauritania, he says that Lixos

—
HESPERIDES.

HESPE-
RIDES.

was colonized by the Emperor Claudius, "wherof in old times there went many fabulous and lowd lying tales. For there stood (they say) the roiall pallace of Antæus; there was the combat betweene him and Hercules; there also were the gardens and hort-yards of the Hesperides. Now there floweth thereinto out of the sea a certain creeke or arme thereof, and that by a winding channell, wherin men now take it that there were Dragons serving in good steed to keepe and guard the same. It encloseth an island within it selfe, which (notwithstanding the tract thereby be somewhat higher) is only not overflowed by the sea tides. In it there standeth erected an alter of Hercules, and setting aside certaine wild olives, nothing els is to be seene of that goodly grove reported to beare golden apples." (Holland, v. 1.) In this passage the excellent translator has not only, as usual, very largely expanded the original, but he appears also to have wandered very far from its meaning in one instance. The words of Pliny, affunditur æstuarium e mari flexuoso meatu, in quo Draconis custodiae instar fuisse nunc interpretatur, are understood and paraphrased by Solinus (24.) as follows; in a manner which, even if it does not succeed, at least attempts an explanation of part of the Mythological legend. Flexuoso meatu æstuarium e mari fertur, adeo sinuosis lateribus tortuosum ut visentibus procul lapsus angueos fractâ vertigine mentiatur; idque quod hortos appellavere circumdat: unde pomorum custodem interpretantes, struxerunt iter ad mendacium fabulæ.

A little onward (ib. 5.) we are told, by Pliny, that the city "Berenice standeth upon the utmost winding and nouke of Syrtis, called sometime the cittie of the above-named Hesperides, according to the wandering tales of Greece. And before the towne, not far off, is the river Lethon, the sacred grove where the hort-yards of the Hesperides are reported to be." In the XIXth Book (5. ad fin.) they are again incidentally mentioned. "In Mauritania, by report of travellers, near the frith or arm of the sea adjoining to Lixos, (the head cittie of Fez) where sometime (as folke say) were the hort-yards and gardens of the Hesperides, not above halfe a quarter of a mile from the maine Ocean, hard unto the chappell of Hercules, (farre more auncient than that temple of his which is in the Island Calis) there groweth a Mallow that is a verie tree indeed: in height it is 20 foot, and in bodie bigger and thicker than any man can sadome." Again once more these Gardens are placed near the great Syrtis; and, on the authority of Theomenes, are reported to weep amber into a lake beneath, which is gathered by the women of the neighbourhood. (xxxvii. 2.)

Among the Poets we turn first to Hesiod for genealogy. In his Theogonia, (215.) the Hesperides are named as daughters of Ouranus and Nox, and they guard golden apples in that common receptacle of all divinity, which is placed πέρην κλυτὸ Ὀκεανοῖο. A few lines onward they are distinguished by an epithet implying agreeable vocal power, λεγύφωνοι, and are placed in the same spot close to not very attractive neighbours, the Gorgones, (275.) with whom, from a false punctuation of this passage, they have sometimes been confounded. And lastly we read of their vicinity to Atlas. (518.)

Euripides, in two very beautiful passages, has borrowed from Hesiod the characteristic by which he distinguishes the Hesperides, and the Scholiast is probably wrong who imagines that they are called δοῖδοι, only because they sang Elegies upon their slaughtered Dragon; for their songs, from other authorities, appear to have been sometimes of a less lugubrious nature.

HESPE-
RIDES.

Ἑσπερίδων δ' ἐπὶ μηλόσπαρον ἀκτὰν
ἀνύσαιμι ΤΑΝ ἈΟΙΔΩΝ
ἢ ὅ ποντομύδων πορφυρίας λίμνας ναύταις οὐκ ἴδ' ὀδὸν νίμει, σιμὸν τέρμονα ναίων
Οὐρανοῦ τὸν Ἀτλας ἔχει.

Hipp. 739.

ἽΜΝΩΔΟΤΕ ΤΙ Κόρας
ἤλυθεν ἱσπέρειον ἐς αὐλὰν χρυσίων πιτάλων ἄπο μήλοφόρον χειρὶ παρπὸν ἀμείζων δράκοντα πυρσόνωντον ὅς σφ' ἄπλατον ἀμφίλικτος ἔλικ' ἰφροῦρει κτανών.

Herc. Fur. 393.

Our own Milton, to whom these sources were familiar, has drawn from them freely, and enriched them while he drew. The Spirit in Comus describes his beatitude as follows:

To the Ocean now I fly,
And those happy climes that lie,
Where Day never shuts his eye,
Up in the broad fields of the sky:
There I suck the liquid air
All amidst the Gardens fair
Of Hesperus and his daughters three
That sing around the golden tree.

980.

Warton, in his note upon these lines, has overlooked Euripides, while he refers to Apollonius Rhodius,

ἀμφὶ δὲ νύμφαί *
Ἑσπέρειδες ποίπνυν ἰφίμερον αἰδουσαι.

iv. 1396.

and to the Virgineus chorus of Lucan, (ix. 362.) which last passage he in turn observes that the Commentators have overlooked. But we know not why the Latin chorus should necessarily be connected with singing. For the number of his Nymphs Milton has authority, although the Classical writers vary on this point, as well as on their names. Apollodorus gives four, Ægle, Erythia, Vesta, Arethusa; (ii. 5.) Apollonius Rhodius three, Ægle, Hespera, and Erytheis; (iv. 1427.) Hyginus three, Ægle, Hesperie, and Ærica; and Fulgentius (Virgil Cont. p. 153) four, Ægle, Hesperie, Medusa, and Arethusa, which last is occasionally corrupted into Hesperethusa.

Ovid has not luxuriated as much as might be expected in these Gardens of delight. He gifts Atlas with both flocks and fruit, but his wall is built and his sentinel Dragon is placed to protect the latter only, from the evils which Themis had predicted. (iv. 634.) Ovid differs also both from Virgil, (Ecl. vi. 61.) and from the Scholiast on Theocritus, (Eidyll. 211. 40.) in gathering the apples with which Venus gifted Hippomenes in his race with Atalanta, not from the Gardens of the Hesperides, but from Tamasenus in Cyprus. (x. 644.)

Notwithstanding the spoliation of these Gardens by Hercules, which adventure is more fully related by Lucan than by any other of the Roman Poets, (loc. cit.) Virgil has implied that even in the time of Dido the golden fruit was still guarded by a Dragon, in whose Temple sacred rites were duly celebrated by a ministering Priestess. (Æn. iv. 483.) On this passage the reader may turn to the brief Excursus (4.) of Heyne. But it is in his notes upon Apollodorus, (xi. 5. 11.) that Heyne has expended most learning on the Hesperides, and has collected with all their authorities, several mythological particulars, which we have not yet mentioned. Apollodorus places these Gardens in the Hyperborean regions, and as his present text stands, makes their apples a nuptial gift from Juno to Jupiter; but Heyne sufficiently shows from Eratosthenes, (3.) that it was the Earth (Γῆ) who made this offering, and that the restitution of a single word may so correct Apollodorus. It should not be forgotten that it was a fatal Apple from these Gardens which afterwards exercised the critical sagacity of Paris, and produced all the ills of Troy. Nor should we omit to point to the adventure of the Argonauts with the Sisters, which, as far as we recollect, is treated by no one except by Apollonius Rhodius, (loc. cit.) On their arrival among the Hesperides, these Heroes are grievously oppressed by thirst. They find the Nymphs singing sweetly round the yet palpitating body of the Dragon, whom Hercules had slain the day before. On the approach of the vessel the Sisters transformed themselves into dust and earth, but Orpheus recognised them under their disguise, and, with many earnest protestations of future gratitude, besought their assistance in discovering fresh water. The Nymphs in pity changed themselves into new shapes; Hespera became a poplar, Erytheis an elm, Ægle a willow; and they led the parched crew to the spring which had burst forth near the lake Tritonis, under the stamp of the foot of Hercules. The whole tale is most vividly related: the expiring agonies of the Dragon, and the eagerness with which the sailors resort to the fountain, are placed before the reader's eye in the most picturesque forms.

HESPE-
RIDES.

τοὶ δ' ἀσπαστὸν ἵνα σφίσι πέφραδιν Λιγλὴ πίδακα τῇ θίον αἶψα κίχαρμένοι, ἔφρ' ἐπὶ κύρσαν.
ὡς δ' ὅπότε στεινὴν περὶ φηραμὸν εἰλίσσονται γιομόροι μύρμηκες ὁμιλαδόν, ἢ ὅτε μύαι ἀμφ' ὀλίγην μέλιτος γλυκερὴ λίβα πιπτηνύσιν ἄπλητον μεμαάσιν ἐπήτριμοι ὡς, τότε ἀλλοιῖς πετραίῃ Μινύαι περὶ πίδακι δινεύουσιν.

iv. 1450.

There have not been wanting some bold enough to decide positively upon the genus of the golden fruit. Athenæus tells us that Juba, King of Mauritania, ἄνδρα πολυμαθέστατον, in his Commentaries on Libyan History, pronounces the apples of the Hesperides to be citrons; that Hercules introduced them from Africa into Greece, and that they were called golden from their colour. Pamphilus and Timachides, he says, on the contrary, maintain that they were no more than apples; but apples of such quality that they were offered by the Spartans to their Gods. It must be confessed that the first-named of these authors, though he praises the smell, does not seem to think that the fruit itself was esculent, εὔοσμα δὲ εἶναι καὶ ἄβρωτα. (iii. 7. Ed. Cas.) Bodæus, in his Commentary on Theophrastus, determines that they are quinces; the Greeks, he says, frequently called that fruit χρυσομήλα; their colour is the same; and in a statue at Rome, (we suppose the Farnese Hercules,) Hercules is plainly represented with such in his hand. It requires eyes previously resolved to see nothing but quinces, as Massieu remarks, to decide what sort of fruit this figure is bearing. Among all the fruit which have laid claim to this distinguished honour, Massieu appears most inclined to give his suffrage to the orange; mala aurantia, in mediæval Latin, are, as he contends, the same as mala aurata, and mala aurata are clearly χρυσᾶ μήλα. There is no force, he continues, in the supposition which deduces aurantia from Aran-tia, a town of Peloponnesus, to which Hercules first brought them, for then they would have been so named by the Greeks, which never was the case.

Major Rennell, from a comparison of authorities, determines that Bernic (the ancient Berenice) was the most generally received site of the Hesperides among the Ancients, and that the spot was appropriate, for although bordered by the sea on one side, and the desert of Barce on the other, it nevertheless, according to Edrisi, (93.) is covered with wood. He objects to the measurement of Scylax in his Periplus, (46.) who gives no more than two stadia for the square of the Gardens. Scylax is supposed to have lived above half a century after Herodotus; he fixes the Gardens at 620 stadia from Barce, which is 500 stadia from Cyrene; and this, says Major Rennell, "agrees precisely with Bernic. He gives a Catalogue of the trees in them which stood so thick as to entwine with each other, and it is worthy of remark that the lotus is among them." (Geog. of Herod. 612.)

Astronomers, supported by Vossius (Idolol. 11.) and others, have discovered the setting of the constellation Hercules in the voyage of that fabled Hero to the Hesperides; with them the Gardens are the firmament, the apples are stars, the Dragon is the horizon, or the tropics, and Hercules, if not himself, is the Sun. Maier applies the whole story to Alchemy. The grapes which the messenger of Joshua brought back to him from Canaan, have been transformed by other hunters of analogy (Huet, Dem. Evang.) into the golden apples; nay Paradise itself and the bruising of the Serpent's head has been supposed to furnish the Pagan Mythos; (Spanheim, in Callimachum;) and we have read an argument in support of this hypothesis in a very grave recent author, to the following effect, that "in Spence's Polymetis, pl. xviii. fig. 8. Hercules is represented standing with an apple in his hand before the tree, and the Serpent twisted round it." It so happens, we believe, that Michael Angelo has placed his Serpent in the Fall of Man in a like attitude; and upon this coincidence rests the sole foundation of the argument. Why is it that Poets are not allowed the free exercise of Imagination? and why must we perversely deny the power of originating to those whose very name depends upon the possession of such a power? It is to an overflowing fancy, rather than to any corruption of Sacred Writ, that we are often indebted for many wild and beautiful creations of Pagan Mythology.

HESPERIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetradynamia, order Siliquosa, natural order Cruciferae. Generic character: calyx closed, shorter than the claw of the petals, some of the petals bent obliquely, linear or obovate; pod roundish; stigmas conniving; seeds emarginate.

Nineteen species, mostly natives of Europe. H. matronalis, the Rocket, of which there are several cultivated varieties, is a native of England.

HESPE-
RIDES
—
HESPE-
RIS.

H E S S E.

HESSE.

HESSE, a large district of Germany, inhabited from the earliest Ages by the Catti, a name by which the Hessians are called in documents still existing. Some of their nation migrated anterior to the Christian era into the Low Countries, where they were named Batavi. They are mentioned in History as early as the time of Augustus. Germanicus, the son of Drusus, conquered them, burned their chief Town Mattium, or Marburg, and led away the daughter of one of their Princes to adorn his Triumph. Hesse was afterwards included in the great Empire of Charlemagne. From that time till the middle of the XIIIth century its history is completely merged in that of Thuringia. But when Henry I. of Brabant, who inherited Hesse from his mother, a Thuringian Princess, had secured the possession of it, (in 1263,) notwithstanding the pretensions of the House of Misnia, it was raised to the rank of a Fief of the Empire, and its Sovereigns to that of Princes. The possessions of Henry received several additions, and were frequently divided among his successors. But in the year 1500, all the Hessian Countries were again united under the sway of William II., by whose death, in 1509, they devolved on his infant son Philip, afterwards surnamed the Magnanimous. This Prince was one of the most zealous promoters of the Reformation, which he introduced into his States. With the revenues of the suppressed Convents he endowed the University of Marburg and four great Hospitals. It was he who arranged the conference at Marburg between Luther and Zuinglius with a view to their reconciliation, and who conducted together with the Duke of Saxony the League of Smalkalde. In consequence of the defeat at Muhlberg he became the prisoner of Charles V., and was detained by that Prince five years in captivity. At his death, in 1562, he divided his dominions by testament into four parts, between his sons William VI., Louis III., Philip, and George. The first of these received a half with Cassel; the second a fourth part with Marburg; the third an eighth with Rheinfels; and George, the youngest, an equal share with Darmstadt. But Philip and George both died without children, and their brothers, dividing their estates, founded the two lines of HESSE-CASSEL and HESSE-DARMSTADT. Louis, also, at his death divided his estates among his three sons, and from this partition again proceeded the line of HESSE-HOMBURG.

Origin.

Hesse-Cassel.
Extent and
situation.

HESSE, (the ELECTORATE of,) or, as it is commonly called, HESSE-CASSEL, has arisen from the Landgraviate which formerly bore this latter title. It is bounded on the North by Hanover and the Prussian Province of Westphalia, on the West and South by the Principalities of Waldeck, by Hesse-Darmstadt and Bavaria; on the East by the Prussian Province of Saxony, the Grand Duchy of Weimar, and the Kingdom of Bavaria. The territories of the Elector are not all contiguous. The Province of Schauenburg on the North is separated from the other Hessian Provinces by Prussian Westphalia and Schauenburg-Lippe. In like manner, Smalkalde, on the West, is completely enclosed by the Saxon Duchies. The extent of surface comprised in the whole territory of Hesse-Cassel is about 1730 square miles. HESSE.

This may be called a mountainous, at least a very hilly country. Woods and mountains, with deep narrow valleys, present at every turn the most romantic appearances; gentle slopes frequently occur towards the banks of rivers, but there are no level plains. The valley of the Fulda, in which Cassel is situated, is esteemed one of the most picturesque districts of Germany. Smalkalde is the most mountainous of the Provinces, and Hanau is the least so, though its surface is still variegated by sandstone hills of moderate elevation.

Appearance.

The rocks which occur in Hesse are principally recent sandstone and secondary limestone, abounding in marine exuviae. From the midst of these calcareous rocks rise volcanic summits, similar to those which are scattered to the West in the vicinity of the Rhine. The Wogel mountains and the chain of the Rhæne Gebirge stretch their branches through the Northern Provinces, and afford little soil for agriculture, but ample pasturage and extensive forests.

Geological
character.

The country of Fulda, in the centre of the latter chain, comprises its most elevated summits. The Milzebourg reaches the height of 3290 feet above the level of the sea, and the Dammersfeld that of 3640 feet. In the Northern portion of the Electorate may be remarked two series of mountains; one to the South-East of the great valley of Cassel, composed of greywacke in horizontal strata; the other on the North-West consisting of calcareous mountains with basaltic summits. One of the most remarkable of these is the Habichtswald, crowned by the octagonal pavilion of Weissenstein, and enclosing layers of bituminous wood. Further to the North, the Alberg, of a conical form, but not so high as the preceding, and covered with the ruins of an ancient castle, contains deposits of wood coal still more considerable. But in the eye of the Geologer, the most remarkable of these mountains is the Meisner, six leagues from Cassel. This mountain, separated from all those which surround it, has an absolute elevation of 2300 feet. From its base to its summit, which is terminated by a plain two leagues long by one in breadth, it is formed at first of limestone, abounding in shells and succeeded by greywacke; on these is a layer of sand; then a stratum of lignite, or bituminous fossil wood, 100 feet in thickness, on which rest the basaltic strata, 400 feet in perpendicular depth. "The enormous accumulation of wood," says M. Daubuisson, who describes this mountain, "which rests on this summit, has certainly been carried hither by a current of water. All these trees could never have grown in the same place; the waters which swept them along came from above, and the basaltic torrent which covered them must have proceeded from a crater at a still higher level. But the Meisner at present towers over all the country for 15 leagues round, and there are but few summits in the North of Germany which rise above it. The contiguous high land, in the midst of which it appears to have formed a hollow, has been long since swept away." To this it may be

Mountains

Meisner

HESSE. added, that the fossil wood is a fresh-water deposit, while the limestone at the base of the mountain abounds in oceanic remains, so that we have here the evidence of a twofold natural revolution. The schistose strata, near Riegelsdorf, contain, like those of Mansfeld, several varieties of fossil fish, so well preserved, that it is easy to ascertain the genera to which they belonged. They differ in almost every instance from the existing species.

Rivers. The Weser and the Maine both touch the territories of Hesse-Cassel; but the only considerable river which can be said to belong to the country is the Fulda. This rises near the village of Reutbach, and flows Northward through the country; receiving a great number of small streams, it becomes navigable at Melsungen in Lower Hesse, and joining the Werra at Minden forms the Lahn. The Lahn collects the mountain streams of the Southern Provinces, and flows Westward into the Rhine. There are numerous mineral springs in Hesse; those of Nenndorf, Wilhelmsbad, and Geismar are, perhaps, the most celebrated.

Minerals. In the territory of Smalkalde are salt springs, which produce annually about 100,000 quintals; in the vicinity of the same town are iron mines, which yield more than 13,000 quintals of bar iron and 4000 of natural steel. Salt springs of greater value occur at Allendorf, and iron mines are wrought at Homberg, Hohenkirchen, and Rommershausen.

At a short distance from Almerode, the Hirschberg contains a stratum of slate, from which is drawn annually about 400 quintals of alum. Near Riegelsdorf the mines of copper and of cobalt, yielding an annual produce of 25,000 quintals, afford subsistence to 1000 individuals. Other copper mines of less importance extend to the West of Cassel. In many parts of Hesse are extensive strata of wood coal, and there are also mines of gold and silver, though these, perhaps, cannot be reckoned among the sources of national wealth, and there is no longer an annual coinage of ducats, ex auro Adrenæ.

Cultivation. The climate of Hesse-Cassel is temperate, but inclining to cold. Like all other mountainous countries it presents local differences of temperature, which operate more or less on the nature of the agricultural produce. In Old Hesse, including Smalkalde, there are, according to Hassel, 1,337,420 Hessian acres of arable land, 329,688 devoted to garden cultivation, 436,675 in pasture, 984,160 of forest, and 724,560 of waste lands, including roads, rivers, &c. The Province of Schauenburg has 221,568 acres of arable soil, 64,218 of garden land, 46,670 of woods, and 66,670 uncultivated lands. The disposal of the soil in Fulda and Hanau are not known. The latter of these Provinces and Schauenburg are the most fertile parts of the Electorate. They produce corn enough, not only to supply the deficiencies of the other Provinces, but even for exportation. Hanau also sends a great quantity of fruit and vegetables to the market of Frankfort. Wine is produced in the same Province, and the vineyards of Witzzenhausen deserve to be mentioned as the most Northern in Germany. The culture of potatoes has latterly increased so much in Hesse, that the inhabitants of some mountain districts subsist almost entirely on that vegetable. Notwithstanding the extensive pastures of this country, there is a deficiency of stock, particularly of horses. Goats are numerous, and destructive to the woods, which feed great numbers of swine. The increase of Merinos has latterly engaged the attention of the Government. HESSE.

Though the population of Hesse is on the whole agricultural, there is one branch of manufacture which is found in almost every cottage; this is the preparation of coarse linen. It is never carried on as a separate business, but forms the domestic occupation of the farm-house. The Province of Fulda alone manufactures 140,000 pieces annually. Some woollen cloth is made in the same way. The working of the mines, some coarse pottery, and glass, constitute the only other objects of manufacturing industry. The Government has latterly held out much encouragement to the establishment of manufactures, but the spirit of the people is fettered by injudicious laws and by the existence of corporations, which serve to perpetuate the routine of ignorance. Not many years are passed since it was first permitted to exercise every trade in the villages; and no man is allowed to establish himself as a grocer until he shows that he is physically incapable of a more active employment. A Council lately appointed to promote industry by suitable rewards, and to report upon every means of ameliorating the social economy, will, in all probability, advise the removal of these restraints on individual exertion. Industry.

The commerce of Hesse consists in the exportation of its own produce, and in the transit of merchandise from Frankfort to the North of Germany. The value of the yarn and coarse cloth sent annually from Cassel to the great fairs amounts to about five millions of francs. To this must be added, the value of about 120,000 flasks of mineral water, &c., in exchange for which are received sugar, cotton, coffee, and other colonial produce, with French wines, &c. The value of the importations very far exceeds that of the exported goods; but this disadvantage in the balance of trade, if it be such, is more than counterbalanced by the clear gain of the transit, or carrying trade. There is no commercial town in this State; neither Cassel nor Hanau deserve that title. The fairs at the former place have never attained any importance. Manfried and some places on the Werra have a little trade in wine. The navigation of the Maine and Weser are but little attended to; the roads, however, are excellent, particularly in the basaltic districts. Commerce.

The population of Hesse-Cassel is about 585,000; of these the Roman Catholics are, probably, 102,000, the members of the Reformed Religion 336,800, the Lutherans 140,000, and the Jews 5300; the Mennonites do not exceed 100 in number. There are several families descended from the French refugees, 3000 or 4000 in number, who quitted their Country at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The Jews in this Country are raised much above the abject state in which they exist in other parts of Germany; this benefit they owe to the late Westphalian Government, which admitted them to all the rights of citizenship. They are obliged, however, to keep their account-books in German. Population.

The means of instruction are by no means widely diffused in the Electorate; the public seminaries are ill-supported, and in a low condition. The University of Marburg, though improved of late years, is still reckoned among the least eminent of Germany. The Hessian States are the only parts of Germany at present in which the advantages of a learned education are confined by law to the sons of nobility, councillors, and some others whose public functions give them the privi- Education.

HESSE. leges of rank. The clergy, also, are allowed to send their eldest sons to the University, but the younger sons of their families, and all of the inferior classes, are condemned to ignorance. It will hardly be believed that this strange prohibition was made or renewed in the year 1818.

Revenues.

The revenues of the Electorate amount to about eight millions of francs, and the expenditure to half that sum. It may thus be ranked among the richest of the German Principalities. Before 1806 the State had no debt, but while the French held possession of it, and under the Westphalian monarchy, debts were contracted amounting, in 1815, to 2,785,762 florins. This was reduced, in 1822, to 1,297,000. The debts of Fulda and Hanau, which at the end of the war amounted to 1,500,000 florins, are not included in the above account.

The Elector.

The Markgrave of Hesse-Cassel received the title of Elector in 1803, by way of compensation for the encroachments made by the French Empire on the Rhenish Provinces. In 1805, he hesitated long before he declared himself neutral in the war between France and Prussia, and he was in consequence deprived of his dominions by Napoleon, immediately after the battle of Jena. His restoration took place in 1813, and, in the general settlement of Europe at the Congress of Vienna, considerable additions were made to his territories. It is remarkable that the only Electorate which now exists in Germany, was erected by the same course of events which destroyed the Empire. The Prince is addressed by the style of Royal Highness. The Government is monarchical, and, like all those which affect the designation of paternal, of a rather absolute character. The Electoral dominions are declared, by a law of 1817, to be inalienable and indivisible. The sovereignty descends in the male line, and the heir to the throne attains his majority in his eighteenth year. Similar rules obtain in the Hessian Duchy.

Administration.

The States of Hesse Cassel, which form the only counterpoise to the power of the Elector, are composed of the principal Ecclesiastics of the various religious communions, the Mayor of Cassel, seven Deputies elected by the Nobility, who are extremely numerous but poor, eight Deputies from the Towns, and nine chosen by the agricultural classes. The promise of a Constitution has never been fulfilled, nor have the States been convened since 1816, at which time they were dismissed before they had sketched the object of their wishes. The highest tribunal in the Electoral dominions is the Court of Appeal at Cassel; inferior jurisdictions are at Cassel, Marburg, Rinteln, Fulda, and Hanau. The independence of the Courts of Justice has been guaranteed by a distinct pledge on the part of Government as a provisional step to the establishment of a Constitution. No officer of Government can be removed from his post without the formalities of a trial.

Landgraves of Rothenburg and Philipsthal.

The collateral branches of the Electoral House of Hesse are that of Philipsthal, which receives a settled revenue, but has no lordship, and that of Rothenburg, possessing 8 towns and 219 villages in the territories of Hesse and Nassau. Besides the revenues of this rich appanage, the Landgrave of Rothenburg receives 300,000 francs annually from the Elector and King of Prussia, in compensation for some of his domains which were alienated in the arrangements of 1814. He possesses some territorial jurisdiction, but is still subject to the Electoral authority. The line of Rothenburg adheres to the Roman Catholic Religion, while the other Princes of the Electoral family are Lutherans.

HESSE.

The Hessians are distinguished by their robust, manly figure and military gait. They are frank, sincere, and brave, but phlegmatic and slow. It may be owing to natural constitution, as well as to the want of education, that the Hessian States have not as yet contributed to the literature of Germany any work of genius. The people are soldiers, not so much from inclination, perhaps, as because they have nothing else to do. The Hessians have taken part, as mercenaries, in almost all the wars of Europe. No less than 12,000 of them were kept in pay by England during the American war; this system of hiring out the national troops, though it augmented the revenues of the State, has proved detrimental to its industry and general improvement. In 1814, Hesse-Cassel made, under the name of land-sturm, the enormous levy of 82,634 men of infantry, and 2160 of cavalry. All natives between 16 and 50 years of age are liable to the conscription. The time of service is 12 years, and those who agree to serve 12 years longer are rewarded at the expiration of that period by pensions or Civil posts. The standing army is at present reduced to about 9000 men, exclusive of a corps of dragoons invested with the authority of police.

Character
of the people.

Military service.

The Electorate of Hesse is divided into ten Provinces, viz. Lower Hesse, Upper Hesse, Hersfeld, Ziegenhein, Frizler, Smalkalde, Fulda, Isenberg, Hanau, and Schauenburg.

Divisions.

Of the 62 cities or towns contained in Hesse-Cassel, the most important by far is the Capital CASSEL, with a population of 20,000. FULDA, with 9000 inhabitants, ranks next in consequence, though at a considerable distance. Both these places will be found described in their alphabetical order.

Smalkalde, the chief Town of the Province of the same name, is the town of all Germany in which the antique style of building, with lofty houses, dark and tortuous streets, and overhanging roofs, has been least corrected by the improving hand of modern taste. The salt-pits and iron works in the neighbourhood employ the inhabitants, in number about 5000. Smalkalde is interesting to the Historian, as having been the scene of the numerous Conferences and Treaties entered into, between 1529 and 1540, by the Protestant Princes who espoused the Reformation and united to resist the Imperial authority. 25 miles South-West from Erfurt.

Smalkalde.

Marburg, on the Lahn, deserves to be mentioned for its Protestant University founded in 1527, to which are attached Botanic gardens, a Library of 60,000 volumes, and a good School of Anatomy. The Professors are 42 in number, and the students nearly 250. The Church of St. Elizabeth is a beautiful Gothic structure. The Lahn flows through the town, which lies on the side of a hill in a romantic situation. Population about 6600; 47 miles South-West of Cassel.

Marburg.

J. K. Bundschuh, Hessen nach seinen neuesten Physischen und Politischen Verhältnissen, Lemgo, 1805; M. Kurtius, Geschichte und Statistik von Hessen, Marburg, 1795; Engelhard's Erdbeschreibung der Hesse-Casselschen Länder, Cassel, 1772; Justi and Hartmann, Hessische Denkwürdigkeiten, Marburg, 1806.

HESSE, (the GRAND DUCHY of,) or, as it is usually called, HESSE-DARMSTADT, comprises, in reality, but a

Hesse-
Darmstadt.

HESSE. small portion of the Hessian States. The territories of the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt underwent many changes at the Treaty of Luneville, in 1801; and again in the arrangements made by the Confederation of the Rhine in 1806, at which period he received the title of Grand Duke. The numerous adjustments and exchanges of territory which took place in 1815, effected more important alterations, and transferred, in fact, the name of Hesse-Darmstadt to dominions composed chiefly of Rhenish Provinces and the territories of Mentz.

Extent, &c.

The Grand Duchy has less extent than the Electorate, but is much more populous and productive. The superficial area has been variously estimated at from 169 to 215 square German miles; the first of these calculations made by Stein, and equal to about 1610 of our square miles, is, we believe, not far from the truth. The State is formed of two portions, separated by the territories of Frankfort on the Maine. The Southern half is bounded on the North by the Principality of Nassau, the territory of Frankfort, and the Electorate of Hesse; on the East by Bavaria; on the South by the Grand Duchy of Baden; and on the West by the Bavarian Provinces of the Rhine. The Northern portion has on the West the Principality of Nassau and the dependencies of Wetzlar, on the North-East and South the Electorate of Hesse. Some small portions are entirely enclosed in Waldeck and Nassau.

Surface, soil, &c.

The country to the North of Frankfort has a calcareous soil, with greywacke and volcanic mountains, as in Electoral Hesse. To the South of Frankfort extend primary formations. The range of the Vogelsberg, in which the basaltic peak of the Feldberg rises to the height of 2700 feet, extends with its dense forests through the Northern part. The Odenwald, also covered with thick woods, runs along the Southern portion parallel to the course of the Rhine. At the foot of this chain winds the Roman road from Basle to the North of Germany.

Rivers.

The Rhine enters the Grand Duchy at Worms, and leaves it at Bingen; during this part of its course it receives the Pfrim, the Selze, the Nahe, the Neckar, the Maine, and the Lahn. The Altfell, Schwalm, and Eder flow on the other side into the Weser.

Produce.

The most fertile part of the country is that which borders the Rhine. All the slopes of the hills in that part of Hesse are covered with rich vineyards. Wine indeed is a staple product of the country, and the art of making it is well understood. The wine grown at Worms, (famous under the name of Liebfrauenmilch,) and, among the growths of the Maine, the wine of Obersteinheim, bear a high reputation. The produce of corn very far exceeds the consumption. Fruit is another article of exportation; the road-sides are planted with chestnuts and other fruit-trees. Tobacco, madder, and other dye stuffs, are grown successfully in the deep lands. In the mountain districts the people are employed in the care of cattle, in the woollen manufacture, and in the mines of copper and iron; the former of which yields annually about 980, the latter about 15,000 cwt. The manufactures, the cattle, and the flocks of the mountains constitute but a small part of the wealth of the Grand Duchy, which is, on the whole, a wine and corn country of the greatest fertility; the Province on the Rhine alone exporting annual produce to the amount of four millions of florins. Frankfort is the great market for all this produce, the Duchy having no commercial town of importance. Mentz, so fortunately situated for the trade of the Rhine and Maine, may, perhaps, revive under the present Government.

The population of Hesse-Darmstadt in 1822 was 681,760, and, probably, does not at present fall much short of 700,000. Of those 391,200 were of the Lutheran, and 157,800 of the Reformed, or Calvinistic Church; 108,300 Roman Catholics, 15,000 Jews, and some hundreds Mennonites and Waldenses. Among the Nobility are nine Princes and Counts, who held the rank of Sovereigns previous to the Confederation of the Rhine; all exemptions from taxes and feudal exactions are done away with; the inferior Nobles are allowed to convert their fiefs into allodial estates by the payment of a fine. Feudal servitude is abolished, and the peasantry are personally free. The Burghers enjoy some privileges, but they, as well as the agricultural class, are forbidden, by a law of 1813, to give their sons a learned education, unless they furnish proofs of what may be deemed sufficient wealth. Yet a good deal has been done of late to promote the instruction of the people. Besides the University at Giessen, there are Gymnasias at Darmstadt, Giessen, Mentz, and Worms; in Friedberg is a Seminary for teachers, and the Schools for the lower orders in the towns and villages are numerous and well conducted. The chief Libraries are those of Mentz and Darmstadt, each containing about 90,000 volumes; that of Giessen is of inferior magnitude.

From the year 1806, when the States, or National Assembly of Hesse-Darmstadt were put an end to by a decree, the Grand Duke ruled with absolute and undivided authority. The States of Hesse-Cassel and of Hesse-Darmstadt had always met together, and formed a single Assembly, but the changes which took place in the composition of those dominions at the period above-mentioned, dissolved a Constitution which was grounded on local customs. The Grand Duke had promised, conformably to the XIIIth article of the German Confederation, to give his people a representative Constitution, and fixed the 20th May, 1820, for its publication. On that day were convened the States, composed of the Prelates, the Nobility in three divisions, answering to the Rivers Lahn, Eder, and Schwalm, and the Burghers from 51 Towns. But the Assembly declared itself so little satisfied with the proffered Constitution, that the Government was obliged to withdraw it to be more liberally remodelled; when thus modified, it was again offered to the States, and accepted by them on the 17th of December.

The States are now divided into two Chambers, whose votes, however, are taken together when a measure accepted by the one is rejected by the other. In the first Chamber sit the Princes of the Ducal family, the chief Nobility, two Prelates, one Roman Catholic and one Protestant, the Chancellor of the University, and those whom the Grand Duke may think fit to name as members for life, not exceeding 10. The second Chamber is composed of 6 Deputies from the inferior Nobility, 10 Deputies from the Towns, Darmstadt and Mentz sending two, Giessen, Offenbach, Friedberg, Alsfeld, Worms, and Bingen only one each, and of 34 Representatives from the country, chosen by a very complicated form of election. The Members of the first Chamber must pay 300, those of the second 100 florins yearly in direct taxes. The proceedings of the Chambers must be printed, and a certain number of strangers

HESSE. may be admitted to witness the debates. A Landtag, or Convention of the Chambers, must be held every three years. The printed proceedings, of what may be called the Hessian Parliament, which in the first Session filled 10 volumes, excited an extraordinary interest in Germany, where so many evils in the social economy still remain to be corrected.

A new and complete code of laws, founded on the Austrian code, has been lately promulgated. The administration of justice appears to be prompt and impartial, although not guarded by any of the forms of a popular constitution.

Revenues, &c. The sum provided by the Chambers for the expenses of the State in 1826 was 5,816,982 florins. The public debt in 1821 was, according to Hassel, 11,288,000 florins, but in 1824 Crome stated its amount at 13 millions. The standing army is reduced to 8400 men. The Grand Duchy of Hesse holds the ninth place, and has three votes in the Diet of the Confederation.

Divisions. The Grand Duchy of Hesse is divided into three Provinces, that of Starkembourg, the Capital of which is Darmstadt; Upper Hesse, of which Giessen is the chief place; and the Province of Rhenish Hesse, in which are situated MENTZ and Worms.

Darmstadt. Darmstadt, the Capital of the Duchy, is built in an agreeable situation, on a rivulet of the same name. The old part of the Town is close, gloomy, and irregular. The new Town is well built, with clean, open streets, and some good edifices. Among these are distinguished the Ducal Palace, the Theatre, the Cathedral, containing the monuments of the reigning family, and the Riding-School, 320 feet in length, 152 in breadth, and 83 feet high; the roof is one of the greatest ever constructed without the support of pillars. In the Castle are the Royal Library, containing 90,000 volumes, a small but select Gallery of Pictures, and Cabinets of Antiquities and Natural History. The inhabitants are about 16,000 in number, and are chiefly supported by the expenditure of the Court and of the establishments appertaining to Government.

Giessen. Giessen, the chief Town of Upper Hesse, stands on the Lahn, at its junction with the Wieseck. The ramparts and walls are planted with trees, and converted into promenades, and some manufactures of wool and cotton employ a population of 7000 souls. A Protestant University, founded in 1607, and the only one in the Duchy, forms the chief title which Giessen has to distinction. The number of Professors is about 37, and that of the students approaches to 300. A public Library, Observatory, and Botanic Garden are connected with the University.

Worms. Worms, supposed to be the Borbetomagus of Ptolemy, the Capital of the Vangiones, is situated in the same Province as Mentz, higher up the Rhine, where this river first enters the territories of Hesse-Darmstadt. As ancient as that City, at one time of equal, or even greater importance, and as often ruined by contending armies, it has less perfectly recovered from the desolations of war. A splendid Cathedral, a considerable trade in wine, two yearly fairs of middling importance, and a population of 7000 souls, present but a faint shadow of the wealth and grandeur, the ruins of which lie scattered in all directions. 27 miles South South-West from Mentz.

W. Butte's Blick in die Hessen Darmstadtischen lande, Giessen, 1804; Survey of the Hessian States, in the Geograph. Ephemeriden, vol. xxi.; Statistical Tables of Hesse-Darmstadt, Darm. 1818.

HESSE-HOMBURG, one of the smallest of the Principalities composing the German Confederation. The Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg is a Prince of the House of Hesse-Darmstadt, and belongs to the Reformed sect of German Protestants. His dominions consist of two portions, Homburg in Wetteravia, a small territory, bounded by Nassau, the Electorate, and the Duchy of Hesse; and Meissenheim, at the West of the Rhine, surrounded by the territories of Prussia, Bavaria, and Lichtenberg. The whole superficial extent of both these districts, which are at least 150 miles asunder, does not exceed 140 square miles, and the subjects of this Sovereign are not above 21,000 in number. The little dominions of the Landgrave, however, are not deficient in natural produce or industry. Homburg, though mountainous, and comprising the Feldberg, 2700 feet in height, has numerous fruitful valleys, and is able to export both corn and cattle, besides linen, flannel, and wooden ware. Meissenheim, the larger and more populous district of the two, is also mountainous and equally productive. Some mines of coal, iron, and quicksilver add to its riches; but tillage is the general occupation of the inhabitants.

The Landgrave was admitted a Member of the Confederacy in 1817, and has one vote in plenum. He is not one of the few German Princes who have kept their promise, by granting their subjects the Representative Constitution as was stipulated in the Articles of Confederation. The administration of justice, the exercise of the legislative and executive powers, all depend immediately on him. Besides his immediate dominions, he possesses the domains of Winningen, Oesbisfeld, and Hotensleben, in Prussian Saxony, and from these estates he derives one-third of his revenue, the whole of which amounts to about 180,000 florins. The debt of the State is 450,000; the expenses are very trifling, as in the absence of a Constitution there is little delegated authority, few public offices, and no standing army.

Homburg, the Capital, stands in a fine situation on the Eschbach, and has a population of 3000 souls, whose subsistence is chiefly derived from the expenditure of the Court.

See the general authorities referred to under Hesse-Cassel.

HESSE
—
HEST.

Hesse
Homburg.

Divisions.

Produce.

Government, &c.

Homburg

HEST, Goth. haitan; A. S. hæt-an, hat-an; D. heten; Ger. heissen; vocare, dicere, jubere. See BE-HEST.

That which is named, said, ordered; the declared will; sc. in order, mandate, promise.

In R. Brunne, p. 586, the Ten Commandments are called the ten hestes.

VOL XXIII.

Ne that no man ys wurpe to be ycluped kyng,
Bote þe heȝe kȳnge of heuene; þat wroȝte al þyng,
þat haȝ heste of water, and of erþe al so.

R. Gloucester, p. 322.

Prelates ne no prestes, non of þam lyued wele,
þe did not Godde's hestes, bot brak þam ilk a dele.

R. Brunne, p. 65.

HEST.
—
HETERO
CLITE.

Maie none of hem withstonde her hestes,
Some parte thei shopen in to bestes.
Gower. Conf. Am. book vi. fol. 135.

All erthly kynges may know that theyr powers be vayne, and that none is worthy to haue the name of a kynge but he that hath all thynges subiecte to his hestes. Fabyan, vol. i. ch. 206.

Great God of might, that reignest in the mind,
And all the bodie to thy hest doost frame,
Victor of Gods, subduer of mankind.
Spenser. Hymne in honour of Loue.

And for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee
By helpe of her more potent ministers,
And in her most vnmittigable rage,
Into a clouen pyne.

Shakspeare. Tempest, fol. 4.

What is your name?
MIR. Miranda.—O my father,
I haue broke your hest to say so.

Id. Ib. fol. 11.

HETERARCHY, Gr. ἑτερος, another, and ἀρχή, government.

The government of another, a stranger, a foreigner.

It is a joy to think we have a king of our owne. Our owne blood, our owne religion; according to the motto of our princes (Ich Dien):
otherwise, next to anarchy is eterarchy.

Hall. Sermon. Christ and Cæsar.

HETEROCERUS, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous, Coleopterous insects, established by Bosc, belonging to the family of Clavicornes.

Generic character. Tarsi short, having four distinct joints folded on the outer side of the legs, which are triangular, spinous, or ciliated, especially the two front ones, which are formed for digging.

These insects live in damp, sandy places, near the margins of pools. Their larvæ, which have been described by Meigen, also live in similar places.

The type of the genus is H. marginatus, Bosc, well figured by Panzer, Faun. Germ. fig. 11, 12. Found in Europe.

HETEROCLITE, n. Gr. ἑτερόκλητος; Lat. heteroclitus; Fr. heteroclite; adj. heteroclitus; Fr. heteroclite; HETEROCLITICAL, It. and Sp. heteroclitico; from ἑτερος, another, and κλίτος, declination, or declension, from κλίν-ειν.

"An heteroclite, or declined otherwise than the common nownes be." Minshew. And the adj., generally, Irregular; not consistent with or conforming to rule, or order; disorderly.

There are strange heteroclitites in religion now-a-days; among whom, some of them may be said to endeavour the exalting of the kingdom of Christ, in lifting it upon Beelzebub's back, by bringing in so much profaneness to avoid superstition.

Howell. Letter 35. book iv.

Mad, phranticke, foolish, heteroclitites, which no new hospitall can hold, no physicke helpe.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 76. To the Reader.

It is a just and general complaint, that indexes for the most part are heteroclitites, I mean, either redundant, in what is needless, or defective in what is needful. Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

For of sins heteroclitical; and such as want either name or president, there is oft times a sin even in their histories.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book vii. ch. xix.

I count it not irrational to think that things primary and heteroclitite, as also by a parity of reason, some things immaterial and supernatural, may be sufficiently proved in their kind, if there be such a positive proof of them, as would be competent and satisfactory.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 174. Considerations about the Reconcilableness of Reason and Religion.

Sir Toby Matthews, one of those heteroclitite animals who finds his place any where.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. p. 220.

HETERODENDRON, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphia, order Polyandria, natural order Terebinthaceæ. Generic character: calyx persisting, four or five cleft; corolla none, anthers two-celled; capsules two to four angled, two to four celled; style nearly obsolete.

One species, H. oleæfolium, native of New Holland.

HE'TERODOX, n. Fr. heterodoxe; It. etero-
HE'TERODOX, adj. } dosso; Sp. heterodoxo; Gr.
HE'TERODOXY. } ἑτερόδοξος, one who is of another opinion, from ἕτερος, another, and δόξα, an opinion.

An opinion otherwise than or different from; (sc. the commonly prevailing or established opinion.)

On Thursday morning we had another session, in which was nothing done, but that it was reasoned whether that last heterodox should be retained.

Hales. Remains. Dr. Balcanqual's Letter from the Synod of Dort, &c.

But such, it seems, was the temper of those times, that he was not only dispensed withal as to this, but also as to another heterodoxy of his, concerning the resurrection.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. i.

This order, thus subjoined to the admonition, that was to be set up in every church, and so the more obvious to be read by all the priests and curates, as well as others, was doubtless to hinder raw and indigested heterodox preaching.

Strype. Life of Archbishop Parker, Anno 1560.

So that had our Saviour answered otherwise, he had, we may suppose, been taxed with ignorance and unskilfulness, perhaps also of error and heterodoxie.

Barrow. Sermon 23. vol. i.

That singular character [Doctor Sacheverel] took it into his head to disturb the doctor while he was in his pulpit venting some doctrine contrary to the opinion of that heterodox man.

Pennant. London, p. 258.

Heterodoxy was to a Jew but another word for disloyalty; and a zeal to see the rigour of the law executed on that crime, was the honour of a Jewish subject.

Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Sermon 20.

HE'TEROGENE, Fr. heterogene; It. eterogeneo; Sp. heterogeneo; HETEROGENE'NEAL, Gr. ἑτερόγονος, from ἕτερος, another, and γένος, kind.
HETEROGENE'ITY, Of another kind; unlike,
HETEROGENE'NEOUS, dissimilar, in kind or nature.
HETEROGENE'NEOUSLY,
HETEROGENE'NEOUSNESS.

Know you the sapor pontick? calcine?

Or, what is homogene, or heterogene?

Ben Jonson. The Alchemist, act ii. sc. 5.

Wherefore, either the two little parts of different elements do not become one body; or if they do, we must agree 'tis by the nature of quantity, which works as much in heterogeneous parts as homogeneous.

Digby. Of Bodies, ch. xiv.

And the reason why iron comes to a loadstone more efficaciously than another loadstone doth, is, because loadstones generally are more impure than iron is (as being a kind of oar or mine of iron) and have other extraneous and heterogeneous natures mix'd with them: whereas iron receives the loadstone's operation in its whole substance.

Id. Ib. ch. xx.

A strange chimera of beasts and men,
Made up of pieces heterogene;
Such as in nature never met
In eodem subjecto yet.

Butler. Hudibras, part i. can. 3.

And there being no conceivable convenience at all in the heterogeneity of parts, I think the conclusion is not rash, if we averre that the immediate matter of efformation of the foetus is either accurately homogeneous, or if there be any heterogeneity of parts in it, that it is only by accident; and that it makes no more of the first work of

HETERO-
CLITE.

HETERO-
GENE.

HETERO-GENE. cformation or organization of the matter, then those atomes of dust that light on the limner's colours make to the better drawing of the picture.
More. Antidote against Atheism, ch. ii. sec. 8. Appendix.

HETERO-TRICHUM. Because it belongs to a multitude of associations, and seems to differ from texture, with which it hath so much affinity, as perhaps to be reducible to it, in this, that always in mixtures, but not still in textures, there is required a heterogeneity of the component parts.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 298. The History of particular Qualities.

Let a liquor in any vessel look never so clear and transparent upwards, yet if there be the least settlement, or heterogeneous matter in any part of it, shake it thoroughly, and it will be sure to show itself.
South. Sermons, vol. vi. p. 234.

Courtier and patriot cannot mix
Their het'rogenous politics
Without an effervescence,
Like that of salts, with lemon juice
Which does not yet like that produce
A friendly coalescence.

Cowper. Friendship.

They [the houses] are small, and by the necessity of accumulating stores, where there are so few opportunities of purchase, the rooms are very heterogeneously filled.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

Dissimilitude of style, and heterogeneousness of sentiments, may sufficiently shew that a work does not really belong to the reputed author.

Id. General Observations on Shakspeare's Plays.

HETERONOMA, in Botany, a genus of the class Ocandria, order Monogynia, natural order Melastomaceæ. Generic character: calyx tubular, four-toothed, persisting; corolla, petals four, ovate, slightly awned; capsules four-celled, equal to the calyx; seeds compressed, striated.

One species, H. diversifolia, native of Mexico.

HETEROPOGON, in Botany, a genus of the class Monocia, order Triandria, natural order Gramineæ. Generic character: spike simple; male flower, calyx two-valved; corolla two-valved, awnless, interior valves bristled; nectary two-lobed, turgid: female flower, two-valved, corolla two-valved, one of the valves thick, awned, awn very long, hairy.

Two species, H. glaber, native of Italy, and H. hirtus, native of the East Indies.

HETEROPTERIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Trigynia, natural order Malpighiaceæ. (Decandolle.) Generic character: calyx five-parted, two melliferous pores at the base; corolla, petals roundish, with claws; filaments cohering at the base, seed-vessel a three-celled Samara, the wings the reverse of those of the genus Bannisteria, to which this genus is allied.

Thirteen species, natives of the West Indies.

HETEROSPERMUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Superflua. Generic character: calyx double, exterior four-parted; interior many-leaved; receptacle naked, seeds exteriorly compressed, margin membranaceous, interior oblong, two-awned.

Two species, natives of South America.

HETEROSTEMON, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphia, order Triandria, natural order Leguminosæ. Generic character: calyx four-leaved, coalescing into a slender tube; corolla, petals three, inserted into the throat of the calyx; the three inferior stamens fertile; pod flat on both sides, attenuated, many-seeded.

One species, H. mimosoides, a tree, native of Brazil.

HETEROTRICHUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Monogynia, natural order Melastomaceæ. Generic character: calyx tubular, border five to eight cleft; apex of the segments elongated; corolla, petals five to eight; berry five to eight celled, crowning the calyx.

Five species, natives of the Island of Santo Domingo and South America.

HETHING. Hearne says, Mockery; Tyrwhitt, Contempt. Perhaps haughting, i. e. haughtiness.

Alle is thi heþing fallen upon the.

R. Brunne, p. 273.

Alas (quod John) the day that I was borne!
Now are we driven til hething and til scorne.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4108.

HEUCHERA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Digynia, natural order Saxifragæ. Generic character: corolla, petals five, capsule two-beaked, two-celled.

Five species, natives of North America. Persoon.

HEW. See HUE.

HEW, v. } A. S. heaw-ian, ahew-ian; D. houw-
HEW, n. } en, hauwen; Ger. hauwen; Sw. hugga;
HE'WER. } secare, to cut or hack, with any kind of instrument, (says Wachter,) a sword, an axe, a hatchet. It is commonly employed when some degree of force is used.

To cut, to hack, to chop: to form or frame by cutting.

þei hewe on þe paiens, as men of wille gode.
þe paiens ageýn þam full stifely þei stode.

R. Brunne, p. 17.

Wel coude he hewen wood, and water bere,
For he was yonge and mighty.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1424.

If he that once encountred with his foes
In open field at sound of blasted trumpe,
Doe dare to yeelde his hewed head to bloes,
And goe again to heare the canons thumpe.

Turbervile. To the Rayling Route of Sycophants.

And then he bylte the inner courte wyth thre rowes of hewed stone, and one rowe of cedar woode.

Bible, Anno 1551. 3 Kynges, ch. vi.

And Salomon tolde out foure score thousand men to hewe [stones] in the mountaines.

Geneva Bible, Anno 1561. 2 Chronicles, ch. ii. v. 2.

And Josua made them that same daye hewers of wood and drawers of water vnto the congregacyon, and vnto the aulter of God vnto thys daye, in the place whiche God should chose.

Bible, Anno 1551. Josua, ch. ix.

For, all for praise and honour he did fight,
Both striken strike, and beaten both doe beat,
That from their shields forth flieth fire light,
And helmets, hewen deepe, show marks of either's might.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 5.

They hew'd their helmes, and plates asunder brake,
As they had potshares bene.

Id. Ib. book vi. can. 1

Then to the rest his wrathfull hand he bends:

Of whom he makes such hauocke and such hew
That swarms of damned soules to hell he sends.

Id. Ib. book vi. can. 8.

There lies our way; be thou upon the guard,
And look around, while I securely go;
And hew a passage through the sleeping foe.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, book ix

Him in a hundred parts Astolpho hews,
As oft his sever'd frame itself renews.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, book xv.

HEXADICA, in Botany, a genus of the class Monocia, order Pentandria. Generic character: male flower, calyx five-leaved; corolla, petals five: female flower, calyx six-leaved; corolla none; stigmas six; capsule six-celled, one-seeded.

One species, a moderate-sized tree, native of the woods of Cochinchina. Loureiro.

HEXA-GON.
—
HEXA-POD.

HE'XAGON, } Fr. hexagone; It. and Sp. hexa-
HEXA'GONAL, } gono; Lat. hexagonos; Gr. ἑξαγώνος,
HEXA'GONY. } from ἕξ, six, and γωνία, an angle.
A figure with six angles, and, consequently, six sides.

And besides, that salt dissolved upon fixation returns to its affected cubes, the regular figures of minerals, as the hexagonal of crystal, the hemispherical of the fairy-stone, the stellar figure of the stone asteria, and such like, seem to look with probability upon this way of formation.
Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. v.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I, therefore, conclude that they were mathematicians?
Bishop Bramhall against Hobbes.

For the space about any point may be filled up either by six equilateral triangles, or four squares, or three hexagons; whereas three pentagons are too little, and three heptagons too much.

Ray. On the Creation, part i.

With that prodigious geometrical subtilty do those little animals work their deep hexagonal cells, the only proper figure that the best mathematician could choose for such a combination of houses.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book iv. ch. xiii.

It is well known to mathematicians, that there is not a fourth way possible, in which a plane may be cut in little spaces that shall be equal, similar, and regular, without leaving any interstices. Of the three, the hexagon is the most proper, both for conveniency and strength. Bees, as if they knew this, make their cells regular hexagons.

Reid. Essay 3. part i. ch. ii. Of Instinct.

HEXA'METER, n. } Fr. and Sp. hexametre; It.
HEXA'METER, adj. } essametro; Gr. ἑξάμετρος, from ἕξ, six, and μέτρον, a measure.

A measure, or a verse measuring or consisting of six feet.

His request to Diana in an hexastich, and her answer in an ogdoastich, hexameters and pentameters, discovered to him in a dream, with his sacrifices and ritual ceremonies, are in the British story.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 1. note by Selden.

When Dorus, desiring in a secret manner to speak of their cases, perchance the parties intended might take some light of it, making low reverence to Zelmane, began this provoking song in hexameter verse unto her.

Sidney. Arcadia, book i.

Now, that songs or ditties to be sung unto stringed instruments, were composed in old time of hexameter verses, Timotheus giveth us to understand.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 1018.

The English verse, which we call heroick, consists of no more than ten syllables; the Latin hexameter sometimes rises to seventeen.

Dryden. Works, vol. iii. p. 220. On the Origin and Progress of Satire.

Were we to judge every production by the rigorous rules of nature, we should reject the Iliad of Homer, the Aeneid of Virgil, and every celebrated tragedy of antiquity, and the present times, because there is no such thing in nature as an Hector or Turnus talking in hexameter or an Othello in blank verse.

Goldsmith. Essay 13.

HEXANGULAR, having six angles.

The base was hexangular, finely ornamented with Gothic sculpture Pennant. Tour, p. 217.

HEXANTHUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: flowers umbellate; common calyx six-leaved; no partial calyx; corolla six-parted; berry one-seeded.

A tree, native of the mountains of Cochinchina; the wood is used for building. Loureiro.

HEXAPOD, Gr. ἑξαπόδης, having six feet, from ἕξ, six, and πόδες, feet.

For I take those to have been the hexapodes from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapodes are at this day eaten in our American plantations, as I am informed by my good friend Dr. Hans Sloane, who also presented me with a glass of them, preserved in spirits of wine.

Ray. On the Creation, part ii.

Mr. Jessop (another very judicious, curious, and ingenious gentleman) saw hexapodes vomited up by a girl; which hexapodes lived and fed for five weeks.

Derham. Physico-Theology, book viii. ch. vi. note 12.

HEXASTICK, Gr. ἑξαστήχος, having, or consisting of, six verses; from ἕξ, six, and στήχος, a verse. See HEXAMETER ante, for an example from Selden's Notes on Drayton.

I will conclude with that famous hexastic which Sannazzaro made of this great city, which pleaseth me much better.

Howell. Letter 36. book i. sec. 1.

Dryden on this occasion was a subscriber, and furnished Tonson with a well-known hexastick, which has ever since generally accompanied the engraved portraits of Milton.

Malone. Life of Dryden, p. 205.

HEXODON, in Zoology, a genus of Pentamerous, Coleopterous insects, belonging to the family Scarabæidæ, established by Olivier.

Generic character. Jaws strongly toothed, arched at their extremity; outer edge of the lip apparent; club of the antennæ small, oval; body nearly circular; outer edge of the elytra dilated and grooved. They live on the leaves of trees and shrubs, and their larvæ are unknown.

The type of the genus is H. reticulatum, figured by Olivier, pl. vii. fig. 1. Found by Commerson at Madagascar.

HEXT, high or hegh, heghest, heghst, hext. In the same manner, (adds Mr. Tyrwhitt,) next is formed from negh.

Tuelf ger he hyleuede þo here wyth nobieye ynow,
And hexte men of mony londes aboute hym vaste drou.

R. Gloucester, p. 180.

For the first apple and the hext
Which growth vnto you next
Hath thre vertues notable.

Chaucer. Dreame, fol. 357.

HEY-DAY, } An interjection (says Skinner) of HE'YDEGUIES. } wonder or admiration, q. d. high-day.
O festum diem, i. e. lætum et felicem: an Etymology much at variance with the common usage of the word: but see HIGH-DAYS, in v. HIGH.

The Glossarist to Spenser calls heydeguies "A countrey dance or round. The conceipt is, that the Graces and nymphs do daunce unto the Muses and Pan his musicke all night by moonelight: to signify the pleasantnesse of the soyle." The folio Spenser (1610) in the text reads gives, in the note guies. The reading of Dr. Percy below seems to point to the only plausible Etymology.

GROOM. Hey-da! what Hans Flutterkin is this? what Dutchman doe's build or frame castles in the aire?

Ben Jonson. The Masque of Augures.

But friendly Faeries, met with many graces,
And lightfoote Nymphs can chase the lingring night,
With heydeguies, and trimly trodden traces,
Which sisters nine, which dwelle on Parnasse hight,
Do make them musick, for their more delight.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. June.

And whiles the nimble Cambrian rills
Dance hy-da-gies amongst the hills,
The Muse them to Camarden brings.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 5. Arg.

By wells and rills in meadowes greene,
We nightly dance our hey-day guise;
And to our fairye king and queene,
We chant our moone-light minstrelsies.

Robin Goodfellow, in Percy, vol. iii. fol. 206.

HEYTESBURY, or HEITESBURY, corruptly called Hatchbury, a Borough, and formerly a Market Town in Wiltshire, traditionally the residence of the Empress Maud during her contest with Stephen, is situated in a valley on the South-Western edge of Salisbury Plain. The town consists principally of one long wide street, rebuilt, for the most part, after a fire in 1766. The Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient Norman

HEXA-STICK.
—
HEYTES-BURY.

HEYTES-BURY.
—
HIA-
TELLA.

building, with a tower at the intersection of the nave and transept. It was formerly collegiate; and still has four Prebends, Hill Deverille, Horningsham, Tidring-ton, and Swalecliffe, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, attached to it. The only other public build-ings are an Almshouse, and an ancient endowed Hos-pital for aged persons. Heytesbury is a Borough by prescription, and has returned two Members to Parlia-ment since the 27th Henry VI. The neighbourhood abounds with British, Roman, Danish, and Saxon Antiquities, which may be found described in the col-lections of Mr. Cunnington and Sir Richard Colt Hoare. Population, in 1821, 1329, many of whom are engaged in woollen manufactures. Distant from Warminster 4 miles, and from London 92.

HIANS, from hiare, to gape, Lacep.; Anastome, Illig. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Cultriostres, order Grallæ, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak longer than the head, thick, compressed; mandibles separated in the middle from each other, and only touching at the base and tip; upper mandible nearly straight, swelling towards the tip, grooved at the base, and notched at the point; lower mandible convex downwards in the middle, its point having the edges inclined inwards; nostrils near the base lineal, lateral; legs long and slender, in part naked; the three front toes united by a short mem-brane, the hind toe half the length of the others, articu-lated on the inside and above them; the first and second quills nearly equal in size and the longest of all.

This genus was separated from the Herons by Illiger, on account of the open space between the middle of the mandibles, and named by him in consequence Ana-stomus. This circumstance is considered by Cuvier as depending upon the wearing away of the edges of the horn from use; but this can hardly be the case, the formation of the beak being so constant. These birds nearly resemble the Storks in their mode of living; they are found on the banks of rivers and marshes, into which they enter, but never attempt to swim.

Two species are found, the

H. Typus, Lacep.; A. Typus, Tem.; Indian Anastome. From India, which is the same as the Ardea Coroman-deliana of Latham and Sonnerat; and the A. Pondice-riana of Latham is the same bird in its first year's plumage. The other is the

H. Lamelligerus, Lacep.; A. Lamelligera, Tem.; Afri-can Anastome. Which is remarkable for the elongation of the shafts of the feathers of the neck, belly, and thighs, by a shining black broad cartilaginous plate at the tip of each, which resembles the feathers of G. Sonneratii.

See Cuvier, Règne Animal; Illiger, Prodromus Mam-malium et Avium; Temminck, Planches Coloriées.

HIATELLA, in Zoology, a genus of bivalve free boring shells; established by Daudin, nearly related to Saxicava, and confounded with Solen by Linnæus and Lamarck.

Generic character. Shell bivalve, transverse, equi-valved; nucleus sub-anterior, rather convex; hinges with one or two short, conical, diverging teeth in each valve; ligaments external, marginal.

The type of the genus is the Solen minutus of Lin-næus; the H. arctica of Lamarck; and H. monoptera of Daudin.

Bruguiere placed this genus with Cardita, and La-marck places it near that genus; it is very nearly allied to Saxicava, and only differs from it in having small teeth. The two animals are exactly similar, like most shells which live in holes.

HIA'TION, } Lat. hiare; Gr. χάειν, to open, to HIA'TUS. } gape.

An opening, a gaping.

A second is the continued hiation or holding open its mouth, which men observing, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iii. ch. xxi.

I shall endeavour to fill this hiatus by producing an almost entire chronologic series of paintings from the time to Henry VII. when Mr. Vertue's notes recommence.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, &c. vol. i. p. 36.

M. with a rudiment of a tooth within one shell; with an oval and large hiatus opposite to the hinge.

Pennant. British Zoology. The May-gaper.

HIBBERTIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Poly-andria, order Digynia, natural order Dilleniaceæ. Generic character: calyx five-leaved, becoming after-wards the fruit; petals five, deciduous; capsules, three to twelve, glomerated.

Two species, elegant climbing plants, natives of New South Wales.

HIBE'RNAL, } Lat. hibernus, from hyems, winter, HIBERNA'TION. } from Gr. χειμα (Voss.) ἁπὸ τῆς χέειν, quod nempe pluvias fundat; because it pours forth rains

Wintry; of or pertaining to winter.

Were there any such effectual heat in this star [the dog-star], yet could it but weakly evidence the same in summer; it being about 40 degrees distant from the sun; and should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hybernal conversion.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iv. ch. xiii.

There might a constant stream of fresh and untainted [air] be let in and issue out as freely, and that so qualified in its intermediate composition, as should be very agreeable to the nature and constitu-tion of the several plants that were to pass their hybernation in the green-house.

Evelyn. Kalendarium Hortense. A New Conservatory.

HIBISCUS, in Botany, a genus of the class Monadelphica, order Polyandria, natural order Malvaceæ. Generic character: calyx double, the exterior many-leaved; stigmas five; capsule five-celled, many-seeded.

A genus containing nearly one hundred species. Natives of both hemispheres. Most of the species produce large handsome flowers; some of hardy sorts are often cultivated in gardens. H. Syriacus, the Althæa frutex of gardeners, is a native of Syria.

HICCIUS DOCTIUS, an unintelligible term (says the editor of Hudibras) used by jugglers. Mr. Brande thinks it corrupted from Hic est doctus; words with which the appearance of the Catholic priests in the assemblies of the people was in old times announced.

An old dull sot, who told the clock,
For many years at Bridewell-dock,
At Westminster, and Hick's-Hall,
And hiccus-doctus play'd in all.

Hudibras, part iii. can. 3. l. 580.

HICCOUGH, variously written, hicket, or hicquet, hick-hop, hiccup, and hiccough; D. hicken, hicksen; Ger. hixen; Sw. hicka; which the Etymologists agree are words formed from the sound. And see YEX.

And so it is also of good signality, according to that of Hippocrates, that sneezing cureth the hicket.

Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errors, book iv. ch. ix.

HIA-TELLA.
—
HIC-COUGH.

HICKET. The same portion taken likewise with bonied vinegar hot, allaieth the convulsion of the stomach, proceeding from excessive yexing or hicquets. Holland. Plinie, book xxxii. ch. ix.

HIDE.

He shall be a knight, a baron; or by some false accusation, as they do to such as have the hickhop, to make them forget it.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 549.

Quoth he, "To bid me not to love
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up
Or (when I'm in a fit) to hiccup."

Hudibras, part ii. can. 1.

Some are freed from the hiccough, by being told of some feigned ill news or even of some other things, that but excites a great attention of mind. Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. lxxxiii. The Life.

HIDALGO, or, as formerly written, Fidalgo; quasi hijos d'algo, son of somebody; the Spanish title for all of gentle blood, to which many privileges are attached.

HIDE, A. S. hida, et hyda; Scotch, hilda, from A. S. hyd-an, tegere, to cover; Scotch, hilden, to cover. Hyd among the A. S. was the same as tectum among the Latins; and hyde-lands were lands annexed, or appertaining, ad hydum seu tectum. Spelman.

See CARUCATE.

Hou moný plou lond, and hou moný hyden also, &c.

R. Gloucester, p. 374.

Of ech hyde of Engeland þre ssýllýnges he nom þo.

Id. p. 434.

þe þrid poynt þei wild, to suere he was dryuen,
þat þe Danegelde for euer suld be forgyuen,
& of ilk a hide tuo schillýnges þat he toke
Suld neuer eft betide, he suore on þe boke.

R. Brunne, p. 110.

The whole land (was) formerly divided, either by Alfred the Great or some other precedent king, into 243,600 hides or plough lands; and according to this division were the military and other charges of the kingdom impos'd and proportion'd.

Spelman. On Feuds and Tenures, &c. ch. viii.

The Normans also changed the name of an hyde of land, and call'd it Carruc, a plough land. Id. Ib. ch. xxvii.

HIDE, } A. S. hydan; D. hoeden, hueden; Ger.
HIDER, } hueten; celare, abscondere, occultare, and HIDING. } consequently tegere; whence probably the hide of an animal, q. v.

To conceal, to cover from the sight, to secrete.

Hii, þat myzte of scapýe, vaste flowe þere
To Walýs, and to Cornwayle, and hude hem vor fere.

R. Gloucester, p. 226.

Saynt Cutberte's clerkes in hidnes euer gede,
At Geruans set þer merkes, a house þe gan vspede.

R. Brunne, p. 77.

Menye of þe bryddes
Hudden and heleden, durneliche here egges
For no foul sholde hem fynde.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 223.

The kyngdom of hevenes is lyk to tresour hid in a feeld, which a man that fyndith, hidith, and for ioye of it, he goith & sellith alle thingis that he hath and byeth thilke felde.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. xiii.

The kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto treasure hydde in the feld, the which a man fyndeth & hydeth: and for ioye therof goeth & selleth al that he hath, and bieth that felde.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Be not seen fastynge to men, but to the fadir that is in hidlis, and thi fadir that seeth in hidlis schal yelde to thee.

Wiclif. Matthew, ch. v.

For if the tiller of the field, ne dolue not in the yearth, and if the hider of the gold, ne had hid the gold in that place, the gold ne had not been found. Chaucer. Boecius, book v. fol. 235.

For sothfastnes wol none hidings.

Id. The Romant of the Rose.

And (his) brightnes was as the light: he had hornes [comming] out of his hands, and there was the hiding of his power.

Bible, Anno 1583.

But when I me awake, and find it but a dreame,
The anguish of my former wo beginneth more extreme;
And me tormenteth so, that unneath may I find,
Some hidden place, wherein to slake the gnawing of my mind.
Surrey. Complaint of the Absence of her Lover, &c.

A lovely ladie rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly asse more white then snow;
Yet she much whiter; but the same did hide
Under a vele, that wimpled was full low.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 1.

Whoe'er would English monuments survey,
In other records may our courage know:
But let them hide the story of this day,
Whose fame was blemish'd by too base a foe.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, st. 196.

Or else some hiding hole he seeks,
For fear the rest should say he squeaks.
Swift. The Storm.

From where our saplings rise, our flow'rets bloom,
The song shall teach, in clear preceptive notes,
How best to frame the fence, and best to hide
All its foreseen defects; defective still,
Tho' hid with happiest art.

Mason. The English Garden, book ii.

The country, forest or marsh; the habitations, cottages; the cities, hiding-places in woods; the people naked, or only covered with skins; their sole employment, pasturage and hunting.

Burke. An Abridgment of English History, book i. ch. xi.

HIDE, } A. S. hyde; D. haude, huyd; Ger.
HIDE-BOUND, } haut; pellis, cutis, corium, probably HIDE-DRESS. } from the A. S. hyd-an, (see HIDE, ante.) to cover, to protect.

That which covers or protects; sc. the flesh, the body; usually applied to a thick, hairy skin.

So þat hii ete
Her hors, & her huden ek.

R. Gloucester, p. 404.

Of the hides of beasts being tanned, they vse to shape for themselves light, but impenetrable armour.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 21. The Cinque Ports.

No sooner was out, but, swifter then thought,
Fast by the hyde the wolfe Lowder caught.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. September.

The chief trade of this place consisteth of sugar and ginger, which groweth in the island, and hides of oxen and kine, which in this waste country of the island are bred in infinite numbers.

Sir Francis Drake. A West Indian Voyage, fol. 24.

Their horses, no other than lame jades and poore hidebound hildings.

Holland. Livius, fol. 415.

How some in feathers, or a ragged hide,
Have liv'd a second life, and different natures try'd.
Addison. To Dryden.

Between their horns the salted barley threw,
And with their heads to heaven the victims slew:
The limbs they sever from th' enclosing hide;
The thighs selected to the gods divide.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book i.

Mr. Henshaw mentioned a way of shaking off the mildew from the ears of corn, by a rope drawn over the tops of them by two men at either end of it; which mildew was found to make the corn hidebound.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 483. Letters to Mr. Boyle.

The body is covered with a strong hide exactly resembling black leather, destitute of scales, but marked with the appearance of them.

Pennant. British Zoology. Coriaceous Tortoise.

Nor were they even startled at the report of a musquet; till, one day, upon their endeavouring to make us sensible that their arrows and spears could not penetrate their hide-dresses, one of our gentlemen shot a musquet ball through one of them, folded six times.

Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. book iv. ch. iii.

HIDEIOUS, } Fr. hideux. Probably from the HIDEIOUSLY, } A. S. hyd-an, to hide. It was for-HIDEIOUSNESS. } merly written hidous. That (says

HIDE
HIDEIOUS.

HIDEOUS. Skinner) which any one would by every means avoid, and even hide himself from.

HIE. Frightful, horrible, excessively ugly; odious or hateful.

þe kyng did mak right gære an hidous engyn,
þe name þei cald Ludgare or Lurdare of Striuelyn.
R. Brunne, p. 326.

This world (he said) in lesse than in an houre
Shal al be dreint, so hidous is the shoure;
Thus shal mankinde drenche, and lese hir lif.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3520.

The brighte swerdes wenten to and fro
So hidousty, that with the leste stroke
It semed that it would felle an oke.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1704.

If your men decay by sickenes or by sworde, if vitaill faile, or if money wax scante, if the winde turne contrary, or an hideous tempeste arise, you shall be destitute of aide, prouisiō and treasure.
Hall. Henry V. The second Yere.

Of stature huge and hideous he was,
Like to a giant for his monstrous hight,
And did in strength most sorts of men surpas,
Ne ever any found his match in might.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 11.

For she was scarcely safely put on shore,
But that the skies (O wond'rous to behold!)
O'erspread with lightning hideously do roar,
The furious winds with one another scold.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Magellane was not altogether deceived, in naming of them giants; for they generally differ from the common sort of men, both in stature, bignesse, and strength of body, as also in the hideousnesse of their voice; but yet they are nothing so monstrous, or giantlike as they were reported.

Sir Francis Drake. The World Encompassed, fol. 28.

Then wasteful, forth
Walks the dire power of pestilent disease:
A thousand hideous fiends her course attend
Sick nature blasting, and to heartless woe,
And feeble desolation, casting down
The towering hopes and all the pride of man.
Thomson. Summer.

They (out of a wanton mind, but in effect profanely and sacrilegiously) have attributed to her divers swelling and vain names, divers scandalously unsavoury, some hideously blasphemous titles and elogies, as alluding to, so intrenching upon the incommunicable prerogatives of God Almighty, and of our blessed Saviour.

Barrow. Sermon 24. vol. ii.

The war-dance consists of a great variety of violent motions and hideous contortions of the limbs, during which the countenance also performs its part.

Cook. Voyages, vol. ii. book ii. ch. x.

Does he want to be satisfied of the sincerity of our humiliation to France, who has seen his free, fertile, and happy city and state of Bologna, the cradle of regenerated law, the seat of sciences and of arts, so hideously metamorphosed, whilst he was crying to Great Britain for aid, and offering to purchase that aid at any price?

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

HIE, v. or
HIGH,
HIE, n.
HI'GHING,
HI'GHINGLY. } A. S. hig-an, festinare; to hie, to make haste or speed. Somner.
To hasten, or make haste; to use speed, to move quickly.

þys erchebyssop was adrad welsore, þo he awok;
He hjed to þe kyng.
R. Gloucester, p. 240.

For hunger hyderwardes. hyeþ hym faste.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 146.

Ich highed to her house. to herken of more.
Id. Ib. sig. B. iiii.

Highe [Festina] thou to come to me soone.
Wiclif. 2 Tymothe, ch. iv.

And thei hyghynge camen and founden Marye and Joseph; and the yong child in a cracche.
Id. Luke, ch. ii.

And whanne thei hadden take a maundement of hym to Silas and to Tymothe that ful hyghynge (quam celeriter) thei schulden come to hym thei wenten forth.
Wiclif. Dedis, ch. xvii.

The steward bit the spices for to hie
And eke the win, in all this melodie.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10605.

But in his blacke clothes sorewefully
He came at his commandement on hie.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2981.

And sayd hem certain, but he might have grace,
To han Custance, within a litel space,
He n'as but ded, and charged hem in hie
To shapen for his lif som remedie.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4627.

— To ship, goe euery wight
Then was but hie that hie might,
And to the barge methought echone
They went.
Id. Dreame.

Then the steward, syr Kadore,
A nobul letter made he thore,
And wrowghte hit all with gode.
He wrowghte hit yn hyghynge,
And sent hit to his lorde the kyng,
That gentyll was of blode.
Emare, l. 511. In Ritson, vol. ii. p. 225.

CUD. Then blow your pypes, shepherds, till you be at home;
The night higheth fast, yts time to be gone.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. August.

Forth his journey this Jonathas held,
And as he his looke about him cast,
Another tree from afarre he beheld
To which he hasted, and him hied fast.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe. Eclogue 1.

— And at his warning,
Whether in sea or fire, in earth or ayre,
Th' extrauagant, and erring spirit hies
To his confine.
Shakspeare. Hamlet, fol. 153.

Who with sweet smiles paternal soon redress'd
His troublous thoughts, and clear'd each sad surmise;
Then turns his ready steed and on his journey hies.
West. Education.

HIERACIUM, in Botany, a genus of the class Syn- genesia, order Æqualis, natural order Cichoraceæ. Generic character: calyx imbricated, ovate, receptacle naked, sometimes slightly hairy; down simple, sessile.

An extensive genus, of which more than one hundred and fifty species are already known, natives of the Northern hemisphere. There are eighteen species, natives of England, figured in the English Botany.

HIERARCH, } Fr. hierarchie; It. and Sp. hie-
HI'ERARCHY, } rarchia; Lat. hierarchia; Gr.
HIERA'RCHAL, } ιεραρχία, from ιερός, sacred, and HIERA'RCHICAL. } ἀρχή, a government.

A sacred principality, a holy government; say Minshew and Cotgrave.

Hierarch, the chief or head of such principality or government; of a holy or sacred order.

That Musike, with his heauenly harmonie,
Do not allure, a heauenly mind from heauen,
Nor set men's thoughts, in worldly melodie,
Till heauenly hierarchies be quite forgot.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glass.

— The princely hierarch,
In their bright stand there left his powers, to seise
Possession of the garden.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 220.

— Hee together calls,
Or several one by one, the Regent powers,
Under him Regent, tells, as he was taught,
That the Most High commanding, now ere night,
Now ere dim night had disincumber'd heav'n,
The great hierarchal standard was to move.
Id. Ib. book v. l. 101.

HIE.
—
HIER-ARCH.

HIER-ARCHY.

When S. Paul reckoned the œconomy of hierarchy, he reckons not Peter first, and then the apostles; but first apostles, secondarily prophets, &c. And whatsoever is first either is before all things, or at least nothing is before it.

Taylor. Liberty of Prophecy, sec. 7.

They declared, "That that hierarchical government was evil, and justly offensive, and burdensome to the kingdom, a great impediment to reformation and growth of religion; very prejudicial to the state and government of the kingdom, and that they were resolv'd that the same should be taken away."

Clarendon. History of the Rebellion, book vi.

In the old Levitical hierarchy it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices, to cleanse the vessels, to scour the flesh-forks, to sweep the Temple, and carry the filth and rubbish to the brook Kidron.

South. Sermons, vol. i. p. 173.

Being a people under an hierarchical government, and the subjects of a sovereign who has all nature under his controul, and can direct every event according to the good pleasure of his will, national prosperity and national adversity were continually placed before them, as the rewards or punishments of obedience or rebellion.

Cogan. Works, vol. iv. p. 120. On the Jewish Dispensation.

It was with a Tract, attributed to Dionysius the Areopagite, that the classification of Angels in nine Orders and three HIERARCHIES originated: πάσας ἡ Θεολογία τὰς εἰρηνίου οὐσίας ἐννεὰ κέκληκεν ἐκφαντορικαῖς ἐπωνυμίαις ταύτας ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν ἱεροτελεστῆς εἰς τρεῖς ἀφορίζει τριαδικὰς διακοσμήσεις. (Cælest. Hierarch. vii.) His scheme, as expounded briefly, though by no means clearly, in the commentary of Elias on Gregory Nazianzen, (Orat. vii. p. 217. Basil. 1571.) is as follows. Tres Ordines esse, quorum singuli vicissim alios tres complectantur. Horum primum esse, Solia, Cherubos, Seraphos: alterum Dominatus, Virtutes, Potestates: tertium, Imperia, Archangelos, Angelos: tametsi rursus omnes universalis et communi nomine Angeli vocentur. Quolibet in Ordine tres rursus Ordines esse, primum, alterum, tertium. Gregory himself, the next of the Fathers to Dionysius who treats this subject, does not venture to speak with so much boldness as his predecessor. Ὅρας ὅπως ἰληγνῶμεν περὶ τὸν λόγον καὶ οὐκ ἔχομεν οἱ προσέλωμεν; ἢ τόσον τὸν ὅσον εἰδέναι ἀγγέλους τινὰς καὶ ἀρχαγγέλους, θρόνους, κυριότητας, ἀρχὰς, ἐξουσίας, λαμπρότητας, ἀναβάσεις, νοεράς δυνάμεις, ἢ νόας, καθαρὰς φύσεις καὶ ἀκιβδηλούς, ἀκινήτους πρὸς τὸ χεῖρον ἢ δυσκινήτους, περὶ τὸν πρῶτον αἴτιον αἰεὶ χορευούσας. (De Theol. ad fin.)

It was reserved for Thomas Aquinas to be more precise respecting this mysterious distribution. The CVIIIth Question in the Ist Part of his Summa totius Theologiæ, addresses itself to this point, De ordinatione Angelorum secundum Hierarchias et Ordines. Contrary to the opinion of Dionysius, the Angelic Doctor contends that there is but a single Hierarchy; and he strengthens his conclusion by reasoning much too subtle to admit of compression. He determines, also, that in this single Hierarchy there is but one Order, nevertheless (however contradictory it may appear) that the Angels differ in degree. But as we are by no means certain that we distinctly follow the thread of his argument, we prefer giving the main positions contained in each of his eight Articles in his own words. 1. Videtur quod omnes Angeli sint unius Hierarchiæ. 2. Videtur quod in unâ Hierarchiâ non sint plures Ordines. 3. Videtur quod in uno Ordine non sint plures Angeli. 4. Videtur quod distinctio Hierarchiarum et Ordinum non sit a naturâ in Angelis. 5. Videtur quod Ordines Angelorum non convenienter nominentur. 6. Videtur quod inconvenienter gradus Ordinum assignentur. 7. Videtur quod Ordines non remanebunt post Diem Judicii. 8. Videtur quod homines non assumuntur ad Ordines Angelorum.

The first syllogism of the eighth and concluding Article, may be presented as an average specimen of the reasoning contained in all the others. It should be remembered that the great Logician has already determined in the outset that there is but one Hierarchy, nevertheless he proceeds, Hierarchia humana continetur sub infimâ Hierarchiarum cælestium et media sub primâ; sed Angeli infimæ Hierarchiæ nunquam transferentur in mediam aut in primam. Ergo neque Homines transferentur ad Ordines Angelorum. It will be well, however, to make the most of the information (such as it is) obtained from Thomas Aquinas: for the subject which he discusses has never been more clearly, and assuredly not more largely, illustrated by any other pen.

The Poets have made a splendid use of this obscure Philosophy; and we can pardon the futile labours of the Schoolmen, for the sake of the brilliant imagery which they have supplied to hands which knew how it might be better employed. Dante, perhaps, lived too closely to those times of dark refinement to disentangle himself completely from their sophistry, and he follows the divisions which had been laid down for him. He is a disciple of the Areopagite, whose scheme, he says, was admitted by Gregory the Great on his arrival in Heaven, where he discovered his mistake in having at all differed from it while on Earth. In Gregory's XXXIVth Homily are many points of agreement with Dionysius, especially as to the number of Orders; and the difference may, perhaps, relate to the Ministry of the Angels towards men. Fertur vero (continues the Pope in the same Homily) Dionysius Areopagita (ut sup. 7. 9. and 13.) antiquus videlicet et venerabilis Pater, dicere, quod ex minorum Angelorum agminibus foras ad explendum ministerium, vel visibilitèr vel invisibilitèr mittuntur, scilicet quia ad humana solatia aut Angeli aut Archangeli veniunt. Nam superiora illa agmina ab intimis nunquam recedunt, quoniam ea quæ præminent usum exterioris ministerii nequaquam habent. Upon this opinion Gregory comments at some length, and on the whole, perhaps, does not give a very hearty assent to it. Velutello, however, in his Commentary on Dante, marks the difference between Dionysius and Gregory as follows: In luogo de' Throni, che Dionisio pone per il terzo Ordine de la prima Gerarchia piu presso a Dio, pose (Gregorio) le Potestati, et i Throni pose in luogo de' Principati, che Dionisio pone per il primo Ordine de la terza Gerarchia. E in luogo che Dionisio pone le Dominationi per lo primo Ordine de la seconda, esso Gregorio vi pone i Principati, et in luogo de' Potestati ultimo Ordine de la detta seconda Gerarchia pone le Dominationi.

Tasso marshals his Angels in tre folte Squadre, and each Squadra in tre Ordini. (Ger. Lib. xviii. 96.) Spenser twice introduces the "trinal triplicites;" (Faerie Queene, i. 12. 39. Hymn of Heavenly Loue;) but above all, Milton, in other passages besides that which we have cited above, and which must be too familiar to every reader's recollection to need quotation here, has raised a magnificent fabric upon the jejune and trifling quibbles of Thomas Aquinas. Mr. Gifford, indeed, thinks that the great Bard went to no higher source than Ben Jonson, in his Elegy on my Muse; (Underwoods on the Lady Venetia Digby, ix.) but Milton was not likely to be unacquainted with the original authorities, and whenever he borrowed, (which he did not from poverty but from richness, that he might repay with prodigal interest,) he was far more likely to

HIER-ARCHY.

HIER-ARCHY. draw his loan from antiquity than from a writer who had but just preceded him.

HIERO-GLY-PHICS. The Hierarchie of the Blessed Angels, their names, orders, offices, the fall of Lucifer and his Angels, an interminable Poem in IX Books, by Thomas Heywood, who wrote in the time of James I., contains, both in its text and notes, much information respecting the Spiritual World in all its branches. Perhaps the point on which it is least explicit, is that on which it most immediately professes to teach; but the student in Auguries, Omens, Prodigies, Dreams, Devils, Witches, and Apparitions, will be amply repaid by turning to these pages.

The existence of an Angelical Hierarchy has been admitted by many eminent Divines, and there is a splendid passage in Bishop Bull's VIIth Sermon in support of it. "There are degrees of honour and glory among the Angels in Heaven, and though they are all of them glorious creatures, yet among them some are higher, some inferior in dignity, some are greater, others lesser. . . . Though we dare not intrude ourselves into the things we have not seen, or imitate the temerity of that learned and sublime conjecturer, Dionysius, who undertakes to reckon up exactly the several orders of the Angelical Hierarchy as if he had seen a muster of the Heavenly hosts before his eyes: yet that there are Orders and degrees among the blessed Angels we may with an assurance affirm, having the plainest warrant of the Holy Text for the assertion. For we often read in Scripture not only of Angels, but also of Arch-Angels, i. e. Chief Angels, that have a preeminence above the rest. This is so known and confessed by every man, that we need not cite the texts wherein mention is made of them." We have already cited a passage from a Sermon by Bishop Horsley, (ANGELS,) in which he assumes a widely different view of the subject.

HIER-ARCHY.
—
HIERO-GLY-PHICS.

HIEROGLYPHICS.

HIEROGLYPH, } Fr. hieroglyphique; It.
HIEROGLYPHICK, n. } and Sp. hieroglyphica; Lat.
HIEROGLYPHICK, adj. } hieroglyphica; Gr. ιερογλυ- HIEROGLYPHICAL, } φικα, from ιερος, sacred, and HIEROGLYPHICALLY, } γλυφ-ειν, sculptere, to carve, HIEROGLYPHIZE. } to grave.

He gave unto her a kind expression, by a quaint device sent unto her in a rich jewel, fashioned much after the manner of the trivial hieroglyphs, used in France, called Rebus de Picardy.

Sir G. Buck. History of Richard III. (1646.) p. 115.

For the characters which are called hieroglyphicks in Egypt, be in manner all of them, like to those precepts of Pythagoras: Eat not upon a stool or chair; Sit not over a bushell; Plant no date tree; Stir not the fire in the house, nor rake into it with a sword.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 1051.

And upon the wals, hewed out of the very rockes, engraved many kinds of fowles and wild beasts, and infinite formes of other living creatures; which being not understood of the Latines, they called hieroglyphicke letters.

Id. Ammianus, fol. 214. Julianus.

To this challenge the Scythian returned an hieroglyphical answer; sending a bird, a mouse, a frog, and five arrows.

Ralegh. History of the World, book iii. ch. v. sec. 4.

God in his wisdom thought good by abasing the serpent for the time to come, to make him an everlasting embleme and monument, wherein man might hieroglyphically reade the malice, vileness and execrable baseness of that wicked Spirit which had beguiled him.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture, book i. disc. 38.

More admirable is that which they attest was found in Mexico and other places of the new world, where they hieroglyphiz'd both their thoughts, histories, and inventions to posterity, not much unlike to the Egyptians, though in lesse durable and permanent matter.

Evelyn. Miscellaneous Writings, p. 375. Sculptura.

It well deserves considering that these ancient writers, in treating enigmatically upon the subject, have generally fixed upon the very same hieroglyph, varying only the story, according to their affections or their wit.

Swift. Tale of a Tub. A Digression concerning Criticks.

This hairy meteor did denounce
The fall of sceptres and of crowns;

VOL. XXIII.

With grisly type did represent
Declining age of government;
And tell, with hieroglyphic spade,
Its own grave and the state's were made.

Butler. Hudibras, part i. can. 1.

Having thus proved the high antiquity of Egypt from the concurrent testimony of sacred and profane history; I go on, as I proposed, to evince the same from internal evidence; taken from the original use of their so much celebrated hieroglyphics.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 4.

But to give this argument its due force, it will be necessary to trace up hieroglyphic writing to its original; which a general mistake concerning its primeval use hath rendered extremely difficult.

Id. ib.

He subdued Asia Minor and all the regions of Europe, where he erected pillars with hieroglyphical inscriptions, denoting that these parts of the world had been subdued by the great Sesostris or Sesoosis.

Fawkes. Notes to the fourth Book of the Argonautics.

HIEROGLYPHICS, applied exclusively by ancient writers to the sculptures and inscriptions on public monuments in Egypt, is a term which has been used in modern times to express any kind of picture-writing; any mode of expressing a series of ideas by the representations of visible objects. It would be well, however, for reasons which will appear hereafter, to restrict the term Hieroglyphic to its ancient and proper acceptation, viz. that mode of representing words and sentences by figures of sensible objects which prevailed among the Egyptians.

Picture-writing, it is obvious, must have preceded the use of alphabetic characters, as the latter implies a habit of abstraction, which nothing but an improved state of the mental faculties can give; nor has any uncivilized people been yet discovered in possession of that inestimable invention, (if it be a human invention,) by which the mutual communication of knowledge is facilitated to an almost unlimited degree, and truths once learned may be secured from being ever lost. (Cic. de Off. i. 16.) Rude delineations of visible objects

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

are found among all but the most barbarous tribes, (Sallust, Bell. Jugurth. 29. Barrow's Travels in China, 246.) and as tropes and metaphors are used in the earliest stages of society, the transition from the direct use of such delineations to a symbolical or figurative application of them, is natural and easy. Thus one of the American nations, when first discovered by Europeans, had acquired the habit of commemorating remarkable events by rude unconnected sculptures on rocks and in caverns; (Lafiteau, Mœurs des Sauvages, ii. 43.) while another was sufficiently advanced in civilization to possess a "record of its history for a long period of time, contained in a series of pictures strictly symbolical." (Robertson, History of America, ii. 284. 480.) Purchas (Pilgrim. 1065.) was, perhaps, the first author who published a specimen of these Mexican chronological pictures, which approach, in truth, to the Egyptian Hieroglyphics; (Encycl. Metrop. xix. 652. pl. xxviii.) nearer, perhaps, than has hitherto been supposed, but are still only a very rude essay when compared with the systems of the Egyptians and Chinese.

The system of the last-named people has been already explained in this Work; (xix. 580, 581.) and as the close analogy between the common Chinese and the Hieratic character of the Egyptians was there noticed, the reader will be prepared to see a similar process developed in the different modes of writing anciently prevalent in Egypt, of which an account is now to be given.

Egyptian modes of writing.
1. Hiero-
glyphic.
2. Hieratic.
3. Demotic.

The characters used by the people of that Country before their conversion to Christianity, (after which they adopted the Greek alphabet with a few supplementary letters,) were threefold; 1. Hieroglyphic; 2. Hieratic; and 3. Demotic. The first was formed by images of visible objects; the second, by very coarse and indistinct outlines of the whole or of parts of such images; and the third, by a further reduction of such outlines, in a similar coarse and negligent style. The first, from which the others were derived, was originally, beyond a doubt, strictly a system of picture-writing, representing ideas by their visible images, when possible, or by obvious symbols, when any direct representation was impossible. It is manifest that such a method was calculated only for a nation in the first stages of civilization, and that men would soon discover some more complicated, but more perfect, mode of representing what is usually expressed by words, of speaking, in short, by means of visible signs. But words are a combination of sounds, the next step, therefore, would be to devise some method of expressing sounds; and as soon as such a device had been adopted, any combination of sounds, i. e. any word, whether significant or not, whether the name of a visible object or of a mere abstraction, could be immediately represented to the eye. Thus far the Egyptians had advanced at a very early period. They selected several common and well-known Hieroglyphics, such as immediately suggested some word of frequent occurrence, and used them to express the initial sound of that word, or, as we should say, its first letter. The more simple outlines or fragments of these Hieroglyphics, used in the Hieratic character, would, therefore, have the appearance, as well as perform the functions, of letters; and when rounded off in the Demotic, or running hand, would lose all resemblance to the figures from which they were originally derived. It is plain that these last characters might entirely supersede the use of Hieroglyphics, or other symbols; from the facility with which they were formed, it is probable that, for ordinary purposes, they would, and it will appear, on further inquiry, that they actually did so; and that the Demotic, or Enchorial character of the Egyptians, was nearly, if not strictly, alphabetical; written, as Herodotus says, (ii. 36.) from right to left, and in the number of sounds expressed not exceeding "the square of five," mentioned by Plutarch (De Iside et Osir. sec. 56.) as the amount of the letters in the Egyptian alphabet.

I. The Hieroglyphic character, therefore, was thus rendered capable of expressing sounds, and, consequently, words, independently of the ideas pictured to the eye; and as soon as this method prevailed, these symbols were divisible into three distinct classes. 1. Such as were the images of the things expressed; 2. such as were merely symbolical; and 3. such as were simply Phonetic, or expressive of sound, and might, therefore, be considered as the letters of a Hieroglyphical alphabet. At a later period, probably, a fourth class was brought into use; that of enigmatical symbols, derived either from some very remote affinity between the object represented and the idea implied, or formed by a combination of different figures, apparently incapable of being thus united. The examination of Hieroglyphical tablets of very different ages, shows that these four classes of symbols were used promiscuously, according to the pleasure or convenience of the artist, for Hieroglyphics, being pictures, were always either sculptured or drawn. All Hieroglyphics, therefore, may be classed either as (1.) images, or (2.) symbols; as (3.) phonetic, or (4.) enigmatical; and it is obvious, that the 1st and 3d classes will be readily interpreted as soon as the sounds represented by the latter have been ascertained. But the 2d and 4th will still remain uninterpreted, unless explained by the context, by equivalents in another copy of the same text, by the testimony of ancient writers, or by an ancient translation of the texts in which they occur. Happily the perplexing symbols of the last class are not of very frequent occurrence, while those of the 2d, which are far more common, can generally be interpreted by the aid of the auxiliaries already mentioned, or by conjecture, which has so often contributed, in the quaint phrase of Verstegan, to "the restitution of decayed intelligence." Complete translations of long Hieroglyphical texts will never, perhaps, be attainable; but a knowledge of the substance of their contents has been already, in many cases, acquired; and it is not, perhaps, extravagant to affirm, that at no distant period, we shall have Grammars and Dictionaries of the Hieroglyphical language.

As every visible object, with any of its parts, and in almost any position, besides an endless variety of arbitrary combinations, comes within the scope of the Hieroglyphic draughtsman, it might at first be supposed that the number of those symbols would be almost unlimited; but the necessity of limitation must soon have been felt; for unless the sense assigned to each symbol were fixed, the reader would be lost in vague conjectures, and unless the number of symbols were confined within certain bounds, no memory could retain them all. The whole number, therefore, observed by M. Champollion, after more than 20 years' constant study, was only 864, and of those many are, probably, duplicates. He arranges them in the 18 following classes:

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

I. Hieroglyphic
character

Number of characters.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

1. Heavenly bodies.....	10
2. Man in different postures.....	120
3. Limbs of the human body.....	60
4. Wild quadrupeds.....	24
5. Domestic quadrupeds.....	10
6. Limbs of beasts.....	22
7. Birds and limbs of beasts.....	50
8. Fish.....	10
9. The whole or parts of reptiles.....	30
10. Insects.....	14
11. Plants, flowers, and fruit.....	60
12. Buildings.....	24
13. Works of art, furniture, &c.....	100
14. Weapons, dress, ornaments, &c.....	80
15. Tools and utensils.....	150
16. Cups, vessels, &c.....	30
17. Geometrical figures.....	20
18. Fantastic figures.....	50

864

Order.

The figures were arranged in columns, vertical or horizontal, and grouped together, as circumstances required, so as to leave no spaces unnecessarily vacant. The order in which the characters are to be read, is shown by the direction in which the figures are placed, as their heads are invariably turned towards the reader, or, which is the same thing, to that side of the tablet at which the Inscription begins, whether it be right or left, for either was admissible in the pure Hieroglyphic, though not in the Demotic character. To this general rule M. Champollion has met with only one exception in a Hieroglyphical MS. in the Royal Collection; (Précis, 319.) the figures, therefore, as he observes, form a sort of procession, and seem, from their relative position, to be connected with each other.

i. Pure Hieroglyphics, or Images.

i. The characters which were images of the things signified, as being most obvious, were of frequent occurrence, either in an entire or an abridged but intelligible form; and some of that class were often used merely to determine the sense of the preceding figures, just as capital letters are employed by us to distinguish proper names or words of peculiar import. This was the more necessary among the Egyptians, as their names were all significant, and liable to be taken as such, unless accompanied by some indication of their peculiar use: the Hieroglyphic of "man" or "woman," "God" or "Goddess," was consequently subjoined according to the sex of the person or deity named. Thus the characters expressing Amon-mai, when alone, signify "Beloved by Amon;" but when followed by that which stands for man, represent a proper name, nearly resembling Ammonophilus, or Philammon in Greek. "Temple, image, statue, child, asp, and monumental pillar" were, in like manner, expressed by figures evidently representing the things meant. In the bas-reliefs at Medinet-tâbu, the scribe, recording a victory, has a hand with ciphers expressing 3000 placed in the Hieroglyphic column over his head, plainly indicating 3000 hands of men slain or conquered in battle. Above this is the figure of a man, followed by 1000, evidently signifying 1000 prisoners taken. (Précis, pl. xix. fig. 1, 2. Hieroglyphics, pl. xv. A, h, i.) The figure or outline of a boat, followed by a line, signifying n, (i. e. of) and the name of a God, signifies the vessel of that God, in which his image or shrine was carried on solemn occasions.* (Ib. fig. 3. 45.) "Sun, moon, star, vessel, scales, bed, bull, loaf, sistrum, fish, goose, tortoise, ox, cow, calf, haunch, antelope, bow, arrow, dish, altar, censer, flower-pot, enclosure, chapel, shrine," &c. are among the words expressed Hieroglyphically by images of the objects themselves. Other terms, such as sky or firmament, and the names of the different Gods, are rendered by very obvious symbols, still in some degree representing the object expressed; the former by the section of a flat roof, with or without stars subjoined; the latter by an outline of the idols by which those Gods were represented in the Temples. (See Figures of Gods, pl. iii.) Sometimes nothing more than a part or section of the thing meant, was given, and these characters, which form a third division of the first class, may be termed conventional Hieroglyphics.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

ii. Abstract ideas, however, could not well be expressed by images of visible objects, recourse was therefore had to symbolical figures; and metaphors, common in spoken language, when clothed in a visible form, gave birth to a second class of Hieroglyphics, that of images used in a symbolical or figurative sense. These, as being more abstruse and difficult of interpretation, are the characters generally alluded to by the Ancients when they speak of Hieroglyphics, and that circumstance was the occasion of the prevalent but mistaken notion, that all the figures on the Egyptian monuments are strictly symbolical: an error to which the extravagant and contradictory interpretations of those sculptures given by learned men may easily be traced. Almost all the figures of speech are, if we may so express it, placed before the eye, by this class of Hieroglyphics. "Two arms stretched up towards heaven" express the word "offering;" "a stream of water flowing from a jug" signifies "libation;" "a censer with some grains of incense," "adoration;" and "a man throwing arrows," "tumult:" these instances, therefore, furnish examples of synecdoches. Metonymies are exhibited in "a crescent with its horns bent downwards" for "month," (Horapollo, ii. 12.) in a "pencil and a palette, or a reed and an inkstand," for "writer," "writing," "letter," &c. The "bee" to signify "an obedient people;" "fore-quarters of a lion" for "strength;" "a hawk on the wing" for "the wind;" "an asp" for "power of life and death;" and "a crocodile" for "rapacity," are so many metaphors symbolically expressed. As many of these symbols were derived from fanciful and remote analogies, among them will those characters probably be found, which defy the skill of the most diligent and ingenious inquirers. If not informed of it by an ancient Egyptian writer, (Horapollo, i. 20.) who could have divined that "paternity" and "the world" were expressed by the figure of "a beetle;" "maternity" by "a vulture;" or "the course of the stars" by "a serpent?" (Clem. Alexandr. v. 4.) Yet these, as will be seen hereafter, are not the least intelligible of all the Hieroglyphics. As almost all the proper names used by the Egyptians expressed their devotion to some particular God, no symbols are of more frequent occurrence, nor are any more useful to the Hieroglyphical student, than those which express the titles and appellations of their Deities. Thus, a man with a ram's head signifies "Ammon-Cnuphis;" a man with a hawk's head bearing a disk represents "Phré;" a man with a jackall's head, "Anubis;" an ibis-headed man, "Thoth;" one with the head of a crocodile, "Suchus or Sevekh." But these being merely sketches of the idols by which those

* For the first two of his figures, the barges of Phré and Osiris, M. Champollion refers to Lord Mountnorris's sepulchral roll in linear characters, (Hierogly. pl. iii. M, o, u,) where the latter symbols are very clear, but the former do not so manifestly agree with his copy.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Gods were represented in the Temples, are, perhaps, rather to be called images than emblems, and ought, for that reason, to be ranked in the first class of Hieroglyphics. The animals sacred to each Deity, adorned with his distinctive ornaments, formed another set of images more truly symbolical; such, for example, was a hawk crowned by a disk, for Phré; a ram with a pair of lofty plumes, or a disk between his horns, for Cnu-phs; a mitred hawk for Harsiesi, (i. e. Horus, son of Isis;) a jackall with a scourge for Anubis; an ibis, or a cynocephalus, (i. e. a dog-headed monkey,) for Thoth, the Hermes of the Greeks: "not," says Plutarch, (De Iside et Osir. sec. 11.) "that this (i. e. dog) is his proper appellation, but that by this metaphor the Egyptians ascribe to this most wise Deity, care, watchfulness, and discernment, as Plato says." An eye was the emblem of Osiris and the Sun; a Nilometer that of Phtha; and an obelisk that of Ammon; but these symbols were not often used, nor are the Hieroglyphics of this class by any means of such frequent occurrence, as those which are employed in a more obvious sense.

iii. Phonetic characters.

iii. It is manifest, as was before observed, that these two classes of Hieroglyphics are inadequate to express every part of speech. Except at its very commencement, every language must have some words, which, taken alone, are void of meaning, and, unless those who speak it are entirely separated from other nations, they must have occasion to express foreign names and foreign terms in their own tongue, as well as write them in their own character, if sufficiently advanced in civilization to possess the art of writing. Now the Egyptians were the most civilized nation on earth at the earliest period from which any of their monuments now existing can be dated, and though they were prohibited from commerce with foreigners (Strabo, xvii. l. 6.) before the time of Psammetichus, (Herod. ii. 154.) they were often at war with their Southern and Eastern neighbours, to say nothing of the conquests of Sesostri, which carried them at least as far as Asia Minor. Their language, therefore, must have then possessed such terms and inflections as could only be expressed by characters expressive of sounds; and as necessity is the mother of invention, this want of figures merely representing sounds, may be reasonably supposed to have led to the invention of the third class of Hieroglyphics, viz. those called by M. Champollion Phonetic, i. e. expressive of sound. That a certain number was so employed, has now been placed beyond a doubt, and the principle on which these figures were selected for that purpose, has been most probably ascertained; it was apparently this, that the names of things, (i. e. the words) suggested by these Hieroglyphics, began by the sound or letter which they were taken to represent. This will be more distinctly seen by a reference to the following table, the first column of which gives the letter expressed by a Hieroglyphic; the second, the English name of the object represented; and the third, the corresponding word in the Coptic (i. e. Egyptian) language.

Letter.	Hieroglyphic.	Egyptian name.
A.	An eagle.	Ahôm.
—	A piece of meat.	Af, or Ab.
A, O.	A reed.	Aka, or Oke.
B.	A censer.	Berbe.
K.	A knee.	Keli.
K.	A basin.	Knikiji.
G.	—	Guikiji.
K.	A cup.	Klaft.

Letter.	Hieroglyphic.	Egyptian name.
T. }	A beetle.	{ Torres.
TH. }		{ Thorres.
L.	A lioness.	Laboi.
M.	An owl.	Moulaj.
—	Water.	Môou.
N.	Inundation.	Neph.
—	Vulture.	Noure.
P }	Mat.	{ Prêsh.
PH. }		{ Phrêsh.
R.	Mouth.	Rô.
—	Tear.	Rimé.
—	Pomegranate.	Roman.
S.	Star.	Siou.
—	Child.	Si.
—	Egg.	Soouhi.
T.	Hand.	Tot.
—	Wing.	Ten-h.
SH.	Garden.	Shuê.
—	Listen.	Shêi.
—	Antelope.	Shash.
J.	Swallow.	Jal.
KH.	Fan.	Khai.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Where the same principle is manifested in so many instances, its existence can scarcely be doubted; nor can it be expected that it should be proved in every case, as the object represented by a Hieroglyphic cannot always be ascertained; and our Dictionaries of the Coptic or Egyptian language are far from containing all the words still extant in it. This principle being admitted, it follows that the number of figures used to represent one sound, might be increased almost without limit, as any Hieroglyphic might stand for the first letter of its name; so copious an alphabet, however, even to a native, would have been a continual source of error. The characters, therefore, thus applied, were soon fixed; and, as far as has been hitherto ascertained, 18 or 19 is the largest number assigned to any one letter; while few have more than five or six representatives, and several only one or two. The pronunciation of the Egyptian language was, probably, rapid and indistinct; consonants belonging to the same class, and uttered by the aid of the same organs, were easily interchanged; the initial, final, and when medial the long vowels only, were clearly uttered, and the consonants were separated almost at the speaker's pleasure by an imperfect articulation, like our u, in "but, rut, &c.," or the French e, in "le, me, te, &c.,"* but even the long vowels appear to have been liable to frequent permutations: the Egyptian, in this respect, and in its whole system of orthography, bearing a great resemblance to the Semitic dialects, from which, however, it differs entirely in its elements and structure. This paucity of vowels, it should be observed, is not peculiar to the texts expressed in the Sacred or Enchorial characters; it is also found in the Coptic, (i. e. Egyptian written in Greek letters,) especially in the Sa'idic or Theban dialect, where mn, "and," mnt, "belonging to," rm, "inhabiting," snt, "to create," tm, "to shut," ntk, "thee," &c., continually occur. By the variety of these Phonetic characters, the Egyptians were also enabled to exercise a faculty held in high esteem by their Eastern neighbours, and probably by themselves—that of conveying a double meaning by the same signs, and of expressing secret and recondite allusions, scarcely discoverable except by the adept. The goose, or Chenalopex, we find usually representing the S of Si, the word for "son," because, as Horapollo tells

* This was, probably, the case in the Semitic dialects, and is still so in the Armenian, which has a particular letter (yet) to express that sound, but usually omits it, writing srpuê for sêrpwê or sûrpwê.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

us, (i. 53.) "that animal is remarkable for the love of its offspring." The Ram always stands for B in the name of Chnubis, because it was sacred to that God, and his usual symbol. He was represented with a vessel of earth at his feet, and for that reason, it may be supposed, a vessel is used, by preference, to represent the N in his name. The lion is put for L in Ptolemy and Alexander, because they were powerful kings; and the frequent use of the eagle for A, in the name of Roman Emperors, seems to convey a covert allusion to the eagles on their ensigns. Something analogous to this takes place in the Chinese, where particular Hing-shing, or Phonetic characters, are chosen, because calculated, from their own meaning, to convey a favourable or unfavourable impression as to the thing or person named.

The habit of representing certain words by certain Phonetic characters would soon prevail; and that alone would prevent the perplexing variety to which the system might have given birth. But this habit would also render it possible to use abbreviations for very well known terms; and, accordingly, we find that such abbreviations are by no means uncommon, e. g. st for souten, "king;" s for si, "son;" Amenô for Amenôthph, &c. The extent to which these contractions were used in Egypt, is plainly shown by the Registries of Deeds, drawn under the Ptolemies, and published by Dr. Young. (Discoveries, &c. p. 149.)

All these three classes of Hieroglyphics were used simultaneously, so that an Egyptian Inscription, if letters were substituted for the Phonetic characters, would bear a very close resemblance to the Hieroglyphical love-letters which annually fill our post-bags on the vigil of St. Valentine. This discovery—may it be termed unfortunate?—does not quite square in with the exalted notions, so long entertained, of the almost superhuman wisdom of ancient Egypt: and soon after the appearance of M. Champollion's book, a genuine High German doctor made a furious attack upon this heretical attempt to disparage the Wisdom of the Egyptians, "who, on immeasurable monuments, endeavoured," he tells us, "with astonishing art, to convey ideas by an Ideographic character, independent of the arbitrary will of letters, to the after-world through endless Ages!"* Dr. Young, however, whose notions of Egyptian wisdom were not, perhaps, originally cast in so sublime a mould, says, in a more subdued tone, (Discoveries, &c. p. 19,) "I must acknowledge that my respect for the good sense and accomplishments of my Egyptian allies, by no means became more profound, as our acquaintance became more intimate." So different are the results of a laborious and dispassionate inquiry from those of an hypothetical theory, built upon preconceived notions, and magnified by a warm imagination.

iv. Enig-matical Hieroglyphics.

iv. The fourth class, or Enigmatical Hieroglyphics, might be considered as a second division of those which were strictly symbolical. The more simple ones have been already mentioned, (p. 258;) but a more complicated and obscure kind was formed, probably, by the "Anaglyphs," or allegorical sculptures, mentioned by Clement of Alexandria. (v. 657.) They appear to have been bas-reliefs, or tablets, containing mythological or historical subjects, expressed in allegorical delineations, or implied by the monstrous figures of human beings, with heads of birds and beasts, such as those with which the Egyptian Temples were filled, and among which we must rank the sphinxes forming avenues at their entrance. Symbols such as these, grouped and combined according to certain rules, might be so disposed as to form an allegorical representation of the Religious and Philosophical doctrines of the Egyptians. None but the initiated were suffered to dive into these mysteries; and the key to them was kept exclusively in the hands of the priesthood. The ordinary style of Hieroglyphics being too transparent a veil for the concealment of such secrets, a more refined system was devised, a language more strictly ideographical was invented, metaphors, similes, imagery and allegory were embodied in actual forms, and the links connecting the chain of ideas thus expressed, were implied either by the relative position of the figures, their attitudes, or their ornaments, so as to present to the eye of the initiated an intelligible and, if such an expression may be allowed, a readable picture, in what appeared, to the uninitiated, an incoherent tissue of extravagance. "The images of the Gods in the sanctuaries, the human beings with heads of beasts, or beasts with human limbs, might be termed," says M. Champollion, (Précis, 427.) "the letters of that secret writing which consisted of the Anaglyphs or enigmatical sculptures forming the fourth class of Hieroglyphics. It was in this sense, probably," he adds, "that the Egyptian Priests called the Ibis, the Hawk, and the Jackall, the images of which were carried in procession on certain solemn occasions, letters, (γράμματα, Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride,) as being the true elements of a sort of allegorical mode of writing." It is in the interior of their Temples and their sepulchres that these symbolical records are found, "distinguishable, without difficulty," says the same writer, (p. 428,) "from the historical scenes, and civil or religious ceremonies, represented in the bas-reliefs and paintings on the walls of their public buildings." The analogy afforded by the Grecian mysteries, as well as the express declarations of the Ancients respecting the mystical interpretations given by the Egyptians to many of their rites and usages, affords strong grounds for believing that much was concealed; and though it is possible that "the sacred dialect" (Manetho in Joseph. contra Apion, p. 445, Syncelli Chronographia, p. 40) was nothing more than a highly symbolical and metaphorical mode of expression; it is also probable that it might be an antiquated and, therefore, sacred dialect of the vulgar language, such as has long been in use among the Indians and Persians. It may, perhaps, be doubted whether the knowledge of that language, and of the mysteries revealed by it, would add to our stock of useful knowledge, or do more than afford an early proof of the ignorance, folly, and presumption of mankind.

* Dr. J. W. Pfaff's Weisheit der Ägypten und Gelehrsamkeit der Franzosen, Nürnberg, 1825.

II. The origin and characteristics of the Hieratic or Sacred character, so denominated to distinguish it from the Demotic or Popular, have already been briefly stated. It consists of nothing more than imperfect and dashing sketches of the Hieroglyphics, which thus assume the form of a flowing and rapid hand. For figures and symbols, it often substitutes Phonetic groups, or arbitrary characters, which bear no resemblance to the Hieroglyphics for which they stand. Religion and Science seem to be the only subjects for which this character was used; nor did it undergo any material change in its form or structure, during the many Ages through which it was used. Though the agreement between corre

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

II. Hieratic.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

sponding Hieratic and Hieroglyphic texts is scarcely perceptible at first sight, it becomes manifest on a careful inspection. But it must always be remembered that the linear Hieroglyphics, considered as the Hieratic character by Dr. Young, bear a much closer resemblance to the perfect forms of the figures, than the real Hieratic—a hand resembling the Chinese, and written with as much rapidity. (See Dr. Young's Comparison of Manuscripts; Encyclopæd. Britann. Supplement, pl. lxxviii. fig. N; and Champollion's Précis, pl. xii. xviii.) One peculiarity in this character deserves to be noticed here, as being likely, at first sight, to mislead and give much trouble. In Hieratic texts the oval frame (probably an extension of the ring, which seems to have been a symbol of royalty) enclosing the names of kings, is expressed by a semicircle at the beginning of the word, as might be expected; but, at the end, instead of a corresponding curve followed by a straight line, expressive of the remainder of the frame, as is usually the case in the Demotic character, three, four, or five dashes, either straight or slightly curved, are substituted for it. How it came to pass that, in a mode of writing in which rapidity was the great object, the number of characters should have been thus needlessly multiplied, it seems at present impossible to explain.

III. Demotic.

III. The common Egyptian character, called Demotic from its popular use, Epistolographic from its fitness for letter-writing, and Enchorial from its being peculiar to that Country, and distinct from the Greek, so familiarly known there under the Ptolemies, seems to have been derived from the Hieratic by nearly the same process as that was from the Hieroglyphic. It is, however, more simple; not strictly alphabetic, because a small number of images or figures are still found in it; some symbols also, connected with religious subjects, occur; but these figures and symbols are almost invariably so curtailed and simplified, as to lose all resemblance to the objects expressed. The whole, therefore, has the appearance of a written alphabetic character, and the greater part of its elements may be considered as belonging to such a system, being Phonetic Hieroglyphics reduced to a few lines and dots, a few dashes, curves, and angles, and forming a series of words with little or no relation to the objects which they each, individually, represent. In the direction of the lines from right to left, and in the suppression of many vowels, this system of writing resembles that of the Phœnicians and Hebrews. In having a variety of signs to represent the same sound, it is like the Hieratic and Hieroglyphic characters, its immediate sources; but the number of equivalent signs is much smaller in the former than in the latter: the whole of those which clearly differ from each other not exceeding 42; while, of the Hieroglyphics, more than 120 Phonetic characters are already known, and the Hieratic hand has, at least, two-thirds of that number. Plutarch, indeed, says (De Iside, sec. 56.) that the Egyptians had 25 letters, but he speaks, probably, either of the Greek letters, considered as distinct by the Egyptians, or of the number of sounds for which that people had different signs: these 42 Demotic characters not being the representatives of more than 14 or 15 different articulations of the voice, or of 24 or 25 letters in the Greek or Hebrew alphabets. These three modes of writing were all in use at the same time; the first for public inscriptions, the second for Religious and, perhaps, Scientific writings, the last for the ordinary business of life; and there are strong reasons for supposing that they were all three simultaneously and daily used in Egypt, upwards of 15 centuries before the commencement of our era.

The annexed plates contain 1. the alphabet in the three different characters, the linear and complete Hieroglyphics being considered as essentially the same; 2. the figures and symbols representing the Gods; 3. such groups of figures, symbols, and words expressed in Phonetic Hieroglyphics, as are of the most frequent occurrence, by the application of which the substance of many Inscriptions may be ascertained; and, lastly, 4. the numerals and months, showing the Egyptian division of the year into three seasons, (Diod. Sic. Bibl. Hist. i. 16. 26.) each distinguished by its peculiar sign. For fuller details and examples on a larger scale, the reader must be referred to the Works which will be named hereafter, and of the Plates themselves, he will find an explanation at the end of this volume.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Plates.

But it may be asked, upon what basis does all this theory rest? Ages, it is acknowledged, have elapsed since any one was in existence who possessed a traditional knowledge of these secrets; and the imperfect hints furnished by the ancient writers, whose works we possess, are more calculated to perplex and embarrass than to afford any clue to the nature and use of these unintelligible symbols. Not that the hopelessness of the attempt has deterred the learned and ingenious from exercising their talents in the solution of this apparently insoluble problem. Athanasius Kircher, whose learning was only exceeded by his imagination and want of judgment, filled six huge folios with innumerable citations in Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabic, and Coptic, to prove to the world that the Inscriptions on the Egyptian monuments contain all the mysteries of the Cabala, and a complete system of demonology. A scroll on the Pamphilian Obelisk at Rome informs us, he says, (Obeliscus Pamphilius, p. 55,) that, "the author of all fecundity and vegetation is Osiris, whose generative faculty is drawn from heaven into his kingdom by the holy Mophtha." What would the erudite Jesuit have thought, had he lived to be told that this mystic scroll contains neither more nor less than the Greek word ΑΥΤΟΚΡΑΤΩΡ, (Autocrat, i. e. Emperor;) and that it is followed by words signifying the Child of the Sun, King of Kings, (Cæsar, Domitianus, Augustus,) who hath received the royal power coming from his father (the divine Vespasian*) in the place of his brother the Cæsar, (Titus)? He could not have denied, that this was far more intelligible than his own ingenious and deeply-studied version; and he could hardly have refused his assent to its truth, when the very same Hieroglyphics were pointed out to him in a genuine Egyptian Inscription, accompanied by one in Greek, professedly a translation of it. His first objection, indeed, would have been grounded on the absurdity of supposing an Hieroglyphic Inscription to contain the names of Roman Emperors. Under the Kings of the Macedonian race, he would have said, the ancient Religion, Arts, and Language of Egypt fell into decay; and that the power of interpreting, much more that of forming Inscriptions in Hieroglyphics, was lost long before the time of the Cæsars.

History of interpretation of Hierogly-
phics.

* The words contained in a parenthesis, are those enclosed in royal scrolls, or frames, in the Hieroglyphic Inscription. Champollion, Précis, pl. v. fig. 7. 7 bis.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.
Rosetta, or trilingual Inscription.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Young
1814.

Such indeed, or nearly such, was the opinion generally received in Europe, till some French soldiers, employed in digging for the foundation of Fort Julien, near Rosetta, in 1798, found a large broken tablet of black stone, containing an Inscription in three characters, Hieroglyphic, Egyptian, and Greek. This stone was brought to England with the rest of their collections, as a memorable trophy of the superior success of our arms; and soon after it had been placed in the British Museum, a fac-simile of it was made by the Society of Antiquaries, and circulated both here and on the Continent. The stone unfortunately is much mutilated, none of the Inscriptions on it being, in every part, entire; of the Greek, however, which is the third in order, all, except the lowest line, is perfect. This, though in a language well understood, it was no easy task to translate. An inflated and unusual style, involved sentences, singular words, and allusions to Egyptian rites imperfectly known, all combined to increase the difficulty of ascertaining the precise meaning of every part, and supplying the words wanting at the end of the concluding lines. Porson and Heyne, one the first Greek scholar who ever lived, and the other not greatly inferior to him, both gave versions of this Inscription, which is a Decree made by the whole Body of Egyptian Priests assembled at Memphis, and ordaining divine honours to Ptolemy Epiphanes, in gratitude for the many benefits conferred by him on themselves and on the rest of his subjects. It is dated on the 18th of Mechir, the fourth of the Macedonian month Xanthicus, in the ninth year of his reign, or on the 26th of March, B. C. 196. The light thrown by this Decree on the state of religion in Egypt, and the internal administration of the country under the Ptolemies, would alone render it highly valuable; but what enhances its value beyond all price, is the resolution, expressed in the concluding lines, that it should be inscribed on a column of solid stone, ΤΟΙΣΤΕΙΕΡΟΙΣΚΑΙΕΓΥΠΤΙΟΙΣΚΑΙΕΛΛΗΝΙΚΟΙΣ ΓΡΑΜΜΑΣΙΝ, "in the Sacred, Enchorial, and Greek letters," thereby giving the fullest assurance that the Hieroglyphic and Egyptian texts are counterparts of the Greek.

The intermediate or Egyptian Inscription on this stone, has all the appearance of alphabetic writing; it therefore promised to afford a clue for the interpretation of MSS. in the Epistolographic character, already preserved in various collections; and so early as the summer of 1802, M. Silvestre de Sacy and the late M. Akerblad published the result of their attempts to ascertain the Egyptian alphabet, by means of the names occurring on this stone. An incorrect and almost illegible copy greatly increased M. de Sacy's difficulties; and he certainly, on this occasion, was not so successful as M. Akerblad, who made out several names, ascertained, as he believed, that the language was actually Coptic, and gave an alphabet which appeared in many cases applicable; but it was not applicable in all, and therefore wanted one of the essential requisites of such a character. It had also another defect; many of the letters appeared to have several different forms, so that what with a variety of signs for the same sound, and a number of words containing few, if any, of these signs, little progress could be made; and even M. Akerblad himself did not venture to publish the sequel of his researches, though he was convinced that his system was fundamentally correct.

For 12 years from the date of these publications, no further attempt seems to have been made towards devising any method of deciphering the Egyptian characters; nor does the attention of any one seem to have been turned to the Hieroglyphic part of the Inscription, except that M. Akerblad noticed the agreement of the figures I, II, III, in the last line of it, with "the first and second . . ." in one of the imperfect lines of the Greek. Early in 1814, however, Dr. Young, whose accurate and extensive acquaintance with almost every branch of knowledge is an earnest for his success in the most abstruse inquiries, having been consulted with regard to some fragments of Papyrus brought from Egypt by Mr. Boughton, was led to examine the triple Inscription with care; and in the November of that year he communicated to the Society of Antiquaries a "Conjectural Translation" of the Rosetta Inscription derived from the Egyptian Texts. (Archæologia, xviii. 65. Museum Criticum, ii. 157.) This, it should be observed, was obtained from a minute comparison "of the three Inscriptions" with each other, and is clearly the first Paper in which any distinct notice was taken of the Hieroglyphical text.

In August, 1815, Dr. Young sent a copy of his version, with a copious Enchorial vocabulary, to M. de Sacy, stating that he suspected the alphabet of M. Akerblad to be syllabic, rather than purely alphabetic. The letter, however, containing this information was written in October, 1814, and had been shown very soon afterwards to one of M. de Sacy's friends then in London. It was accompanied by a second letter, in which this passage occurs: "After having completed this analysis of the Hieroglyphic Inscription, I observed that the Epistolographic characters of the Egyptian Inscription, which expressed the words 'God, Immortal, Vulcan, Priests, Diadem, Thirty,' and some others, had a striking resemblance to the corresponding Hieroglyphics; and, since none of these characters could be reconciled, without inconceivable violence, to the forms of any imaginable alphabet, I could scarcely doubt, that they were imitations of the Hieroglyphics, adopted as monograms or verbal characters, and mixed with the letters of the alphabet: and the terminal mark, which I have expressed by an asterisk in my last letter, appears evidently to be of the same kind, being a portion of the ring which surrounds the Hieroglyphic representations of most of the proper names." In speaking of the pure Hieroglyphics, he also says, "The number of radical characters is indeed limited like that of the keys of the Chinese; but it appears that these characters are by no means universally independent of each other, a combination of two or three of them being often employed to form a single word; and, perhaps, even to represent a simple idea." "It is impossible that all the characters can be pictures of the things they represent; some, however, of the symbols on the stone of Rosetta have a manifest relation to the objects denoted by them; for instance, a king is denoted by a sort of plant, with an insect, which is said to have been a bee; while a much greater number of the characters have no perceptible connection with the ideas attached to them." (Mus. Crit. ii. 202, 203.) In a letter to M. Akerblad, written in August, 1816, Dr. Young expressly points out the exact coincidence between certain passages in different Egyptian manuscripts, some written in pure Hieroglyphics, and others in a running hand. "By means of this comparison," he says, "notwithstanding the extreme degradation of the Enchorial characters of the De Sacy.

Akerblad,
1802.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Rosetta stone, I have identified several of them with the Hieroglyphics, although at first sight they exhibited no traces of resemblance." If M. Champollion's system has been clearly developed in the preceding pages, it will be seen that its fundamental principles are here pointed out by Dr. Young. 1. The intimate relation, or rather identity, of the running hand with the Hieroglyphics. 2. The mixture of alphabetic or syllabic characters with pure symbols. Had Dr. Young looked more to words than things, he would have completely anticipated the brilliant discoveries made by M. Champollion; and it is, in fact, the solidity of the foundation which he laid, that has given its main strength to the beautiful superstructure raised upon it by his rival, for such, M. Champollion's disingenuous attempt to conceal what he owes to Dr. Young, justifies us in calling him. In the first publication of M. Champollion, entitled Egypt under the Pharaohs, the Rosetta stone is mentioned in several places; but merely as an authority for names, always on the supposition of its being entirely alphabetic, and without the smallest hint of any attention to the Hieroglyphics, except in the Introduction, (p. xiv,) where he says, that "perhaps it (the study of the Coptic language) may lead us to the interpretation of the Hieroglyphics, to which it must have had some affinity;"* adding in a note, "this is no paradox." Such, judging from M. Champollion's own words, was his total ignorance of the Hieroglyphical system in 1814, the year in which L'Egypte sous les Pharaons was published. Nor does he produce any vouchers to prove his knowledge of it before 1821. Five years had, therefore, elapsed after the principles of the Hieroglyphic system laid down by Dr. Young had been publicly known, especially to M. Champollion's friends in France, before his first publication, and yet he wishes the world to believe that he had never heard of them. (Précis, 18.) Unfortunately we learn from Dr. Young, that several copies of his communications to the Museum Criticum were sent to his friends in Paris in 1816, and others of his excellent papers in the Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica in 1818; so that it is highly improbable that M. Champollion should not have seen those works, or at least have received an account of their contents. Such want of ingenuousness is the more to be lamented, as it throws a shade over the character of an able and ingenious man, whose merit is too great to need enhancement by oblique means. M. Champollion has also availed himself of the caution and diffidence of Dr. Young, for the purpose of making him appear to say what he never said, and charging him with errors for which he is not answerable. M. de Sacy, indeed, is persuaded (Précis, 38. 1.) that there are only "quelques légers points de contact" between the conjectures of Dr. Young and the discoveries of M. Champollion; but the systematic injustice of that profound Orientalist to the memory of Sir W. Jones, too plainly shows how much he allows his judgment to be warped by national feelings.

Such, then, was the process by which this important discovery was made; and though we are, as yet, far from being able to interpret with certainty all Hieroglyphical Inscriptions, we can often ascertain the sense of long passages, and in some cases, that of the whole; we can always read the names and dates recorded, and, as the knowledge of one system of writing has led to that of the others, the contents of papyri, covered with popular (Demotic) or priestly (Hieratic) characters, are now accessible; and, small as our progress has yet been, by means of this discovery many disputable points in the ancient Chronology of Egypt have been settled; many facts respecting the Religion, Government, and condition of the Egyptians, brought to light, and the idle theories respecting the incredible antiquity of their monuments completely overthrown. The Hieroglyphic as well as the Greek Inscriptions on the Temples of Esné (Latopolis) and Denderah (Tentyris) record the names of Roman Emperors; (Salt, pl. ii. 4, 6, 7, 13, 14, 17, 20, 22; Champollion, Précis, pl. iv. 1. v. 78; Letronne, Rech. 157. 449. 372. 456.) and buildings affirmed, from astronomical data, furnished by the Zodiacs sculptured on them, to be nearly 5000 years old, are proved, by incontestable evidence, to have been erected under Trajan and the Antonines!

* Peut-être elle peut nous conduire à l'interprétation des Hiéroglyphes avec lesquelles elle dut avoir quelque rapport.

The caution with which Dr. Young and M. Champollion proceeded, and the innumerable instances in which their method has been verified by unexpected confirmations—such as Greek Inscriptions recording what they had already found in the Hieroglyphical tablets on the same building, and registries in the Demotic character, the duplicates of which, in Greek, have also been discovered—are in themselves sufficient guarantees for the correctness of their views; but as, independently of their labours, and perhaps antecedently to them, another system was formed, by which Hieroglyphic texts have been translated with the confidence and assurance of truth, it is right that the reader should know something of that system, and of the grounds on which it has been generally rejected. The late Professor Spohn, whose early death prevented him himself from giving his Papers to the world, having observed a real, or apparent, resemblance between some of the Demotic characters on the Rosetta stone and certain letters in the old Phœnician alphabets, formed an idea that the Egyptians had originally borrowed their alphabet from the Phœnicians; but that, being fond of variety, they first increased the number of their ordinary characters very amply; then, from the same love for calligraphy, gave them the new forms found in the Hieratic texts; and, lastly, by way of attaining the acmé of calligraphic excellence, arranged all sorts of figures of all sorts of things, in something like the forms, or assumed them as symbols of their letters, in order to serve as substitutes for them. These, it need scarcely be added, are the Hieroglyphics; and thus, from the Phœnician was formed the most ancient Egyptian character, the Demotic, which was by degrees, in process of time, improved and beautified into the Hieratic and Hieroglyphic, the most splendid and most modern of the three. This system, Professor Seyffarth, the friend and follower of Spohn, has worked up from his Papers into an ample quarto, entitled Rudimenta Hieroglyphices, and printed at Leipzig in 1826. M. Seyffarth is a man of great learning and industry, and his Work does honour to his ability and diligence, as well as to the liberality of his publisher, for all his six and thirty plates (the last only 6 feet long) are very neatly executed. But if M. Spohn is right, Messrs. Champollion and Young are completely wrong; especially the latter; for, while he still seems to doubt whether the Egyptians ever had any alphabet at all, M. Seyffarth says they never had any thing else. The most marvellous thing is, that both systems assume the

HIERO-
GLY-PHICS.System of Spohn and Seyffarth.

HIERO-
GLY-PHICS.HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

Rosetta Inscription as their basis, and appeal to it as their voucher. The German Professor has no difficulty whatever in reading off the Demotic Inscription, which M. Champollion scarcely attempts, and Dr. Young altogether declines; and the translation according to the Spohnian system turns out to be almost identical with Dr. Young's and the Greek: though the words forming it are divided after quite another fashion.* How this can have been brought about, the reader will be at a loss to imagine, till he has learnt that each letter has such a variety of signs, and each sign such a latitude of powers, that it requires no very great skill, or labour, on the part of the decipherer to find any letters, and make any meaning he pleases out of any given text; so that wherever we have a Greek translation of an Egyptian papyrus, we shall be sure to find the Egyptian text, interpreted according to M. Spohn's system, nearly agreeing in substance with its Hellenic counterpart; and it can occasion no surprise that M. Seyffarth's readings of the names in certain Hieroglyphic scrolls (Remarks on an Egyptian History, &c. Lond. Literary Gazette, 1828) should accord so happily with those given by Manetho. For the letter A M. Seyffarth has the small number of eighty-nine different representatives, and so on for the other letters in proportion. Besides which, thanks to the use of all possible figures of speech, prothesis, metathesis, epenthesis, syncope, and apocope; the language produced by these letters is of that convenient structure, that it can assume almost any form, and bear almost any sense, which the interpreter chooses to put upon it. The simple fact,—that the whole system rests upon a gratuitous hypothesis, for which there is not a particle of evidence in a single ancient writer,—appears abundantly sufficient to show how baseless a fabric it is; but even if it had some external evidence in its favour, the extreme uncertainty of its elements, and the extravagant licenses continually required, in order to elicit any satisfactory sense from the words and sentences which they form, would present, it may be supposed, insuperable objections to its adoption by any sober inquirer. In short, to use the emphatic, and, it may be added, well-merited expressions of an able writer, (Edin. Review, xlv. 534.) it is “a theory, the bare statement of which is a sufficient refutation.”

Ancient
testimonies.

In addition to the almost innumerable confirmations of the truth of M. Champollion's system afforded by Greek counterparts of Enchorial deeds, papyri which are duplicates of each other, idols bearing the names, in Phonetic characters, of Gods whom their attributes show them to represent, and mummy-cases with Inscriptions in Greek as well as Hieroglyphics, it will be proper to say a few words on the evidence respecting them afforded by ancient writers. Herodotus barely mentions (ii. 36.) the two kinds of writing, Sacred and Popular, used by the Egyptians; Diodorus Siculus, (iii. 34.) who, if his text be not corrupted, once uses the word “Hieroglyphic,” speaks of the sacred character as being exclusively symbolical; but Clemens Alexandrinus, who, as a native of Egypt, has a peculiar claim on our attention, is the only writer by whom any distinct account of the various modes of writing prevalent in Egypt is given. “That which the Egyptians, who are educated,”

he says, (Stromat. v. 657. Ed. Potter.)* “learn first, is that kind of writing called Epistolographic; next, they learn the Hieratic, which is used by the sacred scribes (hierogrammates;) lastly and finally, the Hieroglyphic (character;) of which one (kind) is Cyriologic, or proper, expressing the first elements of speech, and the other Symbolic, or figurative. Of the Symbolic, (characters,) one (sort) represents objects in their proper form, (i. e. Cyriologic,) by imitation; the other, as it were, paints them tropically or metaphorically; and the third, on the contrary, represents them allegorically, by means of certain enigmas. Thus when they wish to express the sun, they make a circle; for the moon they put the figure of a crescent, according to the Cyriologic, or proper method, (i. e. by imitation;) but when the (text) engraved is in the tropical or metaphorical style, the characters are taken in a metaphorical and altered sense according to their respective analogies; being sometimes diverted from their original meaning, at other times transformed in various ways. Thus when they deliver down to posterity the praises of their kings in theological fictions, they express them by Anaglyphs, (i. e. tablets sculptured in bas-relief.) Of the third (or Enigmatic) sort (of Hieroglyphics) this may serve as an example: the other stars (i. e. planets) they represent by the figures of serpents, on account of the obliquity of their course; but the sun by that of a beetle, because it forms a round ball of ox-dung, and then rolls it forwards before itself. They say, likewise, that this animal lives for six months under ground, and for the remainder of the year above ground; that it impregnates the ball which it has made, and engenders by means of it; and that it has no female.” A passage in the Life of Pythagoras, ascribed to Porphyry, (§ 12.) speaks of the Symbolic as different from the Hieroglyphic characters; but it is manifestly, as M. Letronne observes, (Précis, 386.) a misapplication of the words of Clemens, imperfectly understood. That learned father has, as he justly remarks, mentioned three distinct kinds of writing as used by the Egyptians: 1. The Epistolographic; 2. the Hieratic; and 3. the Hieroglyphic; but he has not entered into any detail except with regard to the third. The Hieroglyphic character he divides into two kinds; 1. that which he calls Cyriologic, i. e. such as uses the elements in their

* Αὐτίκα οἱ παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις παιδευόμενοι, πρῶτον μὲν πάντων τὴν Αἰγυπτίαν γραμμάτων μίθεον ἐκμαθάνουσι, τὴν ἘΠΙΣΤΟΛΟΓΡΑΦΙΚΗΝ καλουμένην διωτὴν δὲ τὴν ἹΕΡΑΤΙΚΗΝ, ἣ χρεῶνται οἱ ἱερογραμματεῖς ὑστάτην δὲ καὶ τελευταίαν τὴν ἹΕΡΟΓΛΥΦΙΚΗΝ, ἥς ἡ μὲν ἴστί διὰ τῶν πρώτων ΚΥΡΙΟΛΟΓΙΚΗ ἡ δὲ ΣΥΜΒΟΛΙΚΗ. Τῆς δὲ Συμβολικῆς ἡ μὲν στοιχείων ΚΥΡΙΟΛΟΓΕΙΤΑΙ ΚΑΤΑ ΜΙΜΗΣΙΝ, ἡ δ' ὡς περ ΤΡΟΠΙΚΩΣ γράφεται, ἡ δ' ἀντικρὺς ἀλληγορεῖται ΚΑΤΑ ΤΙΝΑΣ ΑἸΝΙΓΜΟΤΣ. Ἡλίον γοῦν γράφει βουλόμενοι, κύκλον ποιοῦσι· σιλήνην δὲ, σχῆμα μηνουίδος, ΚΑΤΑ ΤΟ ΚΥΡΙΟΛΟΓΟΥΜΕΝΟΝ ἙΙΔΟΣ ΤΡΟΠΙΚΩΣ δὲ κατ' οἰκειότητα μιτάγοντες καὶ μιτατινόντες, τὰ δ' ἐξαλλάττοντες, τὰ δὲ πολλαχῶς μετασχηματίζοντες χαράττουσιν. Τοὺς γοῦν τῶν βασιλέων ἱπταίους θεολογουμένοις μύθους παραδίδοντες, ἀναγράφουσι διὰ τῶν ἈΝΑΓΛΥΦΩΝ. Τοῦ δὲ ΚΑΤΑ ΤΟΥΣ ΑἸΝΙΓΜΟΤΣ τρέτου εἴδους διῶγμα ἴστί τῷδε· τὰ μὲν γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων, διὰ τὴν περιεὶαν τὴν λοξὴν ὄφειον σώμασιν ἀπεικάζον, τὸν δὲ Ἡλίον τῷ τοῦ κινθάρου ἱπιδῇ κυκλοτερεῖς ἐκ τῆς βοίας ὄνθου σχῆμα πλασάμενος, ἀντιπρόσωπος κυλίνδρι φασὶ δὲ καὶ ἱξάμενον μὲν ὑπὸ γῆς, ἐπίτερον δὲ τοῦ ἔτους τμήμα, τὸ ζῶον τοῦτο ὑπὲρ γῆς διαϊτῆσθαι σπειρομαίνουσι εἰς τὴν σφαίραν καὶ γανῶν καὶ θῆλον κίνθαρὸν μὴ γίνεσθαι. This passage, respecting the interpretation of which there has been some difference of opinion, will be found in Warburton's Divine Legation, (iv. 4. ii.) in Bailey's Hieroglyphicorum Origo et Natura, (p. 30,) with some very judicious remarks, and in Champollion's Précis, (p. 378,) where it is translated and commented on by M. Letronne with his usual learning and ability.

* Dr. Young separates the groups of figures in the Egyptian text, though he leaves the value of their elements undetermined.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

proper natural sense, not figuratively nor metaphorically, and expresses the first elements of speech. 2. The Symbolic, of which the elements are taken in a tropical or metaphorical sense. These he again subdivides into three secondary kinds: 1. a direct and proper representation of the object meant, not by an exact picture, but by an approximation, which may be strictly called a symbol; 2. an allegorical representation, such as appeared in the sculptures and paintings figuratively recording the heroic deeds of the Egyptian kings; and 3. an enigmatical symbol, derived from some obscure analogy, not immediately or easily to be detected.

This classification will be more readily understood from the following Table:

The Egyptian Letters were	Epistolographic.	{	Cyriologic, by the first Elements of speech.
	Hieratic.
	Hieroglyphic.
		{	Cyriologic, by Imitation.
		{	Symbolic.
		{	Metaphorical, by Sculptures.
		{	Enigmatical.

The accordance of this with M. Champollion's system is perfect, if it can be shown that his Phonetic characters are the Cyriologic Hieroglyphics of Clemens, expressed by the first elements. (διὰ τῶν πρώτων στοιχείων.) Now, as the word here used (στοιχεῖα, i. e. elements) was the technical term for "the elements of speech," first and properly employed to signify the elementary sounds of which words are formed, and afterwards the signs (γράμματα) of those sounds when forming words, i. e. the letters of the alphabet,* there can scarcely be a doubt as to the sense in which the term should be taken here. But the proper meaning of the epithet "first" is not so easily determined; it will not signify "first in order," as the whole alphabet is here spoken of; "first in time," then, must be the sense in which it is used, and the primitive letters of the alphabet, the small number of sounds first distinguished, must be those here meant. M. Letronne once thought that the sixteen letters used by the Greeks for several Ages before the introduction of the remainder, were those here alluded to; but, subsequently recollecting that στοιχεῖα properly signifies "the elements of speech," it appeared to him, as it will to most other persons, more probable, that the simplest and most elementary sounds of all languages are here meant, without any especial reference to the Greek alphabet. The number of the different sounds expressed by distinct signs in very early Ages, must evidently, he says, (p. 395,) have been small; it is therefore reasonable to suppose, that, by "the signs of the first articulated sounds," Clemens meant such sounds only as were distinguished by particular signs in the first Ages. Now it is very remarkable, that the only sounds which are clearly distinguished by M. Champollion's Phonetic Hieroglyphics are these:

3 Labials.....	B . P-PH . M
3 Dentals	D-T-TH . J . N
3 Gutturals	G—K . H . KH.
2 Sibilants	S . SH.
1 Liquid.....	L-R.
2 Vowels	A-O-V . E—I.

If the Egyptians then had, like their neighbours, been contented with one figure for each articulation, their alphabet would have had only fourteen letters; those which differ merely in degree of intonation or vehe-

* This is most satisfactorily proved by M. Letronne. (Précis, p. 387-392.)

mence of aspiration, not being distinguished by separate signs. But that formed by the Phonetic Hieroglyphics, according to M. Champollion, was framed on the most elementary and simplest scale; expressing merely those "first elements" which are required by language in its earliest state; it must have been known also to every well-educated Egyptian, and therefore the bare mention of it by Clemens was sufficient without further explanation. Plutarch also distinctly mentions the Phonetic powers of Hieroglyphics, saying (Sympos. ix. 3.) that "the ibis, being sacred to Hermes, was written by the Egyptians as the first of their letters;" but this does not appear to agree with modern observations. A bird, it is true, stands for A, but it is a hawk, an eagle, or some smaller bird; not a duck, and certainly not an ibis.* The same writer says, also, (De Iside, p. 374,) that the number of letters among the Egyptians was twenty-five; but that could hardly relate to the Enchorial alphabet, as it has from twenty-seven to thirty, if not more, distinct characters. The testimony of Clemens has been supposed by many writers to be at variance with the accounts given by Herodotus (ii. 36.) and Diodorus, (iii. 3.) as well as with the Trilateral Inscription; (ΓΡΑΜΜΑΣΙΝΙΕΡΟΙΣΚΑΙΕΓΧΩΡΙΟΙΣ;) the "national characters" of the latter being evidently the same as the "popular characters" (δημοτικά or δημῶδη γράμματα) of the former. But this discordance is only apparent, for the Hieratic and Hieroglyphic were both considered as sacred characters by the Greek Historians and the Egyptian Priests who drew up the Decree found near Rosetta. (Letronne, in Précis, 383.) The discovery, therefore, of that stone, and the result of the inquiries to which it has given rise, have completely reconciled this supposed disagreement between the best authorities among the Ancients respecting the Egyptian characters, and have proved beyond dispute the accuracy of Clemens, whose valuable but obscure statement receives from the discoveries of M. Champollion, that very strong confirmation which it no less gives to them. To that gentleman, certainly, we are obliged for all clear notions of the Phonetic powers of the Hieroglyphics, and a knowledge of the Hieratic character, as distinct from the sacred and the popular letters.

The principal Works on the nature and origin of Hieroglyphics may be divided into three classes: 1. the ancient writers who have treated of this subject; 2. those which were published before; and 3. those which have appeared since the discovery of the Rosetta Inscription. Authorities

Of the second class, the earliest are now merely objects of curiosity; monuments, for the most part, of learning misapplied and imagination extravagantly indulged: some of them, however, have a value independently of the theory which they were written to support.

1. Herodoti Historia; Diodori Siculi Bibliotheca Historica; Clementis Alexandrini Opera a Pottero, Episc. Oxon. Oxonii, 1715, 2 vol. fol.; Plutarchus, De Iside et Osiride a Squire, Cantab. 1744, 8vo.; Ejusdem, Opera a Reiske, Lipsiæ, 1774, 12 vol. 8vo.; Horapolin's Hieroglyphica a De Pauw, Trajecti, 1727, 4to.

* It is singular that this should have escaped the notice of so acute an observer as M. Letronne; it is also more strange that he should find any indication of Phonetic Hieroglyphics in the passage, (Joseph. contr. Apion, 445.) where Manetho says that Hycsos meant shepherd-kings; surely nothing more is meant than that Hyc signified king in the sacred dialect, i. e. in that which, from its antiquity, had become obsolete; nor could "the sacred tongue" signify merely "a sacred character." Horapollon's (Hierogl. i. 7.) explanation of the word baïeth is more to the purpose.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

2. Les Hiéroglyphes de J. P. Valerian, Lyons, 1615, fol. ; Pignorii Mensa Isiaca, Amstel. 1670, 2 tom. 4to. The Bembino, or Isiac Table can now be proved to be, what was long suspected, a Roman imitation of the Egyptian style. (Warburton, Divine Legation, iv. 4. p. 200, 296. n. u u u p. 423 ; Dr. Young, in Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica, iv. 374.) Discours des Hiéroglyphes Egyptiens, par P. Langlois, Paris, 1584, 4to. ; Kircheri Œdipus Ægyptiacus, Romæ, 1652, 4 vol. fol. ; Ejusdem, Obeliscus Pamphilius, Romæ, 1650, fol. ; Ejusdem, Obelisci Ægyptiaci Interpretatio, Romæ, 1666, fol. ; Ejusdem, Sphinx Mysagoga, Amst. 1676, fol. Kircher's Works are useful on account of the plates ; their accuracy, however, is not very great. Westerhovivius, Hiéroglyphes des Egyptiens, &c. Amst. 1735, 4to. ; Brocchi, Ricerchi sopra la Scultura presso gli Egiziani, Venezia, 1792, 8vo. ; Warburton's Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 4. Works, Lond. 1811, 8vo. vol. ii. p. 116-214, 373-428. This is one of the best treatises on the subject, and almost the only one, in the first division, worth reading. A French translation of it was published as a separate Work at Paris in 1744. Bertuch, Essai sur les Hiéroglyphes, Weimar, 1804, 4to. ; Palin, Analyse de l'Inscription en Hiéroglyphes du Monument trouvé à Rosette, Dresde, 1804, 4to. ; Le même, De l'Etude des Hiéroglyphes, Paris, 1812, 5 vol. 12mo. ; Hammer's Translation of Ibn Wahshiyeh's Ancient Alphabets and Hieroglyphic Characters explained, Lond. 1806, 4to. a mere Arabian tale ; Georgii Zoëga, De Origine et Usu Obeliscorum, Romæ, 1797, fol. an excellent Work.

3. Jacobi Bailey Hieroglyphicorum Origo et Natura, Cant. 1816 ; a Cambridge Prize Essay, and an excellent Tract, comprising a vast deal of matter in a small compass. In the Appendix are added Hermapion's Version of the Inscriptions on the Flaminian Obelisk, from Ammianus Marcellinus, (Hist. xvii. 4.) and Porson's Restitution of the Greek Inscription on the Rosetta Stone, with Heyne's Latin Translation. A. J. Silvestre de Sacy, Lettre au Sujet de l'Inscription Egyptienne du Monument trouvé à Rosette, à Paris, 1802 ; J. D. Akerblad, Lettre sur l'Inscription Egyptienne de Rosette, Paris, 1802 ; Cadet, Copie figurée d'un Rouleau de Papyrus, Paris, 1805 ; E. Quatremère, Recherches sur la Langue et la Littérature de l'Egypte, Paris, 1808, 8vo. ; J. F. Champollion, L'Egypte sous les Pharaons, Paris, 1814, 2 vol. 8vo. These two Works relate principally to the Coptic or Egyptian language. Hieroglyphics, a Collection of Plates published by the Egyptian Society, under the direction of Dr. Young, Lond. fol. v. y. continued by the Royal Society of Literature, Lond. 1825 ; Museum Criticum, Cambridge, 1812-1826, 2 vol. 8vo. ; Dr. Young's First Papers on the Rosetta Inscription are in vol. ii. pp. 155, 329 ; Egypt, in Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica, Edinb. 1819, iv. 38-74, contains a further and more complete account of Dr. Young's researches, with a copious Hieroglyphical Vocabulary. J. F. Champollion, Lettre à M. Dacier relative à l'Alphabet des Hiéroglyphes, Paris, 1822, 8vo. ; Fontana, Rouleau de Papyrus expliqué par M. de Hammer, Vienne, 1822, a most perfect and beautiful fac-simile. Dr. Young's Discoveries in Hieroglyphical Literature, Lond. 1823, 8vo. ; J. F. Champollion, Précis du Système Hiéroglyphique, Paris, 1824, 8vo., second edit., with the addition of the Lettre à M. Dacier, Paris, 1828 ; reviewed in Edinburgh Review, Edinb. 1827, xlv. 95, 528, and Bri- tish Critic, Lond. 1827, i. 141 ; H. Salt's Essay on the Phonetic System of Hieroglyphics, Lond. 1825, 8vo. ; Jomard sur l'Etalon Métrique trouvé à Memphis, Paris, 1823, (Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences) ; Passalacqua, Catalogue des Antiquités découvertes en Egypte, à Paris, 1826 ; many valuable communications respecting the collection are in the Appendix ; G. Seyffarth Rudimenta Hieroglyphices, Lips. 1826, 4to. ; reviewed in Edinburgh Review, xlv. 528, and Bulletin des Sciences Historiques, Paris, 1826, v. 348 ; Monumens Egyptiens du Musée Britannique, par M. Yorke and Lieut.-Col. Leake, Londres, 1827, scrolls briefly explained ; J. G. L. Kosegarten, De priscâ Ægyptiorum Literatūrâ, Commentatio prima ; rather prolix, but, on the whole, a very useful and judicious Work on the Demotic character. Le Chevalier de Goulianoſſ, Essai sur les Hiéroglyphes d'Horapollon, Paris, 1827 ; J. Klaproth, Deux Lettres sur les Hiéroglyphes Acrologiques, Paris, 1827. These Lettres are a defence of M. de Goulianoſſ's system, one of the most absurd yet devised, according to which the Hieroglyphics are not representations of the object meant, but of something, the name of which began by the same letter ; thus an impudent, quick-sighted man was represented by a frog, because quickness (sholem) and frog (shrou) both began with sh ; a dirty fellow (*roj*p) by a pig, (rir.) because both words begin with r. In one of these examples, and in a vast many others, the supposed alliteration unfortunately does not exist ; and, to say nothing of the little chance which exists that any one should be able to interpret a text so constructed, except the author of it, a failure of proof in a single instance, must completely overthrow the whole system. (Bulletin des Sciences Historiques, vii. p. 289. No. 330.) Réplique aux Objections de M. Champollion le jeune, par M. G. Seyffarth, Leipsick, 1827 ; Ejusdem, Brevis Defensio Hieroglyphices inventæ a F. A. G. Spohn et G. Seyffarth, Lips. 1827 ; Remarks upon an Egyptian History in Egyptian Characters, in the Royal Museum at Turin, by Dr. G. Seyffarth, Lond. 1828, (extracted from the Literary Gazette.) The learned author says very truly, that "Egyptian Inscriptions, of which we have a Greek or Latin translation, still remain the best tests for trying any Hieroglyphical system," and promises to give a complete refutation of Champollion's system in the next Number of his Egyptian Review, as he thinks proper to call his Work, entitled "Contributions to the Knowledge of Ancient Egyptian Literature," (Beiträge zur Kenntniss, &c.) M. D. M. J. Henry's Lettre à M. Champollion le jeune sur l'Incertitude de l'Age des Monumens Egyptiens, (Paris, 1828,) takes for granted the correctness of this system, and refers only to the chronological data derived from M. Champollion's discoveries ; it contains some good remarks, but the author is a superficial writer, and fond of foolish etymologies. J. F. Champollion, Lettres au Duc de Blacas, relatives au Musée Royal Egyptien de Turin, Paris, 1824, 1826 ; Dr. J. W. Plaff, Hieroglyphik ihre Wesen und ihre Quellen, Nürnberg, 1824, 8vo. ; Ebendesselb. Die Weisheit der Ägypter und die Gelehrsamkeit der Franzosen, Nürnberg, 1825, 8vo. ; F. A. G. Spohn, De Lingua et Literis veterum Ægyptiorum cum Grammaticâ atque Glossario Ægyptiaco, edidit G. Seyffarth, Lipsiæ, 1825, 4to. ; G. Seyffarth, Beiträge zur Kenntniss der Literatur, Kunst, Mythologie und Geschichte des alten Ägyptens, Leipzig, 1826 ; Ejusdem, Vita Spohnii, Lips. 1825.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.
—
HIGH.

The latest Work which we have seen connected with Hieroglyphics is of a very curious nature, Excerpta Hieroglyphica, drawn, lithographed, and published in Egypt by James Burton, Esq. We believe that four Numbers have appeared, but not more than two have reached England. They contain thirty-one plates, executed with great spirit. A notice which is given in the first Number, speaks sufficiently for the difficulties under which such an undertaking must be conducted. "The Letter-press which should accompany these Plates is unavoidably deferred for some short time, owing to the state of the Printing establishment in this Country, where the only one which has competent means of printing a Work belongs exclusively to the Government. Quahirah, January 1st, 1828."

HIERO-
GLY-
PHICS.
—
HIGH.

HIEROGRA'MMATIST, } Gr. ἱερογραμματεὺς, HIEROGRA'MMATICK, } ἱερογραφία; a writer of HIEROGRA'PHIC, } sacred things; a writing
HIEROGRA'PHICAL. } or description of sacred things; from ἱερός, sacred or holy, and γράφειν, to write.

The other (sort of language and character was) used only by priests, prophets, hierogrammatists, or holy writers.

Greenhill. The Art of Embalming, p. 291.

The various uses of an alphabet in civil business not permitting it to continue long a secret, when it ceases to be so, they would as naturally invent another alphabetic character for their sacred use: which from that appropriation was called hierogrammatical.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 4.

The historian [Manetho] assures his reader, that he took his information from pillars in the land of Seriad, inscribed by Thoyth the first Hermes, with hierographic letters in the sacred dialect.

Id. Ib. book iv. sec. 4.

These [characters] were properly what the ancients call hierographical. Adle. Origin and Progress of Writing, ch. iii.

HIEROPHANT, Gr. ἱεροφάντης, from ἱερός, sacred or holy, and φαίνειν, to declare or make manifest. See the Quotation from Potter.

And herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants abundantly gratified the fancies of the people with superstrutions and inventions of their own.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, ch. xii.

The chief person that attended at the initiation was called ἱεροφάντης, i. e. a revealer of holy things. Hierophantes is said to have been a type of the great Creator of all things; Ἀφροδίτης, of the Sun; Κηρύκος, of Mercury; and Ὁ ἱππὶ τῆς βαμῆς, of the Moon.

Potter. Antiquities, ch. xx. Of the Religion of Greece.

Yet so late as the age of Appolonius Tyan; the Eleusinian kept so clear of the first imputation, that the hierophant refused to initiate that impostor, because he was suspected to be a magician.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book ii. sec. 4.

HIEROURGY, Gr. ἱεραργία, a sacred, or holy work; from ἱερός, sacred or holy, and ἔργον, a work.

A sacred or holy work.

As he [Melchizedech] being a priest of the Gentiles, no where appears to have used corporeal sacrifices, but blessed Abraham with wine only and bread; just in the same manner, first our Lord and Saviour himself, and then all priests from him, among all nations, consummating the spiritual hierourgy according to the laws of the church, do represent the mysteries of his body and of his salutary blood, in bread and wine.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 333. Distinctions of Sacrifice, (a Charge.)

HIGGINSIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Tetrandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx four-toothed; corolla funnel-shaped, border four-parted; stigma two-lipped, prominent; berry two-celled, two-furrowed, umbilicated, many-seeded.

Three species, natives of Peru.

HIGGLE, v. } The Fr. harceler (see HAGGLE)

HIGGLER, n. } is derived (in Menage) from the Ger.

HIGGLING. } harke, a rake, which is itself from the A. S. raccian, hraccian, to rake or scrape together, to collect, to accumulate; and haggle, or higgle, may thus be,

To rake together, to collect, to accumulate, sc. by small means or dealings, by small gains or savings; and, consequentially, to make repeated offers or repeated refusals (in bargaining) with a view to increase of gains; or (as Cotgrave expresses it) to palter long in the buying or selling of a commodity.

On second thoughts I resign him clear to this county, loth to higgle for a letter or two (misprinted perchance) in the name of a town.

Fuller. Worthies. Northumberland.

The gentry of this county well content themselves in the very badness of passage therein, as which secureth their provisions at reasonable prices; which, if mended, higglers would mount, as bajulating them to London.

Id. Ib. Sussex.

Canst thou refuse to bear thy part

I' th' public work, base as thou art?

To higgle thus for a few blows,

To gain thy knight an opulent spouse,

Whose wealth his bowels yearn to purchase,

Merely for the interest of the churches?

Butler. Hudibras, part ii. can. 2.

He made th' undaunted waggoner obey,

And the fierce higgler contribution pay.

Id. To the happy Memory of Du-val.

It is adjusted, however, not by an accurate measure, but by the higgling and bargaining of the market, according to that sort of rough equality which, though not exact, is sufficient for carrying on the business of common life.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. v.

H I G H.

HIGH, v. to hasten. (See HIE.)

HIGH, v. } Goth. hauhs; A. S. heah; D. ho,

HIGH, adj. } hoo, hoog; Ger. hoch; Sw. hoeg.

HIGH, adv. } Tooke derives from the A. S. heaf-

HIGHLY, } an, elevare, extollere, to heave. See

HIGHNESS, } HEIGHT.

HIGHTH, or } To raise up or aloft, to lift up, to HIGHT. } elevare, to extol, to exalt. And high,

the adjective, (generally,)

Raised, lofty, lifted up, elevated, exalted; met. eminent, illustrious; lofty, proud;—raised as the sea; tempestuous, raging, violent;—raised or removed from view or perception; abstruse, recondite:—high prices, or raised prices, dear.

It is opposed, not only to low, but to little, small, petty, mean.

High is much used in Composition.

— þe heye hulle to hym was a castel, as yt were.

R. Gloucester, p. 174.

Supþe þoru som heye herte þer wax a lute strýf

Býtuene þe Erl of Aunger, & þe emperesse hys wýf.

Id. p. 442.

HIGH.

Býuore alle oþer God hym ȝef þre þýnges, as rýchesse,
And wysdom, & maýstrýe, & þýs was gret heynesse.
R. Gloucester, p. 428.

Whan þis was set & stabled, & pes cried on hii,
Henry þe ȝong kýng ȝede to Normundie.
R. Brunne, p. 138.

And þat ys þe kýnde of a kyng. þat conquereþ of ys enemýes
To helpe heyeliche al hus hoste.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 50.

Hele and ich quaþ he and hihnesse of herte
Shal do þe nat drede. neiþr deþ ne elde.
Id. p. 401.

And we distrien counseils and al highnesse that higheth (extollen-tem) itsilf aghens the science of God.
Wiclif. 2 Corinthians, ch. x.

Eftsoone the feend tok him into a ful high hil and schewide to him all the rewmes of the world and the joie of hem.
Id. Matthew, ch. iv.

The deuyll toke hym vp agayne & ledde him into an excedyng hye mountaine, and shewed him all y^e kyngdomes of the worlde, & al the glorie of the.
Bible, Anno 1551.

————— Dan Ptholomee,
That sayth this proverbe in his Almageste :
Of alle men his wisdom is higheste,
That rekketh not who hath the world in hond.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5908.

Round was the shape, in manere of a compas
Ful of degrees, the hight of sixty pas.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1892.

Yeue and departe thyn almesse,
Do mercy forth with rightwisenesse,
Besече and praie the high grace,
For so thou might thy peas purchase
With God, and stonden in good accorde.
Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 24.

Their entent was to make, yf they myght, a maryage bytwene the chyld of Castell, eldest sonne to Kyng Henry, and the daughter of the Kyng of Nauer, wherby the peace shulde the surelyer cōtynue, to the whyche the Kyng of Nauer was well agreed, because his daughter shuld be so highly maryed.

Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. 342.

Blessed Lorde vouchsafe giue vs leue to speake vnto thy hyghnes in this matter.

Fisher. On the Seuen Penitential Psalms.

————— Their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that glittering by their side,
Like quivers hung, and with preamble sweet
Of charming symphonie they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book iii. l. 639.

Sometimes towards Eden which now in his view
Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fixes sad,
Sometimes towards heav'n and the full blazing sun,
Which now sat high in his meridian towre.
Id. Ib. book iv. l. 30.

His friend Lord Hastings had the guiding of the rear,
(A man of whom the king most highly did repute.)
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 22.

But this Age great with glorie hath brought forth
A matchlesse monarke whom Peace highlie raises,
Who as th' vntainted ocean of all worth
As due to him hath swallow'd all your praises.
Stirling. To his Majestie on his first Entrie into England.

"Content you, sir," (quoth Rosamund)

"You aime your markes amis :

I am not for his highnes, nor

For me his highnes is."

Warner. Albion's England, book viii. ch. xli.

————— What in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support ;
That to the highth of this great argument
I may assert eternal providence,
And justifie the wayes of God to men.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book i. l. 24.

HIGH.

So when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky.
Dryden. Song for St. Cecilia's Day, 1687.

The Pope sent in return a nuncio, Dada, now a cardinal. He was highly civil in all his deportment. But he did not appear that he was a man of great depth, nor had he power to do much.

Burnet. Own Times. James II. Anno 1687.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
And grinning Infamy.
Gray Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College.

The malignity of some, among the various dispositions of which mankind are composed, is often highly gratified at the view of injured sensibility.
Knox. Essays, No. 85.

On the 8th I received, by the hands of an Oonalashka man, named Derramoushk, a very singular present, considering the place. It was a rye loaf, or rather a pye made in the form of a loaf, for it inclosed some salmon highly seasoned with pepper.

Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. book iv. ch. xi.

HIGH, in Composition.

Yf in the meane season Timothie come vnto you, se that he be put in no ieopardie by any high-hearted & proude persons.

Udall. 1 Corinthians, ch. xvi.

Not onely the hygh-mynded antichristes, but all so the dyssem-blynge hypocrites are enforced manye tymes and agaynst theyr wylls compelled by the open veryte and euident scripturs, to denye that afore they hyghly affirmed and to graunt that afore they hyghly denied.

Bale. Image, part i. sig. M. 4.

And then being a high-water, we came to an anker open of the riuier Cola, in eight fadome water.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 276. Steuens Burrowe.

For thai saw tham never so

On high-dayes to chamber go.

Ritson. Met. Rom. vol. i. p. 3. Ywaine and Gawin, l. 52.

Trompes, schalmuses,

He seygh be for the hyegh-deys

Stonde yn hys syghte.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 75. Lybeaus Disconus, l. 1763.

————— Broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on Over the foaming deep high-archt, a bridge
Of length prodigious.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book x. l. 301.

His battred ballances in peeces lay,
His timbered bones all broken rudely rumbled :
So was the high-aspyring with huge ruine humbled.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 2.

ENO. Yes like enough : hye-battel'd Cæsar will Vnstate his happinesse, and be stag'd to th' shew
Against a sworder.

Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 357.

But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent as to concerne the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book xi. l. 145.

This hath discourag'd my high-bended minde,
And still in doale my drouping muse arrayes :
Which if my Phæbus once upon me shin'd,
Might raise her flight to build amidst his rayes.

Stirling. On an Inundation of Douen.

————— My high-blowne pride
At length broke vnder me, and now has left me
Weary, and old with seruire, to the mercy
Of a rude streame, that must for euer hide me.

Shakspeare. Henry VIII. fol. 223.

The lute's light genius now does proudly rise,
Heav'd on the surges of swoln rhapsodies,
Whose flourish (meteor-like) doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies.

Crashaw. The Delights of the Muses. Musick's Duel.

HIGH.

And she beheld, from whence she sate not farre,
Cut on a high-brow'd rocke, (inlaid with gold)
This epitaph, and read it thus enrol'd.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 1.

If yet, he stands incenst, since we have slaine
His high-brow'd herd.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xii. fol. 190.

———— I know him by his stride
The giant Harapha of Gath, his look
Haughty as is his pile high-built and proud.

Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1069.

———— As when a scout
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night; at last by break of chearful dawne
Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some forein land.

Id. Paradise Lost, book iii. l. 546.

As tow'rds the Derbian Peak, and Moreland, (which do draw More mountainous and wild) the high-crown'd Shutlingslaw
And Molcop be thy mounds, with these proud hills whence rove
The lovely sister brooks, the silvery Dane and Dove.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 11.

2. Lepidus is high-colored.

1. They haue made him drinke almes drinke.

Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra, fol. 350.

———— Look to your wives
Your young trim wives, your high-day wives.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Mad Lover, act i.

Then to the high-deepes their rigged vessell driuen,
They supt; expecting the approaching even.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book iv. fol. 68.

But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloyster's pale,
And love the high-embowed roof,
With antic pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.

Milton. Il Penseroso, l. 157.

But yet I call you seruile ministers,
That will with two pernicious daughters ioine
Your high-engender'd battailes, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this.

Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 296.

———— So full of shapes is fancie,
That it alone is high-fantasticall.

Id. Twelfth Night, fol. 255.

———— We shall soone haue way
Giuen by the wooers: they, as well at gate
As set within doores, vse to recreate
Their high-fed spirits.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xvii. fol. 272.

Neither yet would I have this similitude improved to his disparagement: for he is a bird of prey and an high-flyer.

Marvell. The Rehearsal Transposed, vol. ii. p. 293.

———— A high-flowne eagle sorde
On their troops left hand, and sustaine, a dragon all engorde.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book xii. fol. 163.

And yet our high-flown enthusiasts generally, (however calling themselves Christians) are such great spiritualists, and so much for the inward resurrection, as that they quite allegorize away, together with other parts of Christianity, the outward resurrection of the body.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, book i. ch. v.

———— A centery send forth;
Search euery acre in the high-groune field,
And bring him to our eye.

Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 302.

Why then should high-grown minds so much reioice
To draw their stubborn necks from man's subjection.

P. Fletcher. Boethius, book ii. v. 7.

For finding her presence uncheerful to the mourning Philoclea, and condemned of the high-hearted Pamela, she spent her time most with Zelmane.

Sidney. Arcadia, book iii.

I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoote,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-iudging Ioue.

Shakspeare. Lear, fol. 295.

The Queen giving the King many thanks, said, That if those troubles continued, she would take his help, and hire some of his high- landers and isles-men.

Spotswood. Church of Scotland, Anno 1601, book vi.

A rock is a place of stumbling unto those who look not well to their feet; and so was this spiritual rock of our salvation unto the proud high-looking Jew, a stumbling-block, a rock of offence.

Mede. On Texts of Scripture, book i. disc. 43.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of aspe's sting her selfe did stoutly kill.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 5.

Whilst to your eyes your souls fly up and gaze
On every beauty of his high-moon face.

Beaumont. Psyche, can. 3. st. 13.

But when from high-most pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, 'fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way.

Shakspeare. Sonnet 7.

The golden sunne
Gallops the zodiacke in his glistering coach,
And ouer-lookes the highest-piering hills.

Id. Titus Andronicus, fol. 35.

Rebellious dead, rise neuer till the wood
Of Byrnan rise, and our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall liue the lease of nature.

Id. Macbeth, fol. 144.

Which being now but in so mean a bed,
Is like an uncut diamond in lead,
Ere it be set in some high-prized ring,
Or garnished with rich enamelling.

Drayton. England's Heroical Epistles. Edward IV. to Mrs. Shore.

CLAU. We haue beene vp and downe to seeke thee, for we are high-prooffe melancholly, and would faine haue it beaten away, wilt thou vse thy wit?

Shakspeare. Much Ado about Nothing, fol. 118.

———— Last morne I might display
(From off a high-raisd cliffe) an Iland lie
Girt with th' vnmeasur'd sea.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book x. fol. 150.

———— None are for me,
That looke into me with considerate eyes,
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.

Shakspeare. Richard III fol. 194.

For Brent, a pretty brook allures him on again,
Great London to salute, whose high-rear'd turrets throng
To gaze upon the flood, as he doth pass along.

Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 16.

BER. My high-repented blames

Deere soueraigne pardon to me.

Shakspeare. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 251.

The Gothes haue gather'd head, and with a power
Of high-resolued men, bent to the spoyle
They hither march amaine, vnder conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus.

Id. Titus Andronicus, fol. 47.

Since 'twas, at last, your happy fate to come
To my high-rooft, and brass-foundation'd house.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book xiii. fol. 195.

Thither he bent his way, determin'd there
To rest at noon, and enter'd soon the shade
High-rooft and walks beneath, and alleys brown
That open'd in the midst a woody scene.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book ii. l. 293.

———— At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high-seated top th' imperial throne
Of Godhead, fixt for ever firm and sure
The Filial power arriv'd.

Id. Paradise Lost, book vii. l. 586.

Such soon as some brave-minded hungry youth
Sees fitly frame to his wide strained mouth,
He vaunts his voyce upon an hired stage,
With high-set steps, and princely carriage.

Hall. Satire 3. book i.

So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery.

Shakspeare. Julius Cæsar, fol. 115.

HIGH.

HIGH.

To whom she eke inclining her withall,
As a faire stoupe of her high-soaring thought,
A chearefull countenance on them let fall,
Yet tempred with some maiestie imperiall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book v. can. 9.

A lady's sleeve high-spirited Hastings wore.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, book ii.

High-stomack'd are they both, and full of ire.
Shakspeare. Richard II. fol. 23.

He, like to a high-stretch'd lute-string, squeak'd "O, sir,
'Tis sweet to talk of kings."
Donne. Satire 4.

And if the high-swolne Medway faile thy dish,
Thou hast thy ponds, that pay thee tribute fish.
Ben Jonson. The Forrest. To Penshurst.

Who [Neptune] full of dread,
Thrice threw his three-fork'd mace about his griesly head,
And thrice above the rocks his forehead rais'd, to see
Amongst the high-topt hills what tumult it should be.
Drayton. Polyolbion, song 9.

Huge cities and high-towr'd, that well might seem
The seats of mightiest monarchs, and so large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry.
Milton. Paradise Regained, book iii. l. 261.

Go on, heeres gold, go on;
Be as a plannetary plague, when Joue
Will o're some high-vic'd city, haug his poyson
In the sicke ayre.
Shakspeare. Timon of Athens, fol. 91.

For which high-vouchsafed grace,
He was lov'd of all their race.
Ben Jonson. Masques. Love freed from Ignorance, &c.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mightie monarchies,
Whose high-up-reared, and abutting fronts,
The perillous narrow ocean parts asunder.
Shakspeare. Henry V. fol. 69.

One blacke day, bereft seven brothers lives,
By sterne Achilles; by his hand, my father breath'd his last:
His high-wal'd rich Cilician Thebes, sackt by him, and laid wast;
The royall bodie yet he left unspoilde.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, book vi. fol. 92.

Why thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to glose with all.
Shakspeare. Titus Andronicus, fol. 47.

'Twas no less than miracle
That all or any thing indeed withstood
A sea so hollow, such a high-wrought flood.
Cotton. The Storm.

I shall insert some select matters wherein they are silent, happening in this short reign, or interregnum of Jane, a high-born, virtuous and learned lady; happy in all other respects, but most unhappy in this her advancement.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, Anno 1553.

His bloody lance the hero casts aside,
Which spreading tamarisks on the margin hide;
Then like a god, the rapid billows braves,
Arm'd with his sword high-brandish'd o'er the waves.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xxi.

Yonder I see, among th' expecting crowd,
Evans with laugh jocose, and tragic Young;
High-buskin'd Booth.
Gay. Epistle 5. To Pope.

We tried also, by shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, to unite them, and easily confounded them into one high- coloured liquor.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 433. The History of Firmness.

As when from some beleaguer'd town arise
The smokes, high-curling to the shaded skies.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xviii.

She from the voice of high-distinguish'd fames,
With pious Bristol, gallant Strafford names.
Parnell. On Queen Anne's Peace, 1712.

HIGH.

Bold were those Britons, who, the careless sons
Of Nature, roam'd the forest-bounds, at once
Their verdant city, high-embowering fane,
And the gay circle of their woodland wars.
Thomson. Liberty, part i.

And thus undoubtedly 'twill fare
With what unhappy men shall dare
To be successors to these great unknown,
On learning's high-establish'd throne.
Swift. The Athenian Society.

There hecatombs of bulls, to Neptune slain,
High-flaming please the monarch of the main.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, book iii.

Mother of tortures! persecuting Zeal,
High-flashing in her hand the ready torch.
Thomson. Liberty, part iv.

And everywhere huge cover'd tables stood,
With wines high-flavour'd and rich viands crown'd.
Id. Castle of Indolence, can. 1.

At this time Pole thought it became him to write to Cranmer, to try how far a piece of high-flown rhetoric could work upon him.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1555.

The task is easy, but, to clip the wings
Of their high-flying arbitrary kings:
At their command, the people swarm away;
Confine the tyrant and the slaves will stay.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgic 4.

Another pile, high-heap'd with burning wood
For slaughter'd herds and reeking victims stood.
Lewis. The Thebaid of Statius, book vi. l. 299.

I am an old fellow, and extremely troubled with the gout; but having always a strong vanity towards being pleasing in the eyes of women, I never have a moment's ease, but I am mounted on high- heel'd shoes with a glazed wax-leather instep.
Spectator, No. 49.

Yet, yet a cure he found—for on a steep,
Rough-pointed rock, that overlook'd the deep
And with brown horror high-impending hung,
The giant monster sat, and thus he sung.
Fawkes. Of the Idylliums of Theocritus, idyl. 2.

The French were astonished at the courage, the nimbleness, and labours of the Scotch high-landers, who were half naked, but capable of great hardships, and used to run on with marvellous swiftness.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1548.

At the lane's end a high-lath'd gate's prefer'd,
To bar the trespass of a vagrant herd.
Savage. The Wanderer, can. 5.

How short and significant are generally his comparisons! he fails not, in these, to keep a stiff rein on a high-mettled Pegasus.
Garth. Preface to Ovid's Metamorphoses.

The first thing that is given in charge to all those that are rich in this world, is, that they be not high-minded, μη ὑψηλοφρονειν, that they do not think too well of themselves for being rich, and take occasion from thence to despise others that are in meaner circumstances than they.
Sharpe. Works, vol. i. Sermon 4.

The other sort, who had faults also, and great ones, (though not so scandalous,) had withall so much pride and high-mindedness, that they imagined it more their business to sit as censors and correctors over all mankind, than to confess their own sins, or to repent of them.

Waterland. Works, vol. ix. Sermon 18.

Yet know, these noblest honours of the mind
On rigid terms descend: the high-plac'd heir,
Scann'd by the public eye, that with keen gaze
Malignant seeks our faults, cannot through life,
Amid the nameless insects of a Court,
Unheeded steal.

Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

No wife high-portion'd rules her spouse,
Or trusts her essenc'd lover's faithless vows.
Francis. Horace. Ode 24.

Their fathers' frugal tables stand abhorr'd,
And Asia now and Africk are explor'd
For high-pric'd dainties, and the citron board.
Rowe. Lucan, book 1.

And where the Ganges rolls his sacred wave;
Or mid the central depth of black'ning woods.

HIGH.

High-raised in solemn theatre around,
Leans the huge elephant, wisest of brutes.
Thomson. Summer.

Where, by the magnet's aid, the traveller
Steers his untrodden course; yet oft on land
Is wreck'd in the high-rolling waves of sand Immerst and lost. Somerville. The Chase.

Ye Muses, ever fair and young,
High-seated on the golden throne,
Anacreon sent to me a song
In sweetest numbers not his own.

Fawkes. Fragment 5. On the Rose.

Though the high-sounding names of Christ's vicar, and St. Paul's successor, were still retained to keep up the Pope's dignity and authority, yet they had for many ages governed themselves as secular princes. Burnet. History of the Reformation, Anno 1527.

How, from Silurian vats, high-sparkling wines
Foam in transparent floods.

Thomson. Autumn.

He stood upon all the points of an ambassador with the stiffness of former ages, which made him very unacceptable to a high-spirited young prince, who began even to be flattered, as if he had been somewhat more than a mortal.

Burnet. Own Times, Charles II. Anno 1664.

Thus easy rob'd they to the fountain sped,
That in the middle of the court upthrew
A stream, high-spouting from its liquid bed,
And falling back again in drizzly dew.

Thomson. The Castle of Indolence.

Rampant with life, their joy all joy exceeds;
Yet what but high-strung health this dancing pleasure breeds?
Id. Ib.

While you, Mæcenæ, dearest friend,
Would Cæsar's person with your own defend,
And Antony's high-towered fleet
With light Liburnian galleys fearless meet,
What shall forsaken Horace do?

Francis. Horace. Ode 1. book v.

Those obelisks high-towering to the sky,
Mysterious mark'd with dark Egyptian lore.

Thomson. Liberty, part i. l. 240.

By this day a man might avoid them (the shores) well enough; for they had all beacons on them, like huts built on tall posts, above high-water mark, probably set up by the natives of the island Celebes, or those of some other neighbouring islands.

Dampier. Voyages, &c. Anno 1687.

He [Wolsey] had so thoroughly purged this land of robbers, high-waymen, and idle vagrants, that it was now not more free of poyson, and noxious wild beasts, than of harmful men.

Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. Anno 1530.

O guide me from this horrid scene,
To high-arch'd walks and alleys green.

Warton. Ode to Fancy.

While on its sloping sides ascends the pride
Of hoary groves, high-arching o'er the vale
With day-rejecting gloom.

Glover. The Progress of Commerce.

And while surveying all yon starry vault
With admiration I attentive gaze,
Thou shalt descend from thy celestial seat,
And waft aloft my high-aspiring mind.

Id. On Sir Isaac Newton.

Nor yet, angelic genius of the sun,
In worthy lays her high-attempting song
Has blazon'd forth thy venerated name.

Id. Ib.

Proud on a high-bred thing to risque their necks.

Warton. Newmarket, a Satire, (1751.)

Almost all the high-bred republicans of my time have, after a short space, become the most decided, thorough-paced courtiers.

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

But lo! the sacred high-erected fanes,
Fair citadels, and marble-crowned towers,
And sumptuous palaces of stately towns Magnificent arise.

Glover. On Sir Isaac Newton.

HIGH.

From these the Muse
Oft steals some precious drops, and skilful blends
With those the lower fountain lends;
Then show's it all on some high-favour'd head.

Mason. Elfrida. Chorus, ode 1.

I [says Pope] appeal to the people as my rightful judges, and while they are not inclined to condemn me, shall not fear the high-flyers at Button's.

Johnson. Life of Pope.

Should not each dial strike us as we pass
Portentous, as the written wall, which struck
O'er midnight bowls the proud Assyrian pale,
Erewhile high-flusht with insolence and wine?

Young. The Complaint. Night 2.

Till one, of that high-honour'd patriot name,
Russell arose, who drain'd the rushy fen.

Dyer. The Fleece, book ii.

Here the appearance of life began to alter. I had seen a few women with plaids at Aberdeen; but at Inverness the highland manners are common.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

We took two highlanders to run beside us, partly to show us the way, and partly to take back from the sea-side the horses, of which they were the owners. One of them was a man of great liveliness and activity, of whom his companion said, that he would tire any horse in Inverness. Both of them were civil and ready-handed.

Id. Ib.

I was high-mettled, had a violent flow of animal spirits, was a little ambitious, and extremely amorous.

Fielding. History of a Foundling, p. 69.

I have enlarged so long on these particulars, in which the upper part of the world are too high-minded, to attend to their duty.

Secker. Works, vol. ii. Sermon 7.

If at the invention of letters, much high-prized learning had not been contained in hieroglyphics, but only plain memorials of civil matters, no plausible reason can be given why the Egyptians did not then discontinue a way of writing so troublesome and imperfect.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book iv. sec. 4.

He whose luxurious palate daily rang'd
Earth, air, and ocean, to supply his board;
And to high-relish'd poisons madly chang'd
The wholesome gifts of Nature's bounteous lord.

Dodsley. Ode. Pain and Patience.

It has too much the air of a political stratagem adopted for the sake of giving, under a high-sounding name, an importance to the public declarations of this club; which, when the matter came to be closely inspected, they did not altogether so well deserve.

Burke. Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Who but laments to see this fine genius perverted by the prevailing pedantry of his Age, and carried away, against the bias of his nature, to an emulation of the rapturous high-spirited Pindar.

Hurd. Works, vol. ii. p. 256. On the Marks of Imitation.

He read the service rather with a strong, nervous voice, than in a graceful manner; his voice was sharp and high-toned, rather than harmonious.

Johnson. Life of Swift.

High-towering to descry
Th' approach of dawn, and hail her with a song.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, book iii. l. 559.

Gentle Ithuriel led him round the skies,
The buildings struck him with immense surprise;
The spires all radiant and the mansions bright,
The roof high-vaulted with ethereal light.

Watts. Lyric Poems, book iii.

The water was excellent, and conveniently situated; there was plenty of wood close to high-water mark.

Cook. Voyages, vol. i. book i. ch. xx.

Nay I remember very lately a highwayman who confessed several robberies before me, his motive to which, he assured me, (and so it appeared) was to pay a bill that was shortly to become due.

Fielding. Works, vol. xii. p. 296. Cause of the Increase of Robberies, &c. sec. 1.

The historian shews us how it was brought about: "There," says he, "the Roman people first began to intrigue, to debauch, to affect a taste for statues, pictures, and high-wrought plate."

Warburton. The Divine Legation, book i. sec. 6.

Selden has poured forth much learning on HIGHWAYS in a note on the XVIth Song of Drayton's Poly-olbion.
"Neere D years before our Saviour this King Molmu-

HIGH-
WAYS.

tius (take it upon credit of the British story) constituted divers laws; especially that Churches, Ploughs, and Highwaies, should have liberties of Sanctuarie, by no authoritie violable. Highwaies being without exception necessarie, as well for Peace as Warre, have bin defended in the Roman Laws, (ff. de viâ publicâ.) and are taken in ours to be in that respect (as they are by implication of the name) the Kings Highwaies. Et res sacræ; et qui aliquid inde occupaverit excedendo fines et terminos terræ suæ dicitur fecisse Purpresturam super ipsum Regem. (Bracton iv. tract. Assis. Nov. diss. 16. sec. 8.) According to this priviledge of Molmutius, in the Statute of Marlebridge (52. Hen. III. c. 16.) it is enacted that none should distraine in the King's Highway or the Common Street, but the King and his Ministers specialem auctoritatem ad hoc habentibus; which I particularly transcribe, because the printed books are therein so generally corrupted by addition of this here cited in Latine. You see it alters the Law much, and we have divers judgments that in behalf of the King, by common Bailifs, without special authority, Distres may be taken, as for an amerciament in the Shrifcs Torne or Leete, or for Parliament Knights fees. But the old Rolls of the Statute (as I have seen in a faire manuscript, examined by the exemplification, for the Record itself is with many others lost) had not these words, as the Register also specially admonishes, nor is any part of that chapter in some manuscripts, which I marvaile at, seeing we have a formal Writ grounded upon it. . . . But I forget mysele in following matter of my more particular study, and return to Molmutius. His constitution being generall for libertie of Highwaies, controversie grew about the courses and limits of them: wherupon his son King Belin, to quit the subject of that doubt, caus'd more specially these four, here presently spoken of, to be made, which might be for (un) interruption both in Warre and Peace; and hence by the author (Drayton) they are call'd Military, (a name given by the Romans to such Highwaies as were for their marching Armies) and indeed by more polite conceit and judicious authority, (Camden) these our waies have been thought a worke of the Romans also. But their courses are differently reported, and in some part their names also. The Author calls them Watling Street, The Fosse, Ikenild, and Rickeneld. The name of Rickeneld is in Randall of Chester, and by him derived from St. Dewies in Penbroke into Hereford, and so through Worcester, Warwick, Derby, and Yorkshires, to Tinmouth, which (upon the Author's credit reporting it to me) is also justifiable by a very ancient deed of Lands, bounded near Birmingham in Warwickshire by Rickeneld. To endeavor certainty in them were but to obtrude unwarrantable conjecture, and abuse time and you. Of Watling (who is here personated, and so much the more proper, because Verlam was called also by the English Watling-chester,) it is sayd that it went from Dover in Kent, and so by West of London (yet part of the name seems to this day left in the middle of the City) to this place, and thence in a crooked line through Shropshire by Wrekin Hill unto Cardegan; but others say from Verlam to Chester; and where all is referr'd to Belin by Geoffrey ap Arthur, and Polychronicon, another tells you how the sons of (I know not what) King Wethle made and denominated it. The Fosse is derived by one consent out of Cornwall into Devonshire, through Somerset, over Coteswold by Teukesburie, along neere Coventry to Leicester

VOL. XXIII.

HIGH-WAYS.

through Lincolne to Berwick, and thence to Cathnes the utmost of Scotland. Of restitution of the other you may be desparate; Rickeneld I have told you of; in Henry of Huntingdon, no such name is found, but with the first two Ikenild and Erming-street. Ikenild, sayth he, goes from East to West; Erming-street from South to North. Another tells me that Erming-street begins at St. Dewies, and convaies itself to Southampton; which the Author has attributed to Ichning, begun (upon the words communitie with Icens) in the Easterne parts. It's not (in) my power to reconcile all these, or elect the best. I only add that Erming-street (which being of English idiom seems to have had its name from Imunrull, in that signification, wherby it interprets an universal pillar worshipt for Mercurie, president of waies) is like enough (if Huntingdon be in the right making it from South to North) to have left its part in Stansstreet in Surrey, where a way made with stones and gravel, in a soile on both sides very different, continues neere a mile; and thence towards the Easterne shore in Sussex are some places seeming as other reliques of it. But I heere determine nothing."

Perhaps this is as much as can be stated concerning the four great Highways which stretched the whole length and breadth of England. As such they were recognised in the time of Edward the Confessor, one of whose Laws treats De pace quatuor Cheminorum. Alia Pax Regis est quam habent quatuor Chemini, Watling-streate, Fosse, Hikenild et Earning-streete quorum duo in longitudinem regni alii duo in latitudinem distenduntur. Camden, as usual, has exercised the most unwearied diligence in his researches concerning these Highways, but we do not know that he has added much to the matter which we have given above.

The four great Highways of England are considered originally to have been free and common to all the King's subjects; all others are supposed to have been made afterwards through private property, and hence, in order to remedy the injury to which the owner of the soil was exposed, we have been subjected to Toll.

A way may become a public Highway by a dedication of it by the owner of the soil to the public use, and this may be presumed by long-continued usage. But the erection of a bar to prevent the passage of carriages, though it does not impede foot-passengers, rebuts this presumption. An ancient Highway cannot be changed without an inquisition founded on a Writ of ad quod damnum, that such change will not prejudice the public. An owner of land, over which there is an open road, may enclose it by his own authority, but he is bound to leave sufficient space and room for the road, and he is obliged to repair it till he throws up the enclosure. Of common right, the general charge of repairing Highways lies on the occupiers of lands in the Parish in which they lie. If a Parish is part in one County and part in another, while the Highways in one County are out of repair, the whole Parish is liable; but an agreement between the inhabitants as to the part each is to repair is good. There are cases in which, by prescription, the burden of repair falls on individuals, as in that just mentioned of enclosure, and others. To do any act which renders a Highway less commodious, as digging a ditch, or making a hedge across it, erecting a new gate, or laying logs of timber on it, is a nuisance. So also suffering it to be incommoded by the foulness of adjoining ditches or by overhanging of trees; and any person may top the trees to avoid the nuisance. It

2 N

HIGH-WAYS.
—
HIGHT.

is said the owner of lands next adjoining the Highway is bound to scour his ditches. Any one may justify pulling down or destroying a nuisance, (as a new gate or house on a Highway.) A person may be indicted for not repairing a house standing upon a Highway, which is ruinous and likely to fall down to the danger of travellers, whatever be his tenure. If there be a common footway through a close by prescription, and the owner of the close ploughs it up and sows it, passengers may go over another footway in the close without trespassing; so they may break down the enclosure if the way be not sufficient. Erecting a gate across a Highway, though not locked, but opening at pleasure, is a nuisance, for it diminishes the freedom of passage. The usual way of redressing such nuisances is by indictment; but every person, if he has occasion so to do, may remove it summarily by cutting or throwing it down.

The repairs of Highways are regulated by statute, and are under the control of Surveyors. The management of the Turnpike Roads in England is committed to certain Trustees, whose duties are laid down, partly in local Acts of Parliament, partly in a general Act, 13 George III. c. 84, to which the reader may turn for minute particulars.

HIGH
WAYS.
—
HIGHT.

HIGHAM FERRERS, a Borough and Market Town in the County of Northampton, stands on a rocky eminence, not far from the North-Eastern bank of the Nen. It is a small but clean and neat Town. To the North may be traced the site and foundations of an extensive Castle, supposed to date from the reign of Henry III. The Church, dedicated to the Virgin, is a handsome building of the pointed style, with a Western tower and spire rebuilt, partly by the benefaction of Archbishop Laud, in 1632. Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Henry V., was a native of this town; and his head and the armorial bearings of his family and See are carved on some stalls in the chancel of the Church. His father, mother, and a brother are also buried there. In 1422 he founded in Higham Ferrers a College for eight secular Canons, four Clerks, and six Choristers. The building, which is quadrangular, is now, in such part as remains unruined, converted into an Inn, of which the ancient Chapel forms the kitchen. Besides this, there is a Free School and an Almshouse founded by the same benefactor, in the last of which the senior Pensioner is still called the Prior. Higham Ferrers is a Borough, incorporated by Mary; it returns one Member to Parliament. Population, in 1821, 872. Distant 15 miles North North-West from Bedford, 65 North from London.

HIGHT, in a high voice, aloud; Fr. en haut. Tyrwhitt.

And shortly, when his ire is thus agon,
He gan to loken up with eyen light,
And spake these same wordes all on hight.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1786.

Where, when as with the dead
He saw the ground all strow'd, and that same knight
And saluage with their bloud fresh steeming red,
He woxe nigh mad with wrath and fell despight,
And with reprochefull words him thus bespake on hight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 6.

HIGHT, or } Goth. hait-an; A. S. hæt-an, hat-an;
HETE, } D. het-en; Ger. heissen; nominare, nun- HOTE. } cupare, vocare, dicere, jubere. See BE-
HET, and BEHIGHT, and Tooke, ii. 56.

Named, called, said, declared; sc. to be done; in order, charge, commission, promise; and thus, ordered, commanded, charged, committed, promised. It is used without the common verbs, to be, is, was.

To þe kyng of Grece he sende, þat hatte Pandras.

R. Gloucester, p. 12.

Mid þre hondred knyghtes a duk, þat het Siward,
A sailede Corineus.

Id. p. 17.

Twoi emperoures of Rome, Dyoclician,
And an oþer, þat het Maximian,
Were boþe at on tyme, þe on in þe Est ende,
And þe oþer in þe West, Cristendome to schende.

R. Gloucester, p. 81.

A lordyng of þe Romaynes, þat y hote was Galle,
Com & gold hym to oure kyng.

Id. p. 88.

Whan he had regned foure gere, one ryued vpon his right,
A duke of Danmark, Kebriht he hight.

R. Brunne, p. 10.

þerof he mad me skrite, his hote to mak leale,
& for to sikere his dede, set þer to his seale.

Id. p. 69.

He made a maner morter. and mercy hit hihte.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 383.

Right euen a quarter before day
And stode right at her beddes fete
And called her right as she hete
By name.

Chaucer. The Dreame, fol. 245.

I dare not be knowe my owen name
But ther as I was wont to [sub. he] highte Arcite,
Now highte I Philostrate, not worth a mite.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1560.

This reve sat upon a right good stot,
That was all pomelee grey, and [sub. was] highte Scot.

Id. The Prologue, v. 618.

Betwixen hem was maked anon the bond,
That [sub. is] highte matrimoine or mariage.
By all the conseil of the baronage.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3097.

Whan they ben comen to the court, this knight,
Said, he had hold his day, as he had hight,
And ready was his answer, as he saide.

Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6606.

Shew now your patience in youre werking,
That ye me hight & swore in your village
The day that maked was our marriage.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8372.

And wel I wot, or she me mercy hete,
I moste with strengthe win hire in the place.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2400.

But on avow to grete God I hete,
The lif shall rather out of my body sterte,
Than Mahomet's lawe out of myn herte.

Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4754.

His name was hoten deinous Simekin.

Id. The Reves Tale, v. 3939.

In Methamor it telleth thus
How that a lorde, whiche Forcus
Was hote had doughters three.

Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 9.

HIGHT.
—
HILDES-
HEIM.

But, whether dreames delude, or true it were,
Was neuer hart so ravisht with delight,
Ne liuing man like words did neuer heare,
As she to me deliuer'd all that night;
And at her parting said, shee Queene of Faeries hight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 9.

This childe of fancie that Armado hight,
For interim to our studies shall relate,
In high-borne words the worth of many a knight.
Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost, fol. 123.

Arrived there, they passed in forth right:
For still to all the gate stood open wide,
Yet charge of them was to a porter hight
Cald Malvenie, who entrance none denide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 4.

And eke an hundred brasen caudrons bright,
To bath in joy and amorous desire,
Every of which was to a damzell hight.
Id. Ib. book iv. can. 10.

This had a brother, (his name I knowe)
the first of all his cote:
A shepherd true, yet not so true,
as he that earst I hote.
Id. Shepherd's Calendar. July

Whylome, before that cursed dragon got
That happy land, and all with innocent blood,
Defil'd those sacred waues, it rightly hot
The well of life; ne yet his vertues had forgot.
Id. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 11.

HIGRA, also written Aigre, Eger, and EAGRE, q. v.
It is applied to the great and rapid influx of the fall in many rivers besides the Trent, to which under our former notice it may appear to be confined. William of Malmsbury, in a very descriptive passage (de gest. Pont. Angl.
iv. in Rer. Ang. Script. post Bedam. 161. ed. 1596) cited by Archdeacon Nares, employs it for the Severn.
So also, much later, does Chatterton, who had local opportunities of observing the phenomenon. (Second Battle of Hastings, 691.) Drayton (Poly-olbion, xxviii.) and Sir Thomas Brown, who writes the word Agar, (Vulgar Errours, vii. 13.) use it for the Humber as well as for the Trent.

HILARITY, Lat. hilaritas; Gr. ἰλαρός, from ἰλα- εἶν, propitiare, placare; propitium, et lætum reddere; to propitiate, to render or cause to be propitious, or favourable, pleased or gladdened with.

Gladness, mirth, gaiety.

It [musicke] will perform all this in an instant; cheare up the countenance, expell austerity, bring in hilarity.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 297.

Averroes, a man of his own faith, [Avicenna's] was of another opinion: restraining his ebriety unto hilarity.
Sir Thomas Brown. Vulgar Errours, book v. ch. xxi.

In this manner we began to find that every situation in life might bring its own peculiar pleasures: every morning waked us to a repetition of toil; but the evening repaid it with vacant hilarity.
Goldsmith. The Vicar of Wakefield, ch. v.

HILD, i. e. giveth, says Skinner, "from A. S. geld- an, i. e. to yield."

I think to perform this worke as I haue begon in loue after as my thinne witte, with inspiracioun of him that hildeth all grace, woll suffer.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, book i. fol. 295.

The Lord seith I schal heelde (effundam) out my Spirit on ech seisen.
Wiclif. Dedis, ch. ii.

HILDESHEIM, a Province of Hanover, thrown into the scale of compensations yielded to Prussia in 1803, and restored in 1815 to the Kingdom of which it now forms a part. It has Luneburg on the North, and Calenberg on the West; the territories of Brunswick and of Prussian Saxony constitute its remaining boundaries. Its superficial extent, Goslar being included, is about 700 square miles. Continuous chains of hills, separated into two divisions by the river Innerste, extend through the Province; those to the West of the river are connected with the Hartz, and are ranged in an amphitheatre round the Southern district; the hills to the East and North gradually subside into low eminences, terminating at length in a tract of level sand, which forms a part of the great plain of Northern Germany. With the exception of this sandy portion, the soil is everywhere a deep black earth of uncommon fertility, bearing crops of wheat and rye, which often reach the height of a man. Agriculture is the sole employment of the people, and is conducted with care and success if not with consummate skill. The farms are large and frequently enclosed. The exportation of corn and cattle is considerable, and there is no part of the Kingdom in which the peasantry and farmers enjoy a larger share of affluence and contentment.

There is no place of trade in the Province; the simple manners of a rural community discourage the introduction of foreign luxuries.

Hildesheim is the most populous of the Hanoverian Provinces. The inhabitants, 130,000 in number, are for the most part attached to the Lutheran Church. In former times, when the Bishop of Hildesheim was the Sovereign of the land, the Roman Catholic Religion predominated. The Bishopric still remains, but its dignity and revenues are gone, and the numbers of the Roman Catholic communion within this Province do not exceed 23,000.

The Estates of the Province, composed of six Deputies from the Nobility and four from the Towns, still subsist, though their functions must be considerably contracted by the constitutional form of government and uniform system of administration lately introduced into Hanover. The hereditary jurisdictions of private individuals are completely abolished.

Hildesheim, a walled Town on the Innerste, is the chief place of the Province. It is one of the most ancient as well as most confined and unsightly of the German Towns. The population amounts to 11,000. The Churches are numerous, but are not recommended to notice by any architectural merits. The Cathedral, an edifice of great antiquity, is decorated with some fine paintings, and contains a very remarkable monument, the Irmensaule, or pillar of Arminius, which was once the principal object of Saxon worship.
The coarse stone idol so called was thrown into the Hase by Charlemagne; after the lapse of some years, however, it was recovered, and was thought in those rude Ages to add to the sanctity of the Cathedral of Hildesheim, where it at present supports one of the columns in the nave.

Goslar, at the foot of the Rammelsberg, is another dark and tottering Town of the ancient character. It is surrounded by very high walls; the streets are crooked, narrow, and overshadowed by huge roofs grotesquely ornamented. This is the seat of the administration for that part of the Hartz which is held in common by Brunswick and Hanover. The inhabitants, 6000 in number, are chiefly occupied in the mines and in the manufacture of glass and vitriol. Some mines in the Rammelsberg, and a large tract of forest in the Hartz, are the property of the Town.

HILDING, n. } Is either (says Tooke) the past HILDING, adj. } participle of the verb hyld-an, in-

HILDES-
HEIM.
—
HILDING.

HILDING. clinare, curvare, to bend down, to crouch or to cower; (and then it should be written hilden;) or it is the present participle, hylding, (hyld-and;) of the same word. And means

A croucher, a cowerer.

Which when the squire beheld, he to them stept,
Thinking to take them from that hilding hound:
But he it seeing, lightly to him lept,
And sternely with strong hand it from his handling kept.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 5.

2 LORD. If your lordshippe finde him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

Shakspeare. All's Well that Ends Well, fol. 243.

For shame thou hilding of a diuellish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her, that did nere wrong thee.
Id. Taming of the Shrew, fol. 215.

— Our superfluous lacquies, and our pesants,
Who in unnecessarie action swarme
About our squares of battaile, were enow
To purge the field of such a hilding foe.
Id. Henry V. fol. 86.

MOTH. Dost thou dispute with me, Alexander carry the prating hilding forth.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Coxcomb, act. iv.

Their horses, no other than lame jades and poore hidebound hildings.
Holland. Livy, fol. 415.

HILL, v.	}	A. S. hill ; D. hille , hil ; Ger.
HILL,		huegel , from the A. S. hel-an , to
HI'LLET,		cover; in old English to hell , to
HI'LLING,		heal or to hil . See to HEAL. In
HI'LLOCK,		the passages quoted below from
HI'LLY,		Piers Plouhman some editions read
HI'LLINESS,		hyll .
HILL-ALTAR,		To cover: and hill , the noun,
HILL-SIDE,	(which Ihre (in v. Berg) derives
HILL-TOP.	from hæl-a , tegere , to cover.)

“Any heap of earth, or stone, &c. by which the plain or level surface of the earth is covered.” Consequently, High, raised, elevated, ground or land.

Vortiger ys y flowe, for drede of hym ywys,
To an castel in Yrchenfeld, in the Est ende of Walis,
Aboue þe water of Wye, vp an hul on heȝz.
R. Gloucester, p. 135.

He sped him þider in haste, with hilled hors of pris.
R. Brunne, p. 224.

All þe houses beþ heled. halles and chambres.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 123.

Menȝe of þe brýddes
Hudden and heleden. durneliche here egges.
For no foul sholde hem fynde.
Id. Ib. p. 223.

Meteles and moneyles. on Malverne hulles
Musynge on þees meteles. [dreams] a mýle weȝ ich zeode.
Id. Ib. p. 162.

And if it is foul thing to a womman to be pollid, or to be maad ballid, hile sche hir heed, but a man schal not hile his hede. Therefore the womman schal haue an hilyng on her heed.
Wiclif. 1 Corinthians, ch. xi.

And evermore nyght and dai in brielis and in hillis he was crynge and betinge himsilf with stones.
Id. Mark, ch. v.

And with the clothes of hir loue
She hilled all hir bedde aboute.
Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 122.

The Grekes (fulfilled of fantasie)
Sayne eke that of the hillis hye
The goddes ben inuspeciall.
Id. Ib. book v. fol. 90.

That ye may kepe my body from tourment, sewe it in an hartes skygge, and lay it in a trouge of stone, and hyll it with lede close and iust.
Fabyan. Works, vol. i. part vi. ch. 213. Edward the Confessor.

The stone, whiche from that hilly stage
He sawe downe fall on that ymage.
Chaucer. The Prologue, fol. 4.

Als the bark hilles the tree,
Right so sal my ring do the.
Ritson. Met. Rom. vol. i. p. 32. Ywayne and Gawin, l. 741.

Your *hyllynge*s with furres of armyne,
Powdred with golde of hew full fyne.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 180. The Squyr of Lowe Degre, l. 839.

The 16. day they came to the Chetera Bougori, or Island of foure hillocks, which are counted forty versts from Vchoog, and are the furthest land towards the sea.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. fol. 421. Chris. Burrough.

The land of the hooke or point is high and hilly ground.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. fol. 445. Francis Gualle.

Howe be it, for all that, Jeroboam turned not from hys wicked waye; but turned away and made of the lowest of the people preestes of the hilaulters.
Bible, Anno, 1551. 3 Kinges, ch. xiii.

Do'st thou not know me? I too well know thee
By thy rude voice, that doth so hoarcely blow;
Thy haire, thy beard, thy wings, ore-hild with snow.
Ben Jonson. The Masque of Beauty.

But since I am not as I wishe I were,
Yee gentle shepheards! whiche your flocks do feede,
Whether on hylls or dales, or other where,
Beare witnesse all of this so wicked deede.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. June.

Neither will I speak of the little hillets seene in manie places of our Ile, whereof though the vnskilfull people babble manie things: yet they are nothing else but Tumuli or graues of former times.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, book i. ch. xxiv.

And within a while, the water that fell, and by reason of the wind was raised aloft, being congealed once upon the cold tops of the hills, turned into a kind of haile and snow together, and came upon them with such a force, that leaving all things els, the men were forced to lie along, groveling upon their faces, rather stifled and smothered, than covered with their hillings.
Holland. Livius, fol. 426.

And for his sake the early wanton lambs,
That 'mongst the hillocks wont to skip and play,
Sadly ran bleating to their careful dams,
Nor would their soft lips to the udders lay.
Drayton. Pastorals, ecl. 6.

First of all vpon the east side of the hauen a great hillie point called Downesend.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, book i. ch. xii.

Better to have liv'd
Poor and obscure, and never scal'd the top
Of hilly empire, than to die with fear
To be thrown headlong down, almost as soon
As we have reach'd it.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Prophetess, act v.

And not only defended by Antiochus's long pikes, which were best at that kind of service, but by archers and slingers that were placed over them on the hill-side, and poured down a shower of weapons upon their heads.

Raleigh. History of the World, book v. ch. v. sec. 7.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning starr
On his hill-top, to light the bridal lamp.
Milton. Paradise Lost, book viii. l. 520.

Now the soft hour
Of walking comes: for him who lonely loves
To seek the distant hills, and there converse
With nature; there to harmonize his heart,
And in pathetic song to breathe around
The harmony to others.
Thomson. Summer.

Remoter Gilead's hilly tracts obey,
Manasseh's parted sands accept my sway.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

There smiles in varied tufts the velvet rose,
There flaunts the gadding woodbine, swells the ground
In gentle hillocks, and around its sides
Thro blossom'd shades the secret pathway steals.
Mason. The English Garden, book i.

HILL. In short, the only obstacle to this (near Queen Charlotte's sound) being one of the finest countries upon earth, is its great hilliness.
HIM. Cook. Voyages, vol. v. book i. ch. viii.

HILLIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Hexandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rubiaceæ. Generic character: calyx double, inferior six-leaved, superior two or four leaved; corolla six-cleft, tube cylindrical, very long; anthers sessile in the mouth of the tube of the corolla.

One species, H. longiflora, native of Jamaica.

HILT, A. S. helt; D. hille, hielte; perhaps, says Skinner, the hold. And Tooke; "Hilt is held, helt, hilt."

"The hilt of a sword is the held part, the part which is held."

————— The mighty Colebrond struck
A cruel blow at Guy, which though he finely broke,
Yet (with the weapon's weight) his ancient hilt it split.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, song 12.

Be constant gentlemen; by these hills I'll run his hazard, although I run my name out of the kingdom.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Philaster, act i.

He that shall rashly attempt to regulate our hills, or reduce our blodes, had need to have a heart of oak, as well as sides of iron.

Guardian, No. 145.

————— The Lydian sword,
The Persian dagger, leave their shatter'd hills;
Bent is the Caspian scimitar.

Glover. Leonidas, book xii.

HIM, } Goth. Imma, Ina; A. S. him; D.
HIMSELF. } hem; Ger. ihm. As He, (q. v.) so Him is used without regard to distinction of gender or number; in R. of Gloucester and R. Brunne (as Hearne has noted) it is equivalent to them, her, it, he, himself, and themselves. It is now restricted grammatically to the accusative case of the pronoun he.

For þe Kyng of France herde telle of hire goodnesse,
And bade here Fader graunt hym the gode Cordeille.
R. Gloucester, p. 31.

þe see goþ al abouten him [Ireland] eke as Ich onderstonde.
Id. p. 43.

And he nom þet swerd to hym, that so noble was & riche;
For þer nes in al þe world swerd hym yliche.
Id. p. 49.

He ches leuere to deye hymself, þat such sorwe to ysey.
Id. p. 263.

Now is Edward chosen kýng at þer parlement,
And þe lordschip of þe lond alle tille him went.
R. Brunne, p. 6.

At Wýnchestre he lies, so himself willed.
Id. p. 34.

And seide þt hymselfe mýghite asoillie hem alle
Of falsnesse. of fastinges. of voves to broke
Lewede men lývede hým wel. and likeden his wordes.
Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 4.

Ye han not his word dwellinge in you: for ye bileuen not to him, whom he sente.
Wiclif. John, ch. v.

Treuli treuli I saye to you, the sone may not of himself do ony thing, but that that he seeth the fadir doinge.
Id. Ib.

Than hath he don his frend, ne him, no shame.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 3052.

And shortly turned was all up so down
Both habit and eke dispositioun
Of him, this woful lover dan Arcite.
Id. Ib. v. 1380.

And right anon he changed his aray,
And clad him as a poure labourer.
Id. Ib. v. 1411.

Lo Judith, as the storie eke tell can
By good conseil she Goddes peple kept,
And slow him Holofernes while he slept.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9242.

Lo, eche thing that is oned in himselfe
Is more strong than when it is yscatered.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7550.

For swiche lawe as man yeveth another wight,
He shuld himselfen usen it by right.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4464.

This noble knight, this January the old
Swiche deintee hath in it to walke and pley,
That he wol suffre no wight bere the key,
Sauf he himself.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9919.

For in good feithe this would I rede,
That euery man ensample take
Of wisdom, which is hym betake.
Gower. Conf. Am. book i. fol. 8.

And thus thei drive forth the daie,
And eche of them hym selfe amendeth
Of worldes goodes, but none entendeth
To that whiche common profite were.
Id. Ib. fol. 3.

And blissed is he, y^t shall not turne these thinges whiche I dooe for the health of menne, into an occasion of slaunde to himselfward.
Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

————— And him, O wondrous! him,
O miracle of men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) vn-seconded by you,
To looke vpon the hideous God of Warre,
In disadvantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seeme defensible: so you left him.
Shakspeare. Henry IV. Second Part, fol. 82.

He then devise himselfe how to disguise;
For by his mighty science he could take
As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,
As ever Proteus to himselfe could make:
Sometime a fowle, sometime a fish in lake,
Now like a foxe, now like a dragon fell;
That of himselfe he ofte for feare would quake,
And oft would flie away.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, book i. can. 2.

To whom the Prince, him (i. e. himself) fayning to embase
Mylde answer made.
Id. Ib. book vi. can. 6.

See God descending in thy human frame;
Th' offending suffering in th' offender's name;
All thy misdeeds to him imputed see,
And all his righteousness devolv'd on thee.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

First Fear, his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.
Collins. The Passions.

HIMANTOPUS, from the Greek ἰμᾶς a rein, and πῶς a foot; Ray, Bris. Long Legs, Ray. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Longirostres, order Grallæ, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak longer than the head, slender, roundish, and pointed, the mandibles grooved from the base to their middle; nostrils lateral, linear, and placed in the grooves; legs remarkably long and slender, the leg and tarsus being each three times the length of the middle toe; the feet three-toed, the middle connected to the outer toe by a broad, and to the inner by a narrow membrane; nails short and slightly curved; the first quill feather the longest.

The birds forming this genus were noticed by Pliny under the same name, (lib. v. c. 8.) on account of the slenderness of their legs resembling a rein or cord, and he observes they are natives of Africa. Ray places them as a distinct genus among his Aves aquas frequentantes, fissipedes, et in aquis victum quærentes. By Gmelin they were placed among the Charadrii, but without

HIM.
—
HIMAN-TOPUS.

HIMAN-
TOPUS.

any sufficient reason; and since his time the genus has been re-established by Brisson.

These birds have longer legs than any other bird; nor is Mr. White's description of them overdrawn. "The length of the legs," says he, "is so extraordinary, that, at first sight, one might have supposed the shanks had been fastened on to impose on the credulity of the beholder; they were legs in caricature; and had we seen such proportions on a Chinese or Japan screen, we should have made large allowance for the fancy of the draughtsman." Letter XLIX. The legs measure, from the knee to the foot, about seven inches; whilst the body, when stript of its feathers, very little, if at all, exceeds that of a Thrush; from this circumstance Mr. White thinks that they might fairly be called Still Plovers, the birds, at a distance, appearing as if they walked on stilts; their gait is said to be very tottering on account of the weakness of the muscles of the thigh, but the processes on the top of the tibia to which the extensor muscles are attached, from their size, do not support this assertion. Their wings are large, and they fly with great rapidity. They are found in all parts of the world, more especially in Africa, but are by no means numerous, and live either on the sea-shore or among the marshes, feeding on worms and insects. They have been shot in England, but it is remarkable that Temminck states he had never known one shot in Holland.

There are but two species known.

H. Melanopterus, Meyer; Charadrius Himantopus, Gmel.; L'Echasse, Buff.; Long-legged Plover, Pen.; Black-winged Long Legs, Ray. This bird measures about thirteen inches from the tip of the beak to the extremity of the tail, and to the toes about eighteen; all the under parts are white, tinged with rose colour on the chest and belly; the back of the head and neck blackish; the back and wings black glossed with green; the tail ashy; the beak, about two inches long, is deep black, and the legs of a vermilion red. It is found in every quarter of the globe without any difference, excepting that those of Brazil and Egypt are rather longer than others. It generally breeds in the salt deserts of Russia and Hungary, but in the year 1818 a pair built near Abbeville. The H. Mexicanus of Brisson, which has the back and wings brown, and the vertex, occiput, and back of the neck ashy brown with white edges, is merely the young of Melanopterus.

H. Nigricollis, Vieill.; Recurvirostra Himantopus, Wilson; Black-necked Long Legs. This bird, which is about the same size as the last, differs from it in having the beak slightly curved upwards in the middle, although the tip is bent down, and tapers to a fine point; it thus seems to form a link between this genus and the Avosets. (Recurvirostra.) The forehead, spot behind the eye, cheeks, front of the neck, and under parts pure white; the back, rump, and tail-coverts also white, tail quills dingy white; back of the neck, scapulars, and whole of the wings deep black, richly glossed with green; the scapulars so completely covering the back, as at first to give it the appearance of being black, which in some cases is separated from the black neck by a white collar; irides crimson; legs pale carmine. Native of the United States, where it arrives towards the latter end of April in detachments of twenty or thirty; during the breeding season they collect in small parties, and are but rarely solitary.

See Temminck, Manuel d'Ornithologie; Pennant's British Zoology; White's Natural History of Selborne; Wilson's American Ornithology.

HIND, A. S. hinde; D. hiinde; Ger. hinde; Sw. hind; which Wachter thinks might be formed from the Gr. ὕψας, capra, a she-goat.

Like the stricken hinde, with shaft, in Crete
Throughout the woods which chasing with his darte
Aloofe, the shepherd smiteth at vnwares,
And leaues unwist in her the thirling head.

Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, book iv.

And God maketh my fete as swyfte as an hynles, and setteth me fast vpon my hye holde.

Bible, Anno 1551. 2 Samuel, ch. xxii.

As when a hinde (her calues late farrowed
To giue sucke) enters the bold lion's den.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, book iv. fol. 56.

But my good friend (quoth Æsop then) what would you say, if you knew what these pipe makers do now a days, who cast away the bones of young hind-calves and fawnes, and chose before them asses' bones, that they make a better sound.

Holland. Plutarch, fol. 272.

The hind-wolfe, which some call Chäus, and the Gaules were wont to name Rhaphius, (resembling in some sort a wolfe with leopard's spots,) were showed first in the solemnitie of the games and plaies exhibited by Cn. Pompeius the great.

Id. Plinie, book viii. ch. xix.

A milk-white hind, immortal, and unchang'd,
Fed on the lawns, and in the forest rang'd;
Without unspotted, innocent within,
She fear'd no danger, for she knew no sin.

Dryden. The Hind and Panther.

There is an instance in Giraldus Cambrensis, of a Countess of Chester, who kept milch hinds, and made cheese of their milk, some of which she presented to Archbishop Baldwin, in his itinerary through Wales in the Year 1188.

Pennant. British Zoology. Deer.

HIND, or } A. S. hine, servus, famulus, a servant;
HINE. } also familiaris, of the same family. Somner, who refers to hiwan, i. e. familiares, persons of the same family; which is formed from hiwe, domus, familia, a house, a household, or family; and this again from hiwan, formare, fabricare, to form, to fabricate, q. d. a house, a place formed or built: a hine, a household servant. It is applied to

A servant, a husbandman, a peasant.

There was mani a wild hine, that prest was ther to,
& wende in to the Gywerie, & wounded & to drowe,
& robbede & barnde hous, & manie of hom slowe.

R. Gloucester, p. 485.

Ther n' as baillif, ne herde, ne other hine,
That he ne knew his sleight and his covine.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 605.

As when a sturdy plough-man with his hinde
By strengthe haue ouerthrowne a stubborne steare,
They downe him hold, and fast with cords do binde,
Till they him force the buxome yoke to beare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book vi. can. 8.

Let him use his harsh Unsavory reprehensions upon those
That are his hinds, and not on me.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Spanish Curate, act i.

Having gathered together a number of slaves and hired hines, raised warre under the leading of Chrysus and Spartacus, and vanquished in plaine field, Cl. Pulcher a Lieutenant, and P. Varinius the Pretour.

Holland. Livius, fol. 1253.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad:
In vain the hinds the threshing-floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air.

Dryden. Ovid. Metamorphoses, book viii.

Depriv'd of thee, the wretch were poor
That rolls in heaps of Lydian ore,
With thee the simple hind is gay,
Whose toil supports the passing day.

Langhorne. Hymn to Hope.

HIND.
HINDER.HIND, HI'NDER,
HI'NDERMOST,
HI'NDMOST.A. S. hindan; Ger. and D. hin- den, from the A. S. hyn-an, retro, post, says Skinner. See HINDER, v.
Opposed to front, or fore. Back, posterior.

Tucked he was, as is a frere, aboute,
And ever he rode the hinderest of the route.Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 624.When syr Wylliam Montagu sawe how the Scottes passed by without restyng, thā he with xl. with him, yssued out a horsbacke, and folowed couertly the hynder train of the Scottes, who had horses so charged with baggage, y^t they might scāt go any gret pace.Lord Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. ch. lxxvi.The residue wax somewhat faint, and diuers forsaken of the hinder- most withdrawe out of the battell and eschewe feightyng.Arthur Goldyng. Cæsar. Commentaries, book ii. fol. 59.Wherunto I haue added, as it were in stedde of a perfyte ende, that, that he wrote to Philemon, bycause it should not be lefte alone vndoen, beyng the hyndermost.Udall. Timothy. Epistle Dedicatory.

Such as him list, such as eternall fate

Ordained hath, he clothes with sinfull mire,

And sendeth forth to live in mortall state,

Till they agayn retorne backe by the hinder-gate.Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 6.The earle of Oxford leading with him the archers, set them on the one side of the French men, commanding them to shoote at the hinder parts of the horses.Stow. Edward III. Anno 1356.A great number of lords and ladies following them in the same danse, there appeared in the sight, as it were closing vp the hinder- most of the dansers, a creature resembling Death, all naked of flesh and lire, with bare bones, right dreadfull to behold.Holinshead. History of Scotland, Anno 1290.

Our voyces are all spent, and they that follow

Can now no longer track us by the hollow;

They curse the formost, we the hindmost, both

Accusing with like passion, hast, and sloth.

Corbet. Iter Boreale.The Romans had much adoe (so thrumbled they were and thrust together disorderly) to defend and keepe the poupe and hind-decke; with that, another gallee of the enemies appeared on a suddaine and charged the hind-part.Holland. Livius, fol. 614.Even there the hindmost of their rear I slay,

And the same arm that led, concludes the day,

Then back to Pyle triumphant take my way.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, book xi.In their aurelia state, they have neither feet nor motion, only a little in their hind-parts.Derham. Physico-Theology, book viii. ch. i. note 5.She [the Antelope] takes long yet quick steps with her hind feet, and moves her fore feet with agility.Sir W. Jones. Works, vol. x. p. 37. The Poem of Tarafa. (23.)Unless you drive off the hindmost of the herd, he will reiterate his mischief.Id. Ib. (92.)Through the hollow, which lies between the hind parts of these two heads, that is to say, under the ham, between the hamstring, and within the concave recess of the bone formed by the extuberances on each side; in a word, along a defile, between rocks, pass the great vessels and nerves which go to the leg.Paley. Natural Theology, ch. viii. sec. 2.HI'NDER, HI'NDERANCE,
HI'NDERER.A. S. hyn-an, hindrian, impedire, obstare; D. hinderen; Ger. hin- dern; Sw. hindra; which the Ety-mologists agree is formed from hind, post, retro, back, backwards.To put or keep back or behind; to let, to stop, or stay, to obstruct, to impede; to prevent advance or progress; to prevent.For Cassiodore sayth, that it is a manere sleighte to hinder his enemy whan he sheweth to don a thing openly, and werketh prively the contrary.Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus, vol. ii. p. 90.

Thus hurts been of diuers busnesse

Which loue hath put to great hindraunce.Id. La Belle Dame sans Mercie, fol. 254.My sonne of that thou hast me saide,
I holde me nought fully paide,
That thou wolte haten any man,
To that accorden I ne can,
Though he haue hyndred the tofore.Gower. Conf. Am. book iii. fol. 52.But yet hym stant of me no fere,
For nought that euer I can manace,
He is the hindrer of my grace.Id. Ib. fol. 55.For there is no such losse of tyme, damage, hurt, or hinderance to-wardes God. For we neither hurt nor hynder hym, although we neuer aske forgeueness but be damned perpetually.Frith. Answer to Rastell's Dialogue.So they would contynue, in case theyr ordinaries, curates, & ministers were not tryflers and hynderours therof.Udall. Ephesians. Prologue to the Reader.How falls it then that this faded oake, Whose bodie is sere, whose braunches broke,
Whose naked arms stretch unto the fire,
Unto such tyrannie doth aspire;
Hindering with his shade my lovely light,
And robbing mee of the sweete sunne's sight?Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.Furthermore, if the king's honour (as some men say) standeth in the great multitude of people; then these grasiers, inclosers, and rent-rearers are hindrers of the king's honour.Latimer. Sermons, fol. 32.I shall distinguish such as I esteem to be the hinderers of reformation into three sorts: 1. Antiquitarians, (for so I had rather call them than antiquaries, whose labours are useful and laudable); 2. Liber-tines; 3. Politicians. Milton. On Reform in England, book i.The prince unjustly does his stars accuse, Which hinder'd him to push his fortune on;
For what they to his courage did refuse,
By mortal valour never must be done.Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, st. 133.Fierce Abas first he slew: Abas, the stay
Of Trojan hopes, and hindrance of the day.Id. Virgil. Æneid, book x.To recall to memory all the sins of a loose and wicked life, would be impossible. But the difficulty of the task should not hinder the attempt.Gilpin. Works, vol. iii. Sermon 7.I am sensible, too, and would have you be so, that scarce any thing is a more effectual hinderance to our doing good amongst our parishioners, than the character of being litigious.Secker. Works, vol. v. Charge 4.HINDON, an ancient Borough and Market Town in Wiltshire, consisting of one long street on a gentle declivity, principally built after a fire which, in 1754, destroyed the greater part of the town. It formerly manufactured silk twist very largely, but that branch of trade has entirely ceased, and little is done in any other; that little is confined to coarse linen work.
Hindon has returned two Members to Parliament since 27 Hen. VI., but in 1775 it narrowly escaped disfranchisement for corruption. The Town is in the Parish of East Knoyle. Population, in 1821, 830; distant 15 miles West from Salisbury, 97 from London. In the immediate neighbourhood on the North-West, and at Stockton Works on the South side of the Great Ridge, are many vestiges of works attributed to the ancient Britons. About two miles to the South-West stands Fonthill Abbey.

HINGE, v.

HINGE, n.

HINGE-JOINT.

D. hinge, henge; Cardo, from the verb to hang, because the door hangs upon it, Skinner. And Tooke, "Hinge, that upon which the door is hung, heng, hyng, or hyng;
the verb being thus differently pronounced and written."To hinge, i. e. to hang, is found in our old writers;
to hinge, in Shakspeare, to turn or bend as a hinge; to hinge, met. to hang, to depend, to turn.Thys mater *hyng*e in argument before the spyrytual iudges by the space of xv dayes.

Fabyan, part vii. ch. 243.

HINDER.
HINGE.

HINGE.

—
HINT.

By that well hinges a bacyne,
That es of gold gude and fyne,
With a cheyne, trewly to tell
That wil reche into the well.

Ritson. Met. Rom. vol. i. p. 15. Ywaine and Gawin.

Be thou a flatterer now, and seeke to thrive
By that which has undone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt observe
Blow off thy cap. Shakspeare. Timon of Athens, fol. 92.

For now his hopes upon him came so thick,
His entrance doors from off the hinges shook.

Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

But, to just men
Though heaven should speake, with all his wrath at once,
That, with his breath, the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright, and unfear'd.

Ben Jonson. Catiline, act iv.

At other times they are quite off the hinges, yielding themselves up to the way of their lusts and passions, and closing with every temptation that comes in their way.

Sharpe. Works, vol. iii. Sermon 14.

The brilliant actions of the Portuguese form the great hinge, which opened the door to the most important alteration in the civil history of mankind.

Mickle. The Life of Camoens.

First, the head rests immediately upon the uppermost of the vertebræ, and is united to the hinge-joint; upon which joint the head plays freely forward and backward, as far either way as is necessary, or as the ligaments allow.

Paley. Natural Theology, ch. viii.

HINNITES, or Hinnita, in Zoology, a genus of uni-muscular, bivalve shells, belonging to the family Pecten- nidæ, uniting Pecten with Spondylus. Originally established by Defranc for some fossil species.

Generic character. Shell bivalve, inequivalve; when young, regular, attached by a byssus; when full grown, distorted, attached from the foliaceous expansion of the right valve; valves eared, radiately striated in lines, umbones of the lower valve produced; ligament marginal; cartilage placed in a triangular groove, which generally leaves an open groove. Byssal grooves indistinct; hinge toothless.

These shells have the same mode of attachment, and are fastened by the valves in the same manner, as the Spondyli, but the hinge is destitute of teeth: when young, they greatly resemble small Pectines, and are distinguished from them with difficulty; but when full grown, they are easily known by their being distorted from the pressure of the surfaces of the hollow to which they generally attach themselves.

The type of the genus is H. cortesigi of Defranc, which has lately been found in England.

The following recent species should be added. H.
gigantia of Gray, Annals of Philosophy, 1826; and Pecten pusio and distortus of British authors, common on the British coast, which M. Deshayes first pointed out as belonging to the genus. Two other recent species have been described, H. Defrancii and H. coral- linus; but it is doubtful if they are not varieties of the
H. distortus, Deshayes.

HINT. Hint in G. Douglas (says Lye) is the hent of Chaucer; and hent (q. v.) he derives from hend-an, capere, to take. And Tooke, hint, something taken;
the past tense and past participle of hent-an, capere, to take hold of.

Upon the noun—Hint, i. e. something taken, (or to be taken,) as an intimation, an insinuation, a suggestion, the verb to hint (met.) has been founded.

To intimate, to insinuate, to suggest; to allude or refer slightly to.

Thus [Iris] sayand with richt hand has scho hynt
The hare and cuttes in tua.

G. Douglas. Æneados, book iv

If they finde a determinate intellection of any modes of being, which were never in the least hinted to them by their externall or internall senses; I'll beleieve that such can realise chimæras.

Glanvil. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, ch. iii.

Not long after Rogers was sent to the Prince by the Queen's express command, to understand for certain whether there were any design for invading of England, as he and Richardot seemed of late to give hints of.

Camden. Elizabeth, Anno 1588.

Tru. O, now he's in his vaine, and bold. The least hint given him of his wife now will make him raile desperately.

Ben Jonson. The Silent Woman, act iv. sc. 2.

What real benefit, as I before hinted, can accrue to us from the insignificant niceties which these men trouble themselves so much about.

Tatler, No. 278.

I cannot without a double injustice forbear expressing to you the satisfaction which a whole clan of virtuosos have received from those hints which you have lately given the town on the Cartons of the inimitable Raphael.

Spectator, No. 244.

He hath frequently taken the hint from very trifling objections to strengthen his former works, by several most material considerations and convincing arguments.

Nelson. The Life of Dr. George Bull.

Twenty years and more have now elapsed, since, in my sermon before the House of Lords, I hinted to the then Government the propriety of paying regard to the propagation of Christianity in India.

Anecdotes of the Life of Bishop Watson, vol. ii. p. 225.

In 1723 was performed the Tragedy of Mariamne; to which Southern, at whose house it was written, is said to have contributed such hints as his theatrical experience supplied.

Johnson. The Life of Fenton.

HIP, the first syllable of hyp-ochondriacal.

I cannot forbear writing to you, to tell you I have been, to the last degree, hipp'd since I saw you.

Spectator, No. 284.

Or to some coffee-house I stray
For news, the manna of a day,
And from the hipp'd discourses gather,
That politicks go by the weather.

Green. The Spleen.

HIP, v.

HIP, n.

HIP-HALT,

HIP-JOINT,

HIP-SHOT,

HIP-HAPE.

Goth. hups; A. S. hype; D. heupe;
Ger. huffte. Junius thinks, perhaps, from hype, acervus, a heap, because in no other part of the body, major est ossorum, nodorum musculorumque coacervatio. Stiernhielm (in Wachter) from heb-en, (A. S. heaf-an,) levare, sustinere, because the hip sustains the whole body. To hip,

To touch or otherwise affect the hip, to lame it.

Hip-hape, perhaps a covering for the hip. See HAP, to cover.

Johnson, in his note on the passage cited below from the Merchant of Venice, explains it as a phrase taken from the practice of wrestlers. Others derive it from hunting; the animal seized upon the hip by a hound is soon disabled.

An watte hys ssone & hys vet. so longe yt wax an heȝ, pat yt watte hys brych al aboute, & euere vpard yt steȝ,
So pat hys hupes smourte, & of cold were neȝ.

R. Gloucester, p. 322.

But Vulcanus, of whom I spake,
He had a courbe vpon the backe,
And therto he was hippe halte,
Of whom thou vnderstonde shalte.

Gower. Conf. Am. book v. fol. 88.

The women take bulrushes and kembe them after the maner of hempe, and thereof make their loose garments, which being knit about their middles, hang downe about their hippes.

Hakluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. iii. fol. 441. Sir Francis Drake.

His horse hip'd with an olde mothy saddle, and stirrops of no kindred.

Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew, fol. 219.

If I can catch him once vpon the hip,
I will feede fat the ancient grudge I beare him.

Id. Merchant of Venice, fol. 166.

O' this filthy vardingale, this hip-hape.
Beaumont and Fletcher. The Martial Maid, act ii.

HINT.

—
HIP.

HIP. A mortice and tenon, or ball and socket joint, is wanted at the hip, that not only the progressive step may be provided for, but the interval between the limbs may be enlarged or contracted at pleasure.
HIPPO-BOSCA. Paley. Natural Theology, ch. viii.

For my part, I take my stand in human anatomy; and the examples of mechanism I should be apt to draw out from the copious catalogue which it supplies, are, the pivot upon which the head turns, the ligament within the socket of the hip-joint, &c.

Id. Ib. ch. xxvii.

HIP, or } A. S. hiope, the briar or hep-tree, Somner.
HEP. } It is applied to
 The fruit or berry of the rose.*

But he was chaste and no lechour,
 And swete as is the bramble flour,
 That beareth the red hepe.

Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13677.

That them repented much so foolishly
 To come so farre to seeke for misery,
 And leave the sweetness of contented home,
 Though eating hipps, and drinking watry some.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

It is an observation amongst countrey people, that yeares of store of hawes and heps do commonly portend cold winters; and they ascribe it to God's providence, that (as the Scripture saith) reacheth even to the falling of a sparrow.

Bacon. Natural History, cent. viii.

HIPPA, in Zoology, a genus of short-tailed crustacea, established by Latreille.

Generic character. Front feet ending in an oval, compressed, laminar, fingerless joint; middle antennæ divided into two threads, the side one the longest and twisted; eyes separate and placed on a filiform pedicle. The carapace of these crabs is ovular, rather convex, and truncated at the two extremities, but not margined.

The type of the genus is H. adactyla, Fabricius, the Cancer eremitus of Linnæus; figured by Gronovius, (Gazophil. pl. xvii. fig. 8, 9.) Found in the American Ocean.

HIPPPIA, in Botany, a genus of the class Syngenesia, order Necessaria, natural order Corymbiferae. Generic character: calyx hemispherical, slightly imbricated; radial florets ten, slightly three-cleft; receptacle naked; down none.

Three species, natives of the East Indies and Africa.

HIPPOBOSCA, in Zoology, a genus of Dipterous insects, established by Mouffet and adopted by Linnæus and others.

Generic character. Wings distinct; head indistinct, joined to the end of the first joint of the thorax; eyes distinct; antennæ in the shape of tubercles, with a bristle on their upper edge.

The type of the genus is the H. equina of Linnæus; figured by Degeer, Mém. vi. pl. xvi. fig. 1. These insects are usually called Forest Flies; they are great tormentors of our domestic beasts, and especially of horses: they attach themselves to the parts of the body which are least covered with hair, as the abdomen, &c.; and, by the pain they create, they will render restive the most quiet animal. They fix themselves very firmly by their complicated claws, which are attached to each of the tarsi; when they walk they move sideways and backward as a Crab, and with such nimbleness that is exceedingly difficult to catch them; from the hardness of their bodies they often escape unhurt when caught.

Their wings are narrow and of very little use for flying, but the activity of the legs makes up for this deficiency.

VOL. XXIII.

HIPPOCAMP, Gr. ἵπποκάμπος, from ἵππος, a horse, and κάμπη, campe, a worm, from κάμπτειν, to bend.

Campe is also any large fish bending its tail in a winding motion, as the dolphin, the whale; also the sea-horse.

Fair silver-footed Thetis that time threw
 Along the ocean with a beauteous crew
 Of her attending sea-nymphes (Jove's bright lamps)
 Guiding from rockes her chariot's hyppocamps.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, book ii. song 1.

The HIPPOCAMPUS, Cuv. Sea-Horse, in Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the order Lophobranchi, class Pisces.

Generic character. Head largish, muzzle tubular, terminated by a small vertical toothless mouth; body contracted behind the head, expanded in the middle, and tapering much towards the tail; the junctions of the scales producing several faces and ridges, and their angles spines, with little filaments attached to the small tubercles placed on the head and front of the body, similar to a mane; dorsal fin somewhat resembling a saddle; it has also pectoral and anal but no caudal fins.

These curious animals have derived their title from their filaments resembling the hairs of a caterpillar, and the peculiar curve which the neck and body assume in drying, like the head and neck of a horse. Three species are known.

H. Vulgaris, Cuv.; Syngnathus Hippocampus, Lin.; Common Sea-Horse. Of which the scales on the body are disposed in seven faces, so as to give it a septangular form, whilst the tail is only quadrangular; it measures from three to six inches, and varies much in colour, being brown, black, leaden blue, or green. It is found in almost every sea; was formerly considered as very efficacious in medicine, and is praised by Galen, Dioscorides, and others. In Dalmatia it is still employed by women who labour under suppression of milk, but in Norway it is considered rank poison.

H. Tetragonus, Cuv.; Syngn. Tetrag. Lin.; Tetragonal Sea-Horse. As its name implies, has the scales disposed only in four ranks round the body; it has two spines on the head; the colour brown and yellow. Native of the Indian Seas.

H. Foliatu, Cuv.; Syngn. Fol. Shaw; Foliated Sea-Horse. Is remarkable for the expansion of the filaments, which are scattered over the body in a leaf-like form; it is much larger than either of the other species, and is a native of the Australian Seas.

See Cuvier, Règne Animal; Lacepede, Histoire des Poissons.

HIPPOCENTAUR, Gr. ἵπποκένταυρος, from ἵππος, a horse, and κένταυρος, a centaur. See the Quotation from Pliny, and CENTAUR.

Claudius Cæsar writeth, that in Thessalie there was borne an Hippocentaur, i. e. halfe a man, and halfe a horse; but it died the very same day.

Holland. Plinie, book vii. ch. iii.

HIPPOCRAS, vinum hippocraticum; wine made according to the prescription of Hippocrates. See Menage in v. Hippocras, Hypocras, Ipocras, for the different opinions of himself, his editor, and Case-neuve.

And plaine water hath he preferred before the swete hipocras of the riche men.

Udall. Luke, ch. vii.

HIPPOCRAS was made either with white or red wine, in which various aromatic ingredients had been infused, and was more probably named from the woollen bag

HIPPO-CRAS.

through which it was strained, the sleeve of Hippocrates, than from any receipt of that Physician. (Theobald, note on the Scornful Lady, 285.) Archdeacon Nares, from whom we borrow the above information, points also to a more recondite Etymology, ὑπό κεράννυμι. It was drunk at the beginning, between the courses, or at the end of a banquet, and wafers and manchets were served with it. Pegge, who gives authority for this statement in his Form of Cury, (160.) adds, that it was in use at St. John's College, Cambridge, 50 years ago, (Pegge published in 1780,) and brought in at Christmas at the close of dinner.

In an old French Tract—La Practique pour faire toutes sortes de confitures, condimens, distillations, compostes, cottignac, Hypocras, pigmens, tyzenne, eaux de bône odeur, parfuns, divers savons, amidon, poudre, bonne moustarde. Ensemble pour faire bon Vinaigre avec la vertu et propriété d'iceluy, approuvé (contre l'opinion de plusieurs) grandement profitable au corps humain, et un souverain remède contre le peste. A Lyon, 1590—we are presented with numerous receipts for Hippocras; one à la façon de Paris; two, à la façon de Montpellier; another pour faire ypocras en autre manière à la mesure du Mans, pour en faire un pot tenant trois chopines; and, lastly, one pour faire ypocras d'eau de vie ou d'eau odorante. We shall select from this Work a receipt more general than any of the above mentioned, in order that our readers may compare it with an English method which we shall subjoin, and then, if they please, may ascertain by experiment the merits of each.

Traicté pour faire toute manière d'ypocras et pyment. Prenez cynamome fort doux et bien ratissé avec un cousteau, demy quart d'once de girofle, et autant de grain de paradis, et noix muscade ensemble, et demy quart de gingembre blanc et bien paré avec un peu de garingal, et pillés le tout en un mortier de cuivre, et faites de ceste poudre pour en faire une quarte, une once; et pour en faire une pinte, demy once; et pour en faire une chopine, un quart d'once; et prenez une livre de sucre fin, pour en faire une quarte; et pour une pinte demy livre; et pour une chopine un quart de livre; et pillé votre sucre à part, et detrampez le tout ensemble; et du meilleur vin vermeil que vous pourrez trouver, une heure ou deux avant que le passer; puis après mettez les choses dessus-dites en un sac de blanchet, pointu et tondu des deux coustez, et clarifiez ledit ypocras, tant qu'il soit cler comme s'il venoit de la pippe, et mettez un vaisseau d'argent ou d'estain pour recevoir ledit ypocras, en le remettant toujours en la chausse tant qu'il soit clarifié, puis prenez ledit ypocras et le mettez en une quarte bien couverte et l'envelopés de papier. Item et si voulez faire sentir la rose à vostre ypocras, pour une quarte d'ypocras prenez demy once de graine des roses, ou demy once de poudre de roses seiches. Item et pareillement pouvez vous faire des violettes de Février et faites chauffer avecques vostres ypocras. Item et si voulés qu'il sente de musc: ainsi vous pouvés faire de trois manières d'ypocras, l'un sentira la rose, l'autre la violette, et l'autre le musc. (p. 56.)

Pegge (loc. cit.) refers to Rabelais (iv. 60.) to show that Hippocras was used as sauce for Lampreys; he then gives the following process at large for making it, from a MS. in the possession of M. Astle: "To make Ypocrasse for Lords with gynger, synamon, and graynes, sugour and turesoll; and for comyn pepull gynger canell, longe peper and claryffied honey. Loke ye have feyre pewter basens to kepe in your pouders and your Ypocrasse to ren ynne. And to vi basens ye muste have vi renners on a perche as ye may here see. And loke your poudurs and your gynger be redy and well paryd or hit be beton in to poud^r. Gynger colombyne is the best gynger, mayken and balandyne be not so good nor holsom. . . . now thou knowest the propertees of Ypocras. Your poudurs must be made everyche by themselfe, and leid in a bledder in store, hange sure your perche with baggs, and that no bagge twoyche other, but basen twoyche basen. The fyrst bagge of a galon, every one of the other a potell. Fyrst do in to a basen a galon or ij of redwyne, then put in your pouders, and do it in to the renners, and so in to the seconde bagge, then take a pece and assay it. And yaf hit be eny thyng to stronge of gynger alay it withe synamon, and yaf it be stronge of synamon alay it withe sugour cute. And thus schall ye make perfyte Ypocras. And loke your bagges be of boltell clothe, and the mouthes opyn, and let it ren in v or vi bagges on a perche and under every bagge a clene basen. The draftes of the spies is good for sewies. Put your Ypocrase in to a stanche wessell and bynde upon the mouthe a bleddur strongly, then serve forthe waffers and Ypocrasse."

Archdeacon Nares has printed another receipt not quite so elaborate, from the Haven of Health, ch. 228. Most of the old books on these subjects will afford a separate method. The epithet by which it is distinguished in the account of The Coronation of Lady Elizabeth, King Henry VII.'s Queen, in the 3d year of his Reigne, printed by Leland in his Collectanea, (iv. 227.) from a MS. in the Cottonian Library, and also of the Feast at the Inthronization of William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, on the 9th of March, 1504, (Id. vi. 29.) sufficiently shows the high convivial reputation of this medicated potion. In both of these narratives it is styled Joly Ypocras.

HIPPOCRATEA, in Botany, a genus of the class Triandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx five-parted; corolla, petals five, with a depression at the apex; capsules three, compressed, two-valved, valves carinated; seeds winged.

Six species, natives of South America.

HIPPOCREPIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Diadelphia, order Decandria. Generic character: calyx five-cleft, lobes equal, acute; pod curved, articulated, joints one-seeded; superior suture many times and deeply emarginate.

Eight species natives of Europe, and one of Cochinchina. H. comosa, the tufted horse-shoe vetch, is a native of England.

HIPPODAME. See HIPPOPOTAMUS.

HIPPODROME, Gr. ἵπποδρόμος, ἵππος, a horse, and δρόμος, a course. A race-course for horses; also for chariots.

Hippodrome, in Pliny, is a different word, (and properly written Hypodrome.) from the Gr. ὑπόδρομος, compounded of ὑπό, under, and δρόμος, and signifying a course or walk under, (sc. shelter or cover;) a covered place to walk in.

In a fine lawn below my house, I have planted an hippodrome; it is a circular plantation, consisting of five walks; the central of which is a horse-course, and three rounds make exactly a mile.

Swift. Works, vol. xiv. p. 2. An Account of a Monument to the Memory of Dr. Swift.

At one end of the inclosed portico, and, indeed, taken off from it, is a chamber that looks upon the hippodrome, the vineyards, and the

HIPPO-CRAS.HIPPO-DROME.

HIPPO-
DROME. mountains; adjoining is a room, which has full exposure to the sun; especially in winter; and from whence runs an apartment that connects the hippodrome with the house.

Melmoth. Pliny to Apollinaris, book v. let. 6.

Of the Roman CIRCUS, the offspring of the Greek HIPPODROME, we have already spoken. For an account of the latter we may turn to Pausanias, (vi. 20.) who has described the Olympic Hippodrome at Elis, the most celebrated Horse-course in Greece. This Course was divided into two parts; the Stadium, for foot-races and athletic exercises; the Hippodromus, as its name implies, for equestrian trials. The barrier, (ἀφῆσις), or starting post, was in the shape of the prow of a ship, with the beak towards the Course; and towards the other side, at which it became broader, it was connected with the portico Agnamptus.* A bar (κάνων) appears to have stretched across the Course at the extremity of the beak, and upon this was fixed a brazen Dolphin. The space on either side the beak extended 400 feet in length, and in it were various stands (οἰκίσματα) both for horses and chariots, distributed by lot to the competitors; in front of these was suspended a rope. About the middle of the prow stood an altar of unburned brick, which was fresh plastered at every renewal of the Games. Upon it was a brazen Eagle, with outspread wings, which, at a particular time, worked by some ingenious machinery, flew upward, while the Dolphin before mentioned sank below. At that moment the barriers were let down, and the horses and chariots moved forward from their separate stands, according to the order of their lot, till they were ranged in an even line at the point of the beak. The race then began. Cicætas was the original deviser of this Hippodrome, which was improved by Aristides. One side of the Course stretched along a hill; the other, which was rather the larger of the two, was formed by a causeway, (χῆμα), at the issue of which was a circular altar to the God Taraxippus, (Scare-horse.) It seems that at this particular point of the Course, the horses, without any assignable reason, frequently took fright, to the great destruction both of chariots and drivers. Hence an altar was raised, and sacrifices were performed to Taraxippus, concerning whose origin there were not fewer doubts than were directed to the nature of his influence. Some said he was a Greek, Olenius, a skilful charioteer, who lay buried there. Others, that he was Dameon, a comrade of Hercules in his Augean labour; killed, together with his horse, by Cteatus, and honoured with a Cenotaph. By a third party, the monument was thought to have been raised by Pelops to Myrtilus, as some compensation for breaking his neck. By a fourth, that it belonged to Alcathous, one of the suitors of Hippodamia, to whom it was dedicated from like motives by his rival CEnomaus. The legend recounted by some nameless Egyptian was yet more mysterious than any of the others; that Pelops buried in that spot something (τι) which he had received from Amphion, who, contrary to the general belief, was a great magician from Egypt; and that in consequence of this marvellous deposit the horses of CEnomaus and all others started at passing near it. Pausanias himself thinks Taraxippus was a title (ἐπὶ κλησις) of the Equestrian Neptune; and in spite of the fables attached to him, he stoutly maintains the terrific effects which he produced. These, we doubt not, really occurred; and they may indeed be accounted for by an incidental statement of the Topographer that similar terror in a minor degree was excited in the horses at the Nemean Course, over which no similar Evil Genius presided; but that above the bend of the Course hung a red coloured rock, the glittering of which was as much a cause of alarm as if firebrands had been thrown among the racers. Some quality of like kind, most probably, attached to the Olympic altar.

On one of the goals stood a brazen statue of Hippodamia, in the act of crowning Pelops as victor. The hill opposite the causeway, on the one side of the Course, was but low, and was terminated by a Temple of Ceres Chamyne; so called, as some believed, because at that spot the earth gaped (χάνεῖν) to swallow the chariot of Pluto. We need not pursue the other reasons assigned for the Etymology of this surname.

We cite this account, not from any hope that it will afford a clear insight into the construction of a Greek Hippodrome, (for what mere verbal description unillustrated by plans can ever avail in Architecture?) but because it is the best which we can bring forward.* Of the Hippodrome, the Atmeïdan of CONSTANTINOPLE, we have already spoken briefly; and Spon, Tournefort, and Thevenot, among others, will afford more full particulars. That at Alexandria, which was next in fame, was built by Ptolemy, son of Lagus.

HIPPOGRIFF, Gr. ἵππος, a horse, and γρύψ. See GRIFFIN. "Fr. hypogriphe. A monster half horse, half griffon." Cotgrave.

So saying he caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogrif bore through the air sublime
Over the wilderness and o're the plain.

Milton. Paradise Regained, book iv. l. 542.

We can frame ideas of a centaur, or a hippogryph.

Bolingbroke. On Human Knowledge. Essay 1. sec. 2.

HIPPOMANE, in Botany, a genus of the class Monoecia, order Monadelpchia, natural order Euphorbiaceæ. Generic character: male flower; calyx bell-shaped, emarginate; corolla none; filaments columnar, anthers four: female flower, calyx three-leaved; style very short; stigma seven-cleft; drupe large, nut seven-celled.

One species, H. mancinella, the Manchineel tree, native of the sandy shores of the West Indies. It is a large tree, and the wood would be valuable for building; but the juice of the tree is so poisonous, that the sawdust falling on the skin causes blisters.

HIPPOMANES, from the Greek ἵππος, a horse, and μάνωμαι, I rage, is described by Aristotle (Hist. Anim. vi. 18.) to be a secretion from a mare at heat; and as such has been adopted by the Poets. Virgil (Georg. iii. 281.) mentions it as collected by poisoning Hags, and preserved for its venomous qualities; a fact which he appears to accredit, by using the words vero quod nomine dicunt Pastores. It is joined by Tibullus (ii. 4.) with the potions of Medea and Circe; and by Propertius, (iv. v.) with screechows and ravens' eyes, used, for purposes of incantation, by a crone whom he disliked. Ovid, however, in some very pleasing lines, ridicules its supposed qualities as an aphrodisiac; and gives what, on such high authority in

* It is largely commented upon by M. l'Abbé Gidoyo, in the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, viii. 336.; and some remarks on the length of the Course, by M. l'Abbé Burette, will be found in the same Work, iii. 315.

* The unbent; but Pausanias, in another place, (v. 15.) calls the same portico Agaptus, from the name of its Architect.

HIPPO-DROME.
—
HIPPO-MANES.

HIPPO-MANES.

these matters, must be admitted to be a far better prescription :

*Fallitur, Hæmonias si quis decurrit ad artes,
Datque quod a teneri fronte revellet equi.
Non facient, ut vivat Amor, Medæides herbæ, Mistaque cum magicis nœmia Marsa sonis.*

* * * * *

Sit procul omne nefas ; ut ameris, amabilis esto.

De Arte Amandi, ii. 100.

Pliny, in like manner, speaks of Hippomanes as Equarum virus. (xxviii. 49. Ed. Hardouin.) Columella (among the agricultural writers) (vi. 27.) and Buffon, (among the moderns,) in his account of the Horse, both testify to its existence, without attaching to it any particular qualities.

Nevertheless, by many of the above-named writers it is used in other places for a widely different substance—a caruncle on the forehead of a foal just dropped, which the dam immediately devours. (Arist. Hist. An. vi. 22. viii. 24. Ælian, Hist. An. xiv. 18.) This was supposed to be all-powerful in philtres, though Aristotle honestly expresses his disbelief in its virtues. It was one of the ingredients sought by the wretched Dido after her abandonment ; (Æn. iv. 515.) and Juvenal (vi. 615.) names it as composing the love-potion by which Cæsonia maddened Caligula. It is thus mentioned by Pliny. Sanè equis amoris innasci veneficium, Hippomanes appellatum, in fronte caricæ magnitudine, colore nigro, quod statim edito partu devorat fera, aut partum ad ubera non admittit. Si quis præreptum habeat, olfactu in rabiem id genus agitur. (vii. 66.) In his note upon this passage, Hardouin refers to the Ephemerid. Germ. seu Miscell. Curios. Obs. 57. Ann. 8. where Raygerus fully describes this kind of Hippomanes, which he says was brought to him yet warm and freshly torn from a foal's forehead in the month of February, 1676. He makes it much larger than the size assigned by Pliny ; and adds, that the foal from which it was taken, contrary to the vulgar belief, was suckled by its dam.

Perhaps none of the Ancients has been more full upon this dulcedo hinnientium, (as it is called in a citation from Lævius, given in the Ist Apology of Apuleius,) the matri præreptus amor of Virgil, (rendered the “mother's love” by Dryden,) than Ælian, in the passage to which we have already referred. He doubts whether the caruncle is placed on the forehead, the withers, or the testes of the foal ; but he thinks that it is a benevolent instinct which prompts the mother to devour it ; for if it were suffered to remain, the young would speedily be destroyed by uncontrollable venereal fury ; doubtless, therefore, the remedy was suggested by the good-will of the Equestrian Minerva or Neptune, in order to preserve the breed of horses. When the rustics wish to secure this Hippomanes for medical uses, they watch the mare's parturition, and having instantly cut off the caruncle, they keep it in another mare's hoof, ἐνταυθοῖ γὰρ καὶ μόνως ἂν φυλαχθεῖη καλῶς καὶ ἀποθησαυρισθεῖη ; and as the dam would refuse to suckle her foal when deprived of this passport to her affection, they sacrifice it to the rising Sun. He then states the piteous effects produced by the administration of Hippomanes as a philtre ; and having alluded to the account of the Olympic statue, which we shall presently bring forward, he says that he gives the relation as he finds it, without committing himself as to its veracity.

Bayle, in a very lengthy Dissertation sur l'Hippo- manes (of which Heyne (ad Geogr. iii. 280.) speaks but slightly) nec tamen quicquam reconditi habens, appended to the IVth Volume of his Dictionary, has pointed to a Chapter (ii. 27.) in the French Translation of the Magia Naturalis of Baptista Porta, printed at Rouen, 1626, which he does not find in his own Latin copy. We have not seen this French Translation, but the substance of the passage above referred to is thus given in Les Secrets du Petit Albert, in its transfer to which Work it is not likely to have lost any of its marvellous qualities. It is illustrated by an engraving. L'on trouve assez souvent au front du Poulain de la Cavalle un morceau de chair dont je donne ici la figure, qui est d'un merveilleux usage en fait d'amour ; car si on peut avoir ce morceau de chair, que les Anciens ont appelé Hypomanes, on le fera sécher dans un pot de terre neuf vernissé, dans un four, quand le pain en est tiré, et en le portant sur soi et le faisant toucher à la personne dont on voudra être aimé, on réussira ; si l'on peut avoir la commodité d'en faire avaler seulement la grosseur de deux poix dans quelque liqueur, confiteur ou ragoût, l'effet sera plus infailible. Et comme le Vendredi est le jour consacré à Venus, qui préside aux mystères d'amour, il sera bon de faire l'expérience ce jour-là. Voyez ce que dit le célèbre Jean Baptiste à Porta des surprenantes propriétés de l'Hippomanes pour causer l'amour. (6.)

In the Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences for the year 1751, will be found a Paper on Hippomanes by M. D'Aubenton. His first observation was made on a foal, slipped some months before its time. This had not any vestige of the caruncle. The result, however, of many subsequent dissections proved to his satisfaction that the Hippomanes, which he constantly found, was not an invention of fancy ; nevertheless, that there was no occasion on which it could become attached to the forehead of the animal. He determined it to be nothing else but the sediment of the liquor contained between the two membranes amnios and allantoides. Floating* in that liquor he found a substance which is thus described, and which often was more than single in one subject. Il avoit 3 pouces 8 lignes de longueur sur 1 pouce 10 lignes de largeur, et 7 lignes d'épaisseur dans le milieu ; les bords étoient amincis, frangés et terminés par des prolongemens moins solides que le corps même ; il étoit creux, et renfermoit un noyau ou corps de substance semblable à de la colle ramollie qui occupoit à peu près toute la cavité, et étoit plus adhérent par une de ses faces que par l'autre ; le tout étoit d'une couleur d'olive brune, et pesoit une once cinq gros et demi. (Hist. p. 59. See also Mém. p. 293.) M. D'Aubenton continues to show that the substance may sometimes issue from the mother on the head of the foal, but not attached to it, just as a child occasionally is born with a caul. The properties attributed to it he considers to be fabulous.

There is yet a third kind of Hippomanes, resting on the authority of two lines in Theocritus, (ii. 48.) a plant, (φυτόν), growing in Arcadia, and producing fury in Horses. Salmasius in this passage would read χυτόν, (a fusion,) and he explains his emendation by reference to a marvellous story which Pausanias has related. Among the offerings of Phormis the Mænalîan in the Temple of the Olympian Jove, were two statues of Horses, each with their driver. In the metal

HIPPO-
MANES.

* If it floated, how could it be termed the sediment ?

HIPPO-MANES.HIPPO-
PHAES.

of one of these, cast by Dionysius, an Argive, was secretly infused a portion of Hippomanes. The Horse itself was under-sized, and from the docking of its tail, says the Topographer, had suffered material diminution of beauty; a sound opinion, which we are glad to record in the strong words of the original. Πρὸς δὲ ἀποκέκοπται τὴν οὐρὰν, καὶ ἔστιν εἰτὶ τῷ τοιῷδε ἔτι αἰσχυρῶν. Nevertheless, with all these drawbacks, the mysterious composition excited the most ungovernable passion into all Horses which approached the statue: οἱ δὲ ἵπποι οἱ ἄρσενες, οὔτε πον τοῦ ἵππου μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνὰ πᾶσαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν ὀργῶσιν ἡμέραν. Καὶ γὰρ ἐσθέουσιν ἐς τὴν ἄλτιν ἀπορρήγνυντες δεσμά, ἣ καὶ ἐκφείγοντες τοὺς ἄγοντας, καὶ ἐπιτηδῶσιν αὐτῷ, πολλῶ δὴ τι ἐμμανέστερον ἢ ἐπὶ τὴν καλλίστην ἵππον ζῶσαν τε καὶ ἡθάδα ἀναβαίνεσθαι. ἀπολίσθάνουσι τε δὴ αὐτοῖς αἱ ὄπλαι, καὶ ὁμῶς οὐκ ἀπαγορεύουσι, χρεμετίζοντες τε μᾶλλον, καὶ ἐπιπηδῶντες μετὰ βιαιοτέραν τῆς ὀρμῆς, πρὶν ἂν ὑπὸ μαστίγων καὶ ἀνάγκης ἰσχυρᾶς ἀφελκυσθῶσι. πρότερον δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἀπαλλαγὴ σφισιν οὐδεμία ἀπὸ τοῦ χαλκοῦ. (v. 27.)

Pliny, in one of the passages to which we have before referred, shows his acquaintance with this story. Hippomanes tantas in beneficio vires habet ut affusum aeris mixturæ in effigiem equæ Olympiæ admotos mares ad rabiem coitūs agat.* And that he may not be outdone, he tells us also in the same place, on the authority of Anaxilaus, that a humour, very like to Hippomanes, burned in a lamp, makes a strange appearance of horses' heads to the spectators,—similiter ex asinis, which is not the least probable of the two. (xxviii. 49.) Be this as it may, Bayle very closely examines the emendation of Salmasius, which he condemns as untenable. His Dissertation may be consulted by any one who requires more on the subject of it.

HIPPONIX, in Zoology, a genus of conical, somewhat spiral, univalve shells, established by DeFranc, but since shown to be exactly synonymous with the genus Capulus of De Montfort and Lamarck, belonging to the family Capulidæ. It has been very commonly referred to the Brachiopodes, to which it has not the least resemblance, as has been lately proved by the dissection of the animal, published by Blainville.

The animal has the peculiar property of secreting a shelly plate, which closes the base of the shell, so as to give the shell somewhat the appearance of a bivalve, to which class some Naturalists have been inclined to refer the genus.

Generic character. Shell univalve, conical; apex recurved, subspiral, sublateral; spiral cone, very rapidly enlarging; mouth irregular; muscular impression horse-shoe shaped, submarginal. Animal tentacula two, conical; eyes at their outer base; foot small, transverse, folded across the upper surface; reflexed, and attached to marine bodies, which it often covers with a shelly deposit.

The type of the genus is Patella Hungarica and Patella mitrata of Linnæus; Lamarck describes many fossil species from the Paris Basin.

HIPPOPHAES, in Botany, a genus of the class Dioecia, order Tetrandria, natural order Eleagni. Generic character: male flower, calyx, two-lobed; corolla none: female flower, calyx tubular; berry superior, one-celled; seed hard and shining.

Two species, H. rhamnoides, the sea-side Buckthorn, a native of England, and another species native of Canada.

* Pausanias does not thus distinguish the gender.

HIPPOPO'TAMUS, }
HI'PPODAME.Fr. hippotame; Lat. hip- } popotamus; Gr. ἵπποπόταμος. }
TAMUS.

"Hippodames, sea-horses, which the Poet should rather have written hippotames, from the derivation of their name ἵππος, and ποταμός." Todd, note on the passage from Spenser quoted below.

On every side

They trembling stood, and made a long broad dyke,
That his swift charet might have passage wide,

Which four great hippodames did draw in teme-wise tide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, book iii. can. 11.

The same river Nilus bringeth fourth another beast called hippopotamus, i. a river horse. Holland. Plinie, book viii. ch. xxv.

HIPPOTAMUS, Lin. Hippopotame, Pen., in Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Obesa, order Pachydermata, class Mammalia.

Generic character. Teeth not projecting beyond the lips, of which the upper is large and thick; incisive four in each jaw, far apart from one another, those of the upper curved and vertical, of the lower long, cylindrical, and inclined forwards; the upper cuspid teeth straight, shorter than the incisive, the lower longer, curved, grooved, and their crowns obliquely truncated, applied to the crown of the upper; molars six on each side in either jaw, the anterior three conical, the posterior studded with two pairs of points, which when worn down assume the form of a trefoil; ears of moderate size and pointed; body slightly studded with hairs; tail short; mammae ventral; feet four-toed, enveloped in skin, and each bearing a small projecting nail.

Of this genus there is known but one living species.

H. Amphibius, Lin.; Hippopotame, Buff.; Hippopotame, Pen. The size of the Hippopotamus is equal, if not superior, to that of the Rhinoceros; one killed in Southern Africa by Le Vaillant measured ten feet and a half in length and nine feet in circumference, while others have mentioned it as measuring seventeen feet in length and fifteen in circumference, and standing seven feet in height. Bruce, however, speaks of these animals in the Lake Tzana, as more than twenty feet long: and it would, therefore, seem that Le Vaillant's account is very moderate. The Hippopotamus has a very heavy, unwieldy form, the body being large and round, with the belly nearly touching the ground on account of the shortness of the legs, which are very thick, and terminated by large feet, each furnished with four toes, shod with short strong nails or hoofs extending beyond the skin, with which the rest of the foot is enveloped; the head itself measures about a third of the length of the whole body, is flattened from above downwards, and has the ears and eyes small; the mouth is of great width, and the lips thick and broad, especially the upper; they are beset with stiff, short bristles; when the mouth is closed, the teeth are completely hidden, but when open, their enormous size is observed, more especially those in the lower jaw, of which the front or incisive teeth project forwards, instead of standing upright like those of the upper jaw, from which they are further distinguished by the greater length of the middle two; the cuspid teeth also differ, the upper being straight and short, whilst the lower are large, long, and curved, with their crowns cut off obliquely, so that they meet those in the upper jaw; they sometimes measure more than two feet, and weigh above six pounds; of the molars the three first are simple and conical, being little used for mastication, but the other three have the enamel so disposed, that when the crown is worn away, it assumes the form of a double trefoil. The skin is extremely thick, and so tough that it is said musket-balls fired against it are flattened; it is sparingly covered with hair, excepting the soft fur which lines the ears, and the tuft which tips the animal's short, thick tail, which is pendent, and little movable; the weight of the skin is such, that Hasselquist says it is a load for a Camel. The colour of the Hippopotamus, when it first leaves the water, is mouse colour, inclining to bluish ash on the upper parts, assuming a silvery appearance by moonlight; the belly, on which the skin is thinner than any other part, has a reddish tinge; but when the animal has become dry, the general colour is brownish black, a little lighter on the belly.

HIPPOPO-
TAMUS.

The Hippopotamus, when undisturbed, is a mild and gentle animal, extremely cautious and shy, and when ashore very timid, but in the water is a dangerous antagonist, more especially at pairing time, when he becomes very savage, and occasionally destroys passengers who have accidentally come upon him in crossing the fords; and Dampier says he has known this animal sink a boat full of people by dashing its teeth through its bottom. They spend the greater part of the day in the shallow pools of rivers, or pits as they are called by the colonists, frequently raising their heads above water to breathe, or blow themselves, as it is properly called, and uttering a sharp piercing cry between grunting and neighing, which Sparrman says may be expressed by hëurkh hurkh, huh-huh, the two first uttered slowly, in a hoarse but harsh and tremulous sound, resembling the grunting of other animals; while the third, or compound word, is sounded extremely quick, and not unlike the neighing of a horse; but at the least noise they plunge into the depths, from which they do not rise, except to put a single nostril above the surface of the water to breathe, and then descend. Mr. Burchell mentions several pools in the Reed River, which are known by the name of Zee-koe-gatten, or Sea-Cow-holes, and supposed to have been made by the Hippopotamuses at the time these animals were in undisturbed possession of the waters; but he thinks it more probable that the holes originally formed were only enlarged by the continual trampling of the animals in those spots where the bottom was not rocky.

When it quits the water, especially if fearful of danger, it merely raises its head above the surface, which then having somewhat the appearance of a Horse's head probably induced the Ancients to assign it a name signifying River-Horse, with as little propriety as the Dutch settlers name it Zee-koe, or Sea-Cow. It usually leaves the rivers at night in search of its food, which is vegetable, according to Le Vaillant's account, who examined the stomach of one of them, and found it filled with reeds, leaves, and the small branches of trees; it is very destructive in plantations of sugar-cane, rice, and millet, not only requiring, it is said, a larger portion than a team of oxen, but trampling down more than it eats; its long teeth assist it materially in grubbing up the roots of trees, from which also it derives part of its nourishment. It is said to be gregarious, and that one male consorts with many females. That it may have been so formerly is probable, and also that it is so still where undisturbed by man, but Burckhardt, Burchell, and Thomson speak of it within their knowledge as almost solitary.

The gait of the Hippopotamus on land is slow, but in the water it both swims and dives extremely well, and it is stated may be seen walking at the bottom of the rivers at full ease; this may be doubted, as it needs frequently to rise to the surface in order to breathe. They live not only in rivers, but in the sea, a circumstance which came under Sparrman's own observation; the salt water, however, they will not drink, but come ashore to quench their thirst at any fresh stream or pool in the vicinity. They sleep among the reeds either by the shore or on islands in the rivers, where they bring forth a single young one.

The Hippopotamus is found only in Africa, and probably extended formerly over the whole of that continent, excepting those Countries situate to the North-West of Mount Atlas; it is most common in Southern Africa, but even here is gradually being destroyed as civilization advances Northward. In Lower Egypt, where it formerly existed, it is not now found, but only in Upper Egypt, nor is it very numerous here. Burckhardt mentions it as occasionally seen at Shendy, but that it is common at Sennaar, where is the principal manufactory of the Korbadj, a kind of whip made from the hide.

The Hippopotamus answers to the Behemoth described in the XLth chapter of the Book of Job, and Bochart in his Hieroicoicon comments in the following manner so clearly, as to leave little doubt of the fact.

"15. Behold now BEHEMOTH, which I made with (or near) thee: he eateth grass as an ox."

This verse implies the locality of its situation, being an inhabitant of the Nile, in the neighbourhood of Uz, the land of Job.

"16. 18. Lo! now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly. His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron."

The former of these verses describes its great strength; and the latter the peculiar hardness of its bones.

"21, 22. He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed and fens. The shady trees cover him with their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about."

Here its residence, amidst the vast reeds of the river of Egypt, and other African rivers, overshadowed with thick forests, is described.

"23. Behold! he drinketh up a river, and hasteth not: he trusteth he can draw up Jordan into his mouth."

In this is noted the characteristic wideness of its mouth: which is hyperbolically described as large enough to exhaust such a stream as Jordan.

As various parts of the Hippopotamus are converted into articles of commerce, at the same time that it also furnishes food to the natives, it is sought after by them with anxiety, and "the capture of one of these enormous animals must," says Mr. Thomson, "be an event of jubilee and rejoicing to a whole horde of half-starved Bushmen or Korannas, sufficient to banish hunger and heaviness for weeks to come." On the banks of the Gariep they are usually taken by digging pits by the side of the river, in the centre of which a strong stake is placed, and the mouth of the pit slightly covered over. So soon as the animal comes from his haunts to feed, the natives, who are on the watch, drive him through the paths leading to the traps, into which he falls, and there is soon destroyed. The same practice is adopted at Sennaar. Hasselquist mentions, that in Egypt they

HIPPOPO-
TAMUS.

HIPPOPO-
TAMUS.

strew large quantities of dried peas and beans upon the ground, which these animals eating, are burst by their swelling.

From the hide of the Hippopotamus is manufactured the shambok, a whip about three feet in length, rounded to the thickness of the finger, and tapering towards the extremity; the shambok used by the waggon-drivers is about twice the length, and as thick as the hide will admit, and is called Agter-os shambok. This manufacture is not peculiar to Southern Africa, but it is also common in the Northern part of that continent, where it forms an article of trade, by the name of Corbage or Korbadj, as we have written it above from Burckhardt. The principal station for this whip manufactory is at Sennaar, as before mentioned, where it is carried on in the following manner. So soon as the animal is flayed, the skin is cut into narrow strips about five or six feet long, and tapering towards the point; each strip is then rolled up, so that the edges unite and form a pipe, in which state it is tied fast, and left to dry in the sun. In order to render them pliable, they are rubbed with butter or grease. At Shendy they are sold at the rate of twelve or sixteen for a Spanish dollar, but in Egypt, where they are in common use, and, as Burckhardt says, the dread of every servant and peasant, they are worth from half a dollar to a dollar apiece.

The punishment of whipping with this Korbadj, which is common in Africa, is equal in severity to the knout in Russia. Major Denham witnessed it at Kouka, and gives the following account:—"The man received his punishment in the dender, or square, suspended by a cloth round the middle, with eight men to support him; an immense whip, of one thick thong, cut off from the skin of the Hippopotamus, was first shown to him, which he was obliged to kiss, and acknowledge the justice of his sentence. The fatah was then said aloud, and two powerful slaves of the Sheik inflicted the stripes, relieving each other every thirty or forty strokes; they strike on the back, while the end of the whip, which has a knob or head, winds round and falls on the breast or upper stomach; this it is that renders that punishment fatal. After the first two hundred, blood flowed from him upwards and downwards, and a few hours after he had taken the whole four hundred, he was a corpse."

The teeth of the Hippopotamus are of a very close texture, and extremely white, and on this account are preferred to ivory by the dentists in the manufacture of artificial teeth.

Zee-koe-spek, or Sea-Cow pork, is considered a bon-bouche by the Dutch colonists of the Cape; it is made of the thick fat found between the skin and the ribs of the animal, which can only be preserved by salting, as, in attempting to dry it, it melts under the heat of the sun. The dried tongue is considered a rare and savoury dish, and the gelatinous part of the feet in particular, when properly dressed, is accounted a great delicacy.

The Hippopotamus was exhibited, for the first time, in the Roman Games, v. c. 696, during the lavish Edileship of Marcus Scaurus, so justly condemned by Pliny, (xxxvi. 24. and viii. 40.) but since the breaking up of that Empire, it has not been brought alive to Europe.

Cuvier considers that there were formerly more than the present species, having found two fossil species, which he names the Great and Little Hippopotamus, the latter about the size of our common Hog.

See Cuvier, Règne Animal; Pennant's History of Quadrupeds; Sparrman's Voyage to the Cape of Good Hope; Burckhardt, Burchell, Denham, and Thomson, Travels in Africa.

HIPPOPUS, in Zoology, a genus of bivalve shells, belonging to the family Tridacnidae, established by Lamarck, separated from the genus Chama of Linnæus.

Generic character. Shell bivalve, equivalve, regular, unequilateral, longitudinal, posterior margin closed; hinge with two teeth, compressed, unequal teeth in each valve; the cartilage marginal, external, muscular; scars single, central, with a broad, valve-like, submarginal scar.

The only character by which the Hippopi are separated from the Tridacnæ, is the posterior margin being closed, and as the hole left in the hinder margin of the Tridacnæ becomes gradually smaller as the shell increases in age, it is very doubtful if the Hippopi should not rather be considered as a section of that genus.

The type and only species of the genus is Chama Hippopus of Linnæus, figured by Chennitz, vol. vii. pl. lviii. fig. 498, 499. the H. maculatus of Lamarck.

HIPPOTHOA, in Zoology, a genus of flexible corals, established by Lamaroux, and belonging to the family Ceteporidae.

Generic character. Coral incrusting; capillary branchy, branches diverging, jointed, each joint formed of a single fusiform cell; mouth of the cell round, very small, on the upper surface near the tip of the cell.

Only a single species is known of this genus, which grows on the leaves of the Red Dulce, Fucus palmatus, in the Mediterranean Sea. The tuft has the appearance of a pearly spot on the Fuci.

HIPPOTIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Pentandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: corolla funnel-shaped, curved, nectary surrounding the germen; berry two-celled, crowned by a large ear-shaped calyx.

One species, H. triflora, native of Peru.

HIPPURIS, in Botany, a genus of the class Monandria, order Monogynia. Generic character: calyx obsolete; corolla none; stigma simple; one seed, inferior.

Two species; H. vulgaris, the Mare's tail, is a native of watery places in England; the other species is a native of Sweden.

HIPPURITES, in Zoology, a genus of fossil shells, discovered in the Pyrenees by M. Picot de la Perrouse. Their structure is so anomalous and complicated, that they have hitherto baffled the attempts of Naturalists in classifying them. M. Picot placed them with the chambered shells, and since they have been considered by other authors as belonging to a family, allied to the Bracheopodous Mollusca. Lamarck gives the following Generic character. Shell cylindrical, conical, straight or arched, multilocular; the septa transverse or subirregular, with an internal, lateral groove, formed by two longitudinal, parallel, blunt, diverging ribs, the last cell closed by an operculum.

All the species of the genus which are known are found in the fossil state, so that it is difficult to examine their internal organization. The greatest number are found in the Pyrenees.

The type of the genus is H. striata, Defranc, figured by Picot, pl. vi. fig. 1—3.

HIRÆA, in Botany, a genus of the class Decandria, order Trigynia. Generic character: calyx five-leaved,

HIPPOPO-
TAMUS.

HIRÆA.

HIRÆA.

HIRE.

without melliferous pores; petals nearly round, with claws at the base; samaræ three, one-seeded, two-winged.

Three species, natives of Africa.

HIRE, *v.*HIRE, n.

HI'RELESS,

HI'RELING, *n.*HI'RELING, adj.

HI'RER.

to let, to give or grant such use or service for a price or wages or rent.

A closter þei bigan, þe bisshop þo þat wrought
Hired ilk a man, & alle paied & bought.

R. Brunne, p. 80.

Harlots & hores. and also false leches
Thei asken hure huyre. er þei hit have deservede.

Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 53.

And the hirid hyne fleeth, for he is an hirid hyne, and it perteyneth not to him of the scheep.

Wiclif. John, ch. x.

The hyred seruaunte flyeth, because he is an hyred seruaunt, & careth not for y^e shepe.

Bible, Anno 1551.

A man plountide a vyneyerd and sette an hegge about it and daf a lake and bildide a tour and hiride it to tilieris, and went forth in pilgrimage.

Wiclif. Mark, ch. xii.

A certayne mā planted a vyneyard, and compased it with an hedge, and ordeyned a wyne presse, and buylt a toure in it. And let it oute to hyre unto husbandmen, & went into a straunge countre.

Bible, Anno 1551.

Go from him, that he maye reste a lytle: vtill his daye come,
which he loketh for, lyke as an hyrelynge doth.

Id. Job, ch. xiv.

There is nothing leaft now for me to doe, but either to digge in the field for hire wages from daie to daye, or els to goe about euerie where on begging.

Udall. Luke, ch. xvi.

Nor wonder if I vouch, that 'tis not brave
To seek war's hire, though war we still pursue;
Nor censure this a proud excuse, to save
These, who no safety know but to subdue.
Your misbelief my hireless valour scorns;
But your hir'd valour, were your faith reclaim'd,
(For faith reclaim'd to highest vertue turns)
Will be of bravest sallary asham'd.

Davenant. Gondibert, book i. can. 3.

Though cautious Nature, check'd by Destiny,
Has many secrets she would ne'er impart;
This fam'd philosopher is Nature's spie,
And hireless gives th' intelligence to Art.

Id. Ib. book i. can. 6.

So clomb this first grand thief into God's fould:
So since into his church lewd hirelings climbe.

Milton. Paradise Lost, book iv. l. 193.

For as the partiality of man to himself hath disguised all things, so the factious and hireling historians of all ages (especially of these latter times) have, by their many volumes of untrue reports, left honour without a monument.

Ralegh. History of the World, book i. ch. ix. sec. 1.

The Czar of Muscovy being come to England, and having a mind to see the building of ships, hir'd my house at Say's Court, and made it his Court and Palace, new furnished for him by the King.

Evelyn. Memoirs, Jan. 1698.

A numerous faction, with pretended frights,
In Sanhedrims to plume the regal rights;
The true successor from the Court remov'd;
The plot, by hireling witnesses, improv'd.

Dryden. Absalom and Achitophel.

If we consider even Judas himself, it was not his carrying the bag, while he followed his master, but his following his master, only that he might carry the bag, which made him a thief and an hireling.

South. Sermons, vol. iv. p. 211.

The superiority of the independent workmen over those servants who are hired by the month or by the year, and whose wages and maintenance are the same whether they do much or do little, is likely to be still greater.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, book i. ch. viii.

Vain man! is grandeur giv'n to gay attire?

Then let the butterfly thy pride upbraid:

To friends, attendants, armies, bought with hire?

It is thy weakness that requires their aid.

Beattie. The Minstrel, book ii.

Hiring and borrowing are also contracts by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer or borrower: in which there is only this difference, that hiring is always for a price, or stipend, or additional recompence; borrowing is merely gratuitous.

Blackstone. Commentaries, book ii. ch. xxx.

Thus Heav'n approves as honest and sincere

The work of gen'rous love and filial fear;

But with averted eyes th' omniscient Judge

Scorns the base hireling, and the slavish drudge.

Cowper. Truth.

HI'RSUTE, }

Lat. hirtus, et hirsutus, equiva-

HI'RSUTENESS. }

lent, says Vossius, to pilis horridus;
horrid with hair, and, therefore, derived by some ab
horrore. He himself thinks it comes from the sound, quem edunt setis horrentia.

Hairy or rough with hair, shaggy; met. rough, rugged.

Suppose thou saw her in a base begger's weed, or else dressed in some old hirsute attires out of fashion, fowle linnen, course raiment, besmeared with soot, colly, &c.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 554.

The hirsute [root] is a middle between both [the bulbous and fibrous]; that besides the putting forth upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round.

Bacon. Natural History, Cent. 7. sec. 616.

The generall notions physiognomers give, be these; black colour, argues naturall melancholy; so doth leanness, hirsutinesse, broad veines, much haire on the browes.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, fol. 59.

He looked elderly, was cynical and hirsute in his behaviour.

Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

[Asterias. Sea star.] Ast. with five rays depressed; broad at the base; sub-angular, hirsute, yellow; on the back, a round striated opercule.

Pennant. British Zoology. Sea Star.

HIRTELLA, in Botany, a genus of the class Pen- tandria, order Monogynia, natural order Rosaceæ. Generic character: corolla, petals five; filaments very long, persisting, spirally twisted; berry one-celled; style lateral.

Five species, natives of the West Indies and South America.

HIRUDO, in Zoology, a genus of Apodous Anne- lides, established by Linnæus, but since created into a family, under the name of Hirundines, by most modern authors.

Family character. Body cylindrical or depressed, flattened below, composed of numerous very short rings;
limb none; extremity enlarged into a muscular disk, used in walking; mouth anterior; vent dorsal, posterior; hermaphroditic, with the two orifices of generation placed close together in the ventral surface.

All the Leeches, except one species, which lives in holes in the ground like earthworms, are aquatic; but some are found in fresh water, while others are peculiar to the sea. They are found scattered over all the regions of the world. They are generally active during the day, swimming about by a serpentine motion, or walking by loops, seeking for their prey, and quiet and immovable, as if they were asleep, during the night.
They are greatly affected by the changes of the state of

HIRE.

HIRUDO

HIRUDO. the atmosphere, and are used, both in England and on the various parts of the Continent, by the peasants, as prognostic of the approaching state of the weather. In the colder parts of the world they pass the greater part of the winter in holes in the sand or mud at the bottom of the water. They live on animal substances, sucking the blood of any living animal which comes into the water, or firmly and permanently attaching themselves to fish and other aquatic animals; they also suck the juices of dead carcasses, and kill and suck the juices of worms, slugs, and fresh-water snails. They sometimes are found with a worm half way down their stomach. They can live for a great time without food owing to the slowness of their digestion.

They generally breed in streams with sandy bottoms, and will propagate with facility in glasses, the bottom of which is covered with sand; they lay an oval egg, covered with a hairy case, and they grow rapidly if they are regularly fed.

The Leeches used in medicine are chosen from their having sharp, simple teeth, which consequently make a wound easily healed; whereas the other Leeches have generally blunt or serrated teeth. Having become rare in England, they are now usually imported from France.

Leeches have been divided into twelve distinct genera, each receiving two or three names; but as many of the sections appear to be more specific than generic, the following six genera have been thought sufficient.

1. The Sea Leeches, or Branchiobdella of Rudolphi, which are destitute of eyes and jaws, and have a sucking disk at each extremity; their bodies are usually rugose, and sometimes furnished with gill-like appendages. (H. branchiata, Menzies, Lin. Trans. pl. xvii. fig. 3.) They live attached to marine Turtles and fish, especially of the cartilaginous kind.

The type of the genus is H. muricata, Lin., well known to fishermen under the name of Skate-sucker.

2. The Looper Leech, or Hæmocharis of Savigny, which is cylindrical, and provided with very large sucking disks at each end, which allow the animal to walk like the Caterpillars called Loopers. They have eight eyes, but are destitute of any teeth. They live attached to European fresh-water fish. The type and only species of the genus is H. geometra, the H. piscium of Linnæus; figured and described by Roesel, Ins. pl. ii. fig. 52.

3. The Land Leeches, the Trochetia of Dutrochet, first described by M. Spinola. They are cylindrical, scarcely annular; the mouth is large and toothless; they have eight eyes, and a very large vent; the anterior sucker small, the hinder very large. The only species of the genus is Trochetia viridis of Lamarck.

4. The true Leeches (Hirudines) are subcylindrical; their mouth is small, without any projecting trunk, and armed with three simple or denticulated teeth; they have five, or rarely only four, pair of eyes, and each end is provided with a sucking disk. Blainville has divided this genus into five genera, according to the number of their eyes and the form of their teeth, but they have all the same habits, and the characteristics appear to be only specific. They live in water, and it is a species of this genus, which has ten eyes, a small vent, and entire teeth, that is used in medicine, of which eight varieties or species have been described, all of which appear to have been used for the purpose with equal success.

5. The Tongued Leeches, or Glossophoræ of Dr. Johnson, who first pointed out their peculiarities; which consist in their head being conical and obliquely truncated; their mouth without any teeth, and provided with a lanceolate trunk; their eyes vary in number, and their tail is provided with a distinct disk; their body is oval and long, and much depressed; they are generally pellucid, and exhibit their intestinal canal, which is provided with several latter cæca.

These Leeches live in fresh water, and are said to be viviparous, but Muller has proved that they are oviparous, and that the mother carries the eggs under her belly till they are hatched, when the young appear to be coming out of her inside. Daudin believes that they live on the juices of plants, on which they are always found creeping with great quickness.

6. The Parasitic Leeches, or Epibdellæ of Blaine, which have a very depressed, oval body and acute head, and a very large posterior sucking disk, sometimes provided with horny hooks; they always are found attached to marine fish, and to the animals of bivalve shells.

The type of the genus is H. hippoglossi of Linnæus, figured by Muller, Zool. Dan. pl. ii. fig. 54. This animal has also been described by O. Fabricius and Baster, but they describe the tail of Muller as the head of their animal, and vice versa.

Their Zoological character has been examined, and their history and manners faithfully recorded by Muller, Savigny, Johnson, Careno and Dutrochet. Their breeding and rearing has been written on by Lenoble, Rayer, and Bertrand; their anatomy has been treated of and figured by Johnson, Sir E. Home, Thomas, Spix, Huzard, and others; and yet there are several points in their structure and history which are very imperfectly understood. Blainville has given a sketch in the article Sangsue, in the XLVIIth volume of the Dictionnaire des Sciences Naturelles, which may be consulted with advantage.

HIRUNDO.

HIRUNDO, Lin., Cuv., Tem.; Swallow, Ray. In Zoology, a genus of animals belonging to the family Falconiæ, order Passeres, class Aves.

Generic character. Beak short, triangular, depressed, widely expanded at the base, but compressed at the point; the upper mandible slightly hooked downwards, lower straight; gape very wide, and reaching almost to the eyes; vibrissæ short and few; nostrils at the root of the beak, oblong, partly covered by membrane, over which the frontal feathers extend; wings long, the first quill longest; tail sometimes square, sometimes forked, consisting generally of twelve quills; legs short and slender, sometimes feathered to the toes, of which there are three in front and one behind, the outer front toe united by membrane to the middle as far as the first joint.

This genus, according to Linnæus's arrangement, included not only the Swallows but also the Swifts, HIRUNDO which differ remarkably from them in having all four toes placed in front, instead of three before and one behind. In consequence of this circumstance, Illiger instituted for them the new genus Cypselus, to which Cuvier prefers the term Apus, including the same species.

Activity and mode of feeding.

Swallows are exceedingly active, being almost invariably on the wing in search of insects, on which they feed whilst flying, and for this purpose their wide mouth, which is continually open, admirably adapts them; their motions are extremely rapid; turning short round upon their prey with great quickness, they seize it so sharply that the snapping of their beak makes a loud click. They are generally observed skimming along the surface of water in search of their prey, which consists principally of Gnats, especially when they have young ones; but when their breeding time is over, they feed also on small scarabæi. As they dart along the water, they may often be noticed dipping in their beaks to drink, and dashing their breasts against it to bathe, and refresh themselves. The quickness of their flight is very great. Spallanzani observes, that a pair of Swallows flew from Milan to Pavia, a distance of eighteen miles, in thirteen minutes; and from the fact of their returning home in such short time, after having been, as in this case, removed so great a distance from it, he suggests that they might be employed for the same purposes as the Carrier Pigeon, like which, when set at liberty, they rise in circles high in the air, as if to ascertain the situation of their home before they dart off.

Nests.

Most of the Swallow kind build, about houses, nests composed of mud and straw, which, becoming hard, last for many years, and vary remarkably in the different species; some few bore holes in sand-banks, and, lining them with hay and feathers, there nourish their young. During the winter the nests are deserted, but the same tenants invariably return to their old habitation in the Spring. Frisch and Spallanzani proved this fact by tying a piece of silk about some Swallows' legs, and observed the same birds return for two successive years. Sometimes, however, it happens that the nest whilst vacant is usurped by Sparrows, which, filling it with cherry-stones and other refuse, render it unfit for the Swallows, who are consequently obliged to build another habitation.

Breeding.

